LIBRARY
OF THE UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS
052
TRU
v.43

The person charging this material is responsible for its return to the library from which it was withdrawn on or before the Latest Date stamped below.

Theft, mutilation, and underlining of books are reasons for disciplinary action and may result in dismissal from the University.

To renew call Telephone Center, 333-8400

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS LIBRARY AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN

FEB 7 1980

L161—O-1096

Truth

·Truth·

A

WEEKLY JOURNAL.

VOLUME XLIII.

Nos. 1097 to 1122.

JANUARY TO JUNE, 1898.

LONDON:

"TRUTH" BUILDINGS,

CARTERET ST., QUEEN ANNE'S GATE, S.W.,

AND 10, BOLT COURT, E.C.

1898.

Class 50 Book 43
T. Lowell City Library.
Ac. 35026

35026

PRINTED BY LOVE AND WYMAN, LIMITED,
GREAT QUEEN ST., LONDON, W.C.

INDEX TO VOLUME XLIII.

ARTICLES.—POLITICAL :—
A Carnival of Vultures, 1174
A Friendly Word to America, 1303
After Gladstone, 1430
A Lesson from Russia, 974
America and Her Friends, 1368
Anglo-African Slavery, 390
A Policy of Shadow-Grabbing, 589
Chamberlain in the Hinterland, 522
Common-sense and Chinamania, 912
Education and Empire, 1559
How Chartered Shares were Sold Before the Raid, 79
Italy in 1898, 205
Jeremiah on the Warpath, 141
King George and Russia, 17
Leyds v. Chamberlain, 1367
Lobengula the Second, 1639
Lord Salisbury and Someone Else, 1107
Mr. Gladstone, A Radical Appreciation, 1302
Mr. Chamberlain's Little Game, 265
Mr. Chamberlain Has Another Plan, 1241
Mr. Chamberlain and Foreign Politics, 1500
Mr. Rhodes Asking for More, 1040
Nigger Spheres and British Influence, 718
Office-Holders and Ex-Office-Holders, 329
Our Cousins on the Warpath, 1108
Parties and their Leaders, 1176
Peace or War? 783
Radicals and the N.L.F., 652
Referendum no Remedy, 454
Ritualism in Parliament, 1637
Should Rhodes be Reinstated? 850
Sir Wilfrid Lawson at Close Quarters, 914
The Gospel of the Tomtits, 784
The Lords and their Librarian, 1041
The Price of a Cuba, 1039

MILITARY AND NAVAL :—
A Moral from the Marines, 143
Army Tinkers at Work, 524
Extinguishing the War Correspondent, 81
Frontier Fiasco, The, 202, 267, 331, 455
Our Mock Militia, 1043
Swear Words in the Army, 1640
The Anglo-Indian Capua, 330
The Case of Sergeant Gibbs, 1176
The Confidential Report Again, 720
The Rangoon Artillery Scandal, 206
The Staff College in 1898, 1245
The War Office and the Volunteers, 786

GENERAL :—
Andrew's Six and Eightpence, Mr., 391
Another Urgent Request for 2s. 6d., 394
Area Gate Tonts, A Judge on, 1110
Arson, A Record in, 142
Ascot, Millionaires and Milliners at, 1571
Bumble, The Apotheosis of, 459
Cabby and his Shelter, 333
Canvassing the Great Unpaid, 1111
Ceylon, Dublin Castle in, 854
Chubb-Jackson, The Rise and Progress of, 654
Charity Monger's Live Stock, The, 721
Competition Trick, The Newspaper, 591
,, Tricks, An Editor on, 657
,, Dodger, Confessions of a, 787
,, Trick, The Inventions, 976
Collins, The Case of Daniel, 1503, 1431
Exit Hess, 586
Faith-healing and Fee-grabbing, 851
France, Zola, and Dreyfus, 525
Hartshorne's Executorship, Mr., 1304
High Sheriff and TRUTH, The, 269
Klondyke Prospector's Prospects, A, 1505
Leigh Sampson, 1109, 1306
,, ,, Announces his Death, 1109
Libel Action, A Co-operative, 1042
New Zealand Estate, The Story of a, 1560
Pastor Jones Under the Harrow, 1111
Patent Agent, The Press and the, 916
Railways—How to Deal with Them, The, 19
Railway Managers, More Hints to, 207
Rayner & Co., 916, 976, 1243, 1435
Rayner's Conduct Disgraceful? Is Mr., 1243
Rayner Sub Judice, Mr., 1435
Rights and Duties of Testators, The, 1371
Röhss—Moneylender and Income Tax Assessor, 1434
Rooke's Welsh Mutton, Mr., 1369
Squire versus Parson, 18
Snares for London Voters, 524
Tragedy, A London Sessions, 1431, 1503
Usury, A Chapter on, 919
Van Buren of Brussels, 1306
Walker's Partnership Trick, 393
Zola and the Paving Stones, 976

AMUSEMENTS :—
A British Ambassador to St. James', 1436
A Flower-bed of Procrustes, 1506
A Modern Don Quixote, 1307
A Moral from Earl's Court, 1178
"Dangerfield '95," 1373
Easter Dramatic Novelties, 920
Frivolity at the Gaiety, 1372
More Stars and Stripes, 981
Mr. Bret Harte's "Sue" at the Garrick, 1506
Mr. Hare's Reappearance, 82
"Much Ado about Nothing," 460
"My Innocent Boy" at the Royalty, 1246
"Pelléas and Mélisande," 1642
"Peter the Great," 21
"Ragged Robin," 1641
Sarah Bernhardt, 1572
Seriousness at the Savoy, 1372
"The Dove-cot," 395
The Greatest Show on Earth, 23
"The Master" at the Globe, 1045
"The Medicine Man," 1179
The New Carton, 1045
The Pantomimes, 20
The Princess's Theatre, 22
The Return of the Circus Girl, 143
The Sea Flower, 593
The Theatres, 208
"The White Knight," 527
Two Baby Shows, 1112

POETRY :—
A Case of Walker, 639
A Concert-of-Europe-cursed Island, 389
After the Primrose League Meeting, 1174
A Fortunate Famine, 1158
A Last Appeal, 974
A "Mailed Fist" for Editors, 265
An Appropriate Ending for the Surplus, 1039
A "Sweeping" Reform, 135
At Last! 1552
Bartlett's History of England, 1637
Death at a Halfpenny a Glass, 1498
Echoes from a Recent Cabinet Council, 912
"Foiling" the Examiner, 768
Good News for Bad Speakers, 452
How to Make a Title Sure, 3
In Formâ Pauperis, 140
"In Memoriam," William Ewart Gladstone, 1289
Muzzles for Ministers, 1241
Paying for the Parliamentary Whistle, 202
"Ready, aye, Ready!" 782
Ready to the Last Eyelet-hole, 840
Stealing a March on John Bull, 16
"The Alleviation of Backers," 1417
The Apotheosis of the Penny, 904
The Book of Death, 447
The Brummagem Tyrant and his Serfs, 328
The Coal that Failed, 1627
The Cycle in Cathay, 374
The Death and Burial of L C.C. Robin, 583
The Downfall of the Dames, 652
The Fight at Terra-firma School, 1106
The Heathen Chinee Up to Date, 251
"To June, the Summer's Crown," 1482
The "Mailed Fist" made Manifest, 78
The Moderate War Song, 521
The Most Unkindest Cut of All, 1485
The Secret of Baldness, 572
The Sinking of the Merrimac, 1430
The Song of the Skirt, 699
To Nellie Farren, 701
To the American "Yellow Journal," 1559
'Twas on the Beach at Brighton, 187
'Twas the Voice of the Oyster, 834
Who Fears to Speak of '98? 5

ENTRE NOUS: 1, 61, 125, 185, 249, 309, 373, 437, 501, 569, 633, 697, 765, 833, 897, 957, 1021, 1089, 1157, 1225, 1290, 1353, 1413, 1481, 1545, 1617

SCRUTATOR: 17, 79, 141, 202, 265, 329, 390, 454, 522, 586, 652, 718, 783, 850, 912, 974, 1039, 1107, 1174, 1241, 1302, 1367, 1430, 1500, 1559, 1637

NOTES FROM PARIS: 23, 83, 144, 210, 271, 333, 395, 460, 528, 593, 659, 723, 788, 855, 921, 982, 1046, 1113, 1180, 1247, 1307, 1374, 1438, 1507, 1573, 1643

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN: 25, 85, 145, 212, 272, 335, 397, 462, 529, 594, 660, 724, 790, 856, 923, 983, 1047, 1115, 1182, 1248, 1309, 1375, 1439, 1509, 1574, 1645

SPORTING NOTES: 26, 86, 146, 213, 273, 336, 399, 463, 530, 596, 661, 725, 791, 857, 924, 984, 1048, 1116, 1183, 1249, 1310, 1376, 1440, 1509, 1575, 1646

MAMMON: 29, 88, 149, 215, 275, 339, 401, 466, 533, 599, 663, 728, 794, 860, 926, 987, 1052, 1118, 1186, 1252, 1312, 1378, 1443, 1512, 1578, 1648

QUEER STORIES :—
Lady Linstock's Letters, 37
Dorothea's Day-Dreams, 96
Sir Archie Armshill's Heir, 157
The Winning of Mabel, 222
A Parish Doctor's Romance, 282
The Double Green of Geneva, 346
A Phase of Felicita, 408
Paid in Full, 472
Klondyke Caxton, 540
Mrs. Brabazon's Bicycle Gymkhana, 606
The Duchess and the Moneylender, 669
An Accident at Aintree, 736
How we Tubbed the Tosher, 801
Lady Dolly's Revenge, 867
The Plain Confession of a Plain Girl, 932
The Peerless Palmist, 995
The Chairman of Crowdie's, 1059
The Theft of a Secret Treaty, 1126
Sir John Deacle's Ailment, 1194
Dowler's Double, 1258
The Derby Devils, 1320
A Costly Gift, 1386, 1451
The Curse of Tiddleywinks, 1517
Spoiling the Egyptians, 1584
The Little Lady at Lords, 1656

MUSIC: 40, 101, 160, 224, 285, 348, 411, 477, 543, 608, 673, 739, 804, 870, 935, 997, 1062, 1130, 1198, 1263, 1323, 1389, 1454, 1521, 1587, 1659
A Half-Guinea "Diploma" Examiner, 1323
Another Diploma Depot, 608
Bogus Registered Teachers, 1263, 1389, 1587
Lansdowne Cottell and the Working Man, 997
Limited Liability Musical Diplomas, 935

ART NOTES: 39, 100, 159, 285, 348, 411, 476, 543, 672, 738, 803, 869, 934, 997, 1061, 1128, 1197, 1261, 1323, 1388, 1454 1520, 1587

LETTERS ON BOOKS: 102, 227, 287, 350, 478, 545, 610, 675, 740, 805, 871, 936, 999, 1064, 1132, 1262, 1325, 1391, 1457, 1661

GIRLS' GOSSIP: 42, 103, 162, 227, 288, 351, 413, 479, 546, 611, 675, 741, 806, 873, 937, 1000, 1065, 1133, 1200, 1265, 1326, 1392, 1457, 1523, 1590, 1662

OUR PUZZLES: 57, 181, 245, 369, 433, 497, 565, 629, 693, 761, 829, 893, 953, 1017, 1085, 1153, 1221, 1285, 1349, 1409, 1477, 1541, 1613, 1689

THE EIGHTEENTH "TRUTH" TOY AND DOLL SHOW:
Prize List, 98
Balance Sheet, 125

• TRUTH •

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 1097. Vol. XLIII. Thursday, January 6, 1898. Price Sixpence.

NOTICE.

The terms of Subscription to Truth, which are payable in advance, are as follows:—To any address in the United Kingdom, for 3 months, 7s.; 6 months, 14s.; and for 12 months, 28s. The Thin Paper Edition is forwarded to countries within the Postal Union for 3 months for 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; and 12 months, 30s. 8d. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to the Manager, Truth, "Truth Building," Carteret-street, S.W.

ENTRE NOUS.

It has been found impossible to complete the list of the prize awards in connection with the recent Truth Show in time to publish it this week. The task of selecting the prize-winners has been more complicated and difficult than usual, but every effort will be made to print the list of their names in the next number of Truth. Meanwhile, the whole of the dolls and toys have been distributed, but I am sorry to have to add that the state of the Toy Fund continues to be most unsatisfactory. Last year, as I have several times observed, was a Record one, but I sincerely hope it is not going to be associated with a "Record" deficit in the Truth Fund. At present, however, the debit balance is some four times larger than it has ever been before. I cannot think that the readers of Truth intend to allow this state of things to continue unaltered.

I am pleased to correct two errors—one of omission and one of commission—which occurred in the account of the Truth Show published last week. The name of the lady who dressed a large doll so tastefully as "A Kentish Harvest" was Miss N. Dan; whilst the "Music" doll, described in the article, was dressed by Miss Sybil Holland, a young lady who has on several previous occasions been a most successful contributor to the Truth Show. I have also to acknowledge the arrival of a doll sent to the Show from King William's Town by Miss Mollie Irvine, aged ten; and of seven capital scrap-books, contributed by Lady Combe's children. I have also received a large box of assorted needles from J. James & Sons, of Redditch.

The following amounts have been received towards the Toy Fund:—

Collected at Albert Hall, including £5 from four little Argentines, £34. 5s. 1d.; Elmfield, 5s.; H. B., 5s.; A. T. W., £1; Hugo and Isabel, £2; Sympathy, £5; M. W. C., £1; Alfred Morel, £2. 2s.; K. Q., £5; B. E., £1; L. P., £1; P. H., £1; Surplus Sixpences, £9. 13s. 6d.; A. M. Chalmers, £2; Mrs. Jefferson, £1; X. Y. Z 1s. 6d.; Sixpences returned from St. Olave's Union, 8s. 6d.; A. M. C., £1; M. F., £1. 1s.; O. G., £1; J. G. Morley, £2. 2s.; W. and A. Halsey, £1. 1s.; A. O., £3. 3s.; C. A. R. Hoare, £3; M.D, Edinburgh, £1. 1s.; Mrs. Julia F. Solly, £1; Collection in Holme Hale Church on the afternoon of Christmas Day, per Rev. E. F. Williams, 15s. 2d.; Dorothy Jefferson, 2s.: Lois Jefferson, 1s.; Miss Hill, for Afridi doll, £5.

A. and C.—Your donation of 7s. was duly received, and acknowledged in Truth, of December 23.

The Queen goes to Cimiez in the spring, and a large part of the new Excelsior Regina Hotel has been engaged conditionally for her Majesty's use during the months of March and April. The Queen is to arrive at Cimiez about March 10, and her Majesty will spend six weeks on the Riviera. Princess Beatrice intends to visit Genoa, Milan, Verona, and Venice during her Majesty's stay at Cimiez.

The Duke of Coburg, who has been very much out of health for nearly a year past, is going to Egypt for three months, and he will take a course of baths at Helouan, near Ghizeh, before going on a voyage up the Nile. The Duke has been dreadfully worried about the matrimonial troubles of his daughter, the Grand Duchess of Hesse, and the delicate health of his only son, the Hereditary Prince Alfred, is a constant source of anxiety to him. The Duchess of Coburg is to pay a visit to the Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Roumania at Nice, where they are residing at the Château de Fabron, the villa of the Dowager Duchess of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha.

The Grand Duke of Hesse, Prince and Princess Louis of Battenberg, and the Countess von Erbach-Schönberg, are to arrive at Osborne early in the week after next from Darmstadt on a visit to the Queen.

Lord and Lady Cadogan spent Christmas at the Viceregal Lodge in the usual Viceregal way. The family party included — besides Lord and Lady Cadogan's younger sons — Lord and Lady Chelsea, and Miss Farquharson. Neither Lady Lurgan nor Lady Sophie Scott was able to go to Ireland for Christmas. During the week several large dinner parties were given, at which the leading dignitaries and officials in Dublin were entertained, including the Protestant Archbishop of Dublin and Mrs. Peacocke, the Chancellor and Lady Ashbourne, Lord and Lady Roberts, Lord Justice FitzGibbon, and others. Mr. J. Morley, who is spending the Christmas holiday time in Ireland, was also amongst Lord Cadogan's guests.

Mr. Gerald and Lady Betty Balfour have never taken up the leading social position in Dublin which the official occupants of the Chief Secretary's Lodge used to hold. The Christmas festivities have been discontinued, Mr. Gerald Balfour and his family not spending the holiday season in the Phœnix Park. Of late years the Chief Secretary's Lodge has ceased to be a social centre. The glories are long past of the days when Lady Waldegrave's splendour and hospitality rivalled that of the Viceregal Lodge. She had many brilliant successors, too. Mr. A. Balfour, during his tenure of office, conformed to custom to the extent of giving one ball—in Dublin Castle, however, and not at his own official residence. It is now many years since a ball has been given in the Chief Secretary's Lodge, where dance music is as mute as that of Tara's harp.

Last week Lord Justice FitzGibbon's Christmas party took place at his villa on the Hill of Howth, which, from the number of distinguished men who have assembled for so many years under its hospitable roof, is worthy to rank amongst the villas of history. The guests of the week included Lords Ashbourne, Roberts, Morris, Mr. John Morley, the Lord Chief Justice of Ireland, Lords Justices Walker and Holmes, Sir George Morris, and many others. Lord Rathmore was unable to join the party as usual, as he had gone abroad, to Egypt.

Mr. Dunbar Plunket Barton's appointment to the Irish Solicitor-Generalship was inevitable, not because he was specially suitable to the place from a legal point of view, but on account of his family influence, to which may be added some personal popularity, and the fact that for some time he filled the post of Secretary to Lord Ashbourne. The Plunket family—Mr. Barton is the grandson of a Lord Plunket—is amongst the families who do well for themselves in the matter of holding places. The Gibson family is coming on very well in the same line, under Lord Ashbourne. Lord Morris holds his own, too, amongst the makers of families. Mr. George Morris, who was the only Irishman included in the New Year's honours—being made a civil K.C.B.—is the brother of Lord Morris. Before becoming a Law Lord, Lord Morris had been created a baronet. His eldest son on succeeding to the baronetcy will, through the late privileges granted to the children of life peers, precede all other baronets, however ancient their creation.

The power of poetry, even in an age of prose, is shown in the proposed centenary celebrations of '98 in Ireland. The stirring ballad, "Who fears to speak of '98?" has been their indirect, if not direct, inspiration. Strange to say, its author is Dr. Ingram, a Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin, and a member of the Irish Protestant Church. It was written and published in the old "Young Ireland" days. Rudyard Kipling, in all his glory, does not approach its martial and lofty national ring. The belief is popularly held in Ireland that "Who fears to speak of '98?" also exercised a powerful influence on its author's life, who, but for the national outburst of his youth, would some years ago have been made Provost of Trinity College, Dublin, a post he was in every way qualified to fill.

In the old days Ireland was said to be ruled by "Larcom and the police." Sir Andrew Reed, the head of the Irish Constabulary, evidently thinks the old days have come again, to the extent of allowing him to issue orders in direct opposition to the existing law. The curious spectacle has lately been offered in Ireland of Sir Andrew Reed assuming dictatorial authority over the public footpaths in Ireland, and issuing a circular, in his own name only, permitting bicycles to ride on them. The high-handed proceeding is racy of Dublin Castle under a cycling Lord Lieutenant. Last week a poor cripple, walking on the footpath at Cabinteely, in the county of Dublin, was knocked down by a cyclist. The cyclist referred the injured man to Sir A. Reed's circular and rode on; the cripple, whose leg was broken in two places, was taken to the neighbouring workhouse infirmary. And these are the people who wonder why the ways and the rule of Dublin Castle are not popular with the mere Irish!

The death of Mr. Alfred Morrison had been for some time expected, as he was suffering from a painful and incurable malady. His loss will be deeply and long lamented in the neighbourhood of Fonthill, his place in Wiltshire, for he was a most liberal and considerate landlord, a generous supporter of all local charities, and a very great favourite among all classes. Mr. Morrison never took any part in public affairs, but devoted himself to the management of his large estates in England, Scotland, and Wales, and to the collection of probably the largest and finest cabinets of autographs and engravings in the world. The interest and importance of Mr. Morrison's collection of autograph letters and documents could not be exaggerated, for nearly every great name of the last three centuries in history, literature, science, and art is well represented in it. Mr. Morrison was a man of rare good taste and fine judgment, and he could always command the best advice. He did not buy pictures, but, after the autographs and engravings, which were his first interest, he collected general objets d'art, Oriental porcelain (his Chinese ware of the eighteenth century is superb), and Greek antiquities.

Mr. Morrison will be gratefully remembered for his munificent and discriminating liberality towards skilled workmen, and for many years he did everything possible to encourage the finest forms of handicraft, both at home and abroad. That his character was many-sided is proved by the fact that whereas in London he was known as a man of high cultivation and an accomplished Mæcenas, in Wiltshire he was spoken of as a model squire and a perfect country gentleman.

For the TRUTH HOTEL LIST, see page 51 in the present issue.
For HOSPITALS and APPEALS, see page 48.
For AMUSEMENTS, see page 49.
For OUR PUZZLES, see page 57.

The representatives of a Manchester Radical, who died some four years ago, have asked my opinion respecting an invitation addressed to the deceased to become a member of the Junior Conservative Club "prior to the entrance fee being introduced." The invitation, needless to say, is one of the usual lithographed forms issued by Commissary-General Hamley, the honorary secretary of the club. My opinion about it is what I have always held, namely: (1) that to invite people to become members of this club under a suggestion that an entrance fee is shortly to be imposed is uncommonly sharp practice; (2) that a club recruited by such means must be a very queer institution. I can understand the anxiety of the Committee to leaven it with a few respectable provincial Radicals, but I cannot possibly recommend any Radical to accept the invitation.

HOW TO MAKE A TITLE SURE.

WRITTEN AFTER READING THE NEW YEAR'S HONOURS LIST.

The Fount of Honour's played again; we've heard its tuneful tinkle,
And some of those who've waited long have felt its grateful sprinkle.
True, but a few have been picked out of those most patient brothers,
But never mind! their luck at least will serve to cheer the others.
"Take heart!" we'd to those others say,
"Your turn may come anon;
Courage and patience still display—
Hope on! good friends, hope on!"

"But, as you doubtless will have seen, Hope is not all-sufficient;
'Tis gold, in cases such as yours, that's proved to be omniscient.
Worth only will not serve your turn; but you will find it funny
To note how worth gets recognised when backed by ready money.
So get your cheque-book out if you
Would honours gain anon;
And, if needs be, your drafts renew—
Give on! good friends, give on!

"A cheque for some great charity may get you what you're seeking (N.B.—Choose one for which a Prince is public aid bespeaking);
Or give large sums to Party funds—their need is always pressing—
If you would still more quickly grasp what you would be possessing.
Yes, keep your cheque-book out if you
Would honours gain anon;
You can't your drafts too oft renew—
Give on! good friends, give on!

"The Jubilee is past and gone—the New Year's List is finished,
Still, you can draw your cheques, and hope with ardour undiminished;
With baronets and knights you may in six short months be chumming.
Take heart—we say to you again—the "Birthday" list is coming!
But always keep your cheque book out,
If you would score anon;
And always, whilst you are in doubt,
Give on! good friends, give on!"

My opinion as to the value of titles and honours is so well known that it is scarcely necessary to comment on the recently published list. Once more it is clearly demonstrated that these empty distinctions are easily obtainable at a price, and I once more suggest that they should be regularly employed as a source of revenue. In France, at the present moment, they are earnestly considering the advisability of creating a titled class, since it is well known that both Monarchy and Empire derived large funds from the traffic in titles, and I am rather anxious to see if the Republic will have the strength of mind to adopt my idea and publish a regular tariff, so as to enable people, in these matter-of-fact days, to calculate how many rungs of the social ladder they can afford to achieve by the aid of their cheque books.

The question of dress-coats for golfers, on which I had some remarks last week, must be a burning one, judging by the amount of correspondence I have had on the subject. Among the rest, the President of the Leicestershire Golf Club, Mr. C. J. Billson, has written to defend the attitude of his club. He is not responsible, he says, for what certain members may do at a private invitation dance; but with regard to the club dinner referred to in TRUTH, he says that "it is quite in accordance with precedent for the officers of golf clubs to appear at their club dinners in red coats . . . for the golfer has a traditional colour of some two hundred years' standing, as well as the hunting man." "Indeed," he adds, "it was often made a reproach to our club in former years, that while guests from other clubs turned up at our dinners in orthodox golfing red, we sat down disguised in the ordinary attire of sombre gentlemen." I confess I cannot see the force of this reproach. For a golfer to disguise himself as a gentleman—even a sombre one—seems an innocent, in fact rather laudable, form of masquerade. Unless any one was deceived by the disguise—which does not appear to have been the case—he would have no right to complain.

However, Mr. Billson seems to be right, up to a point, in claiming antiquity for the scarlet evening coat. Important evidence on this point is contributed by an ex-captain of the Royal Blackheath Golf Club, Mr. R. Whyte, who states that this particular garb has been worn in his club, both in the field and at dinner, for a century past, and that the club—which he alleges is the oldest in existence—possesses portraits of one gentleman who was captain in 1778, and another who was captain in 1790, both wearing scarlet dress coats. Two of the old coats are still preserved in the club-house.

On the other hand, there seems to be a wide-spread prejudice against golfers getting themselves up in this style, and the prejudice is not confined to hunting-men, or non-golfers. I myself happen to know a good many golfers—one can hardly help it in the present day—and I find that for the most part they speak very contemptuously of the craving of some of their brethren for scarlet evening dress. What I gather from them is, that while this attire is no doubt ancient, it was till recently the distinguishing mark of captains and ex-captains; and this seems rather borne out by what both Mr. Billson and Mr. Whyte say in their letters. Until quite recently it has never been the custom, according to my authorities, for any individual who has once succeeded in driving a ball off a tee to forthwith array himself in "pink" of an evening; and one sturdy Scotchman of my acquaintance deplores this custom as one of the signs of the degradation of golf by Southrons, Cockneys, and pot-hunters. My St. Andrews friend suggests that if English golfers must have a distinctive evening dress, every man should wear a badge on his arm denoting his qualifications as a player. This seems a very good idea, and might dispose of the whole difficulty.

A BEAUTIFUL HOTEL AT BOURNEMOUTH.—The "ROYAL BATH." "Hôtel de Luxe of the South." Sea frontage, 1,000 ft.; grounds, 5 acres. Due south. Only Hotel on East Cliff. Moderate fixed tariff.

I believe the present muzzling order to be uncalled for, useless, and cruel; but if it is to be enforced at all, it seems to me that it had much better be applied uniformly to the whole country than limited as it now is to this or that locality. It is absurd to suppose that the muzzling of dogs is necessary on one side of a certain geographical line and not necessary on the other; and to all dog owners living near the line of demarcation the present state of things is peculiarly irritating. A correspondent, writing from Yorkshire, tells me that while his dogs have to be muzzled, the dogs on the other side of a neighbouring stream are free, and consequently the dogs on the one side are liable to be unmercifully worried by the dogs on the other. In some cases the line is drawn in the most absurd and incomprehensible way; for instance, the muzzling order is in force in the whole district around Barnsley but not in the town itself. What on earth is the meaning of this?

With reference to the story told in TRUTH the other day about the difficulty of addressing a letter to the friends of a patient in St. Thomas's Hospital, the Steward of the Hospital writes me that my friend must have misunderstood the facts, or else that the porter misunderstood his inquiry. He says:—

> The books the porter referred to are simply a collection of forms in duplicate on which he collects all necessary information from patients prior to admission. One of these forms is sent with the patient to the ward, the other to the Steward's office. Both the ward register and the Steward's office register are compiled from these forms, and the porter's duty is confined to the keeping of an index book, showing in which ward a patient is or was, with the dates of admission and discharge. The ward register is, of course, accessible at all hours; the Steward's office register only during office hours.

This is all very well, but my friend was a gentleman not given to making mistakes, and he certainly heard the nurse on this occasion come down and apply to the porter for the address of the patient's friends. This may have been done to save trouble, or what not, but the reason for it seems worth inquiring into.

Mr. Stead has been good enough to send me a copy of "Letters from Julia." What surpasses my understanding is how a man of his intelligence should for one single moment have believed in the existence, astral or otherwise, of the lady. He takes up a pen and places a piece of paper before him, then his hand traces words although it was not under the control of his conscious mind. To account for this no Julia is needed. It is simply sub-consciousness—a mere waking dream with the hand mechanically obeying the brain, much as a dog barks when he dreams that he is running after a rabbit.

But strange is the power of imagination, when a man once gives himself up to it. One of the proofs that Julia's letters are by Julia and not by Stead is that "they are," he insists, "very much superior to my own." They are to Mr. Stead, awake and clothed in his right mind, what the maunderings of a person who has no grip on his subject are to the "copy" of a bright, clever journalist. Julia has amazingly little to tell, but she takes an amazing time to tell it. Were one of Mr. Stead's contributors to send him such padded copy, he would strike out nine-tenths of it in proof before publishing it. The most important thing that a human being can aspire to know is what happens after death. Julia does know. She has experienced it all. Yet her information is of the scrappiest. Instead of giving us a clear and definite account of the country in which she is sojourning, she presents us with the haziest notion of it, and ekes this out with line upon line of preaching. If the young lady exists, I wish she would kindly manifest herself to me, and allow me to question her for half an hour. I would engage to get more information out of her than Mr. Stead has done in countless hours.

Concerning all these mystic revelations, I am an absolute sceptic. I have a perfectly open mind. I am ready to be convinced if one spook will condescend to convince me. I should prefer a conversation with one visitant from beyond the grave to any amount of conversation with the wisest and the best of living mortals. But I must have some evidence that I am not being made a fool of. If a voice said to me, "I have just come from the North Pole, where a people exist who neither eat nor drink, and who have wings," I should look narrowly into the credentials of my visitor. Julia, professing to come straight from Heaven in a disembodied form to call on me, could hardly be offended at such a precaution.

I see that a volume of Dickens's "fugitive pieces" is to be published, and that it will contain several of his contributions to Household Words. It would be interesting to learn how the editor of this volume proposes to identify the papers contributed by Dickens to his own periodical, inasmuch as not a single article in that publication was ever signed by the writer. Many articles which were really written by Wilkie Collins, Edmund Yates, Sala, and James Payn were generally attributed at the time to Dickens. Many years ago a similar collection of "fugitive pieces" was published in America which contained a number of articles which Dickens had merely revised as editor of Household Words, but the ingenuous compiler of the volume attributed all of them to him.

"WHO FEARS TO SPEAK OF '98?"

A NEW YEAR'S MEDITATION.

"Who fears to speak of '98?"
The poet asks in boastful tone:
Well, we to speak about that date
Are much afraid, we're bound to own.
Nay, when we inspiration seek,
Things are in such a parlous state,
We do not only fear to speak—
We fear to think of '98!

The Jingo spirit rages so,
The lust for Empire's grown so strong,
There's such an eagerness to go
To any lengths, however wrong;
The nation, having lost its head,
Seems so resolved to tempt its fate,
That, in all candour be it said,
We fear to speak of '98!

Aggression 's in the very air,
And braggarts, hungry for renown,
With such a heedless clack and blare
Discretion's good advice howl down;
The feather-brained and leather-lunged
Are so alarmingly elate,
Dire Rumour is so many-tongued—
We fear to speak of '98!

Rulers, who in their despot hands
The destiny of millions weigh,
Before high Heaven and wond'ring lands
Such shameless tricks and antics play;
Kings are so ready to coerce,
And Parliaments to abdicate,
Bad may so quickly change to worse—
We fear to speak of '98.

North, South, East, West—look where we will,
Men's passions are so fiercely fed;
The cry "To battle!" is so shrill;
The sky is such a lurid red;
Fools rush with such unthinking zest
To open Janus' Temple-gate,
That those who love their country best
Must fear to speak of '98.

But even now good common-sense
May once again itself assert;
Prudence may oust mere vain pretence;
Caution, catastrophe avert.
Yes, Wisdom's voice may even now
Be heard, although ignored of late;
And even yet we may avow
Our confidence in '98.

The filibusterer may pause,
The Jingo, even, may grow just,
The follies that excite applause
May rouse, instead, extreme disgust.
England, to her own self more true,
May venture to be truly great—
Then we'll the poet's cry renew,
Nor fear to speak of '98!

Chance made me acquainted the other day with a National Schoolmistress, whose position seems anything but creditable to the Church of England, in whose service she has been so long. After having spent the best part of her life in teaching, and having been a highly successful headmistress of two schools—one in London and one in a Northern town—she is now in her third school on a salary which has lately been raised to £80 a year (with no house). She has 140 girls in the school, and only has two pupil teachers to assist her. In this school, as in the others, she has been, on the evidence of the Inspectors' Reports and the Government grants, extremely successful; yet there is apparently no prospect before her of obtaining either an easier berth or better pay, for the simple reason that she is turned fifty years of age. She tells me that she has applied for schools where there is a proper staff of teachers, and has been refused on the ground of her age.

There must be something utterly wrong here. There are few headmasters of public schools under fifty years of age; there have been few who have not considered themselves, and been considered by others, fit to retain their posts up to sixty-five or seventy. As a rule, a man is probably better qualified for a post of this kind after fifty years of age than before it. Why should there be any different rule for women? The position of a headmaster or headmistress is not that of an assistant, or a private tutor, or governess, who needs to be primed with all the latest educational ideas. It is a position rather of superintendence, and the first qualifications for it are experience of the world and knowledge of men and women. Besides, in the case described above, the teacher is shown to be fully competent to conduct—practically single-handed—a school of 140 children. A fortiori, she must be fit to direct a larger school with an efficient staff under her.

I should uncommonly like to know whether H.M. Inspectors set their faces against elderly head-masters and mistresses in National or Board Schools; for if they do, it is a policy which ought to be corrected. It is wrong educationally, and it is cruelly hard on the teachers, who at this rate must be cast adrift when too old to find a new means of livelihood, and too young to have made a provision for their old age.

The early death of Professor Arthur Palmer has caused profound regret, and he will be a great and irreparable loss to Trinity College, Dublin, where he had for many years filled most efficiently the Chair of Latin. He was a man of great ability and decided originality, and he was certainly one of the foremost critical scholars in Europe. Professor Palmer was a thorough master of Greek and Latin literature, and his published works (too few in number) are in every respect most admirable. He was a most genial, hospitable, and charitable man, and a charming companion. He by no means confined his reading to the classics, for he was profoundly versed in all branches of English literature, and particularly delighted in the works of Scott, Dickens, Thackeray, and Lever.

Archdeacon Fitzgerald, who died last week, was a genial, humorous, charitable, scholarly, and thoroughly practical man. He was moderate and sensible in his Church views, and distinguished for his strong, shrewd common-sense; and this quality (so rare among ecclesiastics) particularly recommended him to the favour of Lord Auckland, who held the see of Bath and Wells for fifteen years. Archdeacon Fitzgerald, who was ordained by Bishop Law in 1836, was beneficed in Somersetshire for forty-four years, and in 1863 he succeeded the late Dean Law in the Archdeaconry of Wells, an office which gave him the patronage of the living of South Brent, to which he presented himself when it became vacant a few years later, on the death of Mr. Ditcher, the pertinacious antagonist of Archdeacon Denison. Archdeacon Fitzgerald was an excellent preacher, and he delivered many admirable charges to his clergy.

ST. ERMIN'S, Victoria-st., Westminster, this high-class residential Hotel, especially suitable for families coming to London to enjoy the Xmas festivities. Handy for Theatres & Army & Navy Stores.

The Archdeacon was the last of the aged triumvirate for which the diocese of Bath and Wells was remarkable, and they have all died within the last two years. Denison, who was appointed by Bishop Bagot, held office for forty-five years, while Browne and Fitzgerald (nominees of Lord Auckland) were archdeacons for thirty-six years and thirty-four years respectively. Lord Arthur Hervey held the see for twenty-five years without ever having the appointment of an archdeacon in his hands, but his successor, Bishop Kennion, will have filled up all three archdeaconries in less than three years. The Archdeaconry of Wells, which is worth £200 a year, is the largest in Somersetshire, and comprises 262 parishes. This office was held by the celebrated scholar Polydore Virgil early in the sixteenth century.

Canon Gordon, who is the senior member of the Chapter of Salisbury, having received his stall in 1860, during the episcopate of Bishop Hamilton, will resign this preferment at the end of June, in consequence of his failing eyesight. Canon Gordon, who is a son of Lord Aberdeen the Minister, and an uncle of the Governor-General of Canada, held successively the livings of Great Stanmore and Northolt between 1848 and 1880, and he has been for more than forty years a Chaplain-in-Ordinary to the Queen.

Bishop King has made an excellent appointment to the Chancellorship of Lincoln, which office became vacant by the promotion of Sir Walter Phillimore to the bench. Mr. G. J. Talbot, who is a son of Mr. Talbot, M.P., and a nephew of the Bishop of Rochester, is a very learned ecclesiastical lawyer, and he has written an able book on modern ritual decisions, as well as an admirable manual on the licensing laws. The Chancellorship of Lincoln is worth about £250 a year.

Canon Wilberforce is the Canon-in-Residence and Sunday afternoon preacher at Westminster Abbey this month, and Canon Scott-Holland is similarly on duty at St. Paul's Cathedral.

The Bishop of St. Asaph's violent harangue at Wrexham has done him no good in the diocese, although it was warmly applauded by a packed meeting. The memorialists to Bishop Edwards, with reference to his dispensation of patronage, have sent a most uncompromising letter to him, in which they state that "they resent and deeply regret the bitter and unconciliatory tone assumed, and the unfortunate personalities indulged in by your Lordship on that occasion." The Rev. Stephen Gladstone, Rector of Hawarden, has sent a letter expressing his sympathy with the memorialists, and Archdeacon Thomas has addressed a forcible and dignified protest against the Bishop's speech at Wrexham to one of the Liverpool papers.

A curate at Aberystwith, the Rev. Mr. Lloyd, of St. Mary's Welsh Church, has been indulging in some remarkably bold reflections from the pulpit upon the veracity of his fellow-countrymen. He could not disguise from himself the knowledge, he said, that they often acted in courts of justice and elsewhere as if they were quite oblivious of any obligation to speak the truth, and he appealed to his hearers to make individual effort to "codi yr hen wlad yn ei hol"—whatever that may be. I would not for a moment suggest that the sweeping charge which this reverend gentleman prefers against his compatriots is well-founded. I know nothing about Welsh courts, but I do know something about English courts, and what Mr. Lloyd says about the former can certainly be applied with perfect accuracy to the latter. There is indeed a consensus of opinion among all engaged in the administration of the law as to the alarming prevalence of perjury nowadays.

Apropos of a letter in the Times, from Mr. Loch, of the Charity Organisation Society, I promised the other day to give at an early opportunity some particulars concerning the Rev. A. McLaglen, Missionary Bishop of Cape Colony, and the sect which he adorns. Owing to the Christmas holidays, and pressure of more important affairs, that opportunity has not yet arrived. Mr., or Bishop, or Dr. McLaglen (I am not quite sure which is the correct designation) has since been good enough to write a letter, informing me that he shall not object to see the promised particulars, if they are facts, and that if they are not facts, he shall hold me responsible for them. I can assure his reverence (or his lordship) that I am always prepared to be held responsible for anything that appears in TRUTH. In the meantime, my lively contemporary the Star has been publishing a few particulars on its own account, and the Bishop is engaged in answering them. I do not think it would be fair to the Bishop or polite to the Star for me to intervene at this juncture, so I will wait till the Star has quite done with the Bishop before I take my turn at him.

I am glad to hear that the doll-dressing competition organised this year by the Manchester Evening Chronicle, more or less on the lines of the TRUTH Doll Show, was a great success. The exhibition of the dolls was well patronised by the public, and over one thousand dolls and toys were distributed on Christmas morning to the various local hospitals and charitable institutions. I trust that the movement may grow in the same gratifying way that the TRUTH Toy Show has done.

A MOST WONDERFUL PACKAGE of Crockery. Send your name and address to the Pearson Pottery Co., Hanley, Staffs., and we will forward one of our catalogues of cheap Crockery. One Hundred Pieces of Crockery for £1. 1s., including complete Dinner and Tea Services, and other pieces. Even an imitation of this advertisement impossible. Drop a post card for particulars.

THE LONDON HOSPITAL, E., APPEALS FOR SUBSCRIPTIONS. This Hospital for Men, Women, and Children, is the great General Hospital for the toiling poor of East London, & help is sorely needed

Some of the most severe criticism that has ever appeared in the Press under similar circumstances has been passed during the last few weeks upon the conduct of the Staff in the operations on the North-West Frontier. There is a strong feeling in certain military circles in India that the shortcomings of the Staff are the immediate result of the present system of Staff appointments. It was admitted, I believe, by Lord George Hamilton in the course of last Session that about 80 per cent. of Staff appointments in India were at the time he spoke held by officers who had not passed the Staff College. This is on the face of it an extraordinary state of things, and, considering what the Staff College costs the country every year, the public may well ask whether the money is worth spending, if Staff College officers are not considered the proper men to fill Staff appointments. Are we to take it that, in the opinion of the present Commander-in-Chief in India, the Staff College is a useless institution?

When questioned upon this subject, Lord George Hamilton asserted that the English and the Indian regulations with reference to Staff appointments were practically the same; but in point of fact there is a very considerable difference between them. By the Queen's Regulations no officer can be appointed to the Staff who has not passed the final examination of the Staff College; under the Indian Army Regulations, the qualification is to have passed the higher standard in Hindustani, and the final examination of the Staff College, or the examination for promotion to the rank of Major. That is to say, every officer who has passed the ordinary examination for promotion is in India eligible for the Staff; and that is how it comes to pass that so large a proportion of Indian Staff Officers have never passed the Staff College examination. It would be a good thing if some further questions on this subject were asked when Parliament reassembles. As an officer, writing to me on the subject, puts it, "the extraordinary incapacity shown by some Staff Officers during the Frontier campaign makes it extremely doubtful whether the fact of having an aunt or a cousin at headquarters is, under the conditions of modern warfare, a sufficiently high standard of excellence to expect of a Staff Officer."

In Afridiland, the soldiers are considered to have distinguished themselves a good deal more than their officers. The latter have been exceedingly plucky, but they have, it is thought, understood very little of the exigencies and necessities of guerrilla fighting in mountains.

The following extract from a private letter which has been sent to me may be of interest. The incident is one which I do not remember to have seen described in the papers. I hear that Mr. Pennall, the gallant subaltern referred to, has been recommended for the V.C. by his General, and he seems to have earned it:—

When Capt. Smith, of the Derbyshire Regiment, fell gallantly leading his company at the storming of the Dargai Pass, two or three Gurkha officers who had crossed the deadly zone, and were waiting under cover, saw Smith's subaltern, young Pennall, stop amidst a perfect hail of bullets and drag Smith out of the way towards some cover. He then sat down to rest a few moments, still under heavy fire. The Gurkhas, who saw Smith was dead, shouted to Pennall to go under cover. He dragged Smith's body a bit further, and then, apparently recognising he was dead, laid him down and put his helmet cover over the poor fellow's face before he left him.

All this was done while fully exposed to the enemy's fire.

In the report of the half-yearly inspection of the Woolwich cadets by the Commander-in-Chief there is again no mention of the award of the Pollock Medal, although there is mention of a sword awarded for exemplary conduct. It does not, of course, follow from this that the medal was not awarded; but assuming that it was, it is a strange thing that what was for so long the principal honour of the year at Woolwich should have been suddenly relegated to a position of obscurity. What is the meaning of it, and is there any foundation for the belief which is held in many quarters that it is due to the personal predilections of the present Commander-in-Chief?

During last year only seven commissions have been granted to non-commissioned officers in the Army, as against fourteen in 1896, twenty in 1895, and twenty-five in 1894. It is well known that Lord Wolseley strongly disapproves of promotion from the ranks, and the very considerable reduction in the number of these commissions is, of course, due to his influence. Nevertheless, some of the best officers in the Service have been obtained by such promotion.

Reference has more than once been made in TRUTH to the fact of the new hospital in the Marlborough Lines at Aldershot having been built in immediate proximity to the North Camp sewage farm. Some further light was thrown upon this scandal in a recent issue of the United Service Gazette, where it is stated that at the time the site of the hospital was selected it was expected that the sewage farm would have been abolished and a different method of disposing of the sewage adopted. This reform never having been carried out, the hospital has remained untenanted, and is apparently likely to remain so for an indefinite period; and all the money that has been expended on it may, for the present at any rate, be regarded as absolutely wasted. A more striking instance could not be found of the utter incompetence of the present Army sanitary authorities, and of the necessity for placing everything relating to sanitary administration in different hands.

The Army Sanitary Committee at present consists of the Quartermaster-General (President), Colonel Locock, Sir Douglas Galton, Surgeon-General Marston, Sir C. A. Cameron, Brigade-Surgeon Hooper, Colonel Hill, Surgeon-Colonel Richardson, and Surgeon-Major Macpherson, with a War Office clerk as secretary. A mere glance at the names of this Committee is sufficient to show that its members can have little or no personal knowledge of such administrative questions as may come before them. More than one of the members is far advanced in years, and precluded by physical infirmity from travelling frequently about the country; others are fully occupied with other official duties. The Quartermaster-General cannot be expected to do any work away from the War Office. Sir C. Cameron has other important duties. Brigade-Surgeon Hooper is president of the Indian Invaliding Board, and Surgeon-Major Macpherson is statistical officer at the Medical Division, War Office—both of them posts which keep the holders in London. Surgeon-Colonel Richardson has been ordered to India on work in connection with the plague. The result is that the important inspections which the Committee ought to undertake in different parts of the Kingdom are usually carried out by an old gentleman 68 years of age, accompanied by the civilian secretary. It is not surprising, under these circumstances, that the Committee should muddle and blunder, or that officers personally concerned with sanitary matters in barracks and camps should look upon it as an utterly useless, and even mischievous body.

The Maximum of Effect at the Minimum of Cost.—An Object Lesson in Decorating and Furnishing can be obtained by inspecting Messrs. WARING'S Suites of furnished rooms at 175-181, Oxford-st. W

With reference to the late fire at Dover Castle, an Army correspondent sends me a newspaper report of the chimney-sweeping order just issued by Sir William Butler, remarking upon it "Palmam qui meruit ferat." My correspondent is connected with the Royal Engineers, and the duty of sweeping barrack chimneys devolves upon the Army Service Corps. Sir William Butler is strongly of opinion that this duty has not been carried out, and I suppose the suggestion is that the A.S.C. therefore, and not the Royal Engineers, ought to "bear the palm" of responsibility for the fire. It seems to me to be a case of "honours divided." The Army Service Corps, by having neglected their duties as the chimney sweeps of the service, may be answerable for the fire; but some other corps, through the deficient water supply, is responsible for the failure to put it out, and if that corps is not the Royal Engineers, I don't know where the other palm-bearer is to be found.

The Egyptian Army in the Soudan occupies a line perilously long, and military experts are of opinion that it is exceedingly doubtful whether the Egyptian regiments would stand, were a desperate onslaught on the line made by a considerable Dervish force. The difficulty that the Dervishes have to contend against in an advance is one of food. Supplies cannot be obtained from the country around Khartoum, and those which formerly reached there from the north are now cut off. They are, therefore, drawn from Darfur, at a distance of six or seven hundred miles. There is an idea that possibly the Khalifa and his Dervishes will thus be starved out and withdraw to Darfur. Should this not take place, it is thought that it will be necessary to stiffen the Egyptian Army with seven or eight British battalions before an advance is made on Khartoum.

At a recent sitting of the board which has been inquiring into the question of civil employment for soldiers, a certain exalted official, who, so far as could be ascertained, had not heard a word of the evidence, suddenly astonished his colleagues by exclaiming: "I tell you it's three shillings a day!" The remark was delivered in the tone of one who would brook no contradiction; but, luckily, no occasion for disputing it arose, as the statement had not the remotest bearing on anything that had passed. The same functionary was lately sitting on the board which presides over the destinies of officers, when the name came up of a certain officer who was said to be deaf, which disqualified him for promotion. "What is he?" asked the distinguished official. "Deaf," was the answer shouted back. "Dead, poor fellow, is he? Ah, then it is useless to go further into his case."

The following should serve as a warning to soldiers against sending for samples of goods in answer to newspaper advertisements. A man in the Hampshire Regiment at Aldershot, in consequence of an advertisement which he had seen in the Queen, sent a postcard to Mr. W. J. Roche, of 5, Donegall-square, South Belfast, for samples of ladies' pocket-handkerchiefs. No invoice or memorandum of any kind was sent with the samples. The man returned them in due course, with an order for one dozen, and postal order in payment. Mr. Roche then wrote pointing out that a number of samples, total value £1. 1s. 2½d., had not been returned, and asking whether he was to invoice them. The soldier insisted that he had returned all the handkerchiefs, and Mr. Roche, on his side, insisted that they had not been returned, and demanded payment. Not receiving it, he wrote a further letter, protesting that "no such fraud should be committed on him," and that if he did not receive a satisfactory reply by return, he should lay the whole matter before the Commanding Officer, which, in due course, he did. Shortly afterwards the man wished to register his name for transfer to the Army Pay Corps, and this the Commanding Officer declined to assent to, until he had paid the Belfast merchant for his pocket handkerchiefs.

With all respect to the tradesman concerned, it seems to me that his proceedings in this matter are entirely unjustifiable. If he considered that he had a legal claim for payment for the goods, his proper course was to have taken legal action. As a matter of fact, it is extremely doubtful whether he could have recovered in a court of law, the evidence on one side being as good as on the other, and the tradesman being distinctly at fault in not having sent an invoice or memorandum with his goods. To attempt under these circumstances to obtain payment by getting the man into trouble with his Commanding Officer is a questionable way of doing business, and I confess I am surprised that any Commanding Officer should allow his authority to be made use of for such purposes in a case where the law of the case was at best doubtful.

I gave the other day the views of a certain officer on mess-waiters' grievances. It may be interesting to hear a mess-waiter's reply. The writer of the following is one of those whose case has already been referred to in TRUTH:—

As to the officer's statements about extra pay, and collections supposed to have been made on our behalf, I have been in my mess a number of years, and have mixed freely with other waiters, and I am in a position to know as much as any officer about this. I entirely concur with his statement that it is the gambling element which keeps the waiters up late. Never, however, have I had the pleasure of taking one penny from them in any shape, neither have they tried to obtain an extra hour's rest for me in the morning, and in all the messes I have come in contact with I have not heard of any such thing being done. Gamblers may be proverbially generous, as your correspondent says, but their generosity does not come in the way of waiters, according to my experience.

The gentleman says that we could get everything put right by a word to the Mess Secretary. I should like to know who is meant by this. Is it the Mess President, the officer in charge, who usually leaves all, or nearly all, the mess business to the steward? Or does he refer to the steward? Things reported to the last do not usually go much further; and the first, when appealed to, generally remarks that he does not know what we have to do, but he will see to it, and drops the subject. As to the remark that there are always plenty of others to fill the places, that is just what I have been told myself for my satisfaction when complaining, and the answer to it is what you have already given in your paper.

In conclusion, when the gentleman says that soldiers are proverbially grumblers, I should like to ask whether he includes officers, because if he does, I quite agree. Having heard a great deal of officers' conversation, I can truthfully say that there is none in the ranks that grumbles like them.

An eye-witness sends me an account of the arrangements for landing certain invalid Naval Officers on arrival at Plymouth last week, which reflects great discredit either upon the Admiralty or the port authorities. Here is the substance of his statements:—

The P. and O. steamship India anchored in Plymouth Sound at 6. 30 a.m. on December 31, having on board the usual complement of passengers, several time-expired men from the Mediterranean Fleet, and three Naval Officers invalided home from Malta—all three exceedingly ill, and two of them in a most dangerous condition.

When the tender came alongside the ship, an individual in uniform came on board. I understand that he holds the rank of master-at-arms, and is a member of the Ships Police. He stated that he had come for the sick. The next thing was to move the sick on board the tender, and the ship's doctor was applied to. On being asked by the doctor, "Where are your cots?" the master-at-arms replied that only one had been brought. He was asked whether he had brought a doctor, and sick-bay attendant, and men to carry the cots, and replied that none of these had been provided. . . .

The worst of the three cases was accordingly placed in the cot; the other two invalid officers had to get up and walk. The cot was carried by the ship's stewards, a task which ought only to have been undertaken by sailors, as the crossing to the rolling tender was most dangerous. The gangway was so narrow that the men could not walk abreast, and the cot had to be placed on the rails and slid down—a most hazardous proceeding, and by no means likely to improve the condition of a patient whose nerves have all gone to pieces through fever. . . .

On the tender arriving at the pier, the same dangerous performance would have been gone through again, had not a gentleman in plain clothes, who was probably a naval officer, happened to be present, and ordered a broad luggage-gangway to be fixed so that the patient could be carried ashore. . . .

Once ashore, what conveyance was provided for the unfortunate sufferers? One hand ambulance! Into this machine the cot and patient were crammed, and with a cheer from the crowd, one loafer pulling in front and another pushing behind, and the master-at-arms walking by the side, the ambulance, with its iron-tyred wheels, went bumping off over the cobbles. The other two patients, who ought to have been in their beds, were placed in a cab, and driven up to the hospital. Such is the way in which men are treated who have lost their health in the service of their country. Who is to blame for such negligence, I cannot tell. I am told, however, on the best authority, that this was no isolated case, which might have occurred by accident, but that the same thing, or worse, has happened over and over again.

In spite of the very strong feeling which exists on the subject in Edinburgh, Mr. W. W. Robertson, Surveyor to the Office of Works in Scotland, still continues in the undisturbed enjoyment of his large private practice. Attention has just been called to this fact again by the publication of the prospectus of an hotel company in Edinburgh, in which is given Mr. Robertson's valuation of the property. I hear that Mr. Robertson has carried on his extensive business in the valuing line without possessing a valuator's licence, and that the Inland Revenue authorities have had the matter before them, but found that they had no power to require a Government surveyor to take out such a licence. This seems a little incomprehensible; but if it is true, it is difficult to see how the Inland Revenue can insist upon any private valuator taking out a licence in future—at any rate, a great injustice would be created if this were done. It is high time that some definite rule was laid down prohibiting private practice by Government officials in all departments and in all parts of the kingdom.

From latest reports it would appear that the Revenue returns for the past year are—up to now—eminently satisfactory; thanks largely, no doubt, to the hawk-eyed vigilance of the Excise executive. Of this, a recent case at Eastbourne furnishes a good example. At the seaside resort in question the attendant at the pier penny-shooting gallery had the temerity to solicit the patronage of a gentleman connected with the Inland Revenue, with the result that he was promptly invited to appear before the Bench to explain why he did not possess a licence, and why he should not be mulcted in a penalty of £10 for having used a gun without such guarantee. The Bench were undoubtedly much shocked at the heinousness of the offence, but on the whole they declined to convict, although they characterised the point as a "nice" one. The pier attendant probably differed from this latter opinion, inasmuch as he was refused his costs.

The Post Office finished up the year with an exhibition of puzzle-headed stupidity fully worthy of its high reputation in this respect. It seems that the News, a Church penny paper, published a Christmas number which weighed just over 4 oz. Some jack-in-office refused to pass this number through the post with a half-penny stamp; and three halfpence had to be paid on each copy. At the same time the Christmas number of one of the ladies' journals, which weighed no less than 2¼ lb., was allowed to go for the usual halfpenny, and so also were scores of other publications far heavier than the News. The explanation of the Secretary of the G.P.O. was that the News did not contain sufficient "news" to satisfy the regulation requiring that "the publication shall consist wholly, or in great part, of political or other news, or of articles relating thereto, or to other current topics."

This is a most ridiculous regulation, and it is enforced in the most idiotic manner. In the present instance the genius who settled the question refused to count as "news" two leaders on Christmas—Christmas, I suppose, did not come up to his idea of a current topic—a present-day biographical sketch, and articles about Christmas cards, new books, and chess. As a matter of fact, the 4 oz. paper upon which the extra charge was levied gave, in proportion to its size, far more "news" than the 2¼ lb. publication which went through the post unchallenged; and it is quite certain that if the contents of all newspapers were measured up according to the rule applied to the former, scores would be deprived of the advantage of the halfpenny post. But St. Martin's-le-Grand is nothing if not capricious in the enforcement of its regulations.

For Truth, and all other Newspapers, Magazines, and Periodicals, send your Subscriptions to WM. DAWSON & SONS, Ltd., Cannon House, Bream's-bldngs., London. (Estab. 1809.) Catalogue gratis.

This huge City of London is celebrated the wide-world through for many things which are non-existent in other capitals. Where, for instance, abroad could such a sight be seen as the condition of our streets during the past week or two? Reeking with liquid mud, churned up by the ceaseless traffic, a journey from one end of a street at the West End to the other has only been accomplished under a heavy fire of hurtling mud-splashes and through pools of oozy filth, both on road and pavement. And with that marvellous tolerance peculiar to the English race, this state of things is passed over—with a little grumbling—as perfectly unavoidable. A few decrepit-looking men and a few mud-carts, the latter constructed on a principle which enables them to scatter impartially the filth already collected, is the extent of the efforts put forward by the London Vestries for cleansing the thoroughfares of the largest city in the world, and this in face of the fact that the able-bodied unemployed are always amongst us in thousands. There are those who believe that this sort of thing will be entirely changed when our Vestrymen are arrayed in robes and chains, and called Aldermen and Town Councillors; but I do not share this simple faith.

I thought it was the custom nowadays for all railway companies to supply foot-warmers as a matter of course during cold weather. This, however, seems to be an error, judging by a communication I have had from a lady, who tells me that during the frost immediately before Christmas she found it impossible to obtain foot-warmers during a journey on the Great Western Railway, and consequently travelled a long distance, in company with many others, in great misery. The foot-warmer is at the best a clumsy and unsatisfactory contrivance, and it is high time that English railway companies adopted the improved plans of heating their trains which are in use in other countries. This is a conspicuous illustration of what I have been saying lately about the backwardness of English railways in adopting obvious improvements; but, as is pointed out in the article which I am publishing to-day, it is idle to expect that this state of things will be improved by mere casual expressions of opinion, either by the public or the Press. We must adopt effectual means for making our railway companies do their duty.

A correspondent at Exmouth asks me to refrain from further comment upon the sanitary affairs of that place until a report has been received from the engineer appointed to deal with the drainage question. He seems to think that the publicity given to the matter has been damaging to the town. In the long run, however, it would have been far more damaging to Exmouth to have kept silence, for the inevitable result would have been a relapse of the District Council into their old pernicious state of apathy and negligence. My correspondent says that matters are by no means so black as I have painted them; but I have certainly not painted them blacker than they have been painted by the medical officer and other competent observers on the spot. However, the sanitary shortcomings of Exmouth can now be allowed to rest until the promised report is produced, provided it is not unduly delayed, and provided that the District Council do not again make such fools of themselves as they did in the attack upon the medical officer to which I alluded a fortnight ago.

If Lord Rowton can do it, why not Municipalities? If he can build a huge people's club-house at Newington Butts, with bedrooms and every convenience on the premises, and by charging 6d. per night obtain a return of 6 per cent. on outlay, why are not such people's clubs to be found all over London? When I went over Rowton Hall, I came to the conclusion that I could live there very comfortably for 1s. 6d. per diem. I should have a small bedroom, but airy, with a comfortable-looking bed. I should have a hot bath in the morning for 1d. I should have an excellent reading-room with a free library, and an equally excellent smoking-room My dining-room would be large and the perfection of cleanliness. My provisions I could buy at cost price on the premises, either cooked, or I might cook them myself. The bill of fare seemed to be an ample one, and I found that for 10d. I could have a capital breakfast lunch, and dinner. There would, therefore, be a margin of 1d. per diem. The society that I should meet would be varied, and I have no doubt infinitely more amusing than the generality of people that one meets at a London crush. Warming and lighting would cost me nothing. What I admired in the building most were the practical arrangements in connection with space and everything else. The corridors were wide; there was no skimping of air. I remember in Glasgow being taken to see the Municipal Doss House (or whatever it may be called) there. I admired it, but I am bound to say that it cannot hold a candle to Rowton Hall. I should like the London County Council to provide Lord Rowton with the means to build for them a few dozens of such people's clubs, and then to beg him to instruct them how to manage them.

Middlesbrough appears to have some nice, amiable, intelligent, public-spirited individuals on its Town Council. At a meeting a few days since they had under consideration a circular from the War Office asking that the influence of the Council should be used in procuring employment for soldiers leaving the Army with good characters. Such a proposal might have been expected to command general approval, but all it elicited from these Middlesbrough muddle-heads was a series of stupid and ungenerous gibes and sneers at Tommy Atkins, one worthy, named Bulmer, showing his appreciation of the Army by remarking that "all the time these men were any use to any one they were flinging their time away learning to do nothing." The brave Bulmer added that "in case of an invasion the whole of the members of the Corporation would volunteer for the front." It was not until another member unkindly retorted that he feared many of them would be shot in the back, that the meeting laughed at the idea of the Middlesbrough Corporation going forth to battle in defence of their country.

ONE HUNDRED PIECES FOR £1. 1s.—Send a postcard to the Pearson Pottery Co., Hanley, Staffs., for particulars of the most wonderful package of crockery the world has ever seen. Sold all the world over.

At the last meeting of the Camberwell Guardians before Christmas, the Clerk reported the arrival of the usual consignment of TRUTH toys for the children in the Camberwell Workhouse and Infirmary, whereupon a worthy member of the Board named Hurst made some reference to the recent criticism in TRUTH on the sanitary arrangements of the Infirmary, and proposed that the Guardians should mark their appreciation of this criticism by subscribing themselves for a distribution of toys, and sending the proprietor of TRUTH "a letter telling him to hang his toys round his neck." Possibly, had he confined himself to the latter part of this motion, it might have been carried; but the proposal to raise a toy fund themselves evidently did not appeal to the sentiments of the Guardians at large, and the proposal was not adopted. I am sorry that the aggrieved Hurst has been deprived of the intense pleasure which he would doubtless have derived from writing me a letter telling me to hang the toys round my neck; but it may be some comfort to him to know that the toys were not sent by me, but by the public who subscribe to the Toy Fund, and that the toys were intended for the children in the Workhouse, and not for their so-called Guardians. The worthy Hurst and his colleagues are therefore under no obligation whatever to me in the matter. It is evident that these gentlemen think a good deal more about their private feelings than their public duties, and it is high time that the Local Government Board compelled them to set their house in order.

The utter impossibility of arriving at the truth in any matter relating to Ireland is again illustrated by what has lately been said about the overstaffing of the Irish Bench. I referred the other day to some statements of the Law Times on this subject, and supplemented them by a letter from a Dublin correspondent of my own, who stated that the Dublin Courts were only working half time, and that practically half the judges were unemployed. Compare with this the following statement sent to me by a member of the Irish Bar Council. Both cannot be true; but which is false, Heaven forbid that I should attempt to say. I should rather like, however, to hear what the correspondent who wrote to me a fortnight ago has to say to these statements:—

The Lord Chancellor only sits on Saturdays, while if the Court of Appeal was in your correspondent's mind, they had a full list every day last sittings. Mr. Justice Ross was only able to cope with the business in his court by sitting frequently until five or six. The Vice-Chancellor's list was as full as that of the Master of the Rolls. Mr. Justice Boyd, owing to his being obliged to sit in the Queen's Bench Division, confined his bankruptcy sittings to one day a week, with the result that the inconvenience became so great that, at the urgent request of all the practitioners in bankruptcy, he consented to revert to his former practice. Mr. Justice Andrews being at the Winter Assize, the probate and matrimonial business over which he has control could not be transacted, to the great inconvenience of litigants. Three judges were occupied at Nisi Prius, and owing to the impossibility of getting together a quorum of judges to form a court, the number of new trial motions and law arguments appearing in the list on the first day of last term, and which could not and have not yet been heard, is unprecedented in recent years and amounts to a public scandal. As your correspondent should be aware, the judges during the sittings drew attention to the fact of their being short-handed, and constant complaint was made by suitors and practitioners of the delay in filling up the vacancy in the Queen's Bench.

Two or three correspondents have drawn my attention to a strange remark which is attributed to a medical witness in the report in the York Evening Press of an inquest held on the body of a child at York last week. The witness in question, Mr. H. N. Oglesby, said the mother took the deceased to him about a month before its death. "It was not in his Poor Law district," the report continues, "but as he believed the mother wanted it to get better he paid more attention to the child than usual. He was not paid for attending it." There must clearly be some mistake here. Either Mr. Oglesby did not say exactly what he meant, or else he has been the victim of a reporter's clumsiness. No doubt he will put the matter right when he hears of the notice it has attracted.

A disgusted creditor—the representative of a very large class—sends me the trustee's statement in the bankruptcy of a Mr. W. E. Farnham, in the County Court of Northampton. The notable feature in it is, that the trustee's remuneration was fixed by the committee of inspection at 70 per cent. on the debts collected, in addition to 10 per cent. on the assets divided. The debts collected were £385, so that out of this amount £269. 10s. went to the trustee. It certainly seems rather a handsome commission. The trustee is, of course, not to blame for taking anything that the committee of inspection allowed him, but is there no limit to the discretion of a committee of inspection in matters of this kind?

The Dumfries Sheriff has now delivered judgment in the case arising out of the infamous system of proscribing and persecuting poachers on the estate of the Duke of Buccleuch, which I described on December 16. It will be recollected that Mr. French, a tenant farmer on the estate, engaged a young labourer named Henry for a period of twelve months, but dismissed him after a few days in accordance with a peremptory order from the Duke's gamekeeper. The evidence showed that some three years previously Henry had been convicted of an offence against the Game Laws, and that since that time he had been hounded from situation after situation by the gamekeeper, the Duke of Buccleuch arrogating to himself the right to prevent the employment on his domain of any person convicted of poaching, and inserting a condition to that effect in his agreements with his tenants. The Sheriff has awarded Henry the year's wages for which he sued Mr. French, but notice of appeal has been given, so that the case will have to be fought out again in the Court of Session. This is very satisfactory, for it means that there will be a further and wider exposure of a most audacious and outrageous piece of tyranny and injustice.

Mr. Synan M'Auliffe, of Knock, county Clare, has written to me in reference to the remarks in TRUTH of December 16, concerning the action of the Lord-Lieutenant in remitting certain penalties which had been imposed upon him for breaches of the fishery laws. The gist of Mr. M'Auliffe's letter is that he has been the victim of a shameful persecution at the hands of the Limerick Fishery Board. He says it is a notorious fact that other weir-owners do not erect their weirs in accordance with their certificates, but that, fortunately for themselves, they have more supporters and influence than he possesses, and they are not prosecuted, while he is singled out as a kind of scapegoat. Mr. M'Auliffe further states that during the period referred to at the meeting of the Fishery Board—where it was alleged that he had been nine times convicted in four years—he was "only prosecuted once for illegal fishing in the strict sense of the word;" and that with regard to "technical mistakes" in the erection of his weirs, there was "no secrecy or concealment" in what he did. All this, if correct, goes to show that the Fishery Board should have prosecuted other offenders as well as Mr. M'Auliffe, rather than that they should have left that gentleman alone. It certainly does not justify the very singular conduct of the Lord Lieutenant in remitting the penalties inflicted upon Mr. M'Auliffe, despite the strong opinion which was expressed by Judge Kelly upon the defendant's appeal at the Quarter Sessions, and without first hearing, in accordance with custom, what the Fishery Board had to say upon the subject.

The Rector of Morecambe recently forwarded to the Home Secretary a petition bearing many influential signatures in favour of a mitigation of the monstrous sentence of seven years' penal servitude, to be followed by five years' police supervision, which was passed upon one Shaw at the last Lancaster Quarter Sessions for the theft of a sovereign and a shirt front. In reply the Home Secretary says he is unable to discover any sufficient ground to justify his interference with the sentence. Let me recommend him, then, to obtain some competent judicial opinion upon the case. The prisoner Shaw was an old offender, but as I said when the case occurred, none of her Majesty's judges—not even the insignificant minority among them who still stick to the inequitable and irrational system of cumulative sentences—would have ventured to inflict punishment of such appalling severity as that to which the man was condemned by Mr. E. B. Dawson, J.P., and his fellow Dracos at Lancaster Sessions. Not only ought the sentence to be greatly reduced, but this Mr. Dawson ought to be deprived of a power over the liberty of his fellow-men which he is evidently quite incapable of exercising in reason and justice.

The most notable feature of my Legal Pillory this week is, I think it will be agreed, contributed by Bailie Tait, of Kirkcaldy. It is in dealing with wife beaters that this worthy has so distinguished himself. For throwing a woman down and jumping upon her one husband is charged the modest sum of five shillings, while for pulling his wife about by her hair, burning her neck with a red-hot poker and kicking her, another defendant only has to pay seven shillings and sixpence. This is quite the cheapest brutality recorded in the list, but, nevertheless, there are several other instructive examples of magisterial leniency in cases of violence and cruelty—leniency which stands out in striking contrast to the severity of the sentences on the other side for poaching, vagrancy, and petty larceny. The penalty imposed upon an old woman at Atherstone for being found with a rabbit net in her possession is an exceptionally shameful exhibition of Justices' justice:—

Middlewich Petty Sessions. Before Colonel Leigh and other magistrates. Henrietta Kirk, charged with cruelty to her illegitimate child, aged five weeks. The child was found in a very dangerous condition, the result of neglect and starvation. Fourteen days.

Kirkcaldy Police-court. Before Bailie Tait. Henry Burke, charged with assaulting his wife by compressing her throat, throwing her on the floor, and jumping upon her. Fined 5s.

The same court. Francis Fraser, charged with assaulting his wife. He burned her neck with a red-hot poker, pulled a quantity of hair from her head, dragged her to the door, and kicked her. Fined 7s. 6d.

Derby Police-court. Before the Mayor, Messrs. W. H. Marsden, R. Jefferson, W. G. Norman, and A. F. Longdon. Albert Wm. Perfect, charged with cruelty to a horse by working it in an unfit state. The animal was in a wretched condition, being described as nothing but a case of bones held together by the skin. Its body was covered with bruises, which had been rubbed over with black grease. Fined 40s. and costs.

Houghton-le-Spring Police-court. Dominic McSheen, pony driver at a colliery, charged with cruelty to a pony. He hacked the shoulders of the animal with a weapon known as a "deputy's tomahawk," inflicting shocking injuries. Fined £2 and costs.

Blackburn Police-court. Before Messrs. J. Hoyle and T. A. Watson. Henry Singleton, convicted of assaulting his wife by striking her in the mouth and on the eye, and kicking her in the back. He also turned her out of the house. As he had thrashed and kicked her many times previously, a separation order was granted, and for the present assault defendant was fined 40s. and costs.

Middlewich Petty Sessions. Before the same Bench. John Simpson, convicted of stealing fowls value 12s. Fourteen days.

Grays Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. S. W. Squier, A. Sturgeon, C. Seabrooke, E. R. Parker, and Captain Whitmore. Samuel Atkinson Newton and Mark Swan, charged with poaching. Newton, three months; Swan, two months.

Enniskillen Petty Sessions. Two youths named Gillen and O'Brien, charged with stealing thirty lemonade bottles. Three months each.

Newmarket (Suffolk) Petty Sessions. John Cutts, Walter Webb, and Henry Thorogood, young labourers, charged under the Poaching Prevention Act with being found on the highway in possession of rabbit nets, ferret lines, and a gun. Fined £2. 11s. 6d. each; in default one month.

Larne Police-court. Before Mr. A. Williams and Colonel M'Neill. John Maguire, charged with wandering abroad, lodging in an outhouse, and not having any visible means of subsistence. Fourteen days.

Wrexham Borough Police-court. Alice Jones, charged with stealing a blanket, and Mary Anne James with receiving it. Jones one month; James fourteen days.

Atherstone Petty Sessions. Before Mr. S. B. H. Chamberlayne and other Justices. Emma Wood, an old woman, charged under the Poaching Prevention Act with being found in possession of a rabbit net. Fined £2. 10s. and costs, and time to pay refused; in default of payment, fourteen days.

Subscriptions greatly needed by THE ROYAL SOCIETY FOR PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.—6,929 convictions this year; 7,320 last year. Address complaints of cruelty, contributions, letters, &c., to SECRETARY, 105, Jermyn-st., London.

Knighton Police-court. Before Messrs. H. M. Evans and E. Oldbury. William Bufton, convicted of assaulting John Simons. The complainant was badly knocked about, and the defendant bit off the end of one of his fingers. The Bench said it was a very violent and cowardly assault, and fined defendant £2 and costs; also ordering him to pay complainant's doctor's bill.

Needham Market Petty Sessions. Before General Martin and other magistrates. Wm. Watling, butcher's assistant, charged with cruelty to a dog. Defendant beat the animal on the head with a shovel and dropped it, still alive and struggling, into a hole which he had dug. While he was burying it with earth the animal got away, and it was ultimately killed with a hammer. The Chairman said it was difficult to imagine how defendant, knowing how to kill animals without causing undue suffering, could bring himself to commit such fearful cruelty. Fined £2 and costs.

Aston Police-court. Before Dr. Griffiths, Messrs. Dean, Barnsley, and Bosworth. Wm. Nock, charged with cruelty to a cat. While sitting in the house he suddenly picked up a poker and struck the cat a terrific blow, breaking its back. It was stated that he invariably terminated domestic rows by attacking the cat, and that he had previously killed six in this way. Fined 10s. 6d. or fourteen days.

Abergavenny Petty Sessions. Before Lieut.-Col. W. H. Wheeley, Mr. J. O. Marsh, Colonel Mansell, and Mr. J. Merton Jones. Mary Turner, charged with stealing six scrubbing-brushes from outside a shop. The prosecutor did not wish to press the charge. Seven days

Marlborough-street Police-court. Before Mr. Hannay. George Parkman, charged with stealing a diamond brooch at St. James's Hall. The owner of the brooch missed it after a visit to the hall, and prisoner said he found it outside the building. Prisoner had been employed at the Hall for many years, and the manager gave him an excellent character, stating that he believed that if the prisoner had found the brooch inside the building he would have given it up, as he had done other articles. One month.

Woodbridge Petty Sessions. Before Mr. W. Lowther, Col. J. Whitbread, and Mr. J. Loder. David Hudson, charged with taking a rabbit. Fined £2.

Southampton Police-court. Before the Mayor and other magistrates. Geo. Richmond, charged with sleeping out and having no visible means of subsistence. Fourteen days.

A rather belated letter has reached me from the Rev. Alfred Bond, of Powick, concerning a charge of cruelty to a dog at Worcester, which was noticed in TRUTH on December 2. As I mentioned in the following week, I received an unsigned document setting forth various statements in favour of Mr. Bond, who was the defendant in the case; but in accordance with my rule I declined to discuss an anonymous communication. It now appears that —as I had supposed—that Mr. Bond was the writer of this communication. He thinks I ought to state that "the defendant gave an unqualified denial to anything of a cruel nature—in fact, to most of the evidence—and that his twenty-five years' character for humanity stood high enough for his version to be accepted by the magistrates and all that know him." This I cheerfully do. At the same time I must point out that against Mr. Bond's denial there was the evidence of three witnesses as to his treatment of the dog, that the prosecution was prepared, if necessary, to call other witnesses, and that the magistrates, in dismissing the summons, stated that they thought the defendant's punishment of the dog "more severe than was necessary," though they did not think it came "within the definition of cruelty."

Here is a little instance of the way in which the law is stretched and pressed by rural magistrates against everybody accused of an offence against the cult of the sacred birds. Two lads named Saunders and Cuttle were working in a field at Titchfield, near Fareham, when the former saw a dead cock-pheasant and picked it up. This nefarious act was witnessed by a gamekeeper employed by a syndicate who rent the shooting over the land in question, and the two lads being summoned before Messrs. F. S. Brotherton and H. Gibbings, J.P.s, were fined 14s. each. Apart from the harshness of the decision, it seems open to doubt whether, in view of the case of Tanton v. Jervis, cited in "Stone's Justices' Manual," the mere taking up of a dead pheasant can justify a conviction for trespass in pursuit of game—game for the purpose of the Act meaning live game.

Much adverse comment has been excited in Hunts by the action of the Chief Constable in forbidding the presentation of a testimonial to Superintendent Rayner, of St. Ives. The testimonial was spontaneously promoted by firms at Cambridge and elsewhere outside the county in recognition of the services the superintendent had rendered in bringing to justice a gang of swindlers. It is easy to understand that it would be an undesirable and even mischievous state of things if police officers were allowed, as a rule, to receive such rewards for doing their duty; but this case appears to have been of an exceptional character, and in the circumstances the veto upon the presentation was a very unnecessary and ill-advised proceeding. The course taken is rendered all the more incomprehensible by the fact that Superintendent Copping, who stopped this presentation on the authority of the Chief Constable, was himself not long since the recipient of a presentation at St. Neots.

As a private citizen, Mr. E. P. Price, Q.C., is entitled, like anybody else, to express his views—for whatever they may be worth—upon the dispute in the engineering trade and the question of trade unionism. Mr. Price is not entitled, however, to take advantage of his position as Recorder of York to deliver from the Bench such a harangue as he addressed to the Grand Jury at the City Sessions last week. Whichever side he had espoused, his conduct would have been equally impertinent and indecent; but I may mention that as a matter of fact he assumed all through that the employers were in the right, urged the men to capitulate, and denounced trade unions as exercising "a tyranny worse than any despot ever swayed over any part of the world." Such an exhibition of partisanship by a person occupying a judicial office, and speaking in a judicial capacity, is a gross scandal, and calls for a sharp reprimand from the Lord Chancellor. Supposing a case arising out of a strike occurs at York, how can the workmen of the city be expected after this to feel any confidence in the impartiality of the Recorder?

"TRUTH" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all Countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.'s should be made payable to the MANAGER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-street, S.W.

An attempt to enforce the Food and Drugs Act at Askeaton (Limerick) Petty Sessions must be a rather hopeless proceeding judging from what happened in a case a few days ago. The Inspector under the Act produced a certificate from the public analyst showing that milk sold by the defendant was adulterated with 10 per cent. of added water, whereupon the Chairman of the Bench, Mr. J. B. Hewson, said he did not think that the document could be taken as evidence, and furthermore that "he did not see how the analyst could tell whether the milk was adulterated or not." He also asked whether this was the defendant's "first offence," and, being told that it was, dismissed the summons, and refused to grant the costs of the prosecution, which will accordingly fall upon the cess-payers of the county of Limerick. This exhibition of magisterial intelligence will, doubtless, be highly appreciated by the milk-vendors of the district, but their customers will probably take a different view of the matter.

Another prosecution under the same Act at Mullingar Petty Sessions deserves the attention of the Irish Lord Chancellor. Mrs. Kelly, a shopkeeper, was fined £10 and costs for selling margarine as butter. Her defence was that she bought the stuff as butter from Mr. Fitzherbert Delamere. He denied this, but at the same time he admitted that he had for several months supplied Mrs. Kelly with margarine in boxes, which were not marked in accordance with the requirements of the Margarine Act, and for this Mr. Delamere was fined £20 and costs. His excuse was that "he did not know that he was doing any harm." Seeing that Mr. Delamere is himself a magistrate, this is a remarkable confession, and it is for the Lord Chancellor to consider whether a person so ignorant of the law affecting his own business ought to be any longer allowed to remain in the Commission of the Peace.

In a recent reference to Leigh Sampson, alias Henry Travers, in Truth, it was mentioned that he had been employing "a South London solicitor" to frighten people who decline to take the trouble to pack up and return his pictures. The solicitor in question sends me an explanation of his relations with "Travers," or Sampson, which is highly interesting. He states in the first instance that he received in November instructions from "Travers" at Boulogne to act for him, stating that he had acted for him some years ago, and, in the ordinary course, he complied with his instructions. Letters that he subsequently received aroused his suspicions, and he obtained information which enabled him to identify "Travers" with the Leigh Sampson for whom he had acted previously. On that occasion Sampson sent a picture "as security" for the solicitor's charge of two guineas, accompanied by his "faithful promise" to pay before the ensuing Christmas, which, of course, he did not keep. On this, the solicitor wrote declining to act further for "Travers," and mentioning that his charges for what he had done were £4. 2s. 6d. He continues:—

On the morning of Monday, the 13th, I had a charming letter from him informing me that I was a "bully," a "liar," that my charges were "swindling charges," and that he had a right to use another name—it was not illegal, and that he had done nothing for which the law could punish him, &c. I at once sent him my bill giving details. Three or four days afterwards I received a post-card saying he had refused my letter as the postage was "undercharged," and it was on its way back to "its honest author at —— " threatening to communicate with the clergy of all denominations, my bankers, and the principal inhabitants in my neighbourhood—"and on post-cards, too"—and winding up, "For your health's sake (the word health underscored twice) be honest and accept the drawing of Boulogne Harbour for your letters, and send me the others back."

My letter of the 13th, and my bill, came back three or four days afterwards. I at once returned them with a note saying, "I should certainly not entertain your suggestion of retaining one picture for my charges unless you fully apologise for your last letter and post-card, and undertake not to write any more such documents."

I did not expect any apology—but I did expect to hear from some of my neighbours that they had received the threatened post-cards, and so waited developments.

But a change came. Christmas morning brought the usual cards and letters conveying Christmas greetings, and amongst them was one from "H. Travers," as follows:—

"You say you will accept my suggestion to return me the pictures (saving one to be kept for your costs) if I fully apologise for my last letter and post-card, and undertake not to write any more such documents. I fully apologise for my last letter and post-card, and hereby undertake not to write any more such documents. The pictures must be tied together in one parcel, and sent here by South-Eastern Railway."

Enclosed in this letter was a label, addressed to himself, to be affixed to the parcel, on the back of which were written the words, "Contents—Water-colour Drawings, value £5." For one of these pictures Sampson had asked first £7. 7s., and then £4. 4s. He now values the whole three at £5.

You will observe that he did not quote my words correctly, but as I felt perfectly sure I should never see a sixpence for my trouble, and to get quit of the man I have kept the picture, Boulogne Harbour, and sent him the other three. Its commercial value, perhaps, is half a sovereign, but its great value will be as a memento of the most remarkable man of the present age—the man who was born in ten different towns in England!—Yours, &c. A South London Lawyer.

December 30.

The impression I derive from the foregoing narrative, and from some further letters of Leigh Sampson's that have reached me during the past week, is that the man is, from some cause or other, a little "off his head," and can hardly be held responsible for everything he writes. At the same time there is a remarkable amount of method in his madness; in fact he seems to be combining the methods of an abusive bully with those of an ordinary swindling adventurer. If at the same time he is a little touched in his head, it only makes it the more necessary that the police of Boulogne should take some steps to restrain his proceedings.

The following extraordinary letter from Sir Theodore Martin is at present being circulated—it is scarcely necessary to say by whom. It is accompanied by an appeal for a cash remittance, to save society at large from its impending dissolution:—

31, Onslow-square, December 20, 1897.

Sir,—I am simply horror-struck by what your long and interesting letter tells me of the base incentives to the indulgence of the animal instincts in men and women by the apostles of Socialism. That such a creed, if widely adopted, must lead to the destruction of all domestic life, and to the ultimate dissolution of society, is so obvious, that I am surprised that any person, man or woman, with a rag of common sense, not to say self-respect, could be got to show him or herself in a meeting where such doctrines are ventilated. One would like to see the liberty of free speech of such a kind put down by the State. It is not liberty, but licence, and so noxious that the strong hand of the law should have power to crush it. But who dare propound any plan that had this for its end?

Beautiful Torquay.—The Imperial Hotel has the best position, and is the leading hotel in Torquay. Grand climate. Cool in summer, warm in winter, and well known as the 'Queen of Watering Places."

The Famed "Adelphi" Turtle forwarded from the Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool, to all parts of the country. Per quart jar, 18s.; per pint jar, 9s. 6d., carriage paid.

I can only wish you all success in your crusade against these abominations. Living out of the world as I do, I have no opportunity to lift up my voice against this moral pestilence. The few people that I see know nothing of it, and it is not a topic for general conversation. What you say of Mr. Stead surprises me. He of all men I should have thought would have been eager to lead an onslaught on a teaching which would turn Society into groups of harlots and whoremongers.

I am glad to hear that rich men, like my friend Lord Egerton and Sir Humphrey de Trafford, are backing you. They cannot spend some of their wealth better. I can only send you the enclosed small cheque amid the ever-increasing claims of urgent necessity upon my purse.—Yours truly, (Signed) THEODORE MARTIN.

Rev. George Brooks.

In sending out type-written copies of this deliverance, Brooks speaks of Sir Theodore Martin as "one of the wisest and best of men; friend and adviser of the Queen." Sir Theodore's virtues no one will question, but if this is a specimen of his wisdom, it must be a matter for national congratulation that her Majesty has other friends and advisers. Sir Theodore must indeed, as he says, "live out of the world." It would only be a kindness if some of his friends, a little better acquainted with current events, would inform him that the man to whom he writes the above letter has three times been before a judge and jury to defend himself against charges, made in the Press, of being an unscrupulous impostor, and that he has on each occasion been ignominiously put out of court. The knowledge of this might possibly relieve the good gentleman of the panic into which he has fallen, and lead him to bestow his cheques on some more deserving object.

After having been bombarded by the English agents of the Viavi Company with testimonials, certifying their perfect satisfaction with the business, I have been receiving during the last fortnight further huge consignments of documents to the same effect from American and Canadian agents. I mention this fact for what it is worth, but the Viavi Company, as men of business, must surely see that it is not worth very much. All these documents that have been sent to me are obviously written to order, and a comparison of them suggests that the very terms of the letters have been suggested to the writers. I can only repeat what I said before, that while the agents appear to be satisfied with their position, the terms offered by the company are certainly not what I should recommend any inexperienced person to accept. I really think that my readers have now heard enough about the Viavi Company, and I am sure I have.

I would advise Dr. Court, the Unionist candidate for North-east Derbyshire, to coach himself up in his subjects before he next delivers a political speech. At a recent meeting he remarked that "the Radical programme was now one of Home Rule all round, for England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales, and they might as well have it for the Isle of Man." This was intended to be sarcastic, and the audience dutifully laughed, being, like the orator, ignorant of the well-known fact that the Isle of Man has, and always has had, Home Rule.

The following letter deserves the attention of our legislators. The writers are a firm dealing largely in articles which I have reason to believe form an important item of the feminine toilet, but which innate delicacy forbids me to particularise. The firm have factories on the Continent and in Ireland. Their case is, therefore, an excellent example of the operation of the Merchandise Marks Act—probably the most short-sighted and mischievous measure that ever was placed on the statute book. In view of the recent inquiry into the working of the Act, I suppose we shall see some legislation on the subject next Session, and the sooner it comes the better it will be for British trade:—

12, London Wall, London, E.C.,
December 20th, 1897.

DEAR SIR,—We have been in communication with the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs as to whether or not we should be meeting with the requirements of the Trade Marks Act if we stamped all our goods, bearing our trade mark, that were made abroad, with the words underneath the trade mark "Made Abroad."

We should have thought that this would have met the full requirements of the Trade Marks Act, but we are given to understand by the Custom House authorities that such indication is not sufficient, and that, therefore, the goods must be stamped Made in Spain, Germany, France, or otherwise, wherever they come from.

As manufacturers of articles which we have to have made in several different countries, it seems absurd that we are compelled to stamp on one article "Made in Germany," and the next one "Made in France," and so on.

From what we hear, we feel assured that hundreds of traders are suffering from this vexatious Trade Marks Act in the same way, and do think it is time that some action should be taken in Parliament by which traders would be meeting the requirements of the Trade Marks Act if they stamped their goods "Foreign Manufacture" or "Made Abroad."

Unless, when Parliament meets, some action is taken in this matter, it will be just as well if English traders showed their foreign rivals their invoices, and the prices they paid for goods, as with this additional information, and the help and information the Government supplies according to the Trade Marks Act, they will have no further difficulty in taking the bread out of the Englishmen's mouths.—Apologising for troubling you at this length, we remain, yours respectfully,

H. SHERWOOD & CO.

Glancing at a fac-simile of the first number of the Aberdeen Journal, dated January 5, 1748—which is being issued in celebration of the completion to-day of the 150th year of the continuous existence of the paper—I came across the following interesting paragraph. It will be seen that recent events in Germany have practically supplied another instance of history repeating itself:—

Franckf. Dec. 23.—His Prussian Majesty, it is said is firmly resolved, that his Subjects shall become great Traders, and that himself and his Successors, shall for the future be consider'd in Europe as a Maritime Power. In order to this he is actually taking Abundance of foreign Seamen into his Service, and has sent to all his Ministers, at foreign Courts, a Rescript, conceived in very strong Terms, in Reference to the Respect that he insists will be paid for the future to the Prussian Flag, where and whensoever it appear.

No one supposes that Mr. Selous would himself be guilty of cruelty. But his reply to the allegations of Mr. Blake does not disprove them. Mr. Blake has said that one of the patrols from Bulawayo fired into a number of natives, killing women and children. Mr. Selous admits that the patrol which he commanded did fire at natives, and that he, noticing that there were women amongst them, at once ordered the firing to stop. Had he not been gifted with exceptionally sharp sight, he would have not perceived these women, and the firing would have gone on; as it was, indeed, one woman was slightly wounded by a bullet. The experience of Mr. Selous rather, as it seems to me, tends to confirm the statement of Mr. Blake than controvert it, except that the occurrence that he mentions is more likely to have occurred further away from Bulawayo than in its vicinity. It must not be forgotten that, when a force was required by the Chartered Company to conquer Matabeleland, it was obtained by offering prospective "loot lands" to all the riff-raff on the outskirts of civilisation. Openly and avowedly this force was got together by promises of loot, and that such men would have been squeamish in their military operations is contrary to all probability. I read during the Matabele war of kraals being shelled and then burnt down. Are we to believe that all this took place without women and children losing their lives?

Then about the ravishing of Matabele women. Mr. Selous meets this by saying that no Matabele woman has a notion of virtue. The statement is sweeping, but in the main it may be correct. The men, however, he admits may have objected to their wives and their daughters being the spoils of war. No doubt they did. But Mr. Selous does not deny that the women were the spoils of war.

Mr. Selous does not contest that the Matabele were forced to labour for their masters. After the report of Sir Richard Martin, he could hardly do so. A chief was ordered to send on a certain number of men. These were partitioned amongst the settlers, each being expected to pay the men a certain wage. If they ran away they were brought back and punished for running away. What was this but slavery? And there never yet was slavery without cruelty on the part of many of the slave masters. A hut tax was levied on the Matabele with the avowed object of obliging them to work for the whites in order to be able to pay it. Mr. Rhodes, in a speech, deprecated the natives being placed in reserves, because they might grow so comparatively wealthy on them that they would not consent to work for the whites. At that time the country was overrun by company promoters, who hoped to acquire wealth by converting many claims into mining companies. The only possible way to work these mines was by making the natives labour in them. To this the natives objected, and therefore they were forced to labour. Precisely the same system prevailed in Cuba, Mexico, and Peru, when the Spaniards laid hands on these countries, with precisely the same result.

I have no doubt that Mr. Selous, being with his wife in Matabeland, exercised a controlling influence over the cruelty and the rapacity of the settlers in his immediate neighbourhood. His mistake seems to be to generalise from his own personal experiences, and to assume that what came under his immediate notice was the rule everywhere. This is much as though the Lady Bountiful in some village were to deny that there was no sweating in the East End of the Metropolis, because she knew of no case of sweating in her village.

A correspondent sends me these verses apropos of the storm now raging in the (China) teacup:—

STEALING A MARCH ON JOHN BULL.

What is the gist of the situation
  Now existing out China way?
What is the cause of the jubilation
  England's rivals just now display?
Why does Germany shout so loudly?
  Why does Russia insult us thus?
Why does France stand aloof so proudly?
  This is the cause, as it seems to us:—

All our rivals—and who can wonder?—
  Seeing our hands just now are full,
Think it is time—with an eye to plunder—
  To steal a march upon poor John Bull.
"See!" they cry, in their hearts' recesses,
  "John in worries is up to his eyes;
John is in half-a-dozen messes,
  Now is our time for enterprise!

"Poor old John!" they exclaim, with pleasure,
  "See, what troubles are on his hands;
See, how he wastes his strength and treasure,
  Ploughing, poor fool, the desert sands!
Fighting for swamps that reek with fever,
  Seeking for markets where trade is not,
Slaying the pagan unbeliever
  For lands worth nothing when they are got!

"Thrusting his head, like a silly noodle,
  In an Afridi hornets' nest;
Crowing his noisy 'Cock-a-doodle!'
  Over a mountain's barren crest.
Running of hazards and risks the gravest
  Just to oblige a Jingo horde;
Losing the lives of his best and bravest,
  With nought to show for the blood outpoured.

"Come!" they cry, "whilst his strength he fritters
  On half a dozen exploits inane,
We can seize on the prize that glitters
  Far away o'er the Eastern main!
Come! if we show no hesitation,
  Ten to one there will not be war;
And, at worst, 'twill be consolation
  To know our prize is worth fighting for."

* * * * *

And who shall say that they have not reason,
  Those of our rivals who argue thus?
Who shall say that they do not seize on
  A fitting moment to harass us?
Aye, who shall say that, whilst we are tilling
  Fields that never a crop have known,
They're not rushing, with zest too willing,
  To reap a harvest that we have sown?

To fight at all may be most immoral,
  But those to fighting most disinclined
May give this hint to the folks who quarrel,
  Which they'd do wisely to keep in mind:
Yes, seeing how war if waged with vigour
  Their country's treasure and life-blood drains,
They should keep henceforth to this rule with rigour,
  And only fight for what's worth the pains!

SAVOY HOTEL, Savoy Restaurant, London. Large reception-rooms for fashionable réunions. Orchestra plays daily during dinner and opera supper.

SCRUTATOR.

KING GEORGE AND RUSSIA.

I NOW publish a communication that I have received from my diplomatic friend, or, to be strictly accurate, an English version of his communication in somewhat abridged form. Perhaps I may be allowed to add that I have received confirmation of the accuracy of his statements from other quarters :—

I have read the article from the Daily Chronicle that you have sent me, and which contests certain statements made by you in TRUTH as to matters relating to the late Turko-Greek war, which were told to you by me, and which I again affirm are absolutely correct.

The entire pith and substance of your statements are that the war was the result of King George's desire that a marriage should be effected between his daughter and the Grand Duke George Michaelovitch. The somewhat dark aspect of the circumstances of this match is only confirmed by the avowal that "those who know most shrink most" from dwelling upon it. But an inaccuracy is noticed. No doubt, the Queen of Greece was at first more anxious for the marriage than the King; but the latter, although apparently lukewarm at first, was soon as heartily for it as the Queen. Now let me recount the affair chronologically. King George went to Copenhagen with the Queen and with Princess Marie in the autumn of 1895. They there met the Grand Duke. The Czar was not personally averse to the marriage, but he declined to use his influence with the Grand Duke to bring it about, notwithstanding that the King begged this of him. In the following November the King returned to Athens. He was aware that Russia was strongly opposed to any alliance between Servia and Greece; indeed, on two previous occasions a treaty of alliance had been actually drawn up between the two countries, and on both occasions Greece did not sign it, owing to pressure exercised on the King by Russia. The fact is well known to all those who are acquainted with Eastern affairs; and it will thus be seen that the pourparlers of 1897 for the co-operation of Bulgaria in the late war, to which the Chronicle refers, have nothing to do with the present matter. To force on the Russian marriage, King George indirectly conveyed to the King of Servia that an overture for the hand of Princess Marie would be favourably considered. The Russian Court heard of this, and, fearing that this marriage might take place, sent the Grand Duke to Athens in April, 1896, when he was affianced to the Princess; at the same time, the King of Servia had visited Athens; but when he found himself, as he considered, tricked, he left in such displeasure that the question of the withdrawal of the Servian Chargé d'Affaires was brought under consideration. The Grand Duke left Greece shortly afterwards, and it was then announced in the Athens papers that the marriage would take place in the following June at St. Petersburg. In the Times of July 7 it was announced for the following August. In the usually well-informed Pall Mall Gazette of October 6, 1896, the marriage was "reported on good foundation to have been broken off," after having already been put off twice.

At this time the King was away from Greece on his annual peregrinations; and after considerable persuasion the Grand Duke was induced to pay a visit to his fiancée at Athens. But the marriage again did not come off. Then followed the King's secret journey to Paris, when he once again vainly urged the Czar to use his influence with the Grand Duke to carry out his promise. King George reached Athens in November, and he at once ordered, without any consultation with his constitutional advisers, a camp to be formed, on the northern frontier. The Cretan troubles were assuming a threatening aspect. Russia, which had no wish for disturbances in the east of Europe, again soothed the King, and notices appeared in various newspapers stating that the wedding would take place in the coming winter. On this, the order for the formation of the camp became a dead letter, and the King betook himself to Corfu, as a guarantee that he would not encourage such disturbances. Vainly his Ministers urged him to return to Athens in view of the critical state of affairs in Crete. When, however, comparative calm had been restored in the island last winter, he found that Russia had played with him once more, and that the marriage was as far off as ever. On this, he put himself openly at the head of the War Party. Prince George was sent to Crete in command of the Fleet, and Colonel Vassos was sent to the island with troops to take possession of the island in the name of the King, who had ordered both these expeditions on his own initiative. The Greeks of the kingdom were urged to enlist, and all available troops, either of the regular army or of the volunteers, were pushed forward to the northern frontier. There is no doubt that the King never meant war, but hoped that he would bluff Russia, and that, in any case, some other Power would step in and save him from extreme measures. Things, however, had gone too far, and the war-feeling of the people had risen to such a pitch that the King lost control of it. Turkey, on the other hand, was secretly encouraged by Russia and Germany to fall upon Greece and crush her. When all was thus prepared, the Czar informed the King that a war could only end fatally to Greece; that the Turkish troops would advance to Athens, and that in all probability he would lose his Crown. The arrangement, as stated by you in your article, was then entered into between the Czar and the King. The latter engaged that, on war breaking out, the fleet would remain inactive, and that there would be no serious attempt to invade Turkey, and thus forcibly stir up the Slavs. On these conditions the Czar promised, so soon as the Turks had occupied Thessaly, to use his influence with the Sultan to stop any further advance.

Of the above facts, I speak with absolute knowledge. But they are fully confirmed by what took place during the war. The fleet was inactive. The Daily Chronicle admits this, but suggests that it was due to the discovery that the torpedoes were unloaded. But Prince George, who commanded the fleet, has himself testified that the discovery was only made after the war. Besides this, the unloaded torpedoes would only have affected the action of the torpedo flotilla, and not that of the war ships in occupying the islands, as there were no Turkish war vessels to sink. The Army of Epirus drove the Turks helter-skelter to within less than fifteen miles of Janina. Had it followed up this success there is not a military man who doubts that Janina would have fallen. What occurred? Colonel Manos, whose wife is one of the Court ladies and who is a favourite of the King, was in command. The advance was stopped. The Greek army was so mishandled by its own commander that the discomfited Turks were able to drive it back over the frontier, which it reached a mob rather than an army. The Greek army on the Thessalian frontier occupied very strong positions. It was commanded by the Crown Prince. He ordered the retreat, which became a rout. Later on, after abandoning Velestino also, he entrenched himself in the formidable position of Domoko, and issued an order of the day declaring that he would defend it to the last drop of his blood. But he took the earliest opportunity of again running away. Then the Czar, as he had promised, used his influence with the Sultan, and hostilities were suspended preparatory to the peace negotiations. Thus on both sides the pre-arranged understanding was carried out. In an article contributed to Scribner's Magazine of October last, Mr. Norman sums up the war in the following words :—

"A demonstration of the Greek fleet before Salonica or Smyrna would have compelled the European Powers to intervene instantly to prevent the whole Eastern Question blazing forth. In spite of the total collapse of Greece, there is no doubt that this scheme did not fall far short of realisation. The attack on Previsa mysteriously failed, but Janina was at the mercy of the Greek army, the Turkish troops having fled pell-mell into it before them, when the mysterious Greek retreat on Arta astonished everybody. The Turks were held pluckily for a time at the Melouna Pass, and could certainly have been made to purchase Larissa with great loss of time, and at a fearful cost of blood, but for the mysterious evacuation of that city before one of the guns in position had been fired. Finally, the railway line from Constantinople to Salonica, along which troops and supplies were moving day and night, runs at many places within a few hundred yards of the sea, and is totally unprotected. There was not a single Turkish man-of-war at sea, and one Greek cruiser could have destroyed this vital line of communication. But the mysterious inactivity of the Greek fleet left this hope also unrealised. Thus, from every point of view, the failure of the Greek plans contains a large element of the mysterious, and I can make no attempt to clear it up."

It is this mystery—inscrutable in appearance, but quite intelligible to the initiated and unprejudiced mind—that I sought to clear up when you asked me to explain it to you. The King appointed his own and the Crown Prince's aides-de-camp in command of the land and sea forces, and, after Colonel Vassos had been sent with troops to aid the Cretan insurgents, he appointed a nominee of his own at the head of the War Office. No one disputes the fact that all the land and sea operations were absolutely under his immediate control. He, therefore, is directly responsible for all that occurred. Why was the fleet inactive? Why did not the Greeks take Janina? Why were they ordered to evacuate position after position in Thessaly, and thus become so demoralised that there was no fight left in them? Because the King, after playing fast and loose in his efforts to secure the Russian marriage, found himself unable to prevent war. Having embarked on a grave political adventure and staked the future of Greece on a purely family issue, he did not give proof of the faintest moral courage or kingly self-abnegation. He risked nothing. He never so much as visited the camp of his wretched soldiers. But he became a prey to that feeling of funk which alternates in him with unreasoning stubbornness. And, believing that the Turks must be the victors, he came to an agreement with the Czar to interfere in his behalf after the Greek Army had abandoned Thessaly. It may, perhaps, be said that King George, by entering into this arrangement, did the best he could for Greece in the circumstances which he had himself created. But then he ought to accept the responsibility for it, and not by his silence lead the world to suppose that his subjects were imbecile cowards. That they were not cowards, that they fought bravely whenever moderately well led, that they gave proof of true patriotism and abnegation, that the facts I have related are such as here set forth, that the King's family projects were at the bottom of this tragedy, that he imposed inaction on the fleet and ordered the disastrous retreats in Epirus and Thessaly are facts admitted by all those war correspondents who, in visiting Greece, did not hanker after Court favour or dream of establishing princely connections. The articles published by Mr. Bennet Burleigh in the July Fortnightly, by Mr. Dillon in the July Contemporary, by Mr. Allen Upward (who, moreover, fought as a volunteer) in To-day, of May 15, the correspondents of the Observer and the Pall Mall Gazette with the army of Epirus. Mr. R. Harding Davis (an American gentleman who acted as Times' correspondent) in an article in Harper's Magazine for November, all say the same story and prove it to the hilt. Deserted by the Western Powers in their hour of need, the Greeks will now accept the inevitable They cannot resist Turkey with Russia behind her. Like Turkey, and like the Slav States in the Balkan Peninsula, they must seek safety within the sphere of Russian influence. The Russian marriage is once more on the tapis. It may at last take place. Whenever it does, it will be a sign that Greece has had to make, as the price of its conclusion, further and perhaps unavowed concessions to the demands of Russia, and has been compelled to definitely cast in her lot with Russia.

SAHARA (TURKISH) CIGARETTES are manufactured solely by W. D. & H. O. WILLS, Ltd., from a special blend of the choicest growths of Turkish Tobacco. Finest quality obtainable.

"HAMPTON & SONS', LTD., Showrooms and Book of Examples afford ample evidence of that ability to put a tastefully furnished Home within the reach of a modest income, for which this firm is so justly famous."—Pall Mall East, London, S.W.

SQUIRE VERSUS PARSON.

A few weeks back a friend of mine, who had been spending his holidays in Wiltshire, came home with some strange tales of an extraordinary state of affairs prevailing at a village in the neighbourhood of Salisbury. The facts seem worth reproducing as a proof of the unchecked despotism still wielded here and there in rural England by the lords of the soil, and they may perhaps be found specially appropriate to this season, the key-note of which is "peace and goodwill."

The village in question is a place called Compton-Chamberlayne. The Squire of the place is Mr. C. Penruddocke, of Compton Park. He is not only the principal landowner, but the lay-rector, the patron, the people's churchwarden, and the parish clerk. The combination of all these offices in his person, coupled with the fact that the parish church lies within the walls of his park, seems to have conferred upon Mr. Penruddocke the character rather of a spiritual than a temporal dignitary, and his position in relation to the ecclesiastical affairs of the parish is more that of a lay-bishop than a lay-rector. The vicarage is a very poor living—worth about £90 a year and the house. When the present Vicar, the Rev. Dudley Digges, was appointed, the patron promised to augment the stipend by £10 a year, and apparently did so for some time. For one reason or another, however, a coolness has grown up between the Vicar and his Patron, and the extra £10 a year has perished and been forgotten.

During the last year, relations between the Squire and the Parson have become considerably strained, and various incidents that have occurred point to a condition little short of open war. There were passages of arms at the annual parish meeting—held, it may interest the authors of the Parish Councils Act to hear, at Mr. Penruddocke's house, with Mr. Penruddocke in the chair. There were further passages at subsequent vestry meetings. There had been serious friction for some time past, in consequence of the action of Mr. Penruddocke in placing a lock on the gate leading to the church, and insisting on keeping the gate locked, and the key in his own custody as parish clerk. Finally, the Squire played his masterstroke by evicting the parson from the stables and coach-house attached to the vicarage, together with certain other outbuildings and about twelve rods of garden and other land. It seems that these premises have usually been held with the vicarage, but the present Vicar was induced about the time of his induction to sign an agreement under which he held them of Mr. Penruddocke at a nominal rent, with power to the Squire to determine the tenancy at a short notice, which power has now been exercised. The proceeding appears, therefore, to be perfectly regular and lawful. But the effect of it is to leave the vicarage standing in ground which does not belong to it, with little more than a right of way from the road to the house, while the Vicar's wife is deprived of the facilities she has hitherto enjoyed for keeping poultry, by which means she has added substantially to her husband's exiguous income. A more cruel and unjustifiable assertion of a legal right it would be difficult to conceive.

Now is this not a beautiful picture of village life on the eve of the twentieth century? And does it not set forth in an alluring light the position of our "national" Church and its clergy under the present dispensation? The so-called "parish church" of Compton-Chamberlayne lies inside the park wall of the village autocrat. There is but one entrance to it from the public road, and that the same autocrat claims the right to keep locked. A notice has been exhibited at the gate that the key is at a certain house hard by, but it has not always been found there when wanted. Stories have appeared in the local Press of the Vicar's warden having been both locked in and locked out. What facilities of access to their supposed common place of worship the humbler parishioners have under these circumstances may be easily imagined. The position of the parish priest is not less ignominious than that of the parish church. Publicly flouted and snubbed at every opportunity in the face of his flock, thwarted at every turn by the rival ecclesiastical boss of the parish, he is finally stripped of every bit of land that can be taken from him, his beggarly income further cut down by the confiscation of his poultry-run, and his stables taken away—possibly lest he should think of making a few shillings a week by letting them. And, as the crowning irony, by whom is all this done? By the man who actually holds the bulk of the parochial revenues originally granted for the maintenance of the Church and the service of religion! The whole case furnishes a pretty object-lesson for the Church Reformer and the Disestablisher.

The GRAND HOTEL, Monte Carlo, the most fashionable hotel & restaurant on the Riviera. Perfect English sanitation. Now under English management.—Managing Directors, Messrs. NOEL & PATTARD.

The luxury of a bath is incomplete without the addition of SCRUBB'S CLOUDY FLUID AMMONIA, which refreshes and invigorates. Sold everywhere, but avoid injurious imitations.

THE RAILWAYS—HOW TO DEAL WITH THEM.

In my last week's and preceding articles on railway management, we have arrived at the following conclusions: (1) that in numerous particulars the railway companies fail to satisfy the legitimate requirements of the public; (2) that the main cause of all the shortcomings of the railway service is the desire to increase dividends and raise the market price of the companies' stocks; (3) that nearly all the companies are at present dividing profits far in excess of the normal market rate of interest upon railway investments; (4) that the public have an absolute right to be considered before the shareholders. The ultimate question for solution is, therefore, this: How is the public to assert and enforce its right to have the excessive profits at present earned and distributed, applied to the improvement of the railway service?

There is one way, and one only, by which this can be done, namely, by tightening up the very slight and lax control at present exercised by the State over the railway companies. This control is now vested in the Railway Commission for some purposes and the Board of Trade for others. It already includes such matters as the regulation (within certain very narrow limits) of passenger fares and goods rates, the running of workmen's trains at special fares, the provision of reasonable traffic facilities, and the compliance with various structural and mechanical requirements officially prescribed for the safety of the public. In the proposal, therefore, that public authority should be empowered to require of railway companies this or that improvement, this or that expenditure out of their profits, there is nothing novel, still less revolutionary. It is a mere development of the principle which was recognised when the Legislature first laid down the minimum requirements of the public in the shape of "Parliamentary trains," and which has run through the whole railway legislation of the last sixty years. All that is required is that the existing State control should be enlarged in certain particulars, that the principles on which it rests should be more clearly defined, and that a competent and efficient authority should be created to exercise it.

Looking at the magnitude of the interests involved, I should myself be in favour of creating for this purpose a Minister of Railways, with a properly equipped office and staff. But that is little more than a question of names; and the same end might be arrived at by re-organising and expanding the present railway department of the Board of Trade. Having created an efficient department, either de novo or by utilising existing machinery, we should vest in it all powers at present exercised by the Board of Trade and the Railway Commission. We should, further, give it a general jurisdiction over all railway administration, and empower it to order any improvements to be carried out which in its discretion it considered necessary or desirable in the public interest. The new authority should be armed with full powers to deal with every one of the defects in railway management that were noticed in my first and second articles. In regard to unpunctuality, it should investigate all complaints from the public under this head and make suggestions for the acceleration of the traffic. In order to enforce attention to its suggestions, it might very well have power, as was suggested by a correspondent of the Times a few days ago, to fine the company in a substantial sum where the delay was shown to be excessive or chronic. Where mere punishment of this kind failed to produce the desired result, as it would wherever the unpunctuality was due to the line or the stations being insufficient to carry the traffic, the Board would have power to order such works as might be necessary to enable the traffic to be carried with reasonable despatch and punctuality. Similarly, it should have power to fine in cases of systematic overcrowding, and if the evil continued, to make specific orders for the running of longer and more frequent trains to meet the exigencies of the traffic; and this last power should extend to all cases where the existing service of trains does not meet the reasonable requirements of the public in the neighbourhood. It should have power to condemn both stations and rolling stock which are structurally defective and not up to modern requirements. It should have full authority to deal with complaints of the insufficient lighting and warming of carriages, and to grapple with such a notorious public scandal as the ventilation of the Metropolitan Railway. It might well have power to make and amend by-laws, and thus to secure reasonable arrangements for the conveyance of passengers' luggage (including bicycles), and for the convenience of the public in many other minor matters. Above all, it should have a clearly defined power, wherever a company is paying a dividend sufficient to raise its ordinary stock above par, to order a certain portion of the current profits to be expended in any kind of improvements that may seem most desirable in the public interest, whether in increasing the number of trains or the staff of porters, or in improving carriages or stations, or introducing any minor improvement which will enhance the comfort of travellers.

There is another interest which would also have to be safeguarded at the same time, namely, that of the staffs. Although the recent agitation among railway servants was ill-timed and ill-conceived, there can be no question that, in many cases, the men have real grievances. In spite of some improvement of late years, outrageously long hours are still worked in many cases, notably by drivers of goods engines, by guards, and signalmen; and the public has quite as direct and vital an interest as the men themselves in putting down such overwork, for it is fraught with dire danger to every traveller. Much of the work of railway servants, again, is carried on under needless risk. The annual bill of mortality, more particularly that among shunters and platelayers, is disgracefully high—disgracefully, because it might be greatly reduced, did not considerations of £ s. d. stand in the way. Nor must the indoor servants of the companies be forgotten. In the recent articles in TRUTH on the grievances of clerks, incidental reference was made to the clerks in the service of railway companies. They are undoubtedly among the worst-sweated of any of their class. Even booking clerks, considering their responsibilities, are, as a rule, miserably paid; while the men employed in the general offices of the companies may pass the best part of their lives in the service without arriving at the income of an engine driver. It is not to be supposed, in these democratic days, that if we empower a public authority to regulate in some measure the expenditure of railway companies, with a view to restricting the profits of the monopoly, the claims of labour to participate in the benefits can be disregarded.

If you want to entirely Furnish your House or select any article of Furniture or Carpet, &c., send for HEWETSONS' Illustrated Priced Catalogue.—HEWETSONS, Tottenham Court-road, London.

I realise, of course, that these proposals will not commend themselves to railway shareholders as a class—although I am a railway shareholder myself. Some of them may possibly say that it is virtually a proposal to enable a public official to cut down their dividends and lower the price of their stock to any degree he may think fit. Now that I should not propose, and, in order to guard against it, I would give the railway companies a right of appeal to some independent tribunal against any orders of the Railway Department involving the expenditure of money. The present Railway Commission, which is essentially a judicial body, might well be preserved for the purpose of exercising an appellate jurisdiction of this nature. Railway shareholders are entitled to the current market rate of interest upon their capital, and their rights to this extent should be scrupulously protected. But, for the reasons set out in my last article, they have no right to more than this. They could not, indeed, possibly divide for any length of time a higher rate of profit than this, were it not for the fact that they are monopolists; for, by the eternal laws of political economy, as soon as their profits rose above the normal rate, competitors would be attracted to the field, and the profit would have to be divided. The State, which protects them against such competition, has an indefeasible right to limit the amount of profit which shall be made out of the monopoly that it has created; and not only a right, but an absolute duty for the protection of the community generally. A monopoly unfettered by restrictions on its profits is practically a power of taxing the community at will; and as a simple matter of political economy every penny of profit at present paid to railway shareholders beyond the current market rate of interest on capital invested in railway stock is a tax upon travellers and traders for the benefit of the railway monopoly. Such a tax is indefensible in principle and mischievous in practice. The trading and agricultural interests have long kicked vigorously against it, and with special reason, for in their case the burden of the tax has been aggravated by the special exemptions granted to their foreign competitors. But the ordinary passenger, whether he uses the railways for business or pleasure, has an equal right to protest, and he will realise it more fully when he learns what has been done of late years to cheapen and facilitate railway travelling by the action of the State in countries like Denmark, Belgium, Switzerland, and Hungary. As soon as he does realise this, there will be an irresistible demand for a radical modification of the relations between the railways and the State. Railway shareholders must, therefore, make up their minds to the fact that dividends will have to be reduced, and the sooner they realise this, and their directors and managers with them, the better it will be in the end for their pockets.

I have said on previous occasions that I am personally in favour of the nationalisation of railways. I am so still. But for the present, nationalisation is in England rather a pious opinion than a matter of practical politics, and it must remain so until the British public generally arrives at sounder ideas on the question of all the great monopolies. In the meantime, the establishment of such a modicum of public control as that suggested above is a half-measure which will be acceptable to many who would not listen to a project of nationalisation, which will effectually remove all the worst public grievances against the companies, and will at the same time immensely facilitate the work of nationalising the railways whenever the time comes—as come it must—for the State to take them over. In fact, I would recommend the most aggressive nationaliser, as a matter of policy, to go for a measure of this kind first, in preference to striving to take the whole cherry at one bite. As regards the public generally, let me impress on them, one and all, that it is the only remedy for the abuses of which they complain. It is idle to suppose that railway management can be reformed, as it requires to be reformed, by writing to the companies, or by letters to the Press, or by articles in the magazines. The vast pecuniary interests operating in the other direction are not to be influenced by means like these. The public have got to show that they are stronger than the strongest railway manager or board of directors, and this they can only do by political action. It need not be made a Party question—better not, I should say—but it is a question which Parliament will have to take up; and Parliament only takes up questions in response to pressure from outside.

THE PANTOMIMES.

Was there ever such a goodly feast provided in the world before? Such wonders in dreamland? Such fairies in fairyland? Arthur Collins has not allowed the grass to grow under his feet; he has steadily refused to do things by halves, and, to use a vulgar phrase, has insisted on going "the whole hog or none." Old Drury Lane stage positively beams with delight at the dense masses of loveliness it is its proud privilege to bear, and I doubt if "Jimmy" Glover has ever before entered into the spirit of the pantomime with such a will and a go. His music is delightfully arranged. One of the cleverest numbers, sung by Alice Barnett, is a distinctly happy amalgamation of "The Amorous Goldfinch" from the "Geisha" and Letty Lind's famous "Gay Tom Tit" song. But it is rather maddening, though, to be humming "With a frock all glit-glit-glitter" and find that it suddenly breaks off into "For love of the gay Tom-tit-tit-tit"!

Every one knows the story of "The Babes in the Wood" by heart, but there never were two funnier "Babes" in pantomime history than Herbert Campbell as "Chrissie" and little Dan Leno as "Reggie." These infant prodigies are simply immense, and are much helped by the brightness and wittiness of Arthur Sturgess and Arthur Collins, who have written the book. There has been much talk both large and small over the wonderful ballet in Orchid Land, which is in truth a gorgeous and magnificent spectacle to behold. There never was a more glorious triumph for the clever designer and costumier. Each orchid is represented true to the very life, and as every fresh "trail of flowers" appears upon the scene the applause and enthusiasm which greet it are unanimous. What a clever fellow Mr. John A. Warden is! Where has this shining light been hiding his modest head all this while? There is plenty of room for such as he, and he is welcome, indeed. Verily time stands still with some people, and Ada Blanche is one of nature's lucky ones. Looking younger, slimmer, and sprightlier than ever, she sings and dances with all the ardour and freshness of a girl of seventeen. It is a treat to watch her. To my mind the coronation scene quite equals the Orchid ballet in beauty of colouring and magnificence. And won't all the ladies envy the lovely reversible fans used in this entrancing tableau? Some are made of huge white ostrich feathers lined pink, some are black edged with rose, whilst dozens are of dark green spangled with gold and pure white starred with silver, and the glinting, scintillating effect of these novel creations being wafted about by the dancing girls is indescribable. Miss Violet Robinson is, comparatively speaking, a new-comer. She hails from the Gaiety, is a sweet singer, divinely tall, and unquestionably fair. Another welcome friend is the graceful Grigolati troupe, which has added considerably to its number since last I had the pleasure of seeing it. It was a positive inspiration to clad these aërial figures in the azure and dark blue plumage of the pretty humming bird, and to send them flying hither and thither, darting here, there, and everywhere amidst the mystic and beautiful garden of orchid land. The dresses are all gorgeous and harmonious in the extreme, thanks to the cleverness of such well-known artists as M. Comelli and M. Alias. Half the battle of a pantomime now is the luxury and lavishness of the costumes. It is not a question of tinfoil nowadays, but "tin" pure and unadulterated, and a more costly, more magnificent show it is impossible to conceive than this year's pantomime at Old Drury Lane.

If I were asked to describe the effect of Mr. Oscar Barrett's pantomimes, I should reply in the words of a well-known advertisement, "they are grateful and comforting." They never jar, or get on your nerves. He makes you smile, but never laugh; he brings a tear to your eye, but it never falls. He is very intense in all he does. He dislikes gaudiness and glitter, and turns his attention to the sere and yellow leaf tones. He is absorbed in nebulous greys and high art greens. He revels in faded browns and cloudy blues. He swathes himself in mysterious duns, and draperies of saddened violet. This Christmas his production of "Cinderella" is quite up to his usual mark, and equals the charming production he gave us four years ago at the Lyceum theatre, when some gentleman, so it is said, went to buy a ticket at the box-office and asked what part Irving was playing in the pantomime. The only difference I see in the whole performance—barring, of course, the change of cast—is the fact that Mr. Geoffry Thorn has written a new book of Cinderella; and in a letter printed in one of the leading newspapers the other day, cavilling at its critic's remarks anent his work, he says, "I should not object to his conclusion that my 'book' contains 'nothing new or striking,' if he is really dealing with my book, and not an obviously compressed version issued by the management; but I object to his totally erroneous assumption that 'nearly all the boisterous merriment, which from time to time arrests the action of the piece,' is evolved from the brains of the comedians." Now, as I evidently am possessed of an "obviously compressed version" of the book—for which, by the way, the sum of one shilling is charged—the less I say about it the better.

With Harry Nicholls and John Le Hay as the two wicked sisters, Kate Phillips as the step-mamma, looking "for all the world over," as they say, young and pretty enough to play Cinderella herself, and the inimitable Fred Kaye as Pedro, the pantomime starts off as merrily as marriage bells. Mr. Barrett does not swerve much from stage tradition. He does not intersperse his story with "extra turns" or side shows; he goes steadily on with the romance, thinking evidently, and rightly, too, of the baby minds of the little ones in front. Cinderella's carriage is a perfect dream of beauty, and the children will go into raptures over it. So they will over the ball-room scene, where Cicely Richards, as the good fairy, changes Grace Dudley's gown of shimmering satin literally encrusted with diamonds back again to the old Cinderella frock all shreds and patches, and off she flies as the clock strikes twelve, far away from the embraces of Miss Helen Bertram, who, as the gay young Prince, sings and acts delightfully. Mr. Barrett's pantomime at the Garrick takes one back to the days of happy childhood, when everything was couleur de rose, and tender memories creep around, whispering of the far-off loves of long ago, and once again we see the dim outline of those sweet and gentle faces now lost to us, alas! in Shadowland. It is all very simple, very innocent, and unutterably soothing!

"PETER THE GREAT."

If you have watched as closely as I have the brilliantly successful career of Sir Henry Irving at the Lyceum Theatre, you will have noticed that he never shirks a difficulty. Apart from being a most admirable and versatile actor, he has an intense love for the picturesque, combined with a passion for the natural. When he gave us "Charles I." we had pictures of Hampton Court as it must have been in the sunny and idle days of that poor unfortunate monarch. "Eugene Aram," again, presented to us an ideal Knaresborough, beautiful to a fault, but scarcely over-realistic. "Faust" gave us a scene of mediæval Nuremberg never to be forgotten; but a play which is hardly ever recalled, and which has been far too readily put on one side, is Vanderdecken, the "Flying Dutchman," wherein Henry Irving literally revelled in the uncanny and the picturesque. So long as he can get a new period to attack he is bound to be happy. In "Much Ado about Nothing," with its superb cathedral borrowed from one in Messina or Sicily, he gave us a Shakespearian production unheard of in the annals of Macready and Charles Kean. Now he approaches us as a figure almost unknown to the English stage—as Peter the Great, shipwright and Czar, and by his side Miss Ellen Terry as Catherine, the peasant and ex-washer-woman, so history relates, Empress of All the Russias.

Of course, there have been plays, dramas, melodramas, and operas, in which Peter the Shipwright has flourished. The last memorable occasion was when John Hollingshead engaged Charles Santley to sing at the Gaiety, and, in addition to his singing, he turned out a remarkably good actor, as every one knows who has heard and seen his Valentine in "Faust." Now, young Laurence Irving, the author of the new play at the Lyceum Theatre, has founded his story mainly on the result of an unhappy marriage into which Peter was drawn before he had arrived at that age when a man is supposed to know his own mind. This result, in the shape of a poor, weak, and sickly son, is the pivot round which Mr. Irving winds and unwinds his tale of cruelty, of desperate deeds, and of butchery. A man of violent purpose, fierce mien, and iron will was Peter the First. The one great passion of his life, the one all-absorbing love that nothing ever destroyed, was for his country, his adored Russia! He was a mechanic as well as a bookworm, this Emperor, this extraordinary combination of heart and hate; a scientist as well as a shipwright. Is it to be wondered at, then, that such a creature as this puny, insignificant nincompoop, this shallow-brained, uninutellectual son of his, should grate on his nerves, should jar against every fibre in his body, and drive him to a state of mind bordering on frenzy? In vain does Peter try to arouse some sort of enthusiasm in his son. Alexis refuses to work, he won't read, he won't draw, he won't study. He makes love to an impudent minx of a peasant girl named Euphrosine, an impertinent little hussy charmingly played by Miss Ethel Barrymore, the pretty and accomplished daughter of our old friend, Maurice Barrymore, and his wife, who was known in stageland as "Georgie Drew," and who was sister of the American actor, John Drew. The gods must have loved her well, for, alas! poor soul, she died young!

At times young Irving becomes wildly alliterative in his speeches, and Peter is forced to tell one of his drunken swashbucklers that he is "slothful, sottish, sluggish, seditious!" The really fine act of the play is the one which takes place in the Senate Hall, in which you are terribly reminded of those ghastly torture scenes from the "Tosca," and Wilson Barrett's "Sign of the Cross." Here Sir Henry Irving is at his very best, and his soliloquy at the end of the act is a superb tour de force. It is a magnificent piece of declamation. The actor stands there in his gorgeous robes of cardinal red and gold, a splendid, imperious figure in the great empty Senate Hall; he is every inch an Emperor, dignified, eminent, supreme! He argues with his soul and wrestles with his conscience for dear life's sake, and finally falls a crushed and broken thing, a shattered wreck, upon the ground of the deserted chamber. It was a grand moment for the author, and a glorious triumph for the actor.

For a long time I puzzled my brains as to where I had seen Alexis before, his figure was so familiar to me; and then suddenly it dawned upon me that he must be a demented relative who had strayed from the House of the Hamlets. If he had been dressed in mourning and worn feathers in his hat, I should have recognised my man sooner. But, there is no use denying it, admirably as Mr. Taber—a young and exceptionally clever American actor—played this difficult character, no sooner did he appear on the stage than up came the Prince of Denmark, too. I wanted more—ever so much more — of the good-natured, merry, happy-go-lucky Catherine, the one being with a heart—the one touch of tenderness and humanity in that den of torture and slaughter. There was one exquisite moment in the play when Ellen Terry, kneeling at the feet of Miss Rockman, the divorced wife whose place she has usurped, swears to protect the wretched mother's defenceless boy. Here once again I listened to Ellen Terry's lovely voice, with that tender throb in it, that wonderful deep note of hers, that thrills every nerve in the body and brings tears to the eyes of the most hardened. But pleading is useless, Alexis is condemned to death, Peter's tyranny demands that he shall die; and the last picture in the play is of this great monarch in a prison cell, with the dead body of the luckless Alexis lying in the arms of his two gaolers, and the father kneeling before a holy shrine imploring forgiveness, and babbling prayers for having so cruelly robbed his son of life.

Never before has Sir Henry Irving devoted so much attention to the stage decorations, the lights, the colouring, the gorgeous dresses, and the scenery. Luxury and harmony invariably prevail at the Lyceum Theatre, and on this present occasion Sir Henry was determined that nothing should be left undone in this respect. He has worked hard and loyally, not only for his own success, but for the success of one who is very near and dear to him. Yes, young Laurence, who, apart from being a dramatic author of undoubted promise, must consider himself lucky indeed to find ready at his side, and waiting to help him over the stile to fame, such an actor, such a scholar, such a student, and such an artist as his father!

THE PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

"How London Lives" is a melodrama of the good old-fashioned order of things, and Mr. Albert Gilmer is to be commended for having chosen so wisely and so well. But I sincerely hope London does not live in the way Messrs. Shirley and Martyn Field want to make out. Fancy meeting such a termagant of a stepmother, such a viper of a woman as Lady Ferrers! I quite pitied Miss Geraldine Oliffe in the character. And what a silly, foolish, little heroine to go and attempt to drown herself in a nasty, dirty, cold river! Kate Tyndall is, however, happily rescued by the ever-green Charles Warner, who would wake the dullest, dreariest play into life and action by his tremendous power and nervous force. Who can ever forget the way in which he held his audience when he played Coupeau in the English version of "L'Assommoir?" Why he absolutely swayed and did as he pleased with the people. This clever actor commands attention the instant he steps upon the stage. Watch him, how carefully he feels his way into the very heart of his public, and once he reaches it never loses his hold, but grips on firmly as a rock until the end. There is one screamingly funny pawnshop scene in this melodrama, in which a love-sick impecunious youth sacrifices his gold chronometer in order to buy gifts to lay at the feet of his adored one. The heartless minx accepts the jewels and promptly takes them to the self-same "mont de piété" to raise a little "on her own." As ill-luck will have it, just as this treacherous female is in the act of interviewing "uncle," in comes the enamoured young man to pledge more heirlooms for "her dear sake." Tableau—"There's a picture for you," as Mr. R. G. Knowles sings. The play is certain to attract, for the hero is such a splendid fellow, the villain such a scoundrel, the heroine so sweet, the comic element so funny, and every character so admirably acted.

"THE GREATEST SHOW ON EARTH!"

Greatest show, indeed! Why, there are teams of shows. One circus, forsooth! Why, there are perfect regiments of them. There never was such a scene of wild excitement, intoxicating whirl, and mad bewilderment. Conceive the colossal arena at Olympia literally swarming with masses of different "turns." In one corner is a fair equestrian riding a bare-backed horse, in another some wonderful performing dogs, two of which are such champion boxers that I rather fancy Slavin and Jackson must have had something to do with their training. "Just look at that mysterious ball, Cyril," says mamma to her son; "there's a real live man inside, and he's rolling himself up that spiral incline." "I can't," replies dutiful Cyril. "I'm watching that man hanging by his heels up there near the ceiling." "Is that a woman or what? That thing over there, doubling itself up in that extraordinary fashion," I began asking myself; but I had not a moment to find out, for my eyes were only just in time to see a bare-footed Japanese man come gliding with startling rapidity down a rope from the roof to the ground. Daring performers on the trapeze, champion acrobats, ladies flying through silver hoops, seals ringing bells, snake charmers, a dog football player who "throws off" in a fashion that must delight every lover of this splendid pastime, are only a few of the thousand and one sights to be seen at this vast Show. Then, one, two, three, and away! go horse races, chariot races, dog races, hurdle races, and races of all sorts and descriptions round and round this magnificent amphitheatre, and you strain your eyes until they are fairly dazzled; and then sit absolutely dizzy and exhausted with the maze and terrific pulsation of this phenomenal entertainment provided for us by our American cousins—Messrs. Barnum and Bailey. But the shows do not end here. A huge placard at the end of a turning reads thus: "This way to the freaks," and off you go willy-nilly, to discover what they are. First of all, I was introduced to a man "sans arms." He was eating his dinner, and as Nature had omitted to provide him with hands, he used his feet in place of them. Then a lady weighing some twenty or thirty stone stepped on to the elevated platform, made it shiver, to the apparent terror of her neighbours, and sat herself comfortably down. A man with the head and face of a dog was a decided novelty, and so was the gentleman who wiled his leisure moments away by eating needles. By the time I had seen the legless man, the bearded lady, and the elastic gentleman, I arrived at the conclusion that I had gathered to its very utmost the meaning of that ominous announcement, "This way to the freaks." After a glance round at the elephants, the horses, the monkeys, the bears, the snakes, and the whole bag of tricks, I wended my way to the splendid restaurant, which is one of the chief attractions in this enormous building. Here, thanks to the excellent catering of Messrs. Lyons & Co., I was able to restore my shattered nerves, and I returned home, not a sadder, but a merrier and a much wiser man.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

THE New Year has not begun well; the weather, which had been in Christmas week clear, cold, and bracing, grew suddenly wet and gloomy. Cabmen had reason to rejoice; but the Boulevard Fair suffered greatly from the continuous, icy drizzle. It was the sort of weather one has at Edinburgh when the wind blows from the north-east. There were all sorts of reasons for a melancholy New Year's Levee at the Elysée. Baron de Mohrenheim at that function made his exit from diplomacy. Sir Edmund Monson could not attend; he was in mourning for a sister. The Government was smarting under the acquittal of the seven Deputies, towards whom it behaved so badly. MM. Faure and Méline had had a narrow escape in the Place de la Concorde. The carriage in which they drove to return the visit of the other Presidents rolled over and was a good deal damaged. The cause was a broken linch-pin. But the telegram from St. Petersburg was more than enough to compensate for every mésaventure. Emperor and Empress united in wishing the compliments of the season to M. Félix Faure and the friend-nation. This message is the last that Baron Mohrenheim carries. The friend-nation will be more valued than ever at St. Petersburg now that the German Emperor sets his brother down under Russia's nose at Kiao-chau. Russia in principle had agreed to the Germans doing something in China; but as she could never agree when details were gone into, the Emperor William takes time by the forelock, and despatches the brother-in-law of the Empress to the Yellow Sea. He will be there before the thaw in the Gulf of Pechili sets in. The Empress of Russia is a potent personage in the eyes of the tchinn, and the military and naval services. They will think twice before attempting to trip up Prince Henry. There is no State in the world in which the Sovereign's wife and mother are invested with so much prestige as in Russia. The will of the Empress is always law, when it does not conflict with that of the Empress Dowager.

The death of Alphonse Daudet is so recent that on New Year's Day the flowers on his grave were still fresh. The funeral of Léon Carvalho, that always brilliant and constantly unsuccessful manager of opéra comique, closed the old year. He led an interesting life, full of ups and downs, of sharp turns, sudden successes, and charming friendships, He was daring in his ventures, and often came to grief. But he was always ready to begin again. He and his wife—a delightful woman—were united against ill-fortune. She seemed, when it overtook them, to find pleasure in fighting it. Her elasticity was never at fault. She was the most artistic woman of her day—or, perhaps, of any day—and off the stage did not set up to be anything. But she talked and sang like an angel. Her sensibilities were singularly keen, but she escaped being morbid. The woman's unfailing pluck braced her and all her family. She was very much alive to Carvalho's failings, but she was afraid they endeared him to her. Why take an interest in a man who always went straight and was sure never to make a blunder? Did such a perfect being need a guardian angel or a good Providence? Carvalho's worship of le dieu hasard drew him into some scrapes. He had an easy, gentle, and seemingly indolent disposition that made him pleasant to live with. But singers he employed found that he was not to be got round and wheedled. He listened to all they had to say, and was parsimonious of words in answering, but more good-humoured or humorous than dry. His manners were those of a diplomat. He had a striking resemblance to old Baron James de Rothschild, and the kind of long whiskers about which I dealt in a recent set of "Notes." Carvalho never surfeited the public with his wife's voice. It was a voice backed with so much sensibility, directed with such sure instinct, and capable of so much easy expression, as to render her peerless in Gounod's semi-religious music. Gounod was to music what Renan was to religious literature. He never had such an exponent as Mme. Miolan-Carvalho. She "burned the Seine" as Marguerite.

It was not Carvalho's fault if the Opéra Comique was burned down under his management. He was always warning the Government that a great fire there was certain. A fortnight before the fire, M. Steenackers, put on by him, called the attention of the Chamber of Deputies to the dangerous state of that theatre. Combustible scenery was packed into it, and so close to jets of gas that a sudden draught might turn them on it. The wonder was that it was not burned down long before.

SAHARA (TURKISH) CIGARETTES are manufactured from the choicest Turkish Tobacco, the excellence and regularity of which is guaranteed by the makers, W. D. & H. O. WILLS, Ltd.

Who was Carvalho? Nobody exactly knew. He kept his origin and his age a secret. His son never saw his birth certificate until he was dead. But every one knew that his real name was Carvacille, and that he was a West Indian. No trace of negro blood was shown, however. He brought forward a number of American cantatrices, among them Van Zandt and Sybil Sanderson. He often wondered that Cubans, and other West Indian girls touched with the tar brush, did not come to Europe to study singing; for he felt sure they would be the most joyous, melodious, bird-like singers. The negroes are born musicians, and there are no sweeter singers than mulatto girls. They have a timbre and a richness of note rare in Europe, and rarer still on the American Continent, unless "down South" in the darkies country. Fine contralto voices are common enough in the Cuban haciendas.

Carvalho is buried with his wife at Père Lachaise. But his name will not appear on the beautiful monument above her tomb. It was unveiled on the last Jour des Morts. She is represented as she appeared in the final scene of "Faust," looking up as if to angels, and with a broken lyre wreathed with flowers.

A number of disparus have come forward to claim the managership of the Opéra Comique, which has all but risen from its ashes. On the list I find the name of Capoul. What an age it seems since he was the arch lady-killer! As he is a Toulousain, he has a good chance. Senator Hebraid, editor of Le Temps, also from Toulouse, has local patriotism, as shown in pushing compatriots, and he "knows the ropes" so well here. Capoul was on the wane when he still charmed as Paul, warbling love-ditties to Mlle. Heilbronn, singing as Virginie. He was very near being M. Grévy's son-in-law. But it was finally thought infra dig. for a great barrister to give his daughter in marriage to a singer. Had he been accepted, there would have been no Wilson row, and therefore no abrupt end to the Grévy Presidency. Carnot would, in all probability, be still alive, and have never risen above a Ministry. Félix Faure would have remained a shrewd, second-rate political "utility." Probably there would be now no Russian alliance, no rousing telegram this morning from the Czar and Czarina, and no despatching of a big box of French toys to their little Highnesses Olga and Tatiana.

The name of Wilson has just cropped up. How unjust we were to the son-in-law who bore it! We objected to him for using the Elysée stamp for his private letters and for spending at the rate of 25,000 francs to make 1,000 francs! How the camelots used to howl through the streets, "Le Malheur d'Avoir un Gendre!" Nobody suspected that Wilson was the victim of a Panamist conspiracy. The set was made against him and Grévy to bring personal friends of Arton into the councils of the Government—Barbe and Baïhaut among the number. How Blaine's eyes one evening at Dr. Evans's puckered up with laughter at Wilson's use of the Elysée stamp! He thought it quite too killing. The French, he said, wanted cause to cry. They deserved a whipping, and would get it. I often thought of Blaine in reading of Madagascar horrors.

The Emperor and Empress of Russia will receive their friends at the 1900 Exhibition in a pavilion of their own. The plan has been submitted to them, and the estimated cost of the building is £90,000. But I expect that this sum will bear the relation to the cost of furniture that the price of a lunch does at a Russian hotel to the waiters' tips. It is said that commissions of £8,000 were charged on the furniture hired for the use of their Imperial Majesties during the week they spent in Paris. But I have no idea whose bread was buttered on the occasion.

Efforts are being made to secure the attendance of the Queen of the Netherlands at the coming World-Show. She would be an interesting star fresh from her coronation honours. Her most recent photos represent her as well grown and older-looking than her age. She is not pretty, but pleasing, and must be very like the late King when he was Prince of Orange.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

LAST week, dear Lady Betty, I gave you a short account of an interview which I had had with an eminent actress. A few hours after my letter to you was published I received the following communication :—

"95, Grosvenor-square, W.

"SIR,—Will you kindly call here to-morrow morning at eleven exact, as my husband and myself are anxious to be interviewed by you for the next issue of TRUTH?

"Faithfully yours,

"ELIZABETH BOUNDERBY."

It may be well that I should give here the outlines of the past histories of Mr. and Mrs. Bounderby. The lady began life in a very humble condition Being pretty, she attracted the attention of Bounderby, a small local manufacturer. They married. In the course of time, his business increased enormously; he became a millionaire; the Bounderbys removed to London, set up an establishment in Grosvenor-square, and, being welcomed with enthusiasm as only rich people are welcomed in the West End, they were soon regarded as entertainers of the first magnitude.

And of such is the kingdom of Mayfair—now.

. . . . .

At eleven precisely I presented myself at 95, Grosvenor-square, and I was at once received by Mrs. Bounderby.

The lady did not rise, but without turning her head—she was writing—said :—

"Good morning. Sit down. Please forgive me for continuing my work, as I am terribly busy, but I shall answer any questions you may consider it necessary to ask."

(Here she rang a bell, and a footman entered.)

MRS. B. : "James, just take this list to the florist and have a wreath sent with my compliments to each of those addresses. There will be seven this morning."

MYSELF : "Do you mean to say that you have lost seven friends during the last twenty-four hours ?"

MRS. B. : "They were not friends. I scarcely knew any of them, but the names of those who send wreaths will be published, and . . . ."

MYSELF : "Oh ! Of course ! I quite understand."

(The lady rang again, and another servant appeared.)

MRS. B. : "Cotter, please call at the jewellers and order four wedding presents at the usual prices, and have them forwarded to the following addresses with my best compliments."

MYSELF : "They are for friends of yours who are going to be married ?"

MRS. B. : "Not friends, but people who are socially prominent. . . . ."

(Here Mr. Bounderby entered the room, holding a bundle of cheques in his hand.)

MR. B. : "Sorry to interrupt you. . . . . Here are several cheques for charitable institutions. In sending them be careful to request that they are publicly acknowledged in the newspapers."

MYSELF : "How very good of you ! That is true philanthropy."

MR. B. : "Ah ! but if it becomes known that you are charitably disposed, hundreds of swindlers endeavour to impose upon you. Only this morning a man called and begged to be assisted as he and his wife were starving. I naturally asked him to mention the names of any distinguished patrons who were interested in his case but the man had not even a Law Lord or a Colonial Office Knight to recommend him ! I have written to Scotland-yard to have the scoundrel watched."

MYSELF : "It is monstrous ! Does he suppose that virtue is its own reward in these enlightened days ?"

MYSELF (addressing Mrs. B.) : "I hope you have had a cheerful family gathering for Christmas ?"

MRS. B. : "We are far too busy looking after other people's relations to be able to waste time over our own. Besides, Mr. Bounderby and myself have but one object in life, which is, to know those who do not wish to know us."

MYSELF : "A most laudable object, and one which is very generally pursued in London now."

MRS. B. : "You have seen the man feed the sparrows in Hyde Park ? Day after day he goes to the same place and scatters crumbs, until the birds become so accustomed to him that they perch upon his fingers and peck at the bread on his palm. We are like that man. We feed Society in a variety of ways until it becomes accustomed to us."

MYSELF : "But what service is Society to render you in return for this ?"

MRS. B. : "Our success will annoy our relations and humble friends. Is that not enough ?"

MYSELF : "Surely. Indeed, there could not be anything more desirable . . . . . especially at this season of peace and goodwill."

MRS. B. : "Well, good-bye. If you can manage to publish all this in TRUTH next week, my husband and myself will be most obliged to you; but of course you quite understand that we cannot possibly invite you to our entertainments . . . ."

MYSELF : "Quite. And I thank you very much. Good-bye."

* * * * *

The hurry-scurry of this singular modern attempt to play at Society may best be described by a quotation from "Alice in Wonderland." The Red Queen having taken Alice by the hand, commenced to run at a furious rate. At length they stopped.

"Alice looked round in great surprise. 'Why, I do believe we have been under this tree all the time! Everything is just as it was.'

"'Of course it is,' said the Queen. 'What would you have it ?'

"'Well, in our country,' said Alice, still panting a little, 'you generally get to somewhere else—if you run very fast for a long time, as we have been doing'

"'A slow sort of country!' said the Queen. 'Now, here you see it takes all the running you can do to keep in the same place.'"

So is it in Mayfair, now, with a Society which is made up of adventurers, rich and otherwise, who have no fixed position. They must always be to the front, and "it takes them all the running they can do to keep in the same place." The vast majority of them fall out in the end.

* * * * *

One effect of sacrificing agriculture to trade has been that the majority of those who had lived generation after generation on the same property have been ruined. Their stately old homes have been sold, the art treasures which had been accumulating for centuries have been scattered, and the families themselves have rapidly sunk into insignificance. As they were formerly the mainstay of the Monarchical Party, it has been the policy of the present reign to create an Alphabetical Aristocracy to take their place. Orders which had declined in importance were revived, and numerous new Orders have been instituted. The result of this policy is, that, though there never was a period yet when so few men were conspicuously great, as at the present, there never was one when so many men have received these alphabetical distinctions. The Victorian "Thousand and One Knights"—they are really ten thousand and one—will be a source of continual amusement to posterity. There is scarcely a Brixton lodging-house keeper who is not connected with some "distinguished" alphabetical aristocrat, and nearly every obituary announcement in the newspapers will shortly be worded somewhat like the following:—

"On ———, at ———, Miss Lavinia Jakins, daughter of Algernon Jakins, of Camberwell Green, and second cousin of the late Sir Flasherty Flopp, K.C.M.G., &c."

Lord Salisbury has added considerably to the number of these alphabetical aristocrats during his present tenure of office, and it is generally imagined that, should he retain power sufficiently long, every British subject who has a vote will also have some letters of the alphabet tacked on to his name. Then, indeed, shall Great Britain be glorious.—Believe me to be, very truly yours,

MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

A GREAT deal of expansive balderdash has been appearing in some of the papers about the vast amount of money which is now "given" to races. If the people who circulate this rubbish would only take the trouble to investigate the conditions of those great stakes which appear to have so excited their ignorant enthusiasm, they would find that nearly the whole of the money really comes out of the pockets of the owners who subscribe to them. Last year not one farthing was given by the Jockey Club to either the Princess of Wales's Stakes of £10,000, the Jockey Club Stakes of £10,000, or the Middle Park Plate. There was a surplus of £82 on the first of these events, of £482 on the second, and of £50 on the third of them. The owners who entered horses for the Princess of Wales's and the Jockey Club Stakes were themselves, therefore, so generous as to subscribe about £20,500 for the benefit of Lord Rosebery and Mr. Bass. Oddly enough, the Eclipse Stakes, the oldest and the most popular of these so-called "mammoth" events, resulted in a loss, as the fund had to contribute £1,701 in order to make up the advertised value of the race.

I cannot understand why the Jockey Club do not start a couple of big Produce Stakes (value at least £5,000 each) to run as two-year-olds. The Newmarket programmes manifestly require strengthening in this department, and these races are a great attraction at Kempton Park, and at Sandown Park, and they are so popular with owners that they seldom result in a loss to the fund. Last season the £5,000 stake at Sandown Park (the richest two-year-old race of the season) resulted in a surplus of £573. The Kempton Park events of this class were also successful, for the one ended with a surplus of £260, and the other was £360 to the good.

The whole of the Spring Handicaps are now converted into subscription races. Last year the Chester Cup of £2,550 involved a loss to the fund of £1,810, while there was a deficiency of £1,055 over the Lincolnshire Handicap of £2,000, and the Kempton Park Jubilee Handicap of £3,000 cost the fund £750. From the pecuniary point of view, the City and Suburban of £2,000 was the most successful of these events, as only £805 had to be added.

It is most discreditable to the Stewards of the Jockey Club that they do not insist upon the managers at Epsom giving an adequate sum to the races, for it is the richest meeting in England, excepting only Ascot, and the programmes are beggarly to a degree. Last year the munificent sum of £270 was added to the Derby of £6,000, while the fund contributed nothing to the Oaks, there being a surplus of £45 over the advertised value of the race! The Woodcote Stakes of £1,000, which is the principal two-year-old event in the Epsom programmes, cost the fund just £210! The added money to the Westminster Plate of £200 amounted to £72, and the Hyde Park Plate of £500 involved a loss to the fund of £136!

Of the Prince of Wales's mares at Sandringham the famous Laodamia is in foal to Isinglass; Merrie Lassie (dam of Grig), to St. Simon; Thais, to Isinglass; Meadow Chat, to St. Frusquin; Leveret, to Sir Hugo; and Unrefined, to Ladas. Perdita II. (dam of Persimmon) has slipped her foal by St. Simon. The Prince of Wales's sale of Shire horses, from the Royal farm at Wolferton, is to take place at Sandringham on Friday, February 11.

Mr. Baird has a most racing-like two-year-old at Newmarket in the bay filly Musa, by Martagon out of Palmflower. Musa will probably make her début at Ascot, and at Goodwood she was engaged, when a foal, in both the Rous Memorial Stakes and the Prince of Wales's Post Sweepstakes, which latter race will be worth £2,600 this year.

Mr. de Rothschild's Vatel, who was a very smart colt during the early part of last season, but who unluckily fell lame, thereby missing all his summer and autumn engagements, is now going on remarkably well at Newmarket. Vatel appears to be quite sound, and he has been much benefited in all ways by his long rest. He should be noted as a colt that is likely to win a good race at either Lincoln, Liverpool, or Northampton. He is engaged at Liverpool in the Union Jack Stakes of £950, and this is very likely the event that he will go for. The entry includes Bittern, Jeddah, Sugar Loaf, Royal Sport, and Cowl (by Galopin out of L'Abbesse de Jouarre), who will probably turn out a very smart filly next season.

That nineteen high-priced yearlings out of every twenty are complete and ignominious failures is a fact which nobody can attempt to deny who takes the trouble to peruse the melancholy but instructive records of the Racing Calendar, and how even the most infatuated and unsophisticated of simpletons can for a moment believe that buying such animals is "good business" it is utterly impossible to understand. During the season of 1896 thirty-three yearlings were sold for 1,000 gs. and upwards, and many of the sporting papers extolled these animals to the skies, and exhausted eulogy in their enthusiastic paroxysms of praise about the "enterprise," the "spirit," and so forth, of the crack-brained purchasers. Will it be credited that only three of these creatures have won any races whatever? Florio Rubattino (1,800 gs.) carried off the New Stakes at Ascot, but was afterwards beaten several times, and he is not likely to distinguish himself in the future. La Veine (3,100 gs.) won a trumpery race of £200, and she, too, has probably seen her best day on the Turf. Disraeli

(1,000 gs.) won a single race, value £1,005, at Derby. The highest-priced yearling of 1896 was a filly by St. Simon out of Dart, for whom the insane price of 5,100 gs. was paid. This animal started once last season, and was badly beaten. It may be asserted that this general collapse is a quite exceptional state of matters, but the results of previous seasons do not bear out this consolatory theory. In 1894 there were twenty-two high-priced yearlings, which together sold for nearly 35,000 gs., but their winnings are perfectly contemptible in amount, and the only one of them which did any good as a four-year-old is Knight of the Thistle, who originally cost 2,000 gs., and who in three seasons has earned about his price and training expenses, which would be a direful result of purchasing such an animal if the owner were a poor man. Canterbury Pilgrim, winner of the Oaks in 1896, was bought as a yearling in 1894 by Lord Derby, but she was not sold out of one of the public studs, but came to the hammer in consequence of the break-up of the Sefton stud. In 1895, when purchasers were more than usually puzzle-pated and reckless, twenty-two yearlings realised about £48,000. This lot won three races (value nearly £1,100 !) as two-year-olds, and only one stake (£100) last season.

The St. James's Gazette printed on Friday, in large type, a dissertation entitled "Betting by Jockeys. Important Notice by the Jockey Club Stewards." The editor of the St. James's is, presumably, unaware of the fact that this "important notice" has appeared in the "Racing Calendar" regularly every season for the last nine or ten years.

The Newmarket authorities are possessed with a limpet-like pertinacity, and it has been decided to persevere with the crazy attempt to make the Princess of Wales's Stakes of £10,000 a race for four-year-olds and upwards in 1901. This event is to close next Tuesday, but I shall be vastly surprised if it fills, considering that 200 entries of yearlings and upwards are required. The conditions of the race are absolutely idiotic, and the person who drew them up must be either grossly ignorant or scandalously careless. The race closes on January 11, and yet it is described as being an event for "foals and upwards of 1897," and animals entered as foals are to pay less than those entered as yearlings and upwards. How on earth can "foals of 1897" be described as "foals in 1898," when, as a matter of fact, they are yearlings? The Newmarket Stakes of 1901, which has also been reopened, is also incorrectly advertised as an event for "foals of 1897," whereas it is simply open to yearlings. The Princess of Wales's Stakes is pretty well cut up, the deductions for second and third horses amounting to £2,500, while the nominators of first and second horses are to get £600, which is a tempting bait for the public breeders.

A book entitled "Kings of the Turf," by a writer who calls himself "Thormanby," has been reviewed in highly eulogistic terms in a number of papers, but it is simply a skimble-skamble hash-up of anecdotes and episodes which have been already related many hundreds of times and very few indeed of which were worth telling twice. There is a dreary list of venerable, tiresome, and thoroughly familiar tales, which are regularly reproduced in some quarter or other every winter. "Thormanby's" knowledge of racing affairs, judged by his comments, can be only defined as 0 0 0. It would be impossible to imagine anything more utterly absurd and idiotic than his account of Admiral Rous watching the Newmarket horses at work to see if there was any "shirking," with a view to the trainer throwing dust into the eyes of the handicapper. The merest tiro would regard with just scorn the idea of any handicapper seriously taking notice of the doings of horses at their ordinary morning exercise. We have the usual rhapsodies about Lord George Bentinck, and it would really be well if future writers on the racing career of this personage would take the trouble to peruse Mr. Charles Greville's account of his cousin in the sixth volume of his journal. The fact is that in Lord George Bentinck's day it was only by manœuvres of the most equivocal character, and every species of trickery, that a man could race with success if he betted heavily. Il faut hurler avec les loups was the doctrine of Lord George and his friends, and it is a pity that sporting writers should make him ridiculous by invariably attributing fine qualities to him in which he was undoubtedly and conspicuously lacking. Lord George resorted to every kind of trick and stratagem in order to bamboozle the public and puzzle the bookmakers, and at various times he was the guiding hand in all sorts of schemes and plots of the most discreditable kind. If the details in Mr. Greville's journal of Lord George's racing transactions which Mr. Reeve suppressed could be published we should hear no more trash about the high-minded rectitude of his turf policy. "Thormanby's" compilation swarms with blunders, which he would have avoided if he had taken the trouble to verify his statements, by looking into a few books of reference. For example, the ownership of Seabreeze is attributed to the late Lord Falmouth, who was no more connected with this mare than with Newminster. Seabreeze was not foaled until after Lord Falmouth had sold his stud, and she was bred by the Dowager Duchess of Montrose, who sold her as a yearling to Lord Calthorpe, who owned her throughout her racing career, and after his death she was bought by Lord Rosebery, to whom she now belongs. Curzon, who was a shifty brute and a mere plater, is fatuously described as "a gallant opponent" to Sir Visto in the Derby of 1895. Some of the writer's statements in connection with the sale of Doncaster to the Duke of Westminster, are preposterously incorrect.

Sir Blundell Maple ought to go near winning the principal fillies' races of next season with Nun Nicer and Royal Footstep, which are a couple of the most improved three-year-olds in training. It is probable that Nun Nicer will turn out to be the better of the pair, and she should be a most dangerous candidate for the One Thousand and Oaks. Both fillies are engaged in those races, and also in the Coronation Stakes at Ascot, and in the Nassau Stakes at Goodwood.

Red Heart made a wretched exhibition at Hurst Park last week, when he was started for a Maiden Hurdle Race; but he was not fancied, judging from his price in the betting. Red Heart is a pretty sort of beast for any sane man to have been gulled into paying 5,100 gs. for! That was his price when Colonel North's horses were sold eighteen months ago, and he has since won three small races, value £850.

A welcome addition to annual books of reference for sportsmen is "Baily's Foxhunting Directory," published by Vinton & Co., 9, New Bridge-street, E.C., which has just made its first appearance. Besides full particulars concerning the foxhound packs of the United Kingdom, and a mass of information likely to be of use and interest to hunting men, the volume contains articles on kennel management, hunting equipment, and other subjects by well-known authorities.

SCHOOLS AND SPORTS.

The question of the position of athletics at schools has again been brought before the public owing to the debate at the recent headmasters' conference. These educational authorities, unwilling to damn a system they themselves had fostered, deprecated the tendency to give athletics a too prominent position in the school curriculum. Now, before condemning the present system, and crying with indignation at the prostitution of brain to brute force, it is just as well to gauge, if possible, some of the causes that have led to the enormous athletic developments of recent years, not merely in schools, but amongst the public at large. If one can indicate the causes of the present popularity of sports throughout the kingdom, it is pretty certain that some of them will be found to act on school life. Schools are not monasteries; they are not shut off from the world. First, then, there is the national love of sport, which has spread from the racecourse and left the prize-ring and cock-fights for cricket and football, rowing and athletics. The growth of population has led to an increase in the number of people who either take an interest in sport or take part in it. A common knowledge of the conditions and progress of sports, and more especially of cricket and football, has been created and fostered by a cheap press. Frequent opportunities of seeing matches and of playing in them are afforded by a network of railway communication. These are among the chief causes of the development of sport. Sports, again, form a subject wider than the weather for purposes of conversation, and not less intellectual. Lord Bowen's ordinarily reasonable man had far more intelligence than the average individual. The average man that one meets is not well read, his powers of reasoning are infinitesimally small, apart from his business his conversational powers are extremely limited His acquaintances are probably of the same political opinions as himself. The mutual admiration of two heaven-born politicians soon becomes wearisome. A discussion with a political opponent is only an acrimonious wrangle. But each can mutually appreciate and discuss the question of amateurism and professionalism, the strength of Stoddart's team or the probable winners of the Association Cup It is not an intellectual conversation. It requires no mental effort. There are mutual points of agreement and difference. Each talker highly appreciates the conversational powers of the other. The recognition of the value of this common bond is important if one wishes to realise the reason for the popularity of sport. It helps to explain the crowds at our football and cricket matches, and the amount of sporting shop one listens to.

Turning to school life, one finds precisely the same causes at work. The boy who is on the classical side cannot appreciate the workings of the boy's mind who is reading for a mathematical scholarship. To the senior classic conic sections are unintelligible, and the senior wrangler utterly fails to appreciate the beauty of a set of iambics. Even Porson could not tackle elementary mathematics, and he never took his degree. But the intelligence of the classical scholar and the pollman can unite in descanting on the pleasures of a hit to square leg or a long drive from the golfing tee. The schoolboy looks upon the Balliol scholar as a being who aids in getting a half-holiday. But boys of all ages and in all forms can realise the use of the school's slow bowler or the good half-back. No doubt when they leave their school their thoughts turn back to the prowess of their football team, or some one's fine batting, or the brilliant stroking of another in the Ladies' Plate at Henley. These are memories of events on which old boys, whom many years divide, can talk in after years. Would "Tom Brown's Schooldays" have been popular had there been no football match, no cricket, no steeplechase? Who would have read it if it had been merely the history of the smug who could not tell the difference between slip and long-off, who simply lived in his books, and became a scholar of his college, a fellow, and a dean? For the same reason sports promote esprit de corps in a school more than scholarship. In the football field or on the cricket ground the strength of the school can be realised, as it is pitted against the opposing team. There is never a healthy tone in a school where sports are not properly organised and fostered. Any old public schoolboy well knows how much more healthy is the moral code of our big schools since sports of all kinds have been properly looked after by the head-masters. Their value has been appreciated not only in the schools, but in the Army, as is shown by the institution of the army football cup, and the champion athletic and boxing competitions. At the Universities, too, the beneficial effects are unbounded; and Andrew Lang refers to rowing men as being the salt of the college.

Like everything else, sports may be overdone. In the majority of public schools I do not believe this is the case. The Head-master of Eton recently refused three days for the match with Harrow on the ground that sports take up quite enough time already. The same reason would no doubt apply to any suggestions for a public schools' athletic championship. But, while head-masters are sternly setting their faces against any further licence in sports, there is no one to stop them in the steady increase in the length of holidays. It is all very well to clamour for a more efficient system of education, and to throw the blame for the general ignorance of British youth on sports. But compare the length of holidays in England with those given abroad, and it will be found that there would be ample time for sports if the terms were not being so steadily curtailed as they are at present. Of course, a good deal of capital is made out of the advertisements in which private schools offer cheap education to promising cricketers. No parents need apply. But if the schoolmaster finds such advertisements pay, then that is his affair. He has to live. Such notices merely exemplify the extremes to which people will go. Then, too, fond parents regret that the boys' letters are more full of sports than work. The boy who filled his letter with his exploits in his form would scarcely be a schoolboy; he might be a prig or a genius, and if a father cannot write letters which will get a boy to talk of something else than cricket he has only himself to blame. It is also said some boys ruin their prospects by giving up too much time to sports at school and college. No doubt this is the case. But only in a small number of instances. Some men drink, while others work to excess. Both courses become equally bad for a man's life. It is only reasonable to expect that sports will be similarly abused. If a man has been a good athlete, and having a head on his shoulders, knows when to put sports aside and take to the serious work of life, he will find the friends he has made in his earlier days invaluable; and if he is as good as others, the popularity of his name will naturally help him. If, however, he has been a good athlete without being a good sportsman, his powers will avail him but little. It is, perhaps, easier to trace a man's career at the Bar than in other spheres. There are old Blues on the Bench, there are others who will one day be there, and there is not one at the Bar who has not felt the advantage of having represented his University. But no Blue ever got work who was a fool.

Now the cry goes up that the good athlete gets the preference in applying for a schoolmastership. Other things being equal, why should he not do so? For the very same reason that I have given for boys appreciating sports, they will naturally look up to a master who is a good cricketer. Naturally, the young man who has toiled diligently and daily walked his Grantchester grind will stand very little chance with another man who has done just as well and played in his college team. Nor need the private schoolmaster be afraid of coaching good cricketers if he keeps their work going as well. The advantages of proper exercise in schools are no new thing. But, surely, one would rather know that a school had a good eleven than a giant stride. And yet in an advertisment in the Times reprint of the Coronation issue the giant stride is a feature in a private school advertisement. But as sports are on their trial, it would be interesting to get University statistics for any recent year and see how the men who have got their college colours or Blues for everything but chess have come out. While the highest places may not be theirs it will be found that they quite hold their own. Just as it is easy to talk of sports in a superficial way, so it is easy to say they take up too much time. It is so much less difficult to destroy than to create. The development of school sports cannot fail to have a beneficial influence on the nation as a whole. Too much importance may be attached to them. But as a rule it will be found that this is not the case. The cry against sport is to a great extent an echo of an evil that is imaginary. The dangers that are apprehended are, for the most, mere phantoms.

CHINA AND GLASS. — Messrs. GOODE, Artists and Designers, solicit an inspection of their collection in their recently-extended South Audley-street premises, now by far the largest and most important in Europe. Messrs. Goode guarantee the excellence of all their productions, and invite a comparison of their prices with those of any co-operative stores.

SAHARA (TURKISH) CIGARETTES. Manufactured by W. D. & H. O. SAHARA (TURKISH) CIGARETTES. WILLS, Ltd., from a special blend SAHARA (TURKISH) CIGARETTES. of the choicest Turkish Tobacco.

At last Dawson and Roberts have come to terms, and more quickly than was expected. I do not propose to argue as to whether or not the push stroke, as played by the champion, is foul As to the level match, which is to be played first, Roberts has, at all events, very little doubt as to his ability to win, judging by the points he is willing to concede in the other games. Of course, a man must grow old. Youngsters will come on, but Roberts is just a bit better than the best of them. He has had to put up with some nasty knocks from a certain section of the sporting Press, but these attacks make excellent advertisements, and he, no doubt, appreciates them at their full value.

MAMMON.

FROM MOSES MOSS TO BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN,—The remarkable activity and increasing strength which have characterised dealings in the stock markets during the last few days of the old year are of good augury as regards the course of business in the year upon which we have now entered. It is true that frequently rallies have been engineered at the fag end of a year in anticipation of an advance early in the new year, when large funds are generally released by dividend payments, and the public are, therefore, expected to take over from the professional operators at enchanced values the stocks which the latter have acquired when investors were not yet on the buying tack. In a good many cases, however, such an advance has proved but fleeting, and during the last few years, at all events, the public have disappointed the hopes which had been entertained of their entering the markets with the turn of the year. I venture to express the opinion, however, that, barring accidents, the improvement will be better sustained in 1898.

A GOOD START FOR 1898.

The only political trouble which can at all be said to threaten the stock markets is the game of grab which is being played in the Far East by Russia and Germany. So far, however, this country, conscious of its strength, has held back, and there will be time enough to occupy portions of the Celestial Empire when once its dismemberment is decided upon. Matters have not, however, reached that stage yet, and there has been altogether too much nervousness as regards possible complications. While it is not unlikely that some day the Chinese question will assume large proportions, I do not think that it will for the present interfere with the Stock Exchanges and Bourses. Were proof of this wanted, it would be supplied by the great strength of Consols, and the absence of all nervousness in inter-Bourse securities, which generally are first affected by any ominous cloud on the political horizon. There remains the uncertainty with regard to the future value of money. The Bank of England has kept full control of the Money Market up to the end of the year, but when the numerous large dividend payments are made, rates will undoubtedly slip away, as upwards of fiteen millions sterling will shortly be so released. While it would be rash to expect much lower rates, there is at least every probability of the 3 per cent. Bank rate sufficing for some time to come, and the investment of large surplus funds should steady the markets, and promote a higher level of prices in many directions. The feature of the last week has been the further important rise in South African shares. It is true that it is distinctly traceable to the support given by leading South African houses, but the buying has been very determined, and so sound a basis is provided for the upward movement that there is every probability of its making further progress. A similar upward movement was engineered at the commencement of 1897, which, however, fizzled out again; but the position of the South African department is altogether different now from what it was a year ago. West Australian mines have also been in favour, and bid fair to attract much attention in the near future. The movements have been somewhat irregular, and while low-grade and low-priced mines have been more or less neglected, the demand has turned chiefly upon the proved properties. It is to be remarked, too, that quotations have been well supported, notwithstanding the fact that the Colonial Stock Exchanges are closed. As these, and more especially Adelaide, are an important factor in the West Australian section, it is but fair to anticipate increased activity when business reopens there. The American market has shown a waiting tendency. Should money become easier in New York in the near future, we may, however, anticipate a revival of speculation, and those most in touch with Wall-street are predicting a considerable further improvement, which may, however, be preceded by a temporary reaction. Home Rails have displayed a firmer tone, notwithstanding the protraction of the engineering trouble. The fact is that stock is very scarce, and the approach of the dividend period is acting as a lever. While neither in American nor Home Rails so important an advance can be looked for in 1898 as has occurred in the past year, a considerable upward movement in both is quite on the cards. The favourable view which I expressed with regard to Argentines has already been confirmed by a further rise in values, and I maintain my opinion that the South American section generally will show increased animation during the present year. Industrial stocks, too, are likely to attract much attention, although disappointment in connection with many over-capitalised concerns is inevitable.

HOME RAILS BRACING UP.

The year ends with large traffic increases of all the leading Home Railway Companies. The increase for the week ended December 26, amounted to £97,135, which brings up the total increase for the half-year to £1,391,000—truly a magnificent showing, made during a period in a portion of which the disastrous engineering strike has been in progress. A further increase will probably have to be added to these figures, as the last days of the year were undoubtedly very active, and include the Bank Holiday, which in the previous year had been included in the previous week. So far, however, we have already such large increases of leading lines as the following:—Great Western, £205,760; North Western, £172,580; North Eastern, £120,345; Midland, £105,589. The Great Eastern showed a gain of £98,820; the South Eastern, one of £60,409; and the Brighton, one of £59,171. The South Western has £99,074 to the good; the North British, £41,138; and the Caledonian, £19,923. I have already given my dividend estimates, and have nothing to add to the same. Possibly, the respective Boards will act in a conservative manner as regards the distributions at a time when labour troubles are always with us, and increased working costs have to be faced. But upon the whole dividends should be favourable, and their declaration should act as a support to the market. Next week, the first announcements will already be due, and I give herewith my usual table containing the dates and particulars of the dividend announcements made a year ago, to which I will add from time to MENTONE.—Grand Hôtel des Iles Britanniques, Limited. Lighted throughout by electricity. Lift. House heated by steam. Write for Illustrated prospectus.

For Throat Irritation and Cough "EPPS'S GLYCERINE JUJUBES" always prove effective. They soften and clear the voice, and are invaluable to all suffering from cough, soreness, or dryness of the throat. Sold only in labelled tins, price 7½d. and 1s. 1½d.—JAMES EPPS & Co., Limited, Homœopathic Chemists, London.

time the actual declarations for the second half-year of 1897 as they are made :—

—	Date of Declaration of Dividend for second half of 1896.	Dividend at the rate of per cent per annum.	Amount carried forward.	Dividend for second of 1897.	Amount carried forward.
	1897.
London and Brighton	Jan. 13	8	£22,280	—	—
Great Central	,, 13	1¼	2,400	—	—
Metropolitan	,, 20	3⅜	14,130	—	—
Do. Sur. Stock		12⅜	—	—	—
South Eastern	,, 11	6⅝	5,520	—	—
Great Eastern	,, 14	4¾	50,918	—	—
London and Chatham First Prefs.	,, 22	4½	64,543	—	—
Lan. & Yorkshire	,, 25	5⅝	29,140	—	—
North Eastern	,, 28	7¼	31,602	—	—
London and South Western	,, 21	8¼	24,805	—	—
Metropolitan District Prefs.	,, 26	2¼	403	—	—
Midland	Feb. 5	7	40,036	—	—
Great Northern	Jan. 29	5¼	8,096	—	—
London and North Western	Feb. 5	8	99,779	—	—
Great Western	,, 4	7¼	42,884	—	—
Caledonian	Mar. 2	5	17,418	—	—
North British	,, 11	3	1,484	—	—

While the stocks of the Heavy Division have, during the past week, maintained their quotations, South-Western stocks have again advanced a few points, and Great Eastern have hardened on favourable dividend estimates, the market going for a dividend at the rate of 5¼ per cent. for the second half of 1897. On the basis of this distribution, however, the yield will not be more than 3 per cent. at the present level; while, should Dover "A" get the expected 3⅞ per cent. for the same period, they will yield £3. 8s. per cent. The general estimate for Brighton "A" is 7 per cent., and as the return on the present price would, on this basis, be 4 per cent., "Berthas" are practically the highest-yielding stock in the active list. There has, of course, to be considered the prospect of increased capital to be expended, and this will also take the gilt off the gingerbread of Great Northern Deferred stocks, which, on the mere showing of the figures, yield considerably more than 4 per cent. Special attention has been paid to Great Central stocks during the past week, and a strong recovery has taken place in the new Ordinary stock to 42. I have all along maintained that this stock was unduly neglected, and that, considering the possibilities of the extension to London, it was an excellent lock up. I therefore read with much interest the communication signed "Railway Investigator," which was published in the Financial News last Friday, and which the writer also addressed to me. At least one of my daily contemporaries adopted the statements made therein as its own, and I fully agree with the arguments of the writer. As he remarks, "the public hardly realise what the extension of the Great Central to London really means. It will become one of the great trunk lines of this country, spreading its arms to the east as far as Hull and East Grimsby, and to the west as far as Manchester and Liverpool, covering the centre at Sheffield, Nottingham, Leicester, and Rugby." The writer very opportunely reminds us of the pessimistic croakings which were employed thirty-five years ago in the case of the Midland, which, in those days, had an Ordinary share capital of about eleven millions, and to-day has one of over thirty-four millions sterling, while the revenue has grown in proportion until it has reached the magnificant total of about ten millions per annum. The Great Central has at present a prospective Ordinary share capital of £11,250,000, divided into £2,750,000 preferred Ordinary stock, £2,750,000 Deferred Ordinary, £2,700,000 1894 Ordinary stock, and £3,000,000 Extension scrip. This comparatively small amount of about £11,000,000 will become entitled to the whole profits, which will be divisible after the debenture and preference stock charges have been paid." I fully agree with "Railway Investigator," that the increases must come eventually, and that a gain of £20,000 per week may be expected at no distant date, which would give the Company a net increase of at least £400,000 revenue. It is, therefore, obvious that the Ordinary 1894 stock, which carries 30s. dividend, payable at the end of January, and the guarantee of interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum until April, 1898, when the line will be open, is well worth the attention of investors. By the way, the new Ordinary stock at 42, is certainly much cheaper in proportion than the Deferred stock at 23⅛. The Great Northern and Midland Companies must of course lose by the competition of the Great Central, and this circumstance should be borne in mind when looking at the otherwise moderate quotations of these stocks. The Scotch section has been firmer, and Glasgow has again turned a buyer; but the chief rise in Caledonian Deferred Ordinary and North British Deferred will doubtless come when the engineering trouble is settled. The Metropolitan will doubtless benefit by the Great Central extension to London, and both this line and the District should reap considerable benefit from the Barnum and Bailey Show at Olympia. There is, moreover, the coming introduction of electric power on the Inner Circle to be considered, and there are indications that a substantial improvement in Districts is being prepared for.

THE YANKEE MARKET—A WAITING ATTITUDE.

Wall-street is, Micawber-like, waiting for something to turn up. The "Bull" operators have been resting on their oars, and the holidays have had their usual effect of reducing the volume of business. Money was somewhat stiffer in New York towards the end of the year, and our Yankee cousins have also taken an exaggerated view of the gravity of the crisis in the Far East. The "Bears" on the other side actually set afloat a report that this country was calling out her naval reserves, and other similar tales. When they realise that there is nothing in the Chinese bugbear, and that England will hold her own without resorting to extreme measures, they will no doubt take a more reasonable view. At all events, English holders of American Railroad stocks have so largely got rid of their Yankee investments, that even serious trouble over the Chinese question would probably have little effect as far as stocks held here are concerned. Perhaps the chief factor, however, is the state of the Money Market, and when in the next few weeks large sums in dividend and interest payments will have been released in the United States, these will doubtless seek a fresh outlet in the American Railroad department. The wheat corner in Chicago is another danger which is trotted out by the ursine party, and the collapse of the Leiter wheat syndicate, with a panic in its train is being predicted by them. Again, there has been some nervousness with reference to the possible resignation of Mr. Gage, Secretary of the United States Treasury, owing to the opposition which his currency proposals are encountering. But this story has also been contradicted, and all the various "Bear" points may be considered as of little importance, and likely to pass away whenever the leaders of the market choose to engineer another rise in Wall-street. The two stocks, with reference to which the most important advance is being predicted by men closely connected with the other side, are Milwaukee and new Northern Pacific Prefs. Both roads are doing well, and the stocks of both are being controlled by strong groups. A marked improvement can therefore take place any day, provided always that no fresh accident occurs. The funding scheme of the Louisville and Nashville is to be published this week, and this may give fresh support to this stock. Union Pacifics, too, may be relied upon to execute a sharp upward movement at no distant date. The time is approaching when the road will be taken over and the new securities will be issued. The Kansas Pacific difficulty is, after all, a secondary and temporary matter, and will not prevent the road from being energetically worked. That in any general improvement in the Yankee department Denver stocks. Missouri, Kansas and Texas, Norfolk

Prefs., Erie Prefs., Reading Prefs., and Central Pacifics, will not stop behind, may be assumed; and, while a good deal will depend upon the out turn of the next grain crops in the United States, the position generally is one of undoubted promise. I have received some further inquiries with reference to American Railroad bonds, but as I gave complete lists of the same in last week's issue, I must refer my correspondents to these. Prospects of Canadian Railways are exceedingly favourable, and in view of the prosperous state of affairs in the Dominion, and of the progress already made by the lines, I anticipate a fresh advance both in Canadian Pacifics and in Grand Trunks. Canadian Pacifics, more especially, should now be bought upon the certainty of a good dividend. The published figures show earnings of at least 6 per cent., and the distribution of a dividend of 5 per cent. for the year, with a large carry forward, is therefore looked for. This means that in addition to the 1½ per cent. already paid, a further 3½ per cent. would be distributed. The "Bulls" of Canadian Pacifics maintain that as a 5 per cent. dividend-earner this stock ought to stand at 90, and I certainly anticipate a further appreciation on the present figure of 84⅝. Grand Trunks have been strong in anticipation of a favourable November statement, and this has duly come to hand. There is a gross increase of £47,798 in the receipts, while a decrease of £272 in the working expenses is shown, so that the net gain amounts to £48,070.

FOREIGNERS AND SOUTH AMERICANS.

Apart from an advance in Turks and in Ottoman Banks, there has been little movement in inter-Bourse securities. I suppose that Turkey will now be relieved by a fresh loan, to be obtained from the Ottoman Bank, and that the latter will earn a good commission on this transaction. Spanish have displayed steadiness, but while prospects appear more favourable, the financial difficulty remains. Italians have been put up on the transfer of Kassala to Egypt, which furnishes actual proof that Italy has definitely abandoned a policy of colonial adventure. There is, however, very little room for improvement in the various European Government stocks, and those investors who look for progressive securities will have to enter the South American section. Even investment in Chinese and Japanese bonds is now shown to be fraught with considerable risk, as Japan may sooner or later come into collision with some of the European States which are taking a hand in land-grabbing in China, while China herself is still very much on the borrowing tack. It is a relief to turn from the somewhat involved position in the Far East to the brighter outlook in South and Central America. I gave last week a table of South American securities, from which the yield of the various stocks may be gathered. A further rise has since been established in Argentines, the 1886 Loan having advanced to 92¾ x.d., the Funding Loan to 89¾ x.d. Cedulas have also of late been picked up, and there has been an improved demand for Argentine provincial stocks, Santa Fé notably improving on the view that now that the province of Buenos Ayres has settled with its foreign creditors by an issue of Argentine National bonds, the turn of many of the others and notably of Santa Fé is coming. The 1883-4 Loan has risen to 33, and the 1888 Loan to 43. I suppose that eventually even the dishonest province of Cordova will have to come to a settlement with its creditors, and that Entre Rios will again have to put its hands into its pockets. Argentine Railway stocks have also come into demand again, not so much on present good traffics, but in anticipation of an improvement when the crops commence to move. Buenos Ayres Great Southern Ordinary are quoted 149½, Buenos Ayres and Rosario 75½, Central Argentine 81, Cordoba Central First Prefs. 91, ditto (Central Northern Section) Income Debenture stock 58½. The latter, however, still shows traffic decreases, that for the last week amounting to 13,860 dols. Uruguay bonds have experienced an important recovery, the New Loan being quoted 53 x.d., the Old Loan 42¼. I have already explained that everything depends upon a solution of the political difficulties, but according to latest advices the prospects of Señor Cuestas, the Acting-President, being re-elected as President in a few months' time, have greatly improved. The result of the third half-yearly amortisation of the New Bonds, for which tenders for £18,000 at £50. 9s. 6d. were accepted, has acted as a support of this market, and while there is still a good deal of pessimistic writing on the position of Uruguay, it should not be forgotten that the grain crops are turning out much better than had been anticipated. Brazilians continue in a depressed condition on the unpromising outlook in Rio de Janeiro, while Chilians have hardly moved. Guatemala, however, have improved to 34 x.d., and Peruvian Corporation stocks have displayed a firm front. Mexican Sixes have risen to 95¾ x.d. for the Old Loan, and to 93¼ for the New Loan, this country enjoying a wise Government and considerable industrial progress. Mexican Rails have been dull in the absence of any further developments with regard to the proposal to raise freights, but inter-Oceanic of Mexico stocks are firmer, and I notice that the "B" Debenture stock—for which I had a good word to say the other day when quoted at 21—has now risen to 25.

THE KAFFIR CIRCUS.—ANOTHER ADVANCE.

On looking back over events of the past year in the South African department, one cannot help being struck with the numerous disappointments which have fallen to the lot of the holder of South African mining and finance shares, notwithstanding the steady progress which has taken place in the output and in the percentage of profits of the leading Witwatersrand mines. At the commencement of the year we also had a moderate rally, which subsequently was lost again, and the prices of many of the leading shares are even now but little better than a year ago, while some are lower, and only such shares as have enjoyed the special favour of operators owing to their connection with Deep Levels show an appreciable improvement. Yet the output of the Witwatersrand mines has risen from 209,832 oz. in January to 297,124 oz. in November, and for December it will probably considerably exceed 300,000 oz., so that the year 1897 will show a total yield of well above 3,000,000 oz., against 2,280,884 oz. in 1896, 2,277,635 oz. in 1895, 2,024,159 oz. in 1894, 1,478,473 oz. in 1893, and 1,210,867 oz. in 1892. Nor is this all! Great efforts have been made to reduce working costs, as is illustrated by the reduction in the Robinson rate of 26s. 2d. to 24s. 6d. per ton, while in the case of the New Heriot the cost has been reduced from 28s. 2d. to 22s. 4d. per ton, other mines having obtained similar reductions. Many of the outcrop Companies are showing increases in their output, and a number of others—together with Deep Levels—have entered the list of contributors. How important the results of the Deep Level Companies are becoming may be gathered from the fact that the Crown Deep, Rose Deep, Geldenhuis Deep, and Bonanza together yielded nearly 37,000 oz. of gold in November. The dividends of Witwatersrand mines, so far declared, amount to £2,357,000, against £1,426,000 in 1896, but it is expected that the total will be further increased to about £2,700,000. This would be about double the amount distributed for 1896. It is surprising, indeed, that in view of these favourable developments the Kaffir Circus should not have shown a firmer front, and that prices should be, in many instances, still at the same level as a year ago This is, no doubt, partly due to the refusal of the Transvaal Government to grant the recommendations of the gold industry commission. Sooner or later, however, some concessions will have to be made, and, in the meantime, the position is promising enough to justify an improvement in values. The greatest attention has of late been devoted to the undertakings connected with the Deep Level propositions. Thus, Rand Mines have risen to 34¾, and look like going considerably higher. Consolidated Goldfields have moved up to 5 7/16, and East Rands have been strong at 5 7/8. Deep Level shares have been in strong demand, and a further almost general advance has been established under the lead of Goldfields Deep, which have risen to $10\frac{3}{16}$. Amongst other Deep Level shares, Crown Deep are quoted $14\frac{1}{4}$, Nourse Deep $7\frac{1}{4}$, Rose Deep $6\frac{15}{16}$, Durban-Roodepoort Deep 4, Jumpers Deep $5\frac{7}{8}$, Knights Deep $2\frac{3}{16}$. The report of the Goldfields Deep, which will be in the hands of the shareholders shortly, shows that the directors have pursued a conservative policy during the past year, keeping their assets intact without embarking in fresh speculation. The profit and loss account shows a debit of £3,000, due to the cost of maintenance being in excess of revenue derived from dividends and interest, but the cash balance of £76,000 is amply sufficient to provide for all contingencies. The rise in the price of the shares, which I first recommended at £7, is, however, amply justified by the greatly enhanced values of the shares of companies in which the Goldfields Deep is largely interested, such as the Robinson Deep, the Rose Deep, the Simmer East, and others, and when more Deep Level companies are crushing, we can confidently expect a further rise in values. The Rose Deep is already in full swing, the Robinson Deep and Glen Deep will start in March or April, and later on the Simmer East and Knights Deep will contribute to the output. Shareholders in the Goldfields Deep, therefore, have every reason to be satisfied with the position and prospects of the Company. The sharp rise in Simmer East shares is fully justified by the success which has attended the debenture-issue of £500,000 bearing $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. interest. This issue was very largely over-subscribed without calling upon a shareholder at all, and the only consideration over and above the very reasonable rate of interest is that the debenture-holders have the right to exchange their debentures within two years for Simmer East shares at £4 each. This issue amply provides for all the requirements of the mine, including surface works, machinery, and development, and it is estimated that there should be a fair balance in hand when the Company starts crushing, which would be within about eighteen months from date or less. It is expected to cut the reef in one of the western shafts at any time now, and at a depth of under 2,000 ft. Reports from the Robinson Deep continue excellent. Surface works are practically completed, assays are most satisfactory, and crushing with 60 stamps should start in March. Simmer and Jack have advanced to $4\frac{1}{32}$, and in view of the position of the Company a further improvement should come. The Simmer has now reduced its debenture debt, by purchases of debentures in the market, for the latter cannot be redeemed by drawings until 1900, to £300,000. It has no liabilities of any description, a cash balance of £150,000 or thereabouts, and substantial parcels of shares in subsidiary Companies still unsold. The facts are bound to tell in the long run. Among the lower-priced Deep Level shares I may draw special attention to Simmer West and Jupiter, as the prospect of these Companies, in view of recent events, must be looked upon as decidedly favourable. The Simmer West owns 249 claims on the dip of the Geldenhuis Deep. Its capital is £400,000, of which 300,000 shares are issued, and 100,000 held in reserve. Two shafts were started, but sinking was temporarily suspended about ten months ago, the shafts having then attained a depth of 891 ft. and 461 ft. respectively; work has now been resumed, and the reef should be cut under 2,500 ft. The money in hand, about £90,000, is of course inadequate to fully equip the mine, but it is quite enough to sink the shafts and prove the reefs. Should the result be satisfactory, and judging by the Geldenhuis Deep there is every reason to hope that this will be the case, no difficulty should be experienced in raising further capital by an issue of debentures or otherwise. The Jupiter Company owns 510 claims on the dip of the Jumpers Deep, which starts crushing next month, and is looked upon as one of the most promising of the Rand Mines groups of Deep Levels. The capital of the Jupiter is £600,000, of which 460,000 shares have been issued and 140,000 are held in reserve. Its position is in many ways similar to that of the Simmer West, for sinking was suspended early this year when two shafts were down 906 ft. and 330 ft. respectively; work is now being resumed, and the Company has about £100,000 in hand, which is amply sufficient to prove the reefs. I think that the shares in both these Companies are well worth buying at $1\frac{1}{4}$, or thereabouts; but with the view of a lock up, rather than a short gamble. By the way, I see that the African Review mentions a report from Johannesburg concerning a gigantic scheme for the formation of a Deep Level Company on the dip of the present holdings, in which the Consolidated Goldfields, Messrs. Eckstein, and Mr. A. Bailey are said to be interested. Amongst the Barnato stocks New Primrose are now quoted $4\frac{9}{16}$, Glencairn $2\frac{1}{2}$, and a rise has taken place in Barnato Consols to $2\frac{1}{4}$. In this group the last-mentioned shares undoubtedly offer the biggest margin for an early advance. In the Robinson group a favourable circumstance has been the declaration of a dividend of 10 per cent. by the Porges Randfontein, so that this mine has now joined the list of dividend-payers. I mentioned some time ago that the legal proceedings instituted by the Waterfall Estate board had terminated in favour of the Company. Of this there is now official confirmation, as the Directors state that the Homestead Block has been handed over to the Company, which has succeeded in its proceedings with reference to the mynpacht. A scheme of working is now to be formulated by the board, who will communicate it to the shareholders, and some important developments may be looked for. In the meantime, an interim dividend of 5 per cent. has been declared. At the meeting of the African Estates Company, held in Johannesburg, the shareholders adopted the proposal of liquidation and reconstruction, the new undertaking to be called the African Mines and Finance Corporation, with a domicile in London. The interview which Mr. H. M. Stanley had, as representative of South Africa, with Oom Paul, is interesting, but I do not agree with the conclusions arrived at by Mr. Stanley, neither do I consider the solution suggested by him of passive resistance and refusal to pay taxes at all judicious. There is no doubt that the burghers have been greatly enlightened of late with regard to the methods of their Government, and the addresses of President Kruger's rival candidates, Mr. Schalk Burger and General Joubert are continuing the process of instruction, so that, in due course, no doubt, the Transvaal Government will be forced to introduce reasonable concessions and reforms. Diamond shares have been steady, De Beers being quoted $28\frac{13}{16}$, New Jagersfontein $8\frac{1}{4}$. The De Beers dividend for the six months has been announced as 20 per cent. (20s. per share).

For Mosquito Bites nothing allays the irritation so quickly as SCRUBB'S CLOUDY FLUID AMMONIA, and it is an immediate remedy for Wasp or Bee Stings.

GOLDEN WEST AUSTRALIA.

The last settlement of the old year has proved a very satisfactory one for holders of West Australian gold mining and finance shares, and it has correspondingly been unpleasant for the "Bears," who, at the commencement of the account, had taken great liberties with the market. The strongest "Bear" attacks were made on London and Globe Finance shares, on Golden Horseshoes, and on Associated Gold Mines, and the experience of the ursine speculators in this trio has proved exceedingly disagreeable. London and Globe were carried over at the mid-December settlement at $2\frac{1}{4}$, and made up last account at $2\frac{23}{32}$, while Golden Horseshoes rose from $6\frac{7}{16}$ to $8\frac{13}{16}$, and Associated Gold Mines made up at $4\frac{11}{32}$, against $3\frac{15}{16}$ at the previous settlement. It is to be hoped that the lesson will not be thrown away upon operators of ursine propensities, and it must, moreover, be considered that the West Australian department has developed its strength entirely unsupported by the Colonial Exchanges, which have been closed for some time and will not reopen until next week. Adelaide, more particularly, is a strong factor in the "Kangaroo" market, and when it once again makes its influence felt, further improvements in various directions are probable. In the meantime, the news from the Westralian goldfields is exceedingly satisfactory, and further crushings, partly of mines entering the producing list for the first time, are announced. I herewith give the list:—

BRANDAUER'S CIRCULAR-POINTED PENS. Neither scratch nor spurt. Glide over the roughest paper with the ease of a soft lead pencil. Assorted sample box, 7 stamps, from the Works, Birmingham.

—	Tons of Ore Crushed.	Ounces of Gold.	Assay of Tailings per Ton.
Westralia and East Extension	1,611	1,339	64 grs.
Bayley's United... ...	772	872	—
Burbank's Birthday Gift	266	468	—
Princess Royal	405	295	—
White Feather Reward	516	225½	—
Emerald (Geraldton) ...	230	218	—
St. Agnes Gold Reefs ...	200	163	5 dwt.
Arrow Brownhill ...	162	134	—
Lindsay's Consolidated	195	79¾	—
Weld Hercules	50	88	7 dwt.
Light of Asia	75	80	—
Menzies Mining and Exploration	75	85	—
Great Boulder Proprietary	1,183	3,038	—
Queensland Menzies ...	330	953	—
Mount Yagahong ...	196	243	—
Gullewa	75	126	—

As regards future market movements, I anticipate a further rise in London and Globe Finance shares, now quoted 2 9/16-11/16. This Company has just declared a ten per cent. dividend, and is known to have made huge profits in recent deals. Lake View Consols have been steady at 11⅛. These shares will probably go ahead again when, through crushing with the full capacity of its machinery, and working with the whole of its cyanide process, the output is further increased. Ivanhoe shares have rallied to 6⅜. Most of the weak holders have evidently sold out and I should not be surprised to see the quotation further go ahead. At the meeting of shareholders of the old Company, held last week, an opportunity was given of placing the substantial position of the mine before the public. The special settlement in the new shares will probably be granted for some day in January. The amalgamation scheme of the various sub-Companies of the London and Globe is expected to make its appearance very shortly. In the Associated and Joint Stock Trust group a firm tone has prevailed. Associated Gold Mines are quoted 4½, W. A. Market Trust 1 3/16, and an advance in W. A. Joint Stock Trusts Founders to 1 is a feature. It is no longer a secret that the Golden Horseshoe property has, on the recommendation of Mr. Kaufman, been taken up by the Associated group. The news from the Great Boulder Proprietary continues satisfactory, but the new shares do not rise above 25s. Kalgurli are firmer, and Brookman Bros. Gold shares have hardened. Golden Links have been put up on the mistaken rumour that these were next to be taken up by the Associated group. A strong demand has been experienced for London and Western Australian Exploration shares, which have moved up to 1 3/16, on the very favourable statements made at the Hannan's Brownhill meeting, and on the imminent flotation of the Sons of Gwalia Mine. With this group I am dealing specially to-day as offering for the moment exceptional interest. A strong demand has sprang up for West Australian Goldfields, which have advanced to 2⅜, and a rise to 1⅜ in Hampton Plains has also to be reported. I have received a great many inquiries with reference to the somewhat mysterious announcements which have been made that some very favourable news is shortly to be published concerning the West Australian Goldfields. I have reason to believe that this news refers to several important deals that have been completed during the last few weeks, amongst which there is, I understand, a large participation in the flotation of the Sons of Gwalia Mine, which is now being brought out by the London and West Australian Exploration Company. If the latter report is correct, it should prove a remunerative transaction for "Wags," but I really think it is time that the mystery should now be solved, and that an official announcement of the various deals in which the West Australian Goldfields is interested be made. The Sons of Gwalia flotation alone should yield a big profit, and thus justify a higher price for "Wags." The last two weeks of the year have been distinguished by the enormous number of Companies' meetings which have been held, and which figure up to something like 180, while on one day as many as thirty-six such meetings took place. It is needless to say that amongst the Companies whose meetings were thus rushed through at the last moment there were a good many doubtful concerns, the Directors of which were apparently afraid of the criticisms of the Press and of their own shareholders. Westralian mining Companies were the worst offenders in this respect, and I herewith protest against such meetings being held at the fag-end of the year. The accounts of most of these undertakings were closed on June 30, and there was, therefore, ample time to have presented them, together with the Directors' reports, earlier to the shareholders. I strongly urge upon shareholders to see that this scandal is not repeated. Reconstructions are still the order of the day, and a number of Companies which have been provided with insufficient working capitals are now trying to obtain further subscriptions from their shareholders. The lesson taught by this result is that it is most important not to go into Companies which merely own mining prospects. For a long time I have warned my readers against this danger, and I have insisted that prospectuses of proved mines only, and of such as are ready for crushing should be placed before the public. An instance of the happy result obtained when these conditions are fulfilled is furnished by the Peak Hill Goldfields, which, from the experts' reports and the statements with regard to the machinery, was practically acquired as a going concern. The subsequent results have been exceedingly favourable, and the price of the shares has, in a comparatively short time, advanced to 2 15/16. The Lady Shenton Gold Mine, Limited, announces a dividend of 1s. per share, payable on January 19, making 20 per cent. for the year. There is every prospect of the dividend for 1898 being much larger, owing to the richer ore which will shortly be treated, and the shares at from 2 to 2⅛ are one of the best purchases in the West Australian market.

LEADING WEST AUSTRALIAN MINING GROUPS:

1. THE LONDON AND WESTERN AUSTRALIAN EXPLORATION GROUP.

In the New Year I propose to discuss with my readers the history and merits of the various leading West Australian mining groups, both as regards the financial position of the parent companies, and the results yielded by the various sub-Companies formed for the purpose chiefly of carrying on gold-mining operations in that colony. My readers are, of course, aware that many disappointments have been experienced, especially in connection with the earlier promotions of such undertakings. Not only were the experts employed in many cases of doubtful attainments, but some even did not possess the necessary qualification of common honesty, and thus a proportion of the mines turned out "duffers." It can, however, be said with regard to the stronger and respectable groups, in which substantial men are interested, that efforts have been made in the case of such disappointments to substitute other properties for those which have proved worthless, and thus in many instances the Companies which were at one time in a very unpromising position are retrieving their fortunes. A group which has of late been much more in evidence is that headed by the London and West Australian Exploration Company. This group has also had its trials and difficulties. Some of the mines have, however, now established a high reputation as regards capable management and richness of the ore deposits, while others have gradually made their way into a dividend-paying position, and others again soon after reconstruction have entered a more promising phase. The gem of this group is the Hannan's Brownhill Gold Mining Company. This Company has declared dividends of 50 per cent. in 1896, but has, according to the statements made at Tuesday's meeting of shareholders, now reached a point when much larger earnings and dividends will be obtained. As Mr. Algernon C. Moreing, whose prognostications have been so fully borne out by recent developments of the mine, stated, the property has been proved at depth. They cut the lode at the 270 ft. level, and the next place will be at the 400 ft. level, which has just been reached. Mr. Moreing also stated that the 100,000 tons of 4 oz. quartz, which the engineers had reported, as in sight are still in the mine, less the 3,000 to 4,000 tons, which had enabled the Board to pay a 50 per cent. dividend. They would shortly be able to treat 200 tons of ore per day. Should these crushings yield similar results as those already obtained in Adelaide, the shares now quoted $6\frac{15}{16}$ would be worth a great deal more. I give herewith particulars of the leading Companies connected with this group :—

London and Western Australian Exploration Company, Limited.—This is a reconstruction of the old Company of the same name, and was registered on November 29, 1895. The authorised capital is £300,000, in 300,000 shares of £1 each, of which 270,000 are issued and are fully paid. The reconstruction scheme was decided upon solely in order to extinguish the Deferred shares in the old undertaking, this Company taking over all the assets. Amongst the latter was acquired the celebrated mine known as the Hannan's Brownhill, for the purpose of taking over which the Hannan's Brownhill Gold Mining Company was formed. Other undertakings with the promotion of which the London and West Australian Exploration was connected, and in which it is still interested, are the London and Western Australian Investment Company, Limited (a sister Company with which it co-operates), the East Murchison United, the Consolidated Murchison, the Great Fingall Reefs, and the Melville Park Estate. The Company also holds interests in a number of other properties, including the Wheel of Fortune and the Long Reef at Mount Magnet, Mertzy's Leases at Mount Sir Samuel, the British King at Lake Darlot, four leases on Block 48 Hampton Plains, Hannan's Water-rights, &c. It has also recently acquired the well-known Sons of Gwalia Mine. An interim dividend of 20 per cent. was paid by the old Company on the Ordinary shares on December 5, 1894, making, with the cash distribution on reconstruction, 120 per cent. in all. The shares, which have been as high as $2\frac{3}{8}$ and as low as $\frac{5}{16}$, now stand at $1\frac{3}{16}$.

London and Western Australian Investment Company, Limited.—This Company was registered on February 9, 1895, to acquire, for investment or re-sale, land, house, mining, and other property in Western Australia. In connection with the sister Company, the London and Western Australian Exploration Company, Limited, it has formed several undertakings, and now it holds various estate and town properities, large interests in several gold mining concerns, and four water-rights at Hannan's. The authorised capital is £100,000, in 98,500 Ordinary shares of £1 each and 1,500 Deferred shares of £1 each, all of which have been issued or were allotted, and are fully paid. The Ordinary shares received a total dividend of 25 per cent. for the year ending February, 1896, while a distribution of £3. 5s. 8d. was received by the holders of each Deferred share. At the end of the last financial year the total assets amounted to £129,138, less liabilities £8,404, which left a balance of £120,734. A dividend of 1s. per share was paid in August, 1896. The shares have touched $3\frac{1}{8}$, and after being as low as $\frac{5}{8}$, are now quoted at $\frac{3}{4}$.

Hannan's Brownhill Gold Mining Company, Limited.—This Company was formed in October, 1895, to acquire two leases at Hannan's Find, comprising 21 acres. The nominal capital is £110,000, in 110,000 shares of £1 each, of which 85,000 are issued and have been fully paid. Complete crushing mills have been erected, but most of the ore up to the present has been sent to Adelaide for treatment, pending the completion of the Company's own mills. The smelting returns to date are 28,597 oz. of gold from 4,830 tons of ore. According to the last report and accounts made up to June 30, 1897, the balance to the credit of profit and loss account was £43,645, out of which an interim dividend of 5s. per share was paid in June, 1897, and the Directors have recommended a further dividend of 5s. per share to be distributed on January 1. The report states that the management of the mine has lately been placed in the hands of Messrs. Bewick, Moreing, & Co., who have engaged as mine manager an American gentleman of great experience and ability. The £1 shares stand at $6\frac{15}{16}$.

East Murchison United, Limited. — This Company was registered on December 13, 1895, for the purpose of acquiring 117 acres at Lawlers, in the East Murchison district. The authorised capital is £150,000 in 150,000 shares of £1 each, of which 130,000 have been issued and are fully paid. Twenty heads of stamps are now at work, and the total crushings to date are 10,543 tons of ore for 17,709 oz. of gold. According to the report covering the period from the incorporation of the Company to August 31, 1897, a great deal of development work has already been done on the property; but, with the view of securing the utmost economy, the Directors have arranged with Messrs. Bewick, Moreing, & Co. to undertake the future management of the Company's affairs at the mine. Out of the gross profit of £11,260, there has been written off the sum of £392. 10s. for preliminary expenses, and £3,099 (or 20 per cent.) off mine development, the balance being carried forward. Since the accounts were made up, however, the position of the Company has improved. The amount of cash in hand is now £12,000, and the Directors have declared an interim dividend of 1s. per share. At the meeting of shareholders, held on December 22, the Chairman stated, in the course of his remarks, that the property had been opened up to close upon 3.000 ft., and it was understood that there are 9,000 tons of tailings, estimated at not less than 9 dwt. of gold per ton, ready for treatment, and which would be realised without delay. Latest price of the shares is $1\frac{1}{16}$.

The Northam Milling and Mining Company, Limited.—This Company is a reconstruction of the Water Trust, Mining, and Public Crushing Company of Western Australia, Limited, which was formed in August, 1895, for the purpose of acquiring water-rights and mining leases in Western Australia. The nominal capital is £250,000, in 250,000 shares of £1 each, of which 200,000 are issued and 18s. per share paid up. In its new departure the Company will devote itself almost exclusively to public crushing, and there is a great demand for facilities for crushing in Western Australia.

Great Fingall Reefs, Limited—This Company was formed in January, 1895, for the purpose of acquiring a property at Ejudina. The capital is £175,000, in 175,000 shares of £1 each, all of which have been issued and are fully paid. An interim dividend of 1s. per share was paid on January 17, 1896. The Company's property proved on development in depth to be of no value, and was abandoned. The London and Western Australian Exploration Company, however, agreed to use their best endeavours to provide the Company with a new property. Various efforts have been made in this direction, and I understand that the parent company has agreed to give the Great Fingall Reefs a large interest in the Sons of Gwalia, Limited.

Consolidated Murchison Gold Mines.—This Company, which was originally formed in March, 1896, was reconstructed in May, 1897, when the capital was written down from £250,000 to £113,000, in 226,000 shares of 10s. each, all of which have been issued and are paid up. The Company owns about 112 acres, situated in the Murchison district, and thirty heads of stamps are now running. The total crushings to date are 33,000 tons of ore for 22,097 oz. of gold. Development work is being carried on satisfactorily in the lower levels of the Day Dawn and Day Dawn West Mines of the Company and, taking as a basis the results hitherto achieved by the 20-stamp mill, the monthly yield of gold with 30 stamps should be 1,500 oz. The manager's figures in fact show that the net profit should be about £3,600 per month, which should pay exceedingly well, and if this forecast is borne out by results good dividends are in sight. The 10s. shares fully paid now stand at 5s. and are therefore very cheap.

Melville Water Park Estate, Limited.—This Company was formed in January, 1896, with a capital of £100,000 in £1 shares, and owns 4,546 acres of land on the left bank of the Swan River, facing the city of Perth, the capital of Western Australia. The purchase price of the property was £50,000 in cash, leaving £50,000 available for working capital. This land is magnificently situated, and is being made available for residential settlement as a rural suburb of Perth, the property being cut up into suitable areas and sold for building purposes. Steamship communication has been established, and thirty-five acres have been sold at an average price of £300 per acre, thus realising over £10,500. Sales are now proceeding, and will largely increase in 1898.

Some attention has recently been directed to the latest acquisition of the London and Western Australian Exploration Company, viz., the Sons of Gwalia Mine. Concerning this property, I am enabled to give some further particulars herewith :—

A Company has now been formed to acquire the property under the title of "The Sons of Gwalia, Limited." The capital is £300,000 in £1 shares, which is moderate, as this is a rich mine, concerning which the engineers' estimate that, with a 50-stamp battery, the known ore bodies in the mine will yield a monthly profit of £20,000. The Company will be provided with a working capital of £50,000. It is not expected that a public issue will be made, as there is already a strong demand for the shares in influential quarters, and they will no doubt at once be quoted at a considerable premium.

Shareholders in the Great Fingall Reefs have to congratulate themselves upon the decision of the parent Company to give them a very considerable interest in the Sons of Gwalia Mine. This is to take the shape of the Great Fingall Reefs Company receiving an interest amounting to one-fifth of the deal, their Company (the Fingall Reefs) agreeing to provide £20,000 towards the working capital of £50,000. As the Sons of Gwalia is a proved mine, which is likely to vie in richness with some of the best Hannan's properties, its position, as far as can be ascertained, promises large dividends and appreciation in capital value, which should go a long way towards indemnifying the Great Fingall Reefs shareholders for their past disappointment.

INDIAN, AUSTRALASIAN, AND BRITISH COLUMBIAN MINES.

There has not been much activity in the Indian section, although quotations have been well maintained, and Champion Reefs and Mysore Gold mark a fresh advance. Ooregum Prefs., however, are lower. I see that the Mining World makes the charge that dealing in Indian shares by employés on the field goes on to a very large extent, and produces effects upon market values that on this side are sometimes unaccountable. My contemporary does not know how this mischief can be stopped, as in most cases these transactions take place in the names of sisters, cousins, or aunts. I have for a long time had my strong suspicions on this point, but now that my contemporary confirms these, I must put it to the Directors that it is their duty to stop this mischief. If they were to set themselves to discover the offenders, they would soon be able to lay hands on one or the other, and by making an example put a stop to such deplorable practices. In Australian mines, other than West Australian, there has been very little change. Aladdin's Lamp are quoted $1\frac{13}{16}$ x.d., Mount Morgan $4\frac{1}{8}$, Mount Lyell $14\frac{3}{8}$. In New Zealand shares hardly any business has been transacted, with the exception of Royal Oak (Hauraki), which have been picked up by the knowing brigade. On the other hand, L. and N. Z. Exploration, Thames Hauraki, Woodstock, and Consolidated Goldfields of New Zealand are all lower. In the general foreign section Tolima "A" and "B" and Linares have declined; but St. John del Rey have hardened. Rio Tinto Deferred have been a strong market at $25\frac{3}{16}$, and Anaconda have been fairly steady at $5\frac{1}{16}$; but Tharsis are lower. In British Columbian shares Hall Mines have declined. Owing to temporary selling by "stags" or other holders who had received larger holdings than they expected, British America Corporation shares at first were dull, but they have since risen to $\frac{1}{8}$ premium buyers, and I should not be surprised to see an important jump in these shares any day. Some time ago I briefly referred to the prospectus of the Klondike Gold Mining and Trading Company, Limited, and advised my readers to have nothing whatever to do with this concern. I now see from a communication which appears in the Financial Times that Mr. Frank E. Hodgins, of the Grand Hotel, Charing Cross, states that he represents Mr. E. Strachan Cox, of Toronto, who is mentioned in the prospectus as local secretary; and also Lieutenant-Colonel Tisdale, M.P., Joseph E. Seagram, James Carruthers, W. B. McMurrich, Q.C., John Foy, Auguste Bolté, William J. Clarke, H. A. Ward, and C. Kloepfer, whose names are given in this prospectus as forming the local Board, and he further adds that he is instructed to say that their names were used wholly without authority, and that they know nothing of the Company, its prospectus, or affairs. This is a very serious charge, and I would recommend the London Directors to at once meet it. In the meantime, I have received some correspondence on this concern, which causes me to further inquire of the Directors as to who holds the cash subscribed, what is being done with it, whether the land in Dawson City has actually been purchased, and whether proper deeds of conveyance have been executed? In Mexican mining shares a fair amount of business has been transacted. Grand Central are quoted $1\frac{9}{16}$, and an improved demand made itself felt for Consolidated Goldfields in connection with the statements made at the meeting of shareholders held last Tuesday. The chairman, basing his remarks on the manager's report, put the average value of the 84,000 tons of ore so far in sight at 14 dols. per ton, or a total of 1,173,953 dols. The value of 14 dols. is exactly in accordance with the November clean-up, and it is expected that with the treatment of 3,000 tons a month the net profits will be £45,000 per annum. The Company also owns the surface rights over an immense area of land, amounting to 27,000 acres, contiguous to the Santa Elena Mine which is now being worked. This will, doubtless, prove a very considerable source of wealth. The shares have come into strong demand at $1\frac{1}{4}$.

THE "MOSES MOSS" TOY FUND.

In addition to the sum of £134. 0s. 6d., which I have already acknowledged as having been received towards the "TRUTH Toy Fund," I have received the following further amounts:—

E. A. G. V., £1; Eden, 10s.; J. G., 5s. 2d.

MY LETTER BOX.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents:—

GOVERNMENT, &c., BONDS.

R. S. C.—As you will have seen, the rise in Uruguay bonds has already commenced, and unless political troubles should again ensue, a further substantial improvement is looked for. O. V. E.—1. You are welcome to your favourable opinion of Portuguese, in which you expect a rise of four points! I don't. 2. You want a stock named at a price not exceeding 25, for a rise of four or five points. The nearest I can find is Uruguay Three and a Half per Cent. bonds at 42. 3. No. 4. Considerable possibilities, but no immediate rise in view.

BANKS, TRUSTS, AND FINANCIAL.

Oxenford.—There seems to be every prospect of all British interests, including those of the Eastern bank in question, being safeguarded in China; but should trouble arise, this will naturally not help this institution. Wakefield.—Why do you not adopt a nom-de-plume? I strongly advise you not to part with any money to these people, and not to deal through any outside concern, but only with members of the Stock Exchange. M. A. S.—I should think that if you were to make a selection from the lists of American Railroad bonds, which I published in last week's issue, and add to the same some of the South American bonds—including Uruguays—a table of which was also given in that number, you will be able to obtain a very substantial yield with reasonable safety. M.K.—I have not a favourable opinion of this fourth-rate bank, and should advise you to realise. Major.—An outside concern; I advise you to deal only through members of the Stock Exchange. Heinrich.—I can tell you nothing about this outside concern, and advise you to deal only through members of the Stock Exchange. Dartmoor.—See reply to "Major." Law.—What you require has been forwarded in your envelope. The name of the owner of this firm is well known, and there will be no trouble about taking proceedings. Mac.—One of the better class Australian banks, but I do not advise this kind of deposit, and you will do better to invest in gilt-edged American Railroad bonds, of which I gave two lists in last week's issue. I have forwarded you a copy of this issue of TRUTH.

HOME RAILS.

Rupert.—Yes, there seems to be every prospect of Great Central New Ordinary improving further. This stock has hitherto been comparatively neglected. F. E.—Coras (Caledonian Deferred Ordinary) are a good purchase at present.

AMERICAN AND FOREIGN RAILS.

Leith.—1. There is no reason why you should not buy this Argentine Railway Debenture stock. 2. Uruguay bonds are on the up grade, and may rise to a considerably higher level. Do not on any account go short of these.

MINING SHARES.

Crouch. I am still of opinion that you should hold your South Africans for an important advance, which has, in fact, already commenced. E. W. D.—No option but to join the reconstruction, in such cases it being easier to sell afterwards. As regards the other Company's shares on which the last call is made, I suppose that you must pay the same. Thanks for your kind wishes, which I heartily reciprocate. G. J. M.—The rumours which you mention concerning the Lady Shenton Mine are obviously lies. The Company has just declared another dividend of 1s. per share. J. McI.—The special settlement of New Ivanhoe shares should take place in the course of January. I cannot, obviously, tell you what price these shares will reach. J. P.—There were obviously a number of stags. These have now cleared out and the price is advancing again. You should do well with your shares. T. O. A.—Yes, there is every prospect of these West Australian shares recovering. Hold! P. Y. M.—Yes, it meant 1898. C. C. W.—I do not consider your selection a good one. You will do well to choose from the shares mentioned under Golden West Australia. A. J. W.—1. I am glad to learn that you applied for Peak Hill Goldfields on my advice. They have risen from 1 to 2¾, and you are therefore able to take a splendid profit. 2. The other West Australian share is not so promising. H. S.—The Secretary is right, he need not state the number of shares applied for; but the Chairman should give the information at the statutory meeting. One of the points which ought to be settled by the next Companies Act amendment is the fixing of a minimum application, without which the Directors ought not to go to allotment. You may be sure that in the case of this Klondyke Company the allotment was a poor one. Constant Reader, Birmingham.—I do not hold a favourable opinion of this mine. Broach—1. No catch. 2. A fair speculation of the kind. 3. Hannan's Proprietary, now under good management, are promising, also Consolidated Murchison (4), and East Murchison United (5). The deep level mine No. 6 is not one of the best of the Deeps. G. J. M.—Yes, West Australian Goldfields are a good purchase, and some favourable news is expected very shortly. Albion.—Mail advices, which should throw full light upon the position, are shortly expected, and you should certainly hold, as better news is promised. The amalgamation scheme should put right Nos. 1-3. All your other mining shares, Nos. 4-10, should be held, although I do not think much of No. 8. I do not like No. 11. Alpha.—1. Hold, but do not buy any more until further news comes to hand from the mine. 2. Likely to improve, but I never advise on these shares. B. H. W.—Thanks for your wishes, which I heartily reciprocate. There is a good deal in what you say, but the stags and weak holders have now sold out, and it is my opinion that the shares will double their prices this year. E. C. Y.—There is every probability of the shares reaching your price again by the time mentioned. Lluney.—The prospects of this reconstruction appear to be doubtful. Ajax.—Amongst the South African shares mentioned by you I should prefer Barnato Consols. Marmaduke.—I am glad you bought Rose Deep on my advice. You have already a good profit, and I do not expect the Far Eastern Question to interfere with the South African market. Dublin.—I cannot give the information about the W.A. Goldfields until it is stated officially by the Board. A further purchase seems advisable. J. McI.—No option but to hold White Feather Reward. W. M.—1. Peak Hill have now risen to 2¾, and seem to be high enough just now. Why did you not buy them when I recommended them at 1 and upwards? 2. Yes. 3. Ferreira are likely to further advance. 4. Not yet, but they are on the up-grade. 5. Yes, Barnato Consols are good to buy. 6. No catch. Constant Reader, Constantinople.—Bellevue Proprietary are righting themselves, and should be held and averaged. Not Greedy. No option but to hold these shares. The Company is pulling itself together under better management. Pyrgo.—I cannot reply by letter. You have acted most judiciously with your investment in Nos. 1-6—Globes, Lady Shenton, Hampton Plains, London and West Australian Exploration, West Australian Goldfields, and Hannan's Props. I do not think there is much chance of any good coming of No. 7, while No. 8 is very promising. I would strongly advise you to put the rest of your money into gilt-edged investment stocks such as high-class American Railroad bonds, Home Industrial debentures, &c., and to be satisfied with 4 per cent. 9. Lake View Consols will no doubt eventually go better. W. C. M., Reading.—It is quite correct that the property and undertaking of the Metropolitan Gold Mining Company was acquired in October, 1895, by the George Goch Amalgamated Company, against 132,000 fully-paid shares. Your holding ought, of course, to be exchanged for your proportion; but you have allowed the matter to go too long. You ought to apply to the liquidator of the Metropolitan Company in Johannesburg.

Industrial Shares.

Boat Hook.—A fair investment, but no catch. M. M. M.—A speculative industrial share, which may improve to some extent, but a big rise is hardly to be expected. Monkey.—1. I expressed an adverse view of Youde's Bill Posting Company when the prospectus was issued. Why do you not read my letter more carefully? 2 and 3. No catch. 4. A fair investment of the kind at present price. Clementina.—You should await an improvement to get out. R. A. T. Having all along warned my readers not to have anything to do with the Great Horseless Carriage Company, I am not in a position to "find you some consolation," as you put it. H. R., Kidderminster.—If the case is as you state, viz., that the property has not been acquired by the Company, the Directors are bound to return the money. See remarks under "Various Investments." Ignoramus.—These shares would appear to be a fair speculative purchase, but you must make sure that the offer is a bonâ fide one, and that the brokers are respectable. You must not look for a dividend for some time. I cannot reply by letter. Setab.—1. Not yet. 2. A fair speculative industrial investment. 3. No catch. 4. A fair investment, but speculative. The Company is not doing so well as it did. Mistaken.—I really cannot help you with the Great Horseless Carriage Company. I have warned my readers from the outset and again and again not to have anything to do with this concern.

Mixed Investments.

Eden.—Thanks for the contributions to the "Toy Fund." 1. Hampton Plains have already recovered sharply to 1⅜, and there is every prospect of your seeing a considerable profit during the new year, if you hold the shares. 2. You can find suitable industrial Debentures in the list which I gave in Truth dated December 9. T.—You will have noticed that quotations of South African mining shares have already gone ahead considerably since you wrote your letter, and you should take quite a different view of the outlook. There is but little doubt that we shall see an important improvement presently, and temporary fluctuations must naturally be disregarded. Surely the rise in London and Globes to 2⅝-¾ ought to satisfy even you! I do not, therefore, in any way endorse the remarks which you make. Novice.—1. The course of prices of Japanese Five per Cent. Gold Bonds must necessarily depend upon political developments in the Far East. 2. I do not fancy that the Automatic Cycle Rack Company will prove successful. 3. That depends upon the time when the special settlement is granted. G., Bath.—1. A dividend of 1s. per share was declared on Lady Shenton shares on December 28, payable January 19, making 20 per cent. dividend for the year. 2. This Trust stock will improve if the year 1898 proves favourable for Colonial investments, and if we get no international complications. Australasian.—With the exception of the Mining shares, Nos. 6 8, I do not like your stocks, and should advise you to get out of them, when opportunity offers. X. Y. Z.—No reason to sell any of your stocks, Nos. 1-3, at present. Emeritus.—1. No reason to sell Consol Goldfields Debentures. 2 and 3. Fair investments of the kind. 4. The dividend may not prove so good as last year, but the business is a good one. 5. A fair speculative industrial investment. I do not like No. 6 much, but it may work into success in time. Cavendish.—The Brewery shares No. 1 and the Railway stock No. 4 are good investments. No. 2 is not tip-top, and the Debentures No. 3 are the reverse of gilt-edged, although perhaps reasonably secured. No reason to sell Nos. 5 and 6 now. 7. Yes; Great Central New Ordinary is a promising purchase. 8. Of course, there is an element of risk in Japanese in view of the strained position in the Far East. Two Pence.—1. No option but to join the reconstruction; I have no favourable opinion of the First Find. 2. Yes, North British Deferred are bound for higher prices, especially if the engineering difficulty is settled. Kent.—1. Yes, British America Corporation shares are very promising. 2. No reason to sell Hudson's Bay.

Various Investments.

The money squeeze at the end of the year did not prove nearly so formidable as the money bags had wished, and as various pessimistic writers had led us to believe. Now rates are falling away, and we shall, for a time at least, have an easy market. Gilt-edged securities have been strong, and a fresh advance is marked in Consols to 113¼ for the February account. It would not be at all surprising to see a further improvement in our premier security, as purchases for the Sinking Fund will have to be made in the near future. Silver has hardened to 26 9/16d., and Rupee Paper has recovered to 62⅜, although the result of the tenders for the last batch of India Council bills was unsatisfactory. Cycle shares have been dull, and as yet there is no indication of any substantial recovery. Dunlop Deferred are quoted 12s., French Dunlops, 5s. 9d. Humber Ordinary remain at 17s., the Extensions at ½. Cycle Components have improved to 2¾, but Amalgamated Tyres are still dull at 7s. 3d. Swifts stand at ¾, Singers at ¾ xd. A steady business has been transacted in Bovrils, the Deferred being quoted ⅞, the Ordinary 1⅛. Apollinaris and Johannis have been easier at 12½, and Schweppe have given rise to some business at 1⅛ for the Ordinary, and at ⅝ for the Deferred. The English Sewing Cotton allotment has not yet taken place, and people are beginning to wonder when they will get the letters of allotment and regret. These shares stand at ⅞ premium. Coats rallied at one time to 62¾, but have declined again to 61. Welsbach Incandescent Ordinary stock has dropped to 95-100, while the Preferred and Deferred keep fairly steady. I see that from next Saturday Mr. A. J. Wilson's Investors' Review, hitherto a monthly, will become a weekly paper. This ably-written journal should gain considerably in interest through its more frequent appearance. Herbert Cranston, financier and stock and share dealer, of 1, Cullum-street, London, E.C., is apparently trying his hand at syndicate touting. He sent circulars in December inviting participation in a special "Christmas deal," in which he boasted that his Christmas deals have always terminated profitably, as those who have operated in them could prove, and "owing to the Christmas railway traffics he is able to make substantial profits by judicious dealings in those of the home railways that are most affected by holiday trippers." I wonder how many clients Herbert

Cranston's circulars attracted? One of my readers asked him for a reference, upon which he received a letter on Herbert Cranston's note-paper signed "George Cooper," in which the statement was made that "he would be happy to refer my correspondent to two or three of his Taunton clients, but he must first obtain their permission." This permission was not apparently granted, as my correspondent heard no more from Herbert Cranston. The following P.S. to Cranston's circulars is distinctly precious:—

I shall be pleased to hear from any persons who have been duped by any of the circularising touts, with a view to obtaining restitution, which I have succeeded in doing in many cases.

By the way, with reference to my remarks on the syndicate touts, Charles Bennett & Co., of 43, New Broad-street, E.C., Mr. Charles Bennett, stock and share broker, of 2, Capel-court, London, E.C., wishes me to draw attention to the fact that he is not and never has been in any way connected with that firm of advertising brokers. I never imagined for one moment that Mr. Charles Bennett, of Capel Court, who is a member of the Stock Exchange, had any connection with the advertising touts, Charles Bennett & Co. Mr. Richard Banner Oakley is again to the front, this time with a circular in which he offers an underwriting commission of 7½ per cent. in a new flotation called "Semple, Gourley, and Robinson, Limited," with a capital of £40,000, which is to take over some 15 retail provision and grocery shops in Liverpool. The experiences with amalgamations of such concerns in London have turned out the reverse of satisfactory, and I cannot possibly see how an amalgamation of a few small shops in Liverpool can meet with a better fate. There is another great objection, and that is, no statement of previous profits of these undertakings is vouchsafed, the accountant's certificate merely making an insufficient statement with regard to three of the businesses. Under all the circumstances I should advise my readers to steer clear of Mr. Richard Banner Oakley's latest bantling.—Your affectionate Uncle, MOSES.

All Rights Reserved.

QUEER STORY.

LADY LINSTOCK'S LETTERS.

JIM DALTON, known to "Burke" as the Honourable James Spencer Dalton, eldest son of the Earl of Glenroy, but to his intimate friends by the title we have given him, sat down to breakfast in a distinctly bad temper. A little dinner the night before, followed by unlimited brandies and sodas to an early hour of the morning, had left him this forenoon with what is commonly known as a "head." Coupled with this was the recollection that he had dropped something over two hundred at poker; and the two facts combined did not incline him to take a particularly roseate view of things in general.

He felt no great desire for food, which, under the circumstances, was not remarkable, and in a few minutes pushed his plate from him in disgust, and, throwing himself into an armchair, told his servant to give him a brandy and soda. Somewhat fortified by this "hair of the dog that bit him," he proceeded to investigate his morning's correspondence, which lay in a little heap on the table. As he ran rapidly through the pile he came to a dainty envelope, addressed in a no less dainty feminine hand, and bearing on its flap a monogram surmounted by a coronet. But it was with a very discontented face that the Hon. James Dalton surveyed it, and as he turned it over in his hand he muttered to himself, "Now, what the devil does she want to write to me about?"

The "she" in question had been the heroine of a little episode in Jim's past life, which, as it has considerable bearing on the present subject, it will be well for a moment to recall.

Some two years ago, soon after Jim Dalton had returned from the voyage round the world which his father had seen fit for him to undertake on coming of age, and had received his commission in the Guards, scandal began to be very busy with his name and that of Lady Linstock, who at twenty-three had become the second wife of Sir Joseph Linstock, a wealthy City magnate. Lady Linstock was considerably Jim's senior at the time, but possessing as she still did no small attractions both of person and manner, she had very soon completely enslaved the young Guardsman. Of course, Sir Joseph, at the age of sixty, could not expect much affectionate devotion from his young wife, but the lady's unblushing readiness to console herself with her more youthful admirer had provoked the disapproval even of the circle in which she moved, little prone as that circle is to condemn laxity of morals in those whom it admits within its sacred pale.

The old Earl of Glenroy, a peer with a reputation for the sternest morality, had taken his son severely to task.

"My boy," said he, "people are talking a great deal too much about you, and it must stop. There are some things that we don't do, and that I cannot allow, and this is one of them. Of course, Sir Joseph suspects nothing as yet, for the poor fool of a husband is always the last to see what is going on; but when he does, there will be the devil of a row. He is not a bit the sort of man to take it quietly, and a public scandal I can't have. You must drop it, Jim. Other people's wives are much too expensive luxuries!"

Expensive they are, as Jim had already found, though not quite in the way his father meant. Despite his very liberal allowance, he was frequently very hard put to it to satisfy Lady Linstock's rapacious demands, and he was not long in learning that a fashionable lady's little gambling debts, occasional sops to her modiste, and so forth are apt to be considerable. And so he bowed the more readily to his father's ukase, and now for some time past had successfully preserved a comparatively distant acquaintance with his former innamorata.

But the indiscretions of one's past are liable to bear fruit at awkward moments, as Jim Dalton was destined to find; and as he tore open the afore-mentioned missive, he had a presentiment of coming trouble, which was not altogether without justification. The first words brought a cynical smile to his lips, which soon, however, disappeared as he proceeded. When he came to the end, he crumpled the letter in his hand with a muttered oath, and fell to thinking over this latest development of his affairs. For the letter ran thus:—

DEAR MR. DALTON (or may I still say Dear Jim?)—I am in such terrible trouble. Four letters of yours, which I had kept instead of destroying with the others, have mysteriously disappeared from my cabinet. I must have accidentally left the drawer unlocked, I suppose, for they were there this morning, but had gone in the evening. Do come and see me as soon as possible. I do not know what to do, and I am very nervous. Of course, I was foolish to keep the letters at all, but we are all foolish sometimes, are we not? At any rate, do come and tell me what can be done.—Ever yours, MINNIE.

"Confound the woman!" said Jim. "What on earth possessed her to keep those letters? And what on earth possessed me to write them? Oh, Lord, what a fool I was! Of course, they are the most compromising of the lot, or she wouldn't have hoarded them up."

And he fell to swearing volubly as he tramped up and down the room, wondering in what new mess he might find himself landed now. But bad language is never of very much use at a pinch, and Jim's supply at last running out, he sat down exhausted, but no whit improved in temper.

"I suppose I must go to her," he reflected. "Somehow or other we must find out who has got those letters, and get them back if possible. If they get into Sir Joseph's hands, the D.C. and 'cut off with a shilling' will be my fate, as sure as a gun. Deuce take the women! They have always brought trouble with them since the world started."

With this sage reflection Jim proceeded to make his usual careful toilet, and to prepare himself for the contemplated interview.

His face wore little of its accustomed cheerfulness as he got into a hansom at the door of his chambers and bade the cabby drive to Lady Linstock's address. Nor was his mind occupied with very pleasant reflections during the journey, and he smiled grimly as he thought with how different feelings he had been wont to travel the same path in former days. The very servant who announced him seemed to wear a carefully-concealed smile of recognition, and Jim could not quite repress a feeling of disgust at the thought of his old infatuation as he entered the well-remembered boudoir.

"Oh, Jim!" cried Lady Linstock as she rose to greet him, "I am so glad to see you; I am in such terrible distress!"

"I don't doubt it," replied Jim. "The situation is not calculated to afford either of us much gratification."

"But what had we better do, do you think? I am sure you will be able to think of something."

"Well, in the first place, are you quite sure that the letters have gone? Is there absolutely no possibility that you have mislaid them?"

"Not the least, I am afraid. I am positive they were in the drawer of the little cabinet in my room in the morning; and when I opened it just before dinner, they were gone."

Jim shrugged his shoulders resignedly and went on.

"Then have you any idea who has got them?"

"That I can't think! I should imagine it must be one of the servants, but I can't in the least tell who. I don't think it is my maid—she is far too devoted to me to do any such thing—though it might be any one of the others."

Jim pondered a moment, and then, with a short laugh, said:—

"In that case we can only wait and see what turns up. If the thief goes straight to Sir Joseph with his capture, the fat is in the fire. If, on the other hand, he comes to one of us to try to dispose of his wares to the best advantage, which I expect will be the case, we must decide what had better be done."

Lady Linstock clasped her hands, and, with a pleading look at Jim, wailed piteously:—

"Oh, Jim, don't let there be any scandal, will you? If they come to me, I can't possibly give them anything. I have outrun my allowance as it is, and if Sir Joseph finds out about the—the—about the—letters, I shall be ruined. Oh, Jim!"

And her voice broke into a most pathetic sob.

"So I am to redeem the letters to save your reputation?"

"And your own, Jim. Think of what your father would say if there were a fuss."

Jim swore a little under his breath.

"Yes, I think it's the only way. If they come to you, send them on to me. I'll get the letters by hook or by crook. I can't imagine why you kept them at all, by the way."

"Can't you, Jim? I think you might if you tried. A woman likes to look back on the past sometimes, and to keep some memorial of it. But it was foolish, I own, and——"

"Oh, well, I suppose one can't eat one's cake without paying for it somehow. So I'll get them back if I can, and when we have safely burnt them, we'll close the chapter for good, I think."

And with somewhat brutal haste Jim made his adieux, and went home. Signs of incipient sentiment in Lady Linstock warned him not to delay, and he was not in the mood at the time for sentiment, particularly such réchauffé stuff as he was then threatened with.

Jim Dalton re-entered his chambers rather more despondent than when he left them. And the worst of it was that he could see no gleam of light in prospect.

"So blackmail is the best I can hope for," he murmured to his favourite pipe; "and I must submit to blackmail to save Lady Linstock's character. And to save my own, too, by Gad! She had me there! She knows very well that I can't afford, for my own sake, to have any noise made. Well, the only question now is, how much is it going to cost me? Not much, I trust. It strikes me that I shall be broke very soon at this rate. Jenkins!"

"Yes, sir?"

"I'm going out. If anybody calls to see me, tell them to come to-morrow morning. I shan't be back until to-night."

It was a cheerless day for Jim. He spent most of it at his club, but his dinner was spoilt by visions of the Divorce Court, irate parents, and infuriated husbands, which intruded themselves with maddening persistency. Cards in the evening brought no distraction, and he returned to his rooms, and retired to bed at an unusually early hour.

The next morning found him, after a more or less sleepless night, in a still gloomier mood than before. He felt capable of anything—robbery with violence, manslaughter, anything to obtain possession of those fatal letters. Breakfast over, Jim lit a pipe and resumed the melancholy train of thought which twenty-four hours had made so familiar to him. But the pipe was hardly in full blast before Jenkins, his servant, entered the room.

"A lady to see you, sir. Important business, she says."

Jim started, and said to himself, "I'll be bound these are the letters! Well, I suppose I must go through with it, and do the best I can."

"What sort of a lady? Did she give her name?" he asked his servant.

"Wouldn't give her name, sir. Shortish lady with a black veil, sir. Couldn't see her face, sir, but she seems a foreigner by her voice."

"All right, Jenkins. Show her in!" And as the servant left the room, Jim laid down his pipe, took up a commanding position on the hearthrug, and muttered, "Now for the tug of war. Pray heaven she be reasonable in her demands!"

The door was opened, and Jenkins ushered in the visitor.

"Good morning, madam. May I ask to what I owe this honour?"

"Bon jour, m'sieu. I ask pardon for ze intrusion, but I have come to do you a good service. I have some lettair which I wish to give back to you."

"Indeed, and what letters are they?"

"Zey are ze lettair which you did write to Miladi Linstock. Is it not so?"

"That, of course, I can't say without seeing them. But in any case, how did they come into your possession?"

"Oh, zat is not ze question, m'sieu. It is enough zat I have zem now, and zat I am ready to give zem to you. You would like to have zem?"

"If they are the letters you say, I should certainly like to have them. And you, I presume, wish to sell them to me for a price."

"Ah no—you are too—what you call it—too coarse. I wish to give zem to monsieur, and monsieur will, of course, give to me some mark of his gratitude. N'est-ce pas?"

"Yes, of course, that is a very pretty way of putting it. But apart from all niceties, what do you want for those letters?"

"Ah, you are so brusque! Monsieur will not tink one tousand pound too much?"

"Monsieur certainly will," replied Jim, curtly. "A thousand is out of the question. I simply haven't got it."

"You say so? Ah well! I will go to miladi's husband, or to M. le Comte, votre père—ah! you do not like zat?"

"Look here," interrupted Jim in desperation, "I will give you five hundred for the letters, here in notes."

"Five 'undred pound! Ah no! It is not enough."

"Very well. Then you can do what you like! I can't give you any more."

The other was silent for a few moments, apparently considering the offer. Then she exclaimed,—

"Mais oui! Monsieur shall have zem. You will give me ze money now?"

"You shall have it in ten minutes. Jenkins! Take this cheque round to the bank at once and bring me notes for it. Look sharp!"

And, after hastily scribbling a cheque for the amount, Jim leant back in his chair, and awaited in silence the return of the messenger.

Meanwhile he curiously examined his companion from under his half-closed eyelids. As he did so, the conviction dawned upon him that he had seen her before somewhere, but, try as he would, he could not for the life of him tell when or where.

His meditations were interrupted by the return of his servant with the money, and in a very few minutes the famous letters were safely in his possession. A rapid glance assured him that they were the genuine articles, and, with a sigh of relief, Jim turned to his visitor and bade her "Good morning." Suddenly, as she was in the act of opening the door, light flashed upon him.

"By the way," he said, "aren't you Lady Linstock's maid?"

With a little laugh the lady turned round.

"Monsieur has sharp eyes," she said. "But he is not quite correct. I was miladi's maid—yes, but I am zat no longer. I shall be now what you call independent."

"So," murmured Jim, reflectively, "you are the maid whom Lady Linstock thought so devoted to her. Your devotion has a queer way of showing itself."

"Devotion!" exclaimed the lady. "Ah no! Zere is no devotion. For a long time I serve miladi well and do for her all zat she ask of me. But she is a tyrant—a bully. She will never consider ze feelings of ze maid, and I will no more endure it. So I leave her now, and I also revenge myself by taking zis money."

"But, my good woman," interrupted Jim, "how on earth do you punish Lady Linstock by blackmailing me of five hundred pounds?"

His companion laughed merrily.

"Monsieur does not understand. Ze money was for miladi. She give me ze lettair to give to monsieur, and tell me to bring her ze money zat monsieur pay for zem. Monsieur will know zat my mistress is very poor. She has parted wiz her diamond necklace to get money, and now she must get it back. Sir Joseph tell her zat she must wear it at ze big dinner on Friday night, and miladi is in despair. So she t'ink to get money from monsieur, and she tell Annette to do ze business for her. But Annette is too clever for miladi. I keep ze money and go away. I regret to take it from monsieur, but," with a shrug of the shoulders, "it is ze fortune of war, and perhaps monsieur will buy wisdom wiz ze money. Adieu, m'sieu? Mille remercîements."

And with a saucy laugh of triumph the fair Annette whisked out of the door, and was gone before Jim had recovered from his stupor of amazement.

"Whew!" he whistled; "what a revelation! It was a deucedly clever plan all the same; but, by Jove! the maid was too much for the mistress this time."

And the humour of the situation forcibly occurring to him, he threw himself back in his chair and laughed long and loud.

"Upon my word, I really think it's worth the five hundred, expensive week as it has been for me. And I don't envy Lady Linstock her feelings when she finds out how she has been tricked. And she will have to settle with Sir Joseph about those diamonds, too."

And again Jim laughed as he contemplated the fate in store for the ill-starred lady.

That evening Lady Linstock received two letters. One was from her late maid, announcing her immediate marriage and thanking miladi for her generous present. The other was from her late admirer, congratulating her on the ingenuity of her plan for raising money, and condoling with her on its failure.

And, as she angrily crushed both letters in her hand, the force of the old saying, "diamond cut diamond," was brought home to her by Sir Joseph's voice:

"You won't forget to wear your necklace, as I asked you, will you, my dear?"

KINAHAN'S LL WHISKY.—"The Cream of Old Irish Whiskies." Kinahan's LL Whisky. Gold Medal Paris Exhibition, 1878. Kinahan's Glenisle Whisky. The Finest Scotch Whisky sold.

ART NOTES.

THE MILLAIS EXHIBITION AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

THERE are to be seen just now on the walls of six of the galleries of Burlington House 186 of Millais' oil paintings—virtually his life work. These pictures have all been lent for exhibition, and it is possible, therefore, to ascertain in whose hands the most important works of one who was undoubtedly the foremost English painter of the century are to be found. One fact comes out very clearly after examining the catalogue. It is that "the foremost English painter of the century" enjoyed in only an infinitesimal degree the patronage of the Court and the English nobility. Out of his 186 works now on view, only eight belong to Royal or noble owners, and of the eight no less than five are portraits. As patrons of English art, therefore, the members of our British peerage do not come out very strongly, if this may be taken as a fair example of how they buy English pictures of the highest merit. This, however, is merely by the way, and fortunately affects in no wise the keen enjoyment which a careful study of Millais' pictures cannot fail to induce.

It has not been found possible to hang the paintings in the chronological order of their production; but, by the exercise of a little trouble, visitors will be able to trace for themselves the development of what at its prime was so masterful a personality and so many-sided a talent. First of all, then, let a visit be paid to the Black and White room, where will be found a selection of drawings done by the painter when only seven years of age (No. 218). In the next room will be found his first oil painting, painted at the age of twelve (No. 68). It is then necessary to make a jump of seven years and take a look at the "Cymon and Iphigenia" in the first room (No. 3). In this it will be noticed that young Millais is still feeling his way; he has not yet asserted the individuality of his talent, for the picture is suggestive of the classical nudities of Etty. The nymphs are uninterestingly plump and academic, and the Cymon has a simper worthy of the "simple" hero of the nursery rhyme. Mark the difference when the room is crossed and "Lorenzo and Isabella" (No. 23) is examined. Here the influence of the pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood which young Millais had joined is strikingly manifest. It is a wonderful picture for a youth of twenty to have produced. The "Ferdinand Lured by Ariel" (No. 58) belongs to the same year—1849. Study the marvellously elaborate landscape in this painting. I doubt if Millais ever did anything more beautiful even in the "Chill October" period of his art.

The next landmark in his artistic development is "Christ in the House of his Parents," perhaps better known as "The Carpenter's Shop" (No. 57). Of all Millais' pictures this is the most daringly original, the most strenuously real. Look at it, and remember as you look that it was painted when the artist was not yet twenty-one. We have heard much of late years of the daring realism with which Bastien Lepage and Fritz von Uhde treat sacred subjects, but in this wonderful picture of his young Millais had anticipated them both. Then follow a series of masterpieces. During the next seven or eight years he painted "Ophelia," "The Huguenot," "The Proscribed Royalist," "The Rescue," "Autumn Leaves," "Sir Isumbras at the Ford," and the "Vale of Rest," all of which are now to be seen at the Royal Academy. With "The Vale of Rest," Millais, it seems to me, reached the artistic climax of his fame. He painted many great pictures afterwards—admirable landscapes and splendid portraits (such as those of Mr. Gladstone and Lord Tennyson, Nos. 128 and 130), but his strenuous energy, his abnormal enthusiasm, his resolute downrightness never afterwards found so high an expression as they did in that wonderful decade, 1849-1858.

Amongst other items of special interest in the exhibition let me mention the "Design for a Gothic Window in water colour" (No. 222). This remarkable tour de force was carried out by Millais, whilst still a young man, at the suggestion of his friend and critic Mr. Ruskin. Special interest, apart from its artistic merit, also attaches itself to the "Portrait of Mr. Ruskin" (No. 55), the well-known small full-length, in which that eminent art critic is painted bareheaded and frock-coated, posed on the rocks beside the Waterfall of Glenfinlas in the Highlands. I cannot close this short notice without again emphasising the memorable nature of the exhibition. It should be missed by no one who is interested in the development of British art. Whatever else he was, Millais was pre-eminently a thorough and sturdy Englishman. He stood, like that "Tower of Strength" he painted in one of his later landscapes (No. 183), "four-square to all the winds that blew," and I do not see how his countrymen can fail to be very proud of him.

MUSIC.

THE WOES OF ORGANISTS.

SINCE I wrote last week concerning the tribulations of organists, more especially in regard to the recent appointment at York Minster, I have received several communications, both oral and written, from members of this, perhaps one of the most hard-working, highly-trained, and ill-paid of all the professions. There seems to be a general concensus of opinion that the two propositions I laid down are correct, namely: first, that there ought to be some system by which organists who are old and incapacitated can be retired on pension; and, secondly, that the whole matter is one to be dealt with by the Royal College of Organists, the Incorporated Society of Musicians, or some other musical trade-union, most of whom at present seem to confine their efforts on behalf of their profession to dining, examining, junketing, and self-advertisement by the reading of non-practical essays. In details, however, I have received much valuable and interesting information, upon which I shall have to make a few remarks.

It is gratifying to find that the Cathedral organists generally throughout the country are of opinion that some means should exist for enforcing the retirement of those who, owing to old age or other reasons, are no longer fit to adequately perform their duties. Here, in all probability, lies a difficulty if the organist's appointment is made a freehold. Turle's case was one in point, although Mr. C. E. Turle writes to tell me that Turle retained his residence in the cloisters after his retirement under a special Act of Parliament and not by the generosity of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. Still, Turle, despite the state to which, at over seventy years of age, he had reduced the Abbey services, was an "irremovable," and he retained his office for seven years after Sir F. Bridge, under the obvious disguise of "permanent deputy," had practically superseded him. In many cathedrals the lay vicars, or singing men, are likewise on the foundation, and their appointments are practically freehold. The special object lesson is that of Mr. Charles Lockey, who was bereft of his singing voice many years ago, so that his duties at St. Paul's Cathedral for nearly half a century have been performed by deputy. This no doubt constitutes a scandal, although I agree it would only have been fair if Mr. Lockey could have been retired upon an adequate pension when his vocal powers failed. It is, however, for the benefit neither of religion nor of art that a man's position should be of such a freehold character that he is able to take the emoluments and to hold the office long after he is avowedly incapable of fulfilling the duties. The remedy just now most in favour in ecclesiastical circles seems to be to hire their musical men on three months' notice. I should like to see the same measure meted out to Deans. There is no reason, moral, social, or financial, so far as I am aware, which should give the higher officials of the Established Church a monopoly of paid senility. The human mind almost reels at the thought of an Archbishop on quarterly notice like his own organist or footman. And yet, as I have already pointed out, while first-rate musicians can be found to compete for cathedral berths under such conditions, it would be absurd to blame the clergy who impose them. If the organists are too supine to effectively organise, or if their existing associations neglect obvious duties, that, surely, is their affair.

The Society of Musicians, at their "Annual Conference" in London this week, are, for example, devoting doubtless precious time to, among other things, a more or less profitable discussion on "The tonic basis of all music." The best tonic I should imagine those worthy musicians could swallow would follow the promulgation and energetic carrying out of a scheme to ameliorate their lot and to protect their just rights and interests. As to the Royal College of Organists, it appears to confine itself to the organising of an annual dinner, taking the guineas of its members, and examining a certain number of candidates for certificates and diplomas. I believe that, until the grievances of the cathedral organists were forced upon them by Sir Frederick Bridge, the Royal College Council had, as a body, no knowledge whatever that any dissatisfaction existed, despite the fact that three cathedral organists within the past year or two had been appointed upon the three months' notice principle. Even now they appear likely to be content with the appointment of a committee, who will probably report to the college at the Greek Kalends. In any other trade-union this would, I think, have been an impossibility. I can imagine the outcry in the Inns of Court if a proposal were promulgated to appoint County Court Judges at three months' notice. Again, if the interests of solicitors had been similarly threatened, the Law Society would most certainly have taken very vigorous action without waiting for a newspaper discussion to stir up its courage. No one, of course, suggests that the Royal College of Organists should call out the cathedral organists on "strike." But as the representative body of a large profession they certainly have the power to defend the interests of their order, either by appeal to the Bishop as visitor of any particular cathedral, or, failing that, to Parliament itself. The recent proceedings at York, Lincoln, and other cathedrals, by which the organist has been appointed under the three months' notice, has, it seems, also alarmed the ordinary church organist who has always been very much under the heel of his Vicar or perhaps of a musical curate. One of them pathetically writes:—

> As the law stands, a Vicar may dismiss his organist at his pleasure and thus may ruin the career of a good man. Who cares? He is only a poor devil of a parish church organist at a salary of, say, £40.

And the writer enviously adds, "The postman who delivers this letter to you, Mr. Editor, earns more."

It seems that the movement for the deposition of the cathedral organist from the comparatively secure position which he formerly occupied dates back to the time of the Cathedral Commission, which last reported to the Queen about ten years ago. Inquiries were then made in every cathedral concerning the status of all the officials, from the Dean down to the bell-ringer. So far as the organist was concerned, in almost all cases he held a position on what is called the "Foundation," or, in other words, he could only be removed from his post for gross misbehaviour. Otherwise, in most instances, he was under the orders of the Precentor or the Succentor. The Commissioners, in almost every case, with a unanimity which was almost suspicious, recommended a series of Supplementary Statutes, one of which—I quote those suggested for the diocese of Lincoln, although it is practically the same as in other dioceses—coolly provided that the organist was henceforward to "hold his office during pleasure." These Supplementary Statutes have, however, never been passed by Parliament, or whoever may be the proper body to legalise them; and accordingly the cathedral authorities are still working under their old Statutes, namely, rules which have been promulgated from time to time from the fourteenth and fifteenth century downwards. In nearly every instance under the old Statutes the organist and the lay vicars are on the Foundation, receiving small salaries and residences as a matter of right, though the "Foundation" salaries are, of course, heavily supplemented. For example, I believe, in Westminster Abbey the Foundation salary of a Vicar Choral is only £10 a year, whereas most of the singers receive between £100 and £140. Still, the £10 is all that the man is legally entitled to, and this he cannot be deprived of during good behaviour, even though his voice entirely fails him. As a matter of practice, when a man becomes incapacitated from his duties from no fault of his own, he receives a pension very much larger than his Foundation salary, which, with his freehold rights, he forthwith relinquishes. The matter, therefore, works out equitably enough. It would be even more equitable if Deans and Canons were appointed under similar conditions. But from the age limit, which applies impartially to the Army and the Civil Service, the postmen and the police, the higher clergy are exempt. And the result is that the average age of Deans is almost as high as that of the ladies of the Italian operatic chorus.

THE GREATEST OF ALL PIANOFORTES.—THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES. New York and London.

The cathedral organists, of course, strenuously oppose the present tendency of Deans and Chapters to deprive them of their status on the foundation. In four cathedrals recently the Chapter (it is asserted entirely without legal authority) appointed organists only on condition that their services can be dispensed with at three months' notice on either side. In the ordinary course, no doubt, this arrangement would work out fairly well, and a young musician such as Mr. Tertius Noble, of York, would be far more likely to throw up his post for a better berth, than the Minster authorities would be to try to get rid of him. But organists are painfully aware of the hardships inflicted by intolerant members of the clerical, or in other words, perhaps, the most intolerant of all professions. There was a special instance in point at St. Saviour's Collegiate Church, Southwark, less than a year ago. Dr. Abernethy had, during the chrysalid period of this church, performed the duties to the satisfaction of everybody; yet, when the institution was reconstructed, and practically became a cathedral, his services were dispensed with, despite the protest of the church wardens, and almost without a "thank you," in order that some new cleric might job into the berth another doubtless excellent organist with whom he had worked in a previous benefice. Accordingly, although they admit that in most cases they are very well treated, yet cathedral organists complain that, under the new conditions, they are liable to dismissal at three months' notice on the appointment of a new Dean, who, perhaps, may wish to job into the berth a political friend or relative. It is true the organist may have some sort of right of appeal to the Bishop as visitor, but this right is practically worth nothing at all, for the Bishop in such cases almost invariably refuses to intervene. Also they fear that, under the three months' notice, they would be a good deal too much under the thumb of clerical subordinates. The precentor, for example, namely, the Canon next in authority to the Dean, although technically in charge of the musical services at cathedrals, is occasionally a personage whose knowledge of the art is either superficial or non-existent. Accordingly he delegates his duties to a subordinate priest who receives the title of succentor, and who practically does the work of the precentor; in most instances not only having the oversight of the musical services of the cathedral, but also technically the direction of the organist, the lay vicars, and the choristers in their separate posts and duties. Under the three months' notice the organist would be absolutely at the succentor's mercy, and this the hardworking members of an ill-paid profession very naturally wish to avoid.

What a cathedral organist has to do and the amount of pay he receives for doing it are admirably put by the late Mr. Young, organist of Lincoln Cathedral, in a letter to the Commissioners dated January, 1880:—

> In the first place his duties are from ten to eleven in the morning, and from four to five in the afternoon, these hours falling so awkwardly in each half of the working day that it is almost impossible for the organist to undertake any other duties than teaching. The cathedral organist has necessarily undergone many years of training and hard study before he is qualified to undertake the duties of such a post, for in addition to what a pianist has to learn he also has to learn the organ, to play from a figured bass, also from vocal and instrumental score; and to thoroughly understand harmony, counterpoint and composition, besides the art of developing the voice and accompanying the choir.

Moreover, the organist is required to attend the cathedral services twice a day including Sundays, and as the Dean and Chapter do not provide a deputy his only chance of an occasional half-holiday is by training a pupil to take his place. His salary at Lincoln is £130 a year as organist, and £80 a year and residence as Master of the Choristers; and he has no right to any pension. Owing to the smallness of the salary Mr. Young declared he found himself obliged to devote a portion of his time to teaching secular music in order to enable him to bring up his family respectably. "This," he rightly says, "is a terrible drawback to self improvement, for the time spent in this way, so far as I am concerned, is time thrown away." Moreover, in a place like Lincoln there is perhaps not very much opening for teaching, and whatever scanty earnings can be gained in this direction, cannot greatly supplement the organist's miserable stipend of £210 a year. If in addition the man is liable at the sweet will of Deans and Chapters to dismissal at three months' notice, his position, already a wretched one, would become practically intolerable. It seems imperative, or at any rate only just, that some scheme of superannuation or pension should be devised to meet such cases as this. In the report of the Cathedral Commissioners there is, indeed, a scale of pensions laid down for Priest-Vicars, who seem to be a species of "under-study" to the Prebendaries, and who receive about the same salary as a cathedral organist, namely, from £200 to a maximum of £250 a year. It is provided that the Priest-Vicar on attaining the age of 55 years shall retire on a pension varying from £30 a year after a service of less than ten years to £160 a year after a service of twenty years. Some such scheme should be devised in the case of a cathedral organist. In any event the organist cannot be blamed for protesting vigorously against the modern tendency of cathedral Chapters to deprive him of his lawful rights which have been handed down from the days when (there then being no organs) the organist was non-existent, and the master of the choristers was a monk. It seems, indeed, by what I learn from the communications which have reached me, that it is not only the money question which is involved in this matter, but also a question of status, the organist at three months' notice believing that he would not be able to exercise the necessary moral and musical authority over his vicars choral and his choristers so as to secure adequate performances.

If, however, the position of the cathedral organist is a poor one, what can be said for that of the ordinary church musician? The church organist has to put up with all the disabilities of his brother of the cathedral and a good deal more. His average pay is about £50 a year, less, perhaps, than that of the beadle. Yet his position, poor as it is, is absolutely insecure. As a rule, at any rate in London, he is annually elected from year to year, but if the three months' notice system is adopted in his case he will be liable to dismissal every quarter. It is practically impossible for him to secure a new berth at such short notice. The church organist, it is true, has less work to do than the cathedral musician; but his duties invariably consist of at least two services on Sunday with a service or rehearsal in the week. For this he is paid frequently at the rate of £25 or £30, and rarely more than £80 per annum. Parents who bring up their children to so starvation a profession must be bereft of sense.

MORTLOCK'S (Oxford-st.), Estd. A.D. 1746.—The collection of China and Glass now on view in their Galleries fully maintains the high reputation and pre-eminence enjoyed by "MORTLOCK'S" for the last century and a half, and well repays a visit of inspection.

The musical season has again started, although concerts are not likely to be very numerous until the end of the month. One of the best performances given during the past week, was that of the "Contes Mystiques," by Madame Blanche Marchesi. These proved to be a selection of a dozen religious poems, descriptive of the child-life of Christ, each poem being set by an eminent or other, French musician. Some of these songs are extremely melodious, although there is a strong family likeness between them, so that before the end, they become monotonous. They were successful in Paris, where oratorio is, of course, unknown; but in England, the scenic and other superfluous theatrical surroundings of St. George's Hall, were against them. On Saturday, the usual New Year's performance took place of "Elijah," at Queen's Hall and also of "Messiah," which, thanks to a splendid cast, drew an enormous audience to the Albert Hall. On Monday, the Popular Concerts were resumed, Lady Hallé leading the quartet; but the programme was a more or less conventional one.

Sir George Grove is to be congratulated upon his access of fortune, he being a considerable beneficiary under the will of his brother, the well-known fishmonger of Charing-cross, who has recently died worth £150,000 besides freehold property. Sir George, it appears, now inherits his brother's Buckinghamshire estates for life, besides £3,000 cash, and one-seventh of the residue; while his children are also provided for. No one will perhaps be better pleased with this slice of good luck than the authorities of the Royal College of Music, for it should relieve them of at least a large portion of the very heavy pension of £700 a year which they granted Sir George on his retirement. This annuity has been a severe tax upon the College finances, but it was ungrudgingly given to the practical founder of the Institution when he needed it. Now that his circumstances are far more flourishing, it is hoped and supposed that there will be a readjustment. £700 a year would mean a large accession of scholarships, for which the Royal College of Music was primarily established.

A week or two ago, on a letter from a correspondent, I directed attention to the case of Mrs. Best, widow of the distinguished organist of Liverpool, for whom a Civil List pension was being sought. I have now received a letter from an Alderman of Liverpool, from which I learn that the Corporation have behaved far more liberally to this lady than was generally supposed. The Alderman writes:—

"The facts are that Mr. Best received a salary of £100 a year for the moderate demand made upon his time by our organ recitals. When overtaken by ill-health he had prolonged leave of absence on full pay, and although not a contributor to the superannuation fund an annuity of £200 a year was granted to him on his retirement from the service. At his death a grant of £160 was made to the widow. The Corporation is administered under Acts of Parliament which do not permit of widows of officials dying in active service receiving pensions. Much less should such grants be made to widows of superannuated officers."

So far as the Corporation of Liverpool are concerned, no blame, therefore, attaches to them, and the matter is at an end. Nevertheless, the widows of other eminent organists and musicians, in a far better position than Mrs. Best, have received Civil List pensions; and as this lady has a daughter and an invalid son dependent upon her, I am glad to learn that Mr. Arthur Balfour has the matter of a Civil List pension to her under consideration. Personally, I have a respect for the memory of Mr. Best, if only because he was the only British musician I know who ever refused a knighthood. Musical honours are now becoming so common that it will soon be almost impossible to throw a stone in St James's Hall without hitting a musical knight.

The pitch question is not, it seems, at an end even in Birmingham. The Corporation authorities there recently went to a good deal of expense in altering the pitch of the organ, lowering it to the diapason normal. Yet I read that at the recent performance of "St. Paul" there by the Festival Choral Society, Mr. Perkins, the Festival organist, was congratulated on his skill in transposing the whole music a semi-tone higher. The exact utility of lowering the organ about a semi-tone for the purpose of transposing the music a semi-tone higher, is not very clear. Meanwhile, the confusion of pitches is more or less delectable to the listener with acute ears.

Unauthorised rumours that the Bristol Musical Festival was to be abandoned have been set at rest by the announcement that the Festival will be held as usual in the Colston Hall in October next year. Mr. George Riseley will again be conductor, and Mr. Rootham, formerly choir-master of the Festival under the Halle regime, will be deputy conductor. The Welsh Festivals, however, will, I believe, be abandoned. Musical Festivals are, indeed, not required in Wales, where the Eisteddfodau, or mingled festivals and competitions, abound and flourish.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—We have secured seats for the Grand Concert which the Duchess of Sutherland is giving at Stafford House next Tuesday, the 11th inst. It is in aid of a cause which is after the Duchess's own heart, the "Maternity, Charity, and District Nurses' Home" at Plaistow. It supplies nurses to the very poor in that poverty-stricken district, and these good women look after invalids and more especially maternity cases in the homes of the patients, where there is no one to do the work of the house or look after the young children, and where often the barest necessaries of life are lacking. I have often thought that these nurses of the poor must be the noblest women living: they have so many disagreeables in the shape of dirt and malodorous surroundings to face, and the history of one day's work in such a life, which I read some time ago in a North-country paper, is sufficient to show of what splendid stuff they are made. Such a day would be a martyrdom to the butterfly women of fashion, but to what insignificant proportions she dwindles when compared with a beneficent, hard-working, self-denying home nurse who devotes her life to the services of the very poor! The Home at Plaistow trains women for maternity and district nurses in all parts of the country. The concert is to be a charming one, and among the numerous artistes who have promised their assistance are: Miss Clara Butt, Mme. Blanche Marchesi, Miss Esther Palliser, Miss Marie Tempest, Miss Letty Lind, Mlle. Ivone de St. André, Miss Cissie Loftus (imitations), Mr. Andrew Black, Mr. William Nichols, Mr. Dwight Edwards, Mr. Maurice Farkoa, Mr. Phil May (lightning sketches), and Mr. Mercer Adam (musical sketches). There is a good demand for the seats at Stafford House, and I fancy that the audience will be a remarkably smart one. Society may be frivolous and feeble-minded, but at least it recognises goodness when it sees it, and, like the Lacedaemonians long ago, applauds the right thing, even if it has no desire to do it.

Hilda, whose wedding takes place next Tuesday, has had a delightful little afternoon fire-tray given her among her wedding presents. It is electro-plate, and measures about a foot in length, being of oblong form; the surface is perforated, and a drawer which fits inside is furnished with a heater, which, being made red-hot in the fire and consigned to a partition of this drawer, keeps the fire-tray at a uniform heat for seven or eight hours. The rest of the sliding tray is lined with enamel, and serves to keep muffins, scones, or teacakes hot while the kettle and teapot, standing on the top, are provided with the necessary caloric. We were so delighted with this that we immediately invested in one ourselves. Ours is copper, and we are very much pleased with it. It is a boon at breakfast when some members of our party are unpunctual.

FURTHER REDUCTIONS.—REDFERN'S SALE now proceeding. All their past Season's Model Gowns, Coats, Mantles, Millinery, &c., including some excellent bargains from their Paris house, are now being offered for sale.—27, New Bond-street, W.

And oh! how difficult it is to be punctual on these bleak, cold, grey, and uninviting January mornings. How is it that our slumbers become doubly cream-laid and gilt-edged just at the very moment when we are called? Can anything be more ineffably precious than these few moments that we manage to steal after the horrid summons to arise and jump out and face the chill and dispiriting early morning hours? Richard likes his breakfast early; and oh! how I wish he did not.

We went to Olympia and saw the Biggest Show on Earth on the opening afternoon. I have never been in such a crowd in my life as there was at the Addison-road entrance. Thousands of people who could not get in remained there, I believe, until the doors opened for the evening performance. It was a good-humoured and a patient crowd, but getting through it was a work of some difficulty. A man with a lighted cigar in his mouth was pushed against Bee, and actually set her hair on fire, but fortunately Richard saw it in time. Getting up the steps was a dreadful experience, but at last we were landed safely inside and proceeded to make our tour of the wild beast show. We admired a magnificent tiger and a splendid lion, besides a leopard which seemed to us to be finer than any we had ever seen at the Zoo. The elephants appeared to expect illimitable bun, and held out their trunks at us in a manner which ran counter to all laws of etiquette. Joanna was surrounded by such a thick crowd that we could only see her performance at a distance, and I fear lost some of the gentle subtleties of her amusing doings. She is not beautiful, but then brains and beauty seldom go together. We lost our hearts to a graceful antelope and a dear little donkey, which we thought we afterwards recognised in the arena. A long array of negroes, apparently from different parts of the world, was ranged down one side of the great hall. The freaks were at the other end, but we did not visit them.

The great performance in the arena simply defies description. The mere programme is three or four yards long, and anybody who has a sufficient number of eyes and adequate brain power to follow the whole of it would probably be gifted with the requisite faculty of giving expression to his impressions. The great spectacular entry made a splendid opening, and we were much amused at hearing a Roman charioteer whose horse began bucking swear in nervous English. The elephants are probably the most highly educated in the world. The twentieth-century girls in bloomers and the lady clown seemed to interest the enormous audience, the very sight of which is in itself a wonderful experience. There are moments when a sort of quiver passes over the massed figures and faces, as at the interval, when a universal movement takes place.

The trapeze was also very interesting to the multitude, but I am never happy when wingless human beings are careering about in mid-air; are you? Mr. John O'Brien and his seventy horses in one ring pleased us immensely; the dear things obeyed every word that he said, and we liked the quiet and gentle voice in which he addressed them. Most men speak to horses in the roughest and rudest manner possible, appearing to reserve for these gentle animals the brutal tone which we feel that we can never sufficiently resent. We loved the dear dog that played football so cleverly, and greatly admired the other dog which skirt-danced in the most approved fashion, keeping up for an incredibly long time and waving his skirts about him in a most graceful way. We were also much amused by the squeaking barks of a small white scrap of dog flesh which sat beside a lady who drove a buggy round the arena. The same lady afterwards rode a racer over high leaps, and we all admired her equestrianism extremely; she had a splendid seat on her horse, and a beautiful figure. All the sympathies of the throng were with the man in his race against a running horse, and great excitement was evoked by the whippet racing. The double four-horse tandem hurdle race, in which one thoroughbred is ridden and three others run, all being driven at breakneck speed and leaping high hurdles as they go, made our hearts stand still for a moment as they flew past. In another event a horse named Oxford jumped splendidly, especially when called on by name by some one to whom he is probably attached.

The great spectacular military drama "The Mahdi" is simply a wonderful sight, the glow and glitter of the East being skilfully rendered by the scene-painter and the arrangement of light. There is also plenty of action in the foreground with galloping horses, praying, flying, and shrieking Soudanese, and the touching incident of decoration with the Victoria Cross. Though, contrary to all military etiquette, it is an effective episode, especially as the band plays "Home, Sweet Home" just at the moment. The Highlanders got a splendid reception from the audience, but the poor dear Blue-jackets seemed scarcely to be noticed. We thought the living statuary quite lovely and extremely cleverly managed. At first some of us could not be brought to believe that they were human figures.

Have you made any good resolutions for the New Year? I have made one or two, but am not going to tell them. Don't you fancy that they have a better chance of being kept if one is silent about them?

There was a smart Private View at the New Gallery on Friday and some good gowns were to be seen. The one I liked best was blue of a glorious shade, like the water of the Bay of Naples. It was relieved with white satin and sable and jet. How deliciously becoming sable is! It makes a pretty woman look charming and a plain one almost pretty.

We have done one or two cheap sales, Redfern's, of course, where we have furnished ourselves with dress materials for a twelvemonth at least, to say nothing of blouses, boleros, fur necklets, waistcoats, and a costume each. We also spent some absorbing hours at Redmayne's and invested in some of their marvellously cheap satins and brocades for evening frocks to be made up in the season. Nor did we ignore such useful items as gloves and hosiery, knowing by experience what good value we get there at "popular" prices. It would really pay you to come up for two or three days to buy the last additions to your almost-completed trousseau. They have such sweet collarettes and fichus in lawn and lace set off with ribbons; such knowing little "fronts" for smartening up a street toilette, and other devices of the kind.

We were allowed to look at the gold key made by the Goldsmiths' and Silversmiths' Company for presentation to the Duchess of Fife on her opening the new Technical Schools at Brighton on Friday of this week. The form of the handle is a trefoil surmounted by the Duchess's coronet, and in a space on the upper part her Royal Highness's arms are given in their proper heraldic colours, the motto being inscribed on an enamelled ribbon at the sides. Below there is a fancy shield with the arms of Brighton enamelled upon it. Between the two sets of arms are various emblems relating to art and industry. The head of the key is connected with the stem by an acanthus leaf ornament. The ward is formed of the letter F, the initial of the Duchess's title. Inside the case containing the key is a suitable inscription.

Richard went in search of a new experience on Wednesday night — to a large dinner party in the East End, where he was not a guest but an onlooker. It was a dinner in Shoreditch Town Hall, given to some 500 poor women and children of the district by Messrs. Tom Smith & Co., the well-known manufacturers of Christmas crackers, to mark the fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of the firm. Richard says it was better than having a good dinner oneself to witness the enjoyment of the poor people at this entertainment, and I am sure Tom Smith & Co. could not have hit upon a happier method of celebrating their Jubilee.

LIBERTY & CO., LTD.—STOCK-TAKING SALE.—This day and daily. Silks, Velveteens, Costumes, Millinery, Carpets, Tapestries, Curtains, Cretonnes, & Furniture at sale prices.—Regent-st.

SPORTS.—By having recourse to a scientific Corsetière a graceful and becoming figure is the result, for the proportions are harmoniously delineated. Mesdames SYKES, JOSEPHINE, & Co., The Celebrated Anatomical Corsetières, 280, Regent-st., Oxford-circus, London.

As you desired, I am sending you half-a-dozen of the little albums for the Prince of Wales's Hospital Fund stamps, which Sir Henry Burdett referred to in his letter to the Times the other day—although I may tell you that you could have got them just as easily through your bookseller. You will see inside the cover the address of the photographers who will take a midget photograph of the owner of the album free of charge, so that it can be inserted in the book as a means of identification. Several people that we know have given these albums to their children, with one stamp inserted as the first year's subscription, and I think that in most cases the children will fill up the remaining spaces for themselves from year to year. It is an admirable plan for encouraging in them an interest in the hospitals and a habit of giving regularly. And I hear, too, that a great many people of humble means, who would never think of putting their names down as ordinary subscribers, are taking these stamp albums and starting a regular annual subscription by means of them. It is an excellent thing to interest the poor in this way in the institutions on which they depend so much. Do you not think so?

Just one recipe. You will find this "Pouding à la Figaro" delicious:—

Beat 4 oz. of butter with 4 oz. of fine sugar until creamy, add 2 oz. of chocolate Menier, grated, and two eggs, beating them in separately. Mix in lightly 4 oz. of sifted flour, and bake in a plain round mould. Meanwhile, for the sauce, boil 4 oz. of sugar with three parts of a gill of water until it is a syrup, whisk it while boiling to the yolks of two eggs, and continue whisking till it is cold, then add three table spoonfuls of whipped cream and a tea spoonful of Maraschino. When the pudding is done, turn it on to a dish and soak it thoroughly with 4 oz. of sugar boiled to a syrup and mixed with a tea spoonful of Maraschino. Pour the sauce round the pudding.

Ever, dear, your loving cousin, MADGE.

CIGARES DE JOY
(JOY'S CIGARETTES)
Immediately Relieve
ASTHMA, WHEEZING, CHRONIC BRONCHITIS
Chemists & Stores, box of 35, 2/6, or Post Free from WILCOX & Co., 83, Mortimer Street, London, W.
TRIAL SAMPLE FREE.

WHY DRINK INFERIOR TEA?
UNITED KINGDOM TEA COMPANY'S TEAS
DIRECT FROM THE GROWERS.
1/-, 1/3, 1/4, 1/6, 1/7, 1/9, & 2/- per lb., DELIVERED CARRIAGE PAID.
Write for Samples, sent free, taste them, and judge for yourselves. Amazing superiority in Quality! Great Economy in prices.
Offices: 21, MINCING LANE, LONDON, E.C.

ACCIDENT ASSURANCE.
ACCIDENT AND DISEASE ASSURANCE.
EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ASSURANCE.
FIDELITY GUARANTEE.
RAILWAY PASSENGERS ASSURANCE CO.,
Established 1849. Claims Paid £3,350,000.
64, CORNHILL, LONDON. A. VIAN, Secretary.

WOMEN'S LONDON GARDENING ASSOCIATION,
ORIGINAL Home-made JAMS, JELLIES, FRUIT-PICKLES, CONFECTIONERY, &c. TABLE DECORATIONS.
COURT FLORISTS, 62 and 64, Lower Sloane-st., S.W.
Bouquets, Sprays, Wreaths, and Floral Decorations of all kinds.

RARE CHINA.
Old Chimney Pieces in Carved Wood & Marble
STATUARY CLEANED AND REPAIRED.
The Sinclair Galleries,
55, 57, 59, SHAFTESBURY AVENUE, LONDON, W.
FREDERICK LITCHFIELD, Proprietor.

NATIONAL For Mutual Life Assurance. PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.
Claims Paid exceed...£10,000,000
Invested Funds exceed £5,000,000
Profits divided to 1892 £4,600,000
Profits.—At the last (1892) Division, £651,000 Cash Profit was apportioned amongst the members, being more than 37 per cent. of the amount paid in premiums during the previous five years. There were then nearly 800 Policies, in respect of which not only were the premiums entirely extinguished, but also annuities were granted, or Cash Bonuses paid, whilst in the case of many policies the original sums assured are now more than doubled by the Bonus additions.
Endowment-Assurance Policies are issued combining Life Assurance at Minimum Cost, with Provision for Old Age.
48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C. Applications for Agencies invited.

A Feature of the Metropolis. SPIERS & POND'S
CRITERION RESTAURANT, Piccadilly Circus, London, W.
EAST ROOM. Finest Cuisine, unsurpassed by the most renowned Parisian Restaurants. Luncheons, Dinners, and Suppers, à la carte and prix fixe. Viennese Band.
GRAND HALL. Musical Dinner 3/6 per head. Accompanied by the Imperial Austrian Band.
WEST ROOM. Academy Luncheon 2/6, Diner Parisien 5/-, during both of which the renowned Mandolin Quartette performs.
BUFFET & GRILL ROOM. Quick service à la carte and moderate prices. Joints in each room fresh from the Spit every half-hour.
AMERICAN BAR. Service of special American Dishes, Grills, &c.
Splendid Suites of Rooms for Military and other Dinners.

HALL'S WINE

THE GREAT

Restorative & Nervine

FOR SLEEPLESSNESS, NEURALGIA, ANÆMIA, INFLUENZA,
NERVOUS DEBILITY,
PHYSICAL BREAKDOWN,
WHOOPING COUGH,
WEAKNESS FOLLOWING ILLNESS.

The restorative properties of Hall's Wine are truly marvellous. It acts immediately, a few glasses only being sufficient to prove its value. It can be taken with safety, as there are absolutely no evil after-effects. Thousands testify to its value in all the above complaints. Its great popularity is due entirely to merit, and that nothing is claimed for it that has not been abundantly proved—thus no disappointment.

On receipt of six stamps to defray cost of postage and packing, &c., we will forward you a tasting sample. Of licensed grocers, chemists, or wine merchants, 2s. and 3s. 6d. per bottle, or post free from

STEPHEN SMITH & CO. Ltd. Bow, London E.

FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS

MELLIN'S FOOD

When prepared is similar to Breast Milk.

SAMPLES POST FREE FROM

MELLIN'S FOOD WORKS, PECKHAM, S.E.

USERS OF THE

ELECTRIC LIGHT

SHOULD SEE THAT THEIR

ELECTRIC LAMPS

BEAR THE WORLD-RENOWNED TRADE MARK

EDISWAN

EFFICIENCY ECONOMY

Sold by the Principal Contractors, Stores, &c.

£10,000.

TEN THOUSAND POUNDS is the penalty payable by any of the rubber manufacturers who may supply us with materials of inferior quality for the manufacture of

DUNLOP TYRES

This tremendous penalty enables us to safeguard the public against unsatisfactory tyres. DUNLOPS are not merely made to SELL, but to RIDE; and when we have sold a tyre we follow it all over the World with our Guarantee, and interpret that Guarantee in the most liberal spirit. And it must not be forgotten that our Guarantee is worth

20s. in the £

The DUNLOP PNEUMATIC TYRE COMPANY, Ltd.
160 to 166, CLERKENWELL ROAD, E.C., LONDON;
Works: ALMA STREET, COVENTRY.
Branches: Birmingham, Wolverhampton,
Nottingham, Manchester, Glasgow, Dublin, &c.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

MR. ARCHIBALD FORBES'S NEW BOOK.
On JANUARY 13, demy 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, 12s.

THE LIFE OF NAPOLEON III.

By ARCHIBALD FORBES.
With Photogravure Frontispiece and 36 Full-page Illustrations.

MRS. CROKER'S NEW NOVEL.
On JANUARY 12, crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

MISS BALMAINE'S PAST.

By B. M. CROKER, Author of "Diana Barrington," "Beyond the Pale," &c.

On JANUARY 13, CHEAPER ISSUE, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THACKERAYANA: Notes and Anecdotes. With Coloured Frontispiece and Hundreds of Sketches by WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY, from his School-Books, &c.

THREE NEW SIX-SHILLING BOOKS.

MORE TRAMPS ABROAD. By MARK TWAIN.

"A fine, sunny, delightful book."—Birmingham Post.

"Mr. Albert Chevalier used to sing a song in which occurs a line, 'Laugh! I thought I should have died!' and that line might fairly be quoted in reply to any question as to whether Mark Twain's latest book was funny. . . . All who appreciate humour or can enjoy laughter should make haste to procure 'More Tramps Abroad.' A more effective remedy for the blues has not been offered in England for many a day."—Publishers' Circular.

BY THE RISE OF THE RIVER.

By AUSTIN CLARE.

"He narrates the little tragedies and comedies of Tyneside with a sympathetic force and simplicity which endow his characters with a living and marked individuality. . . . The lightness of touch and delicacy of sentiment . . . are undeniable. Without exception, the whole of the twelve sketches amply repay perusal, and they form together a striking panorama of the simple joys and sorrows of moorland life."—Independent.

THIS LITTLE WORLD. By DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY.

"Mr. Murray has never done anything better than this fine story."—Birmingham Post.

"Honestly conceived, thoughtfully and even tenderly worked out."—Athenæum.

"Eminently bright, pleasant, and amusing."—Glasgow Herald.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's-lane, W.C.

NOW READY.—JANUARY NUMBER OF

THE CENTURY.

Illustrated. Price 1s. 4d. Contains—

A MYTH OF WATERLOO.
By ARCHIBALD FORBES.

THE LORD MAYOR'S SHOW.
By ELIZABETH ROBINS PENNELL. Illustrated by JOSEPH PENNELL

SCENES FROM HUXLEY'S HOME LIFE.
By HIS SON. With a Portrait and an Autograph.

MAXIMILIAN'S EMPIRE.
Reminiscences of Mexico during the French Invasion.
By SARA Y. STEVENSON.

Etc., etc., etc.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, LONDON.

NEW WORK BY MR. MACKENZIE BELL.

READY on FRIDAY NEXT, JANUARY 7th.
In 1 vol. demy 8vo, with Portraits and Facsimiles, extra cloth, price 12s.

CHRISTINA ROSSETTI:

A Biographical and Critical Study.

By MACKENZIE BELL,

Author of "Spring's Immortality, and other Poems," "Charles Whitehead: a Biographical and Critical Monograph," &c.

This is, in effect, the authorised Life of the Poetess, being based largely on information and letters supplied by her relatives and intimate friends.

HURST & BLACKETT, Limited, 13, Great Marlborough-st.

SMITH, ELDER, & CO.'S LIST.

Chosen for Holiday Reading at Harrow and Winchester.
THIRD EDITION READY THIS DAY.
With 16 Portraits and 11 Plans, crown 8vo, 6s.

DEEDS THAT WON THE EMPIRE.

By the Rev. W. H. FITCHETT ("Vedette").

From the Spectator.—"Not since Macaulay ceased to write has English literature produced a writer capable of infusing such life and vigour into historical scenes. . . . The book cannot but take the reader by storm wherever it finds him."

Now ready, with Portrait and Maps, demy 8vo, 14s.

THE LIFE OF

SIR JOHN HAWLEY GLOVER,

R.N., G.C.M.G. By LADY GLOVER. Edited by the Right Hon. Sir RICHARD TEMPLE Bart., G.C.S.I., D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S.

"As Sir Richard Temple says in his introduction, Sir John Glover was a born leader of men, and it is well that the lives of such leaders should be recorded as an example for the next generation of public servants. His widow has written the story of his life with great discrimination."—Pall Mall Gazette.

New Volume of the "Dictionary of National Biography."
Now ready, 15s. net, in cloth; or in half morocco, marbled edges, 20s. net

VOL. LIII. (SMITH—STANGER) OF THE DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY

Edited by SIDNEY LEE.

 Volume 1. was published on January 1st, 1885, and a further Volume will be issued Quarterly until the completion of the Work, which will be effected within two years from the present date.

NOTE.—A full prospectus of the "Dictionary of National Biography," with Specimen Pages, will be sent upon application.

LORD COCHRANE'S TRIAL BEFORE LORD ELLENBOROUGH IN 1814.

By J. B. ATLAY. With a Preface by EDWARD DOWNES LAW, Commander, Royal Navy. With Portrait, 8vo, 18s.

"Mr. Atlay, it will be generally thought, completely exonerates Lord Ellenborough from the charges so recklessly and cruelly brought against his memory."—Scotsman.

THE MILLS OF GOD. By FRANCIS H. HARDY. Crown 8vo, 6s.

From Punch:—"In 'The Mills of God' Mr. Francis Hardy grinds exceeding well. There is a breezy freshness in the book, alike in respect of people and surroundings."

DEBORAH OF TOD'S. By Mrs. HENRY DE LA PASTURE, Author of "A Toy Tragedy," "The Little Squire," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The interest of the work is strong from first to last. It is one of the best novels of the year."—Mr. JAMES PAYN in the Illustrated London News.

London: SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 15, Waterloo-place, S.W.

New Novel by RICHARD MARSH.

Cloth, Price 6s. With Illustrations. FOURTH EDITION.

THE BEETLE:

A Mystery!

The Speaker says:—"A story of the most terrific kind is duly recorded in this extremely powerful book. The skill with which its fantastic horrors are presented to us is undeniable."

The Daily Graphic says:—"'The Beetle' is the kind of book which you put down only for the purpose of turning up the gas and making sure that no person or thing is standing behind your chair—and it is a book which no one will put down until finished except for this reason."

Answers says:—"Mr. Marsh's famous novel is one of the most enthrallingly interesting narratives of the past few years. I strongly advise all my readers to order the book at once."

The Literary World says:—"An ingenious, weird, and thrilling story, narrated with a clearness of style and a fulness of incident which hold the reader's attention from first to last."

LONDON: SKEFFINGTON & SON, 163, PICCADILLY, W.
Publishers to Her Majesty the Queen and to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

ON THE STŒCHIOLOGICAL CURE OF

CONSUMPTION,

ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, AND LUNG COMPLAINTS.
By JOHN FRANCIS CHURCHILL, M.D.
One Shilling, Post Free.

T. BURLEIGH, LATE DAVID STOTT, 370, OXFORD STREET.

1/- BY POST, 1s. 2½d. 1/-

Reprint of 6th Series' (Violet).

QUEER STORIES FROM "TRUTH."

PUBLISHING OFFICE, 10, BOLT COURT, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW BOOKS.

THE JOURNALS OF WALTER WHITE, Assistant Secretary to the Royal Society. With a Preface by his brother, WILLIAM WHITE, and a Photogravure Portrait. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Saturday Review says:—"The little volume makes good reading. Mr. White came in contact with celebrities and notabilities innumerable, and has something unpleasant and pleasant to say of most of them."

The Pall Mall Gazette says:—"Records of conversations at Carlyle's, at Tennyson's, and elsewhere, which it is a pity to have kept hidden so long."

WHAT IS LIFE? or, Where are we? What are we? Whence did we come? And whither do we go? By FREDERICK HOVENDEN, F.L.S., F.G.S., F.R.M.S. With many Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 6s.

MODERN ARCHITECTURE: A Book for Architects and the Public. By H. HEATHCOTE STATHAM, F.R.I.B.A., Editor of The Builder, and Author of "Architecture for General Readers," &c. With numerous Illustrations of Contemporary Buildings. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

The Daily News says:—"This is an eminently readable and entertaining book."

MR. COOPER'S NEW SPORTING NOVEL.

THE MARCHIONESS AGAINST THE COUNTY. By E. H. COOPER, Author of "Mr. Blake of Newmarket." Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Sporting Life says:—"There is not a page to be skipped as we read on scene after scene, or a word that we feel could be left out,—full of terse, clever remarks, which show the writer to have a deep insight into human nature, and to be thoroughly at home both in Parisian life and English country society."

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

Edited by W. L. COURTNEY.

JANUARY.

THE FUTURE OF LIBERALISM:—
(i.) THE NEMESIS OF PARTY. By A. B. C.
(ii.) POPULAR FEELING AND LIBERAL OPPORTUNITIES. By Expertus.
CACOETHES LITERARUM: A FRENCH EXAMPLE. By Ch. Bastide.
ROSE-LEAVES FROM PHILOSTRATUS. By Percy Osborn.
THE GROWTH OF A THINKER'S MIND: A STUDY IN PLATONIC CHRONOLOGY. By Prof. Lewis Campbell.
CYCLES AND CYCLING. By J. Pennell.
IDEAL LAND TENURE AND THE BEST MAKESHIFT. By W. E. Bear.
THE PROBLEM OF GERARD DE NERVAL. By Arthur Symons.
MY FRIEND ROBIN. By Hon. G. Coleridge.
THE NORWEGIAN-SWEDISH CONFLICT. By H. L. Brækstad.
STATE ADOPTION OF STREET ARABS. By Mrs. A. Samuels.
MODERN FRENCH DRAMA.—V. By A. Filon.
ANTI-SEMITISM AND THE DREYFUS CASE. By Lucien Wolf.
THE STRUGGLE OF RELIGIONS AND RACES IN RUSSIA. By Dr. E. J. Dillon.
RUSSIA AND HER PATIENTS. By Mme. Novikoff (O.K.).

CHAPMAN'S MAGAZINE,

Edited by OSWALD CRAWFURD. PRICE SIXPENCE.

THE JANUARY NUMBER

Contains

RECOLLECTIONS OF HEINE, by MADAME C. JAUBERT.
NOTES OF A PLAY-GOER, by C.; and SEVEN COMPLETE STORIES, by LILIAN BELL, LOIS LORRIMER, B. HERON-MAXWELL, ALAN OSCAR, G. S. STREET, E. RENTOUL ESLER, and W. L. ALDEN.

CHAPMAN & HALL, Ltd., LONDON.

A GENEALOGICAL and HERALDIC DICTIONARY of the PEERAGE and BARONETAGE, together with Memoirs of the Privy Councillors and Knights, by SIR BERNARD BURKE, C.B., LL.D., Ulster King of Arms. Edited by his Son. 60th Edition. 1898. Nearly 2,000 pages super royal 8vo, cloth gilt. Price 38s. London: HARRISON & SONS, Publishers, 59, Pall Mall, S.W.

TO BOOKBUYERS and Librarians of Free Libraries.—The JANUARY CATALOGUES of valuable Second-Hand Works and New Remainders, offered at prices greatly reduced, are now ready, and will be sent post free upon application to W. H. SMITH & SON, Library Department, 186, Strand, London, W.C.

PREPARING FOR PUBLICATION.

"THE TEMPLE, LONDON," containing twelve Artist-proof Etchings, by PERCY THOMAS, R.P.E., and Introduction and Notes, by The Master of the Temple (Rev. CANON AINGER).
FROST & REED, 47, Queen's-road and 8, Clare-street, Bristol.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

WITH THE JANUARY NUMBER (NOW READY)

Commences a New Volume.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

CONTENTS OF JANUARY NUMBER.

The War Office and Its Sham Army:—
1. By Colonel BROOKFIELD, M.P.
2. By Major RASCH, M.P.
3. By Major-General FRANK RUSSELL, M.P.
4. By Lord ALWYNE COMPTON, M.P.

Do we Need an Army for Home Defence? By Major-General Sir EDMUND DU CANE, K.C.B.
A Recruiting Sergeant's Suggestions. By ARTHUR V. PALMER.
A Walk Through Deserted London. By the Right Hon. Sir ALGERNON WEST, K.C.B.
Parish Life in England before the Great Pillage. By the Rev Dr. JESSOPP.
The Childhood and School Days of Byron. By ROWLAND E. PROTHERO.
At a Technical Institute. By Professor MICHAEL FOSTER.
The Prisoners of the Gods. By W. B. YEATS.
Arthur Hugh Clough: a Sketch. By THOMAS ARNOLD.
The Higher Education of Women in Russia. By PRINCESS KROPOTKIN.
Is the Liberal Party in Collapse? By the Rev. Dr. J. GUINNESS ROGERS.
The Partition of China. By HOLT S. HALLETT.
Letters to the Editor from Professor Gilbert Murray and Mr. Herbert Paul.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & COMPANY, Limited.

THE ARGOSY

A New Volume commences with the January number, now ready.

THE ARGOSY

"The best illustrated magazine for family reading."

THE ARGOSY

Contains each month an immense variety of interesting literature.

THE ARGOSY

The best authors. Profusely illustrated by the best artists.

THE ARGOSY

New volume. Now is the time to subscribe.

THE ARGOSY

Price One Shilling Monthly.

London: R. BENTLEY & SON, 8, New Burlington-street, W.

Post free 1s. 7d.

"PREMATURE DECLINE IN MAN," a Treatise on Some Diseases of the Urethra, Prostate, and Bladder, and their Speedy and Painless Cure by Electrolysis.—H. RENSHAW, 356, Strand, W.C., London.

STERILITY IN WOMEN: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. An Illustrated treatise based on the special practise and observation of the last 15 years. Price 3s. 6d.; post free, 3s. 8d.
London: HENRY RENSHAW, 356, Strand.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, RUSSIAN, & SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.
N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE IN ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS NOW OFFERED AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 PAGES) SENT GRATIS AND POST FREE TO ANY ADDRESS.

The List contains Popular Works in Travel, Sport, History, Biography, Science, and Fiction. Also New and Surplus Copies of French, German, Italian, and Spanish Books.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, LIMITED,

30—34, NEW OXFORD ST.; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA ST., E.C. LONDON; AND AT BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

KINEMATOGRAPH at the ROYAL ALBERT HALL, on SATURDAY AFTERNOON, 15th JANUARY, 1898, at 3 o'clock.

FOOTBALL at the ROYAL ALBERT HALL, on SATURDAY AFTERNOON, 15th JANUARY.

YOUNG HELPERS' LEAGUE.

Late President—H.R.H. PRINCESS MARY, DUCHESS OF TECK.
Vice-President—H.R.H. PRINCESS VICTORIA MAY, DUCHESS OF YORK.

THE SIXTH ANNUAL ENTERTAINMENT

FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE FUNDS OF THE ABOVE LEAGUE WILL (D.V.) TAKE PLACE IN THE

ROYAL ALBERT HALL, South Kensington, on SATURDAY AFTERNOON, 15th JANUARY, 1898, at 3 o'clock.

The Whole Arena will be occupied by DR. BARNARDO'S WAIF CHILDREN, who will endeavour for two hours to minister to the enjoyment of the audience. There will be Children's Games, Music by a Choir of 700 Voices and by Young Instrumentalists, a stirring Game of Football, Naval Drill, Musical Movements, an Exhibition of the Kinematograph, Special Limelight Pictures, Gymnastics, &c., &c.

THE REV. CANON FLEMING, B.D.,

Chaplain to the Queen, and Chairman of the Council of the Y.H.L., will preside, and he has kindly promised to give a RECITATION.

THERE WILL BE NO SPEECHES.

NURSERY DITTIES BY THE CHILDREN—

"THE COW JUMPS OVER THE MOON—AND THAT NAUGHTY DISH."
"JACK HORNER AND WHAT HE FOUND IN HIS PIE.
"LITTLE BO-PEEP AND HER MISSING SHEEP."
"JACK AND JILL IN ADVERSITY."

A VISIT TO SLUMLAND (personally conducted).

— SEE PROGRAMME FOR FULLER PARTICULARS. —

PURSES may be presented to DR. BARNARDO, the Founder of the League, by Junior Companions, for the Funds of the League, of not less than £2 10s. 0d. each, and by Senior Companions, or any other member of the Public generally, of not less than £5 5s. 0d. each. Those who intend to offer Purses should inform Miss Norton at once.

TICKETS OF ADMISSION NOW READY. Gallery, 1s. (300 seats only); Balcony, 2s. 6d.; Stalls, 3s. 6d.; Seat in Loggia Box, 4s. 6d.; Seat in Second Tier Box, 5s. 6d.; Seat in Grand Tier Box, 7s. 6d.; Whole Loggia Box (seating eight persons), £1. 5s.; Second Tier Box (seating five persons), £1; Grand Tier Box (seating ten persons), £2. 10s.

PLEASE NOTE.—Any Companion of the "Young Helpers' League" who has paid subscriptions for 1898 can obtain ONE TICKET for any part of the house at one-half the above prices, But tickets at half price will not be issued at the doors. These must be obtained beforehand from the undersigned,

(Miss) RACHEL NORTON, Secretary of the Young Helpers' League.
Head Office; 18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

LONDON FEVER HOSPITAL, Islington, N.
Over 80,000 sufferers from infectious fevers have been admitted into this Hospital since 1802, and probably ten times as many other persons have thereby been preserved from infection.
Patients pay about one-fourth of their cost, the other three-fourths falling upon the funds of the institution.
The contributions received in 1897 show a serious falling off compared with those of 1896.
ADDITIONAL HELP is URGENTLY NEEDED.
Governors' subscription, one guinea or more for more than one year; Life Governors' donation, ten or more guineas in one sum.
Governors' own domestic servants and certain employés of subscribing firms, clubs, and hotels, are treated free of all charge.
Help will be gratefully received by
Major W. CHRISTIE, Secretary, at the Hospital.
Bankers: Prescott & Co., 50, Cornhill, E.C.

GREAT NORTHERN CENTRAL HOSPITAL, Holloway.
UNENDOWED and VERY POOR.
PATIENTS ADMITTED FREE, sickness and poverty the only passports to relief.
£10,000 needed annually to support the work of relieving 1,400 in-patients, and 25 000 out-patients.
LEWIS H. GLENTON KERR, Secretary.

ROYAL EAR HOSPITAL (founded 1816), Frith-street, Soho.
Patron, HER MAJESTY. The present building being quite inadequate to meet the requirements of the Institution, the Committee earnestly APPEAL for FUNDS for Erecting New Premises. Contributions will be gratefully received by the Treasurer, or the Bankers, Lloyd's Temple Bar Branch.
D. MURRAY, Hon. Secretary.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Treasurer:—

F. A. BEVAN, Esq., D.L., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

Supported Entirely by Voluntary Contributions.

This Mission relieves the Sick and Destitute, ESPECIALLY DURING THE WINTER MONTHS. Funds most urgently needed to provide Food, Clothing, Firing, and CHRISTMAS DINNERS, for the DESERVING POOR.
WILLIAM WHEATLEY, Supt.,
4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, London, W.C.

THE EARLSWOOD ASYLUM FOR IDIOTS.
FUNDS URGENTLY NEEDED to maintain the 304 elected Patients now in the Institution.
A debt of £4,630 has been incurred to meet current expenses.
Nearly 130 afflicted cases seeking admission.
Cases received on payments regulated by the Board.
ALDERMAN SIR J. C. DIMSDALE, Treasurer.
JAMES DOWNING, Secretary.
Offices, 36, King William-street, London Bridge, E.C.

THE "DAILY NEWS"

ON

The Present Special Effort of the "Liberator" Relief Fund.

We are glad to hear that a reference to the Liberator Fund made in this column last month seems to have given a decided impetus to it, and that, according to the latest returns, the Hon. Secretary had received 160,000 shillings out of the 700,000 he set himself to raise as a final effort to complete the good work.

It is terribly uphill work to keep up anything like a constant inflow to a big fund like that which the great Balfour smash necessitated. Even the most benevolent of people, of course, get sick of the subject, but that, as the Secretary says, with pathetic truth, "doesn't lift the burden from weary hearts." And there are very weary hearts still pouring in their troubles to the Committee, and entreating for help. "The Lord knows what I have to bear," moans one poor seamstress, sixty-three years of age, with bad sight, a painful internal disease, and quite unable to earn anything. "I often feel to want more nourishment than I can get." It is weary work, but it must soon be all over with her for one, and really charity ought not to fail till the end comes.

Williton, in Somersetshire, has distinguished itself by a house-to-house canvass for the Liberator Fund, and by a result which, if every village in the country could be induced to imitate it, would go a long way towards finally settling the business. There are, it seems, about 250 houses in the village, and two or three hamlets around, and no less than 199 gave sums ranging from a penny to half-a-crown; 89 houses gave a penny each; 39 gave twopence, 23 threepence, 1 gave fourpence, 1 fivepence, 28 sixpence, 1 sevenpence, 14 a shilling, 2 two shillings, and 1 half-a-crown. Altogether it amounted to £2 15s. 6d. Any one wishing to know how the thing was worked may learn all about it by a post-card to the Rev. Stockwell Watts, 16, Farringdon-street, London, E.C.

Among recent applicants to the Liberator Committee for help are a London cabman terribly afflicted with cancer, an aged cook, a struggling schoolmistress, a widow aged 70, a farm labourer aged 72, a widow aged 76, an afflicted wheelwright 68, an afflicted clerk 55, a spinster 76, a paralysed widow 66, and a domestic servant 60. "I am getting on in years," says this domestic; "my health is failing. I was looking forward and hoping, when I could no more go out, to buy a little house or start a small shop." Alas! she had put all her own savings and a few pounds her mother had left her into Balfour's wretched concerns, and "now it is all gone." Was there ever a fund more deserving of contributions than that designed to keep these poor, thrifty, and hardworking old people out of the workhouse till death relieves them? The Committee sits at 16, Farringdon-street.

AMUSEMENTS.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.
Sole Lessee, Mr. Frederick Harrison.
Managers, Mr. Frederick Harrison and Mr. Cyril Maude.
TO-NIGHT and EVERY EVENING, at 8.30,
THE LITTLE MINISTER, by J. M. Barrie.
Miss WINIFRED EMERY and Mr. CYRIL MAUDE.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY, at 2.30.

STAFFORD HOUSE.
THE DUCHESS OF SUTHERLAND
begs to announce that she will give a GRAND ENTERTAINMENT
on TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JAN. 11th, 1898, at 3.30, in aid of
SISTER KATHERINE'S NURSING HOME, at Plaistow,
When the following Eminent Artistes have generously given their Services:
Madame BLANCHE MARCHESI,
Miss ESTHER PALLISER,
Madlle. IVONNE DE ST. ANDRÉ,
and
Miss MARIE TEMPEST.
Miss CLARA BUTT.
Miss LETTY LIND.
Mr. WILLIAM NICHOL,
Mr. DWIGHT EDWARDS,
and
Mr. MAURICE FARKOA.
Miss GRUFFYD RICHARDS, Welsh Harp.
Miss CISSIE LOFTUS, Imitations.
Mr. PHIL MAY, Lightning Sketches.
Mr. CAMMEYER, Banjo Solo.
Mr. MERCER ADAM, Musical Sketch.
Tickets ONE GUINEA each.
May be obtained from the DUCHESS OF SUTHERLAND, by letter to Stafford House, St. James's; or of CHAPPELL & Co., Ltd.; LACON & OLLIER; MITCHELL; KEITH PROWSE & Co.; STANLEY LUCAS & Co., Ltd.; ASHTON; HAY'S; and of TREE, St. James's Hall, and 304, Regent-street.
Doors Open at 3.15. Afternoon Tea will be Served. Carriages at 5.30.

QUEEN'S HALL.
SUNDAY AFTERNOON CONCERTS.
EVERY SUNDAY, at 3.30.
Conductor, Mr. Henry J. Wood.
The Queen's Hall Grand Orchestra.
Admission free. Reserved seats, 3s., 2s., 1s., and 6d.

OLYMPIA.—BARNUM & BAILEY.
GREATEST SHOW ON EARTH.
The most Gigantic and Overwhelming Success
Ever seen in Great London.
The Mammoth Olympia Building crowded at Every Performance with Wildly Enthusiastic Audiences of the best people.
Children in Ecstacies of Delight.
Ladies extravagant in Praise.
Scientists and Savants amazed and astonished at the Magnitude and Wonderful Character of the Grand Performances and Myriad Attractions.
Grandest Show ever Organised.
The Races decidedly novel and thrilling.
The 100 Acts marvellously clever and daring.
The Aerial Feats grand and awe-inspiring.
The 30 Clowns the best ever seen.
The 24 Elephants wonderfully trained.
The Tumbling and Leaping astonishingly good.
The Two Menageries most complete on earth.
The High-Jumping Horses greatest ever seen.
The Acrobats and Athletes amazing.
Johanna, the Gorilla, the strange collection of living Human Freaks, the myriad Wild Beasts, the trained Animals, and other features simply beyond description.
The Military Drama of
THE MAHDI: or, For the Victoria Cross.
A most glorious, patriotic, realistic production.
The whole of this stupendous and colossal show a revelation of surprises, splendour, and superb exploits.
Two Grand Exhibitions daily, at 2 and 8 p.m.
Doors open at 12.30 and 6.30 p.m. Early Gates open (Hammersmith-road) at 12 noon and 6 p.m. for 3s. seats and upwards. Early entrance fee 6d. extra.
Menageries, Freak, and Horse Fair Departments close promptly at 4 p.m. and 10 p.m.
Admission. — Amphitheatre, 1s. and 2s.; Arena seats, 2s., 3s., and 4s.; Balcony seats, 3s.; Stalls, 5s., 7s. 6d.; Private Boxes, 5 to 6 seats, £3. 3s.; Single box seats, 10s. 6d. Special prices for Royal Box when not engaged. At Two o'clock Exhibition only, Children between 4 and 10 years of age half-price to all except 1s. and 2s. seats. Seats for sale at Olympia daily from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., and at usual libraries.

CAUTION.—THE PUBLIC are CAUTIONED that the ONLY OFFICIAL PROGRAMME of the above Show is printed and published by Walter Hill & Co., Ltd., 67 and 69, Southampton-row, W.C., and can only be obtained WITHIN the Great Olympia Building.

BRIGHTON ICE RINK. SKATING.
Morning, 9.30 to 1 Evening, 8 to 11, 2/6
Afternoon, 3 to 6.30, 4/- Non-Skaters, in the Afternoon, 2/-
Monthly Tickets, £2 10s.
SEASON and HALF-SEASON TICKETS issued.

BRIGHTON ICE SKATING CLUB.
A GRAND FANCY DRESS BALL will be held on SATURDAY NEXT, January 7, 1898, at 10 p.m. Valuable Prizes will be given for best Costumes of Ladies and Gentlemen Skaters and Non-skaters.
For further particulars apply to The Secretary, 52, Middle-street.

THEATRE TICKETS.—Boxes, Stalls, Balcony, and Upper Circle Seats in the best positions can be had at any office of the DISTRICT MESSENGERS' COMPANY.—Letters and telegrams, 193, Piccadilly.—Seats for every theatre. If you ever want a MESSENGER FOR ANY PURPOSE, to go any distance, at home or abroad, ask for a "DISTRICT MESSENGER." Offices in all parts of London, open Day and Night. Electric call boxes, to summon messengers, are in every first-class club, hotel, and house.

AMUSEMENTS.

DRURY LANE THEATRE ROYAL.—Managing Director, ARTHUR COLLINS. THE CHILDREN'S PANTOMIME, THE BABES IN THE WOOD. Twice daily at 1.30 and 7.30. For full particulars, see daily papers. Box Office open all day.

LYCEUM.—PETER THE GREAT,
in Five Acts, by Laurence Irving,
EVERY EVENING, at 8 punctually.
Peter the Great ..... HENRY IRVING.
Empress Catherine..... Miss ELLEN TERRY.
Box office (Mr. J. Hurst) open 10 to 5, and 7.30 to 10.
Seats booked by letter or telegram. LYCEUM.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.
Proprietor and Manager, Mr. HERBERT BEERBOHM TREE.
TO-NIGHT and EVERY EVENING, at 8.15,
A MAN'S SHADOW,
Mr. TREE in the DUAL ROLE of LAROQUE and LUVERSAN.
MATINEES EVERY SATURDAY, at 2.30.
Box-office open 10 to 10. Seats booked from 2s. Doors open 7.45.

ADELPHI. A. & S. GATTI,
Sole Proprietors and Managers.
EVERY EVENING, at 8,
William Gillette's successful Drama in Four Acts, entitled,
SECRET SERVICE.
Mr. Herbert Waring,
Mr. J. D. Beveridge,
Mr. Creagh Henry,
&c. &c.
Miss May Whitty,
Miss Bella Bateman,
Miss Georgie Esmond.
MORNING PERFORMANCES EVERY WEDNESDAY, at 2.

GAIETY THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, GEORGE EDWARDES.
EVERY EVENING, at 8 (doors open 7.40),
THE CIRCUS GIRL
(2nd year).
Box-office open daily from 10 till 6.
MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY, at 2,
Doors open 1.40.

SAVOY THEATRE.—Every Evening, at 8.20, and Every Saturday Afternoon, at 2.30, THE GRAND DUCHESS OF GEROLSTEIN. At 7.40, OLD SARAH. Box-office 9 a.m. to 11 p.m.—R. D'OYLY CARTE, Manager.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.
Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER, Sole Lessee and Manager.
TO-NIGHT and EVERY EVENING, at 8 punctually,
THE TREE OF KNOWLEDGE,
A New and Original Play in Five Acts, by R. C. Carton.
MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY, at 2. Box-office 10 to 10.

DALY'S THEATRE.—Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTIN DALY.—EVERY EVENING, and SATURDAY MATINEE Mr. George Edwardes's Company in THE GEISHA. The book by Owen Hall Lyrics by Harry Greenbank. Music by Sydney Jones.

COMEDY THEATRE, Panton-street, Haymarket.
EVERY EVENING, at 9,
ONE SUMMER'S DAY, by H. V. Esmond.
Mr. Charles Hawtrey, Messrs. H. Kemble, E. Hendrie, Cosmo Stuart, Kenneth Douglas, Lyston Lyle, Master Bottomley; Miss Eva Moore, Miss Lydia Rachael, Miss Beatrice Ferrar, Mrs. Charles Calvert, Miss Constance Collier.
At 7.50, A SHEEP IN WOLF'S CLOTHING. Mrs. Bernard Beere, Mr. Henry Kemble, and Mr. Henry Neville. Doors open 7.40.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY, at 3. Box-office 10 to 10.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.
Directors, Messrs. WILLIAMSON and MUSGROVE.
The GREATEST COMIC OPERA SUCCESS for many years.
Magnificent Spectacle Great Company.
THE SCARLET FEATHER.
Messrs. Hedmondt, Tapley, Snazelle, Seabrooke; Misses Nellie Stewart, Decima Moore, M. A. Victor, Florence Young.
Every Evening, at 8.15. SATURDAY MATINEES, at 2.30.

CRITERION THEATRE.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.—EVERY EVENING, at 8.15, THE LIARS, by Henry Arthur Jones. Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM, Miss MARY MOORE, and Company. MATINEE WEDNESDAY, Jan. 5, and EVERY SATURDAY.

ALHAMBRA.—Every Evening, New Grand Ballet, BEAUTY AND THE BEAST. Exceptional VARIETY Programme. Doors open 7.30. ALFRED MOUL, General Manager.

EMPIRE THEATRE.—EVERY EVENING, UNDER ONE FLAG and TREASURE ISLAND. Grand VARIETIES. Doors open at 7.45.

TIVOLI, Strand, London.—The Greatest Combination of Talent in London.—Open EVERY EVENING, at 7.45, and SATURDAY MATINÉE, at 2.30, with a STAR PROGRAMME, embracing every Artiste of note.—Manager, Mr. VERNON DOWSETT.

LONDON PAVILION.—ENORMOUS PROGRAMME.—Charles Godfrey, Fannie Leslie, Chirgwin, Vesta Victoria, Mark Melford's Company, T. E. Dunville, Marie Collins, Alec Hurley, and others.—Prices from 1s. to £3. 3s. Doors open at 7.30.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION, Baker-street Station.—A True and Realistic Tableau, HERR ANDRÉE and his Two Companions starting in Balloon on their journey to the North Pole. Now on view in Hall of Tableaux. Admission 1s. Children under Twelve, 6d. Extra rooms, 6d.

PALACE, Shaftesbury-avenue. — The HANDSOMEST THEATRE in EUROPE. The finest Variety Entertainment in London. Full Licence. Prices from 6d. Doors open 8.—Manager, Mr. CHARLES MORTON.

AMUSEMENTS.

The "WM. JAMES" COLLECTION

OF

Old English, Sevres, Dresden, and Oriental Porcelain

(Purchased direct from Executor),

On EXHIBITION and SALE at

HARDING'S ART GALLERY,

18, St. James's-square, S.W.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The one absolute novelty this Christmas is to be seen at the CRYSTAL PALACE!

GREAT RIVER SCENE

in

ENGLISH STAG HUNT,

at

WULFF'S GREAT CIRCUS.

Hounds, Horses, and Riders, plunge into and swim the river! Rounds of applause and roars of laughter.

No such scene ever before beheld in any show.

TWICE DAILY, at 3 and 7.30.

Children half-price to numbered seats, both afternoon and evening! Free admission to Palace after 6.30 p.m. to holders of Circus Seat Tickets, which are on sale at Low Level and Central Entrances. Numbered Seats, 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., and 5s., may be booked in advance at Central Entrance and usual London Ticket Agents. 3,000 sixpenny and 2,000 shilling seats.

NEW NIAGARA. SKATING.

Morning, 9.30 to 1; Evening, 8 to 11, 3/-

Afternoon, 3 to 6.30, 5/-

Non-Skaters (Afternoon), 2/6.

SEASON and HALF-SEASON TICKETS ISSUED.

LONDON COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Incorporated 1892.] FOUNDED 1887. [Limited.

GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON.

Patron: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

F. J. Karn, Esq., Mus. Doc. T.C.T., Mus. Bac. Cantab., Principal.

G. Augustus Holmes, Esq., Director of Examinations.

Examinations in Pianoforte, Singing, Violin, Mandoline, Theory, and all branches of Music, are held in London, and at 350 Local Centres, three times in each year, in April, July, and December, when certificates are granted to all successful candidates.

The Higher Examinations, for Diplomas of Associate, Licentiate, and Fellowship, are held in July and December.

In the Educational Department complete musical tuition is provided for Students, under the best Professors, at moderate fees. Day and Evening Classes.

The Choir, Orchestra, Ladies' Choir, Operatic Class, and String Quartet, meet each week for practice.

Syllabus and all particulars on application.

T. WEEKES HOLMES, Secretary.

YACHTING EXCURSION, viâ Magellan Straits (Summer Season).—VANCOUVER, KLONDIKE, &c.

THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY,

having purchased the ROYAL MAIL STEAMERS "TARTAR" and "ATHENIAN," late of the Union Line Cape service, intend dispatching them from Southampton (for Klondike service) about 1st February next, to Vancouver, B.C., viâ Straits of Magellan, during summer months in Southern latitudes. Ports of call will be advertised later. The steamers are fitted for first and second class passengers only, are electric lighted, carry a surgeon, and are luxuriously fitted throughout with saloons, library, bath rooms, &c. They should reach Vancouver about middle of March, allowing Klondike passengers ample time to obtain outfits and proceed by same steamers from Vancouver to Wrangel, when Stickeen River navigation opens. Liberal baggage allowance. Price to Vancouver, 1st class, £30; 2nd class, £20.

Round trip (including meals and sleeper on train), returning from Vancouver through world-famed mountain, prairie, and lake scenery of Canadian Pacific Railway and Niagara Falls, allowing choice of any steamer from trans-Atlantic ports, price £65.

Round the World, returning from Vancouver viâ Japan, China, Colombo, and Suez, £120. Round the World, returning viâ Hawaiian Islands, Fiji, New Zealand, New South Wales, Colombo, and Suez, £125.

Break of journey allowed at all Canadian Pacific Railway stations and all steamship ports beyond Vancouver.

For berths apply quickly to Company's offices, 67 and 68, King William-street, E.C., 30, Cockspur-street, S.W., 7, James-street, Liverpool, 67, St. Vincent-street, Glasgow, or any of Thos. Cook & Son's offices.

JAPAN, CHINA, AROUND THE WORLD.

CANADIAN PACIFIC ROUTE, viâ Vancouver. Largest, fastest, only twin-screw steamers on Pacific.

For berths or descriptive pamphlets, apply PASSENGER DEPARTMENT, CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY, 67 and 68, King William-street, London Bridge, or 30, Cockspur-street, Trafalgar-square.

NEW ZEALAND, AUSTRALIA, HONOLULU, FIJI.

CANADIAN-AUSTRALIAN LINE STEAMERS, fastest and finest from American Continent to Australasia, LEAVE VANCOUVER Monthly. For berths, inclusive through tickets, viâ Montreal or New York, and world-famed scenery of Canadian Pacific Railway, apply, C.P.R. Co., 67 and 68, King William-st., London Bridge; 30, Cockspur-st., Trafalgar-square; or C.A. Line (J. HUDDART & CO., Managers), 150, Leadenhall-st., E.C.

WINTER IN THE WEST INDIES.

SPECIAL TOURS. SIXTY-FIVE DAYS for £65, by magnificent vessels of the

ROYAL MAIL STEAM PACKET COMPANY.

For particulars apply 18, Moorgate-street, or 29, Cockspur-street (West End), London.

A REMARKABLE PIPE! Why? Because

The "MASTA" Pipe

Absolutely carries out what is claimed for it—viz., Simplicity of Construction, Perfect Freedom from Nicotine, No Choking, Cool, Dry, Sweet, Clean, & Healthful Smoking.

Prices from 1/6, 2/6, 3/6. Your Tobacconist will supply it. If any delay, write The "Masta" Patent Pipe Co., 153, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

What Smokers say:—C. A. HAYWARD, Melville House, Quarry-crescent, Hastings, writes—"I have hitherto tried nearly all the patent pipes introduced, but your 'Masta' Pipe eclipses them all."

ESTATES, AUCTIONS, &c.

RARE MEDALS, Old Silver, Jewellery, Furniture, and Contents of Houses.—Officers ordered on Foreign Service, Executors, and others desirous of VALUING or SELLING above should consult KNIGHT, FRANK & RUTLEY, Auctioneers, 9, Conduit-street, W.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN, in all parts, receiving RESIDENT PATIENTS sent gratis, with full particulars. Schools also recommended.—Medical, &c., Association, Ltd., 8, Lancaster-place, Strand, W.C. Tel. Add., "Triform, London." Telephone No. 1,854 (Gerrard).

NAME for Extract of Beef advertised in TRUTH, of October 28th: First Prize of £10. 10s. awarded to Charles Reader, Esq., Brooklyn, Surbiton Hill Park; Second Prize of £5. 5s. to Matthew Brown, Esq., Glen View, Blackheath Hill, S.E.; Third Prize of £3. 3s. to R. Fisher, 60, Corrance-road, Acre-lane, Brixton, S.W.; Fourth Prize of £1. 1s. equally divided between Miss Ruby Appleton, Ferndale, Britannia-road, Fulham, S.W., and Alfred C. S. Plant, Esq., George Hotel, Chard.

£20 TOBACCONISTS COMMENCING. 1lld. guide (259pgs.), 3d., "How to open respectably £20 to £2,000." Tobacconists' Outfitting Co., Euston-rd., Ldn. Hairdressers fitted.—H. MYERS.

FOR ACCURACY

H. SAMUEL'S KEYLESS WATCHES.

Prices show a considerable reduction as compared with the heavy London charges

Free by post to any address.

Illustrated Book of 108 Pages, comprising Watches, Diamonds, Jewellery, Clocks, Cutlery, Electro-Plate, &c., forwarded free on application.

LADY'S KEYLESS WATCH, fine jewelled movement, carefully adjusted. Handsome art-tinted dials or plain, as preferred. Also supplied two sizes smaller than drawn is desired. Gold, £3 Silver, 27/6

GENTLEMAN'S KEYLESS WATCH, fine jewelled movement carefully adjusted, hard enamel dial. Gold or steel hands, crystal glass front. Gold, £5 5s. Silver, 32/6

NEW GOLD INITIAL BROOCH. Any letter supplied. H. Samuel's price, 5/-

When writing please mark the envelope "accurate"

H. SAMUEL, LEVER WATCH FACTORY, MARKET ST., MANCHESTER.

NEW YEAR'S FIRESIDE GIFTS.

CARTER 6A NEW CAVENDISH ST. PORTLAND PLACE, LONDON.

ONLY ADDRESS OF ORIGINAL CARTER

LITERARY MACHINE.

For holding book, lamp, meals, &c., in any position over an easy chair, bed, or sofa.

Deliciously luxurious. A most useful gift. Prices from 17/6

INVALID FURNITURE.

ADJUSTABLE COUCHES and BEDS from £1. 10/-

Bed Lift £3. 10/-	Bed Rests 7/6
Reclining Boards, 25/-	Leg Rests 10/-
Walking Machines	Crutches 10/6
Portable W.C.'s.	Bed Baths 12 6
Electric Bells, Urinals, &c.	Commodes, £1. 5/-
Air & Water Beds.

Self-Propelling Chairs from £2

Carrying Chairs from £1,

Breakfast in Bed! Tables from 30/-

BATH CHAIRS

FROM

£1. 5/-

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUES POST FREE.

JOHN CARTER, 6a, NEW CAVENDISH ST. Portland-pl. London, W.

"TRUTH" HOTEL LIST.

BONCHURCH HOTEL, Bonchurch, Isle of Wight, one mile from Ventnor Station.
A comfortable, quiet, and most beautifully-situated Hotel. Pretty garden. Good sea view.
H. RIBBANDS, Proprietor.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HIGHCLIFFE HOTEL. Unrivalled position, West Cliff, full south. Splendid sea view. Table d'hôte (separate tables). Supplies from Alderney Dairy Farm. Telephone 27.—J. KILNER, Proprietor.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HOTEL MONT DORE.—South aspect, 150 rooms, electric light throughout, passenger lift, first-class cuisine, winter garden and lounge, covered tennis court. Turkish, sea-water, and medicated Baths. The Hotel is within two minutes' walk of the Golf Links.—For tariff, address W. KNEESE, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—GRAND HOTEL.
Centre of Sea Front. Electric Light throughout. Lift to all floors. Bicycle room. INCLUSIVE TERMS IF DESIRED from 10s. 6d. to 15s. per day. For particulars apply to A. D. HOOK, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old-established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms.
GEO. HECKFORD, Manager.

CARBIS BAY HOTEL, Cornwall. The very spot to obtain rest and quietude. Overlooking the finest bay in England. Mild yet bracing climate. Within easy distance of London by G. W. R. Splendid Golf Links. "A more beautiful spot for residence could hardly be imagined." —Truth.

FOLKESTONE.—The LEAS HOTEL.—Situated in private grounds. Adjoining fashionable promenade. Sea views. Refurnished throughout. Passenger lift. Certified sanitation. Excellent cuisine. Moderate tariff. Good golf links and tennis court.

FOLKESTONE.—BATES' HOTEL, West Cliff Gardens, and LONGFORD PRIVATE HOTEL, The Lees. Oldest established and most select Family Hotels in Folkestone. Reduced terms during Winter and Spring months. Pension (new Coffee-room) at Bates' Hotel.—G. L. HART, Proprietor. Sanitation Certified.

GRAND CANARY.—The Newest and Best Hotel is The METROPOLE. Facing the sea. Delightful position. Terms most moderate.
Agents, ELDER, DEMPSTER & CO., 14, Castle-street, Liverpool, and 4, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.

JERSEY.—GRAND HOTEL.—Beautifully situated, facing the sea, full south, and sheltered from the north-easterly winds, with all modern comforts and liberal management. Reduced winter terms from October 15th.
D. DE LEIDI, Manager.

MADEIRA.—REID'S HOTELS.
NEW HOTEL, Santa Clara, Carmo, Hortas (German). 3½ days from England. Splendid situations. Large Gardens. Tennis Courts. Sea Bathing. Modern Sanitation. All Steamers met.
Pamphlet free, of F. PASSMORE, 124, Cheapside, E.C.

MALVERN—CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS.—One of the most charming places for the Holidays. The IMPERIAL HOTEL occupies the best position, and receives visitors en pension. The golf-links (18 holes) are one of the best in England. Capital stabling for hunters. Droitwich Brine, Turkish and large Swimming Bath in separate buildings.—For tariff, apply to the Proprietor, F. MOERSCHELL.

SALCOMBE (Devon).—BOLT HEAD HOTEL.—This first-class Family Hotel commands magnificent views of English Channel. Delightful cliff walks. Grand coast scenery. Admirable winter health resort. Climate mildest in England. Carriages meet trains when requested. Stabling Billiards. Special terms for winter months and for families.—Apply, Manager.

SANDGATE.—ROYAL KENT HOTEL, a favourite resort of Ruskin. An ideal summer and winter residence, delightfully situated in its own grounds, facing the sea. Redecorated and refurnished. New Coffee-room, Smoking-room, and Conservatory have recently been added. Fifteen minutes from Folkestone. Omnibus meets all trains Sandgate Station.—J. E. TANARE, Prop.

TORQUAY.—IMPERIAL HOTEL.—Under entirely New Management. New sanitary arrangements throughout. It is the largest and best-situated Hotel in Torquay, and the best winter residence on the South Coast. Visitors received en pension or à la carte. Terms moderate.
F. FISCHER, Manager.

All applications for spaces in this List should be made to the ADVERTISEMENT MANAGER,
"TRUTH" BUILDINGS, CARTERET STREET,
QUEEN ANNE'S GATE, S.W.

BURLINGTON HOTEL,
Cork-street, W., near Burlington Arcade.
BUCKINGHAM PALACE HOTEL, S.W., opposite Buckingham Palace, and close to Victoria Station. Special Boarding Terms.
Suites of rooms facing Buckingham Palace Gardens from 12s. a day.
} LONDON.

BURLINGTON HOTEL, BOSCOMBE, BOURNEMOUTH, facing the sea. Protected from north and east. Extensive pleasure grounds. A beautiful Winter Garden just added; also a Bicycle Room. Fine passenger lift. East Bournemouth Station.

BURLINGTON HOTELS, LIMITED, Proprietors.
Three hotels noted for excellence and economical charges.
Tariff, containing full particulars, free on application to the Managers.

INNS OF COURT HOTEL, Holborn, London.—A first-class Family Hotel, with 200 bedrooms, &c. All modern conveniences and moderate terms. Electric lights, lifts, &c. The Central Hall, as a lounge for writing &c., is the finest and the Dining-room the pleasantest in London. Public meeting rooms, &c. Visitors may dine at the Table d'hôte or in the new Restaurant. Tariff gratis.

THE INTERNATIONAL PALACE HOTELS.

CAIRO ..... Shepheard's.
CAIRO ..... Ghezireh Palace.
NICE ..... Riviera Palace.
LISBON ..... Avenida Palace.

London Office, 14, Cockspur-street, S.W.

AVONDALE
Hotel and Restaurant,
PICCADILLY.

LUNCHEONS. FIRST-CLASS CUISINE.
DINNERS. SUPPERS.
STRINGED ORCHESTRA.
Managers, MM. GARIN and EUGÈNE.

HATCHETT'S RESTAURANT
(LATE WHITE HORSE CELLARS), PICCADILLY.

Luncheons, Dinners, &c. Fixed Prices, or à la Carte.

FINEST CELLARS IN LONDON.
Managers, MM. GARIN and EUGÈNE.

CANARY ISLANDS.—SANTA CATALINA HOTEL, Las Palmas. In midst of beautiful gardens, facing sea. Sanitary arrangements perfect. English physician and nurse. English church. Golf, tennis cycling.—The Canary Islands Coy., Limited, 1, Laurence Pountney-hill, E.C.

ILFRACOMBE.
A Charming WINTER RESORT, climate mild and equable.
The ILFRACOMBE HOTEL,
First-class Return Tickets issued from London (Waterloo), L. & S. W. R., from November to March, including seven days' bed, board, and attendance, at the Ilfracombe Hotel, £5. 5s. each, available for one month. Ask for Hotel tickets, available by all trains. H. R. GROVER, Manager.

A FINE HOTEL] DOVER [IN DOVER BAY
Accommodates 400 guests. Is superbly appointed, with all the comforts of a well-arranged mansion, at moderate cost. Perfect cuisine. The Dover Golf Links for use of Hotel Burlington visitors. The finest coast hotel in England. Brochure and Tariff free.
Facing the Pleasure Pier and in centre of Dover Bay.
HOTEL BURLINGTON

HASTINGS. Due South, Facing Sea.
QUEEN'S HOTEL,
LARGEST AND BEST APPOINTED.
Sunny, and most sheltered position in Hastings and St. Leonards.
ELECTRIC LIGHT. PASSENGER ELEVATOR.
Moderate Tariff. Hotel Flys attend the trains.
WILLIAM GLADE, Manager.

QUEEN'S HOTEL, EASTBOURNE.—This Hotel, facing due south (unsurpassed for its excellent cuisine and choice wines), is now under the management of C. F. Bennewitz. Tariff on application. Table d'hote served at separate tables from 7 o'clock.

"INVIGORATING" FOLKESTONE
This well-known Hotel, occupying a sheltered position close to the sea, adjacent to the Boulogne Steamboat and Promenade Piers and the beautiful Undercliffe private road, is celebrated for its home-like comforts, cuisine, and wines, and is lighted throughout by electricity. Spacious Winter Garden, affording a delightful lounge amidst subtropical and other plants. Extensive tennis lawns. Own private dairy, farm, and gardens, insuring a fresh supply of milk, butter, eggs, vegetables, &c. Private laundry. Hotel omnibus meets all principal trains at Folkestone Central.
PAVILION HOTEL FOLKESTONE
FOLKESTONE HARBOUR STATION.

LIQUEURS OF THE GRANDE CHARTREUSE.
These delicious Liqueurs, which have come so much into public favour on account of their wonderful properties of aiding Digestion and preventing Dyspepsia, can now be had of all the principal Wine and Spirit Merchants, and all good Hotels and Restaurants throughout the Kingdom.
Sole Consignee: W. DOYLE, 35, Crutched Friars, London, E.C.

U. OF ILL. LIB.

HILDITCH'S ANNUAL SILK SALE

Great Reductions.

Patterns Forwarded.

NOW ON.

11 & 12, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON.

UNPRECEDENTED SUCCESS! ARBENZ'S MANDARIN RAZORS, with interchangeable blades, have no equal for easy shaving and are pronouuced by thousands of English Gentlemen to be superior to any others for their great durability, their keenness of edge, and the comfort they give in shaving. They are fully warranted and stamped with bonâ-fide maker's name and address. Satisfaction guaranteed or money returned. Prices: 5s. each; with one spare blade, 6s.; with three spare blades in handsome case, 9s. From Cutlers, Perfumers, &c., and wholesale from T. ARBENZ, 33, Ludgate-hill, Birmingham, who still supplies the celebrated GENUINE and only perfect GEM AIR GUNS, for which his universal reputation dates back to 1881. Ask for ARBENZ'S GEMS and beware of worthless imitations.

Price lists and copies of testimonials on application.

These Cigarettes are the Choicest in the Market, and will be appreciated by connoisseurs. Sample Box of 25, Post Free, 2s.

THE VASSO

HIGH-CLASS TURKISH CIGARETTES.

Of the Manufacturers,

LITSICA, MARX & Co.

21, Piccadilly, 84, Strand,

Or at Head Depot-174, HIGH HOLBORN, W.C.

Price List on Application

The TRENT CYCLE COMPANY, Ltd.,
Long Eaton,
Near Nottingham.

Hunyadi János

BEST AND SAFEST NATURAL APERIENT.

25 Years Success in the United Kingdom.

Recommended and Prescribed by Medical Men Everywhere.

"HUNYADI JÁNOS has established itself in favour with leading physicians and therapeutists of every country, whose testimonies bear witness to its action as a speedy, sure, and gentle Aperient for ordinary use; it is remarkably and exceptionally uniform in its composition, and free from defects incidental to many other Hungarian Bitter Waters." —British Medical Journal, Aug 30th 1884.

PROFESSOR VIRCHOW, the celebrated Berlin Physician, says that "HUNYADI JÁNOS" has always given him prompt and satisfactory results, and he considers it to be "one of the most valuable of the Curative Agents at our disposal."

CAUTION.—Every Bottle bears the Signature of the Proprietor, ANDREAS SAXLEHNER.

The Public Benefactor.

HOVIS BREAD

DISTRIBUTES HEALTH.

No loaf genuine unless stamped HOVIS.

All good class Bakers make and sell Hovis.

Hovis Flour and Biscuits can be obtained from all leading Bakers and Grocers, or 6d. and 1s. samples will be sent on receipt of stamps by—

S. FITTON & SON, Hovis Mills, Macclesfield.

"A POCKET TREASURE."

MADE IN 3 SIZES AT 10/6, 16/6, & 25/- each.

POST FREE

FLOWS

REGULARLY

CONSTANTLY

SMOOTHLY

EASILY

Head Office:—93, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON, E.C.

VINOLIA TOILET REQUISITES.

4d PREMIER VINOLIA SOAP
(For Family Use)

For Delicate, Sensitive, Irritable Skins.

The CHEMIST AND DRUGGIST reports:
"An ideal soap, delightfully perfumed."

1/- per box of 3 Tablets.

6d FLORAL VINOLIA SOAP
(For Private Use).

Keeps the Skin as soft as Velvet.

The MEDICAL NEWS reports:—
"Beautifully emollient and softening to the skin.'

1/6 per Box of 3 Tablets.

10d TOILET VINOLIA SOAP
(OTTO)

Scented with Choice Otto of Rose Perfume.

Beautifies the Complexion.

The GENTLEWOMAN reports:
"Strongly recommended to keep the skin smooth and free from roughness."

2/6 per Box of 3 Tablets.

3½d UNSCENTED VINOLIA SOAP.

Keeps the Complexion clear.

The EDINBURGH MEDICAL JOURNAL reports:
"Unscented Vinolia Soap cleanses the skin thoroughly and pleasantly, and at the same time leaves it soft, cool, and smooth."

10½d. per Box of 3 Tablets.

6d BLONDEAU TOILET SOAPS (Favourite Brand).

You may now obtain Vinolia Soap perfumed with any scent you prefer.
Jequilla Soap, Marequil Soap, Heliotrope Soap, Musk Lavender Soap, Maréchal Niel Soap, Opoponax Soap, White Rose Soap, Baby Soap, Violet Soap, Lys de France Soap, Shampoo Soap, Oriental Soap, Lettuce Soap, White Rose & Cucumber Soap, Jasmin Soap, Cold Cream Soap, Cucumber and Glycerine Soap.
1/6 per Box of 3 Tablets.

1/1½ VINOLIA CREAM

For Itching. Face Spots. Chaps, Chilblains

The LANCET reports:
"An emollient cream for the skin in eczema, rash, eruptions, &c."

1/1½, 1/9, 3/6, and 6/- per Box.

1/- VINOLIA POWDER

For Redness, Roughness, Toilet Nursery, &c.

The LADY'S PICTORIAL reports:
"Superseding the old-fashioned toilet powders which are apt to cause acne spots on the face by blocking up the pores of the skin."

In White, Pink, and Cream Tints.
1/-, 1/9, 3/6, and 6/- per Box.

6d VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP.
(STICKS AND FLAT CAKES)

Causes no Blotches.
STICKS: Premier 6d., Toilet 1/-, 1/6, 2/6. Vestal, 2/-.
FLAT CAKES: Premier 1/-, Toilet 2/-, Vestal 2/6.
Vinolia Shaving Cream,
For using without Brush and Water 9d.

6d LYPSYL.

A Coralline Emollient for Dry, Rough, Cracked, or Pallid Lips.
In Rose-Red and White Tints, 6d. and 1/- a Tube.

1/- VINOLIA LAVENDER WATER.

Natural and Very Lasting.

Contains the finest Essential Oils, Concentrated, therefore the Most Economical.

In 1-oz., 2-oz., 4-oz., & 8-oz. Bottles.
6d., 1/-, 2/-, and 3/6.

2d BLONDEAU TOILET SOAPS.
(BRITANNIA BRAND).

Guaranteed Neutral and Pure.

1/- per Box of 6 Tablets
(Assorted Colours and Perfumes).

6d PREMIER VINOLIA DENTIFRICE

Aromatic, Tonic, Refreshing, Preservative.
Keeps the Teeth Ivory White.
Premier, in Round Box and Glass Bottle, 6d.
English—2/6.
American—1/6.
VINOLIA TOOTH PASTE.
Delicately Perfumed 6d.

6d BLONDEAU CARBOLIC TOOTH POWDER.

Contains no Grit or Mineral Acids.
In Round Metal Box, 6d. & 1/-.

6d BLONDEAU PERFUMES

Concentrated, Delicate, Pure

*Vinolia Bouquet, *Marequil, *Jequilla, *Losaria, Wood Violet, White Heliotrope, Ess. Bouquet, Frangipanni, Jockey Club, Maréchal Niel, Millefleur, White Rose, Jasmin, Musk Rose, Honeysuckle, New Mown Hay, Lily of the Valley, Rondeletia, Hyacinth, Ylang Ylang, Stephanotis, Opoponax, Patchouli, Musk, Ambergris, Amaryllis, White Lilac, Narcissus, Chypre, Violette de Parme, Mignonette, Clematis, Wallflower, Violet, *Rhine Violets, Peau d'Espagne.

6d., 1/-, 2/-, 3/-, and 5/- per bottle.
* These perfumes are not supplied in the 6d. quality.

1/- Vinolia Hair Wash

Freshens and Revivifies the Hair.
In two kinds, Dry and Moist, 1/- per bottle.
In 3 odours: Portugal, Rose, and Violet.

1/- VINOLIA EAU DE COLOGNE.

Fragrant. Refreshing.
As fine as can possibly be made.

The "Court Circular" reports:
"Vinolia Eau de Cologne we consider is absolutely unequalled for strength, purity, and delicacy of aroma."

6d., 1/-, 2/-, 2/3, and 5/6.

3d per 2oz. Packet VINOLIA VIOLET POWDER.

Sanitary. Antiseptic. Soothing.
Specially prepared for Toilet and Nursery use.

In 2-oz. Packets, 3d. In ¼-lb. Packet or Tin, 6d.

BLONDEAU ET CIE., MALDEN CRESCENT, LONDON, N.W.

WATER ABSOLUTELY FREE FROM DISEASE GERMS, BY USING THE

BERKEFELD FILTER

FOR THE PRIVATE HOUSE OFFICE, FACTORY, HOTELS RESTAURANTS, CLUBS, &c. &c.

Can be Easily and Cheaply Fixed to the Service-Pipe of any HOUSE having ordinary pressure.

Supplied to H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES, DUKE OF WESTMINSTER, K.G., and others too numerous to mention; THE HOUSE OF LORDS, and THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Glass and Earthenware Table Filters, price from 8s. 9d. each.
In use in all the Principal Hotels. Simple in Construction. Most easily cleaned.
PRICE FOR FILTER AS ABOVE, 42s.
SMALLER SIZE, 25s.
For other prices see price-lists.
Offices and Show-Rooms:
The BERKEFELD FILTER Co. Ltd.
121 Oxford St. London W.

NOTE.—Joseph Lunt, B.Sc., F.C.S., British Institute of Preventive Medicine, in his report on the Berkefeld Filter, says, "Exhaustive experiments showed that with London tap-water strongly infected artificially WITH THE TYPHOID BACILLUS, not a single typhoid bacillus was detected IN THE FILTERED WATER for a period of 26 days."

No Country House Should Be Without One.

BENSON'S 'SPECIAL' MAKE 'LADY'S' KEYLESS LEVER

Silver Cases, £5 — 18-ct. Gold Cases, £10

Three-quarter Plate LEVER Movement, Jewelled throughout, Keyless action, with Seconds Dial. In Hunting, Half-Hunting, or Crystal Glass Cases, Monogram free.

18-ct. Gold, £10. Silver, £5.

Sent Free and Safe at my risk to all parts.

Selections of Watches and Jewellery sent on approval.

Illustrated Book of Watches, Engagement Rings, Brooches, Bracelets, &c., post-free.

J. W. BENSON, LTD.
Steam Factory,
62 & 64, LUDGATE HILL,
28, Royal Exchange, E.C., and
25, Old Bond Street, LONDON, W.

VERITAS Hygienic

OIL HEATING STOVES

(Central Air Draught System).

FOR Halls, Libraries, Bedrooms, Drawing-rooms, Greenhouses, Offices, &c.

FROM 14/- to £5

NO SMELL.
NO DIRT.
NO FIXING.
NO FLUE.
SAFE.
ECONOMICAL.

GREAT VARIETY OF PATTERNS AND SIZES.

OF ALL IRONMONGERS, STORES, & LAMP DEALERS.

Wholesale only of THE VERITAS LAMP WORKS, Farringdon-rd., London.

COLEMAN'S WINCARNIS

Is a delicious beverage and tonic made from Port Wine, Liebig's Extract of Meat and Extract of Malt.

OVER FIVE THOUSAND

Unsolicited Testimonials have been received from Medical Men.

The following Important Testimonial has been received from Dr. FLETCHER.

Applecross, Rosshire, N.B., July 2nd, 1897.

Dear Sirs,—Please forward quarter of a dozen "Wincarnis" immediately as my patient's supply is about done.

I trust there will be no delay, as he takes no other nourishment, and has been sustained and gained strength by "Wincarnis" for twelve weeks.

Yours faithfully,
DUNCAN FLETCHER, L.R.C.P.

Sole Proprietors and Manufacturers of the above,

COLEMAN & CO., Ltd.,
NORWICH and LONDON.

Sample Bottle may be had, free of charge, on receipt of full postal address.

THREE GOLD MEDALS.

Exquisite Models. Perfect Fit. Guaranteed Wear.

THE Y & N PATENT DIAGONAL SEAM CORSET

Will not split in the Seams nor tear in the Fabric. Made in all the fashionable colours and White, Black, and Shades in Italian Cloth, Satin, and Coutil, 4/11, 5/11, 6/11, 7/11 per pair and upwards.

CAUTION.—Every genuine Y & N Corset is stamped.

Sold by Drapers and Ladies' Outfitters in the United Kingdom and Colonies

FLORILINE

FOR THE TEETH AND BREATH

Is the BEST LIQUID DENTIFRICE in the WORLD.

PREVENTS THE DECAY OF THE TEETH.

Renders the Teeth Pearly White.

IS PERFECTLY HARMLESS AND DELICIOUS TO THE TASTE.

Is Partly Composed of Honey, and Extracts from Sweet Herbs and Plants.

Of all Chemists and Perfumers throughout the World.

2s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE TOOTH POWDER,
Only put in Glass Jars, Price 1s.

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER

Prevents the Hair from Falling off.

Restores Grey or White Hair to its ORIGINAL COLOUR.

Being delicately perfumed, it leaves no Unpleasant Odour.

IS NOT A DYE.

Should be in every House where a HAIR RENEWER is needed.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST OR HAIRDRESSER FOR

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER.

Price 3s. 6d. per bottle.

POST 6/- FREE.

In Elegant Satin-lined Case complete.

A PERFECT PEN.

Simple in construction. Lasts a life-time. Cannot get out of order. Quite equal to the Pens usually sold at Half-a-Guinea.

PRICE LISTS FREE.

FINE, MEDIUM, OR BROAD NIB CAN BE SUPPLIED.
ANY INK CAN BE USED.

A. M BONNER MANUFACTURING CO.
(Dept. 19), 8, Long Lane, London, E.C.

"The Old Favourite."

MAX GREGER'S

CARLOWITZ

SAFEST,
SOUNDEST
Dinner Wine.

PURE
HUNGARIAN BURGUNDY.

From 15/- per doz.

Of all Wine Merchants and Grocers.
See that every cork bears the brand "Max Greger." Without it the wine is not genuine.

DIAMONDS. — DIAMONDS from the JURA MOUNTAINS.

THE JURA DIAMONDS are very fine WHITE DIAMONDS of great purity, of all sizes, and undistinguishable from Cape and Brazilian Diamonds of the finest quality. The JURA DIAMONDS can be worn at all times both by day and night. The JURA DIAMONDS are mounted in the best style and in the same manner as the most expensive jewels. The JURA DIAMONDS possess the limpidity and scintillating brilliancy of the true diamond. The PRICE of the JURA DIAMONDS is infinitesimal and within reach of every one. DIAMOND Brooches, Rings, Ear-rings, Pins, Hat Pins, Combs, Diadems, Tiaras, Bracelets.

"ORIENT PEARLS," in colour, shape, and weight, are the same as real pearls. PEARL and DIAMOND ORNAMENTS in gold and other settings. The Designs are beautiful and artistic. Goods sent on approval. Illustrated Catalogues and Price List post free.—CORREZE DIAMOND SYNDICATE, LTD., Portland House, Basinghall-street, London, E.C.

An Ideal New Year's Gift.

The POLYPHON
Musical Box
is the greatest novelty of the age. It plays to perfection airs from the Operas, or renders most brilliantly any selections of music which a purchaser may desire.

All Dealers, or write for No. 50 Catalogue, sent gratis and post free.

NICOLE FRÈRES, Ltd.
21, Ely-place, London, E.C

	The Infanta.	The Kleberg.	The Gordon.	The Eugene.
With Six Discs	32/-	51/-	85/-	170/-
Extra Discs	5d.	8d.	1/4	2/6

For higher-priced Instruments see Catalogue.

ALFRED CARTER, LIMITED

47, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

New and Extensive SHOWROOMS 31 and 32, SHOE LANE, E.C. Midway between Holborn-circus and Ludgate-circus). (ONLY ADDRESSES)

INVALIDS' MECHANICAL FURNITURE, BATH CHAIRS, &c.

Maker and Inventor of VIADUCT AMBULANCE LITTER, used all over the World.

BRIGHTON BATH CHAIR

SPINAL AND BATH CHAIR COMBINED.

WICKER BATH CHAIR.

BATH CHAIR.

SELF-PROPELLING AND CARRYING CHAIR COMBINED

PERAMBULATORS. (New Designs for 1897.)

ALFRED CARTER, Ltd., 47, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON.
Illustrated Catalogue Post Free. No connection with any other Firm.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.—Holborn Bars, London.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF LIFE ASSURANCE AND ANNUITY BUSINESS TRANSACTED.
REVERSIONS PURCHASED.

Invested Funds, £27,000,000.

The last Annual Report can be obtained on application to the Secretary.

SPECIAL ADVANTAGES TO PRIVATE INSURERS.

THE IMPERIAL INSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED. FIRE. Est. 1803, 1, Old Broad-st., E.C., & 22, Pall Mall, S.W. Subd Capital, £1,200,000. Paid-up, £300,000. Total funds, over £1,500,000.—E. COZENS SMITH, Gen. Man.

BIRKBECK BANK (Estab. 1851), Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane, London. Two and a-half per cent. interest allowed on deposits, repayable on demand. Two per cent. on current accounts, on the minimum monthly balances when not below £100.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK with particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

LONDON AND COUNTY ADVANCE AND DISCOUNT COMPANY, Limited.—Cash advanced from £10 to £500, without preliminary fees or deductions for interest, for short or long periods, repayable by easy instalments, at moderate rates, upon approved security. Bills Discounted. Forms free. Offices, 57 and 58, Chancery-lane, W.C.—JOHN STONE, Secretary.

CENTRAL PACIFIC STOCK.—THE SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY will, after JANUARY 1st, 1898, against delivery to it, at its Office in New York, of DIVIDEND WARRANTS No. 33, appertaining to Certificates of Stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, pay to the persons presenting the same one-half of one per cent. of the par value of the Stock represented by such Certificates respectively. Holders of the London Committee's Certificates in England can obtain the amount referred to above on presentation of their Certificates at Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie, & Co., 67, Lombard-street, London, E.C., where they will be stamped as follows:—"Five Dollars ($5), received from the Southern Pacific Company, against delivery of Dividend Warrant No. 33."—The Certificates may be left any day except Saturday, between the hours of Ten and Two.

H. HALFORD
and COMPANY,
70 and 71,
Palmerston Buildings,
Old Broad Street,
London.

ESTABLISHED 1869.

Business in Stocks and Shares at close prices.

Dealings reported by wire if required.

Prompt Settlements.

Thousands of Testimonials from Clients.

Americans and Canadians a Speciality. Also Westralians and Kaffirs.

Lists of Closing Prices gratis.

Telegrams: "Monitor, London."

NO CONNECTION WITH ANY OTHER FIRM.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

NOTICE.

No Member of the Stock Exchange is allowed to advertise for business purposes, or to issue circulars to persons other than his own principals.

Persons who advertise as Brokers or Share Dealers are not Members of the Stock Exchange, or under the control of the Committee.

A List of Members of the Stock Exchange who are Stock and Share Brokers may be seen at the Bartholomew-lane Entrance to the Bank of England, or obtained on application to

EDWARD SATTERTHWAITE,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.
Committee Room, The Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

MASSAGE AT HOME. The MATTO CHAIN.

Recommended by the Medical Profession.

Used by Sandow and all the leading Athletes, Cyclists, &c.

For Liver Complaints, Rheumatism, and all Nervous Disorders. Prevents Obesity.

Price 7s. 6d. each. By Post, 4d. extra. From all Chemists.

MATTO LIMITED, 32 & 34, Clerkenwell-rd. London, E.C.

BEST & SAFEST DENTIFRICE
SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS AND PERFUMERS IN ELEGANT CRYSTAL TOILET CASKET
PRICE 2/6.
ALSO IN PATENT METALLIC BOX
PRICE 1/-

PRESERVE YOUR TEETH
BY USING THE
OS TOOTH BLOCK
Established 20 years

PLAYER'S NAVY CUT

Beautifully Cool, Sweet Smoking.

The Original and the Best.

PLAYER'S NAVY CUT TOBACCO is sold only in 1-oz Packets, and 2, 4, and 8-oz. and 1-lb. Tins, which keep the Tobacco in Fine Smoking Condition. Ask for "PLAYER'S" at all Tobacco Sellers, Stores, &c., and don't be put off with any other. The genuine bears the Trade Mark, "NOTTINGHAM CASTLE," on every Packet and Tin.

PLAYER'S NAVY CUT CIGARETTES are sold in Packets of 12, and Tins containing 24, 50, and 100.

They now may also be obtained in a new size, "MAGNUMS," in Card Cases containing 8, and Tins containing 16, 50, and 100.

A MASTER KEY

of this SIZE

Can be made to open any number of Locks. Many Ladies and Gentlemen have the whole of their locks so arranged that a MASTER KEY, so small as to be worn in a finger-ring or locket, will open every lock they possess—from their Dressing Bags, Trunks, Jewel Cases, Despatch Boxes, &c., to the Front Door, Wine Cellar, Park Gates, &c. Just think of the Convenience! The locks are made in suites, each suite with its own key, so that the ladies' maid or valet can open the luggage, the butler the wine cellar, and so on, but the suite keys are of no use for any but their own series.

BRAMAH JEWEL SAFES,

BURGLAR AND FIRE RESISTING, SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR BED AND DRESSING ROOMS.

Specialities in fitted Suite Cases and Dressing Bags, Jewel Cases, Despatch and Deed Boxes, Bramah Street Door Latches, with small keys, Bramah Padlocks for Bicycles, with Leather-covered Chains, &c. &c.

New Illustrated Catalogues Post Free.

For Prices and Particulars apply to

NEEDS & CO. Late

Bramah & Co.

Sole Manufacturers of the real Bramah Locks.

100, NEW BOND STREET,

LONDON, W.

A Master Key Signet Ring (Open).

BARNARD, BISHOP, & BARNARDS LIMITED.

(Late of Queen Victoria-street, E.C.)

ORIGINAL MANUFACTURERS OF

THE CELEBRATED SLOW-COMBUSTION STOVES, or COUNTRY PARSONS' FIRE-GRATES.

REGISTERED DESIGN.

Invite a Visit to their New West-End Showrooms at

23, PRINCES-STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.

(A FEW DOORS FROM OXFORD CIRCUS).

Where a most recherche selection of their newest designs in Stoves, Carved Wood and other Mantles, Tile Slabs, and Hearths, &c., &c., will be seen. Catalogues free. Competent representatives sent to any part of London or Suburbs to take instructions and particulars.

Manufactory: NORFOLK IRON WORKS, NORWICH.

SINGER

MODÈLE DE LUXE

(Registered Trade Mark)

CYCLES

IMPORTANT NOVELTIES FOR 1898.

1898 Lists Free.

SINGER CYCLE CO. LTD. COVENTRY

LONDON: 17, HOLBORN VIADUCT.

OUR PUZZLES.

"TRUTH" TOY AND DOLL SHOW.—SPECIAL NOTICE.

It has been found impossible to complete the Prize List in all its details in time to publish it in this number of TRUTH. The reports of the ladies who kindly acted as judges have rendered certain correspondence necessary; but the Full List of Awards will be printed next week.

CONDENSED RULES.

All answers to the current Puzzle must be sent in on or before the morning of the Monday week following the date of that Puzzle's publication, to the PUZZLE EDITOR, TRUTH Buildings, Carteret-street, Queen Anne's-gate, London, S.W. The answers must be signed by a nom de plume of not more than twelve letters, and must not be sent on post-cards, nor by telegraph, nor by hand; whilst in the case of new competitors the real name and address must be forwarded with the first reply sent.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 984.

The Prize in this Competition has been awarded to TABLEAU for the following anecdote:—

Scene: a country lane. Eldest Daughter (who has accidentally run against the cook arrayed in one of her garments): "Black, is that my cloak you have got on?" Black: "Well, Miss, I am not sure whether 'tis yours or the Missis's.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 985.

In this Competition the Prize has been taken by ALMAVIVA, whose lines on the Underground Railway as a Sanatorium were published in TRUTH for December 30.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 989.

It has been suggested—and the suggestion is an excellent one—that the current "Specimens" may be turned to account in providing the competition for this week. Competitors are asked, therefore, to select from the "Specimens" printed on this and the following page the Epitaph which they may consider to be best out of those suggested for a Prime Minister, then the one which they consider best out of those suggested for a 'Bus Conductor, and so on in the case of each of the five classes of Epitaphs asked for. The selections received will be collated by me, and a List formed of those five Epitaphs which may be mentioned most frequently in the said selections. The usual Prize of Two Guineas will be awarded to

THAT COMPETITOR WHOSE LIST MOST CLOSELY AGREES WITH THAT FORMED IN THE MANNER DESCRIBED ABOVE.

No competitor must select more than one "Epitaph" under each of the categories—a, b, c, d, and e; and to each selection the name of the competitor from whose list it is taken must be appended. All answers must reach me by the morning of Monday, January 17, at the latest.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 The real name, with the address, of CABBAGE, winner of Prize No. 983, is John Laird, Esq., The Cottage, Oxton.

 Mr. Laird has kindly requested me to hand over a guinea of his Prize to the TRUTH Toy Fund.

 Mr. Gibson, winner of Prize No. 982, has desired me to place five shillings out of his Prize to the credit of the TRUTH Toy Fund.

IVY LEAVES.—Many thanks for your very kind communication.

SOL.—Your suggestion is not at all a bad one, but I do not at present see my way to carry it out in a practical way.

ESPERANZA.—Thank you very much.

J. MCGRIGOR ALLAN.—I so much like the idea you suggest that I should be much obliged if you will, at your leisure, let me have the lines to which you refer.

BEL DEMONIO.—Many thanks for your seasonable wishes.

E. S.—Your verses contain so much good sense that I regret that I am unable to find space to print them.

RENELL.—Your lines reached me a day too late for publication.

QUILP.—It has given me much pleasure to act upon your excellent suggestion.

R. MARTIN.—I hardly think the word "Bowdlerism" applies. It was, rather, a question of taste. Many thanks for your kind wishes.

VERAX.—The addition will not in any way invalidate your chance.

SIMONIDES.—I hope your services in the direction you suggest will not be required just yet.

TREEVE.—Your lines were duly received, and were actually set up for publication, but were crowded out at the last moment.

THE PUZZLE EDITOR.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 986.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

ONE-LINE EPITAPHS ON (a) A PRIME MINISTER, (b) A 'BUS CONDUCTOR, (c) A LOW COMEDIAN, (d) A RAILWAY GUARD, (e) A STOCKBROKER.

(a) A prey to dissolution. (b) Higher up! (c) He played to the pit. (d) In the van on the up-line. (e) Waiting for a rise.—Mac.

(a) Summoned by Black Rod to the Upper House. (b) 'Igher up. (c) A time to laugh . . and a time to die (Eccles. iii.). (d) Shunted at the terminus. (e) John Smith,* Limited. Below par. Preference guaranteed. Will rise again.—Cogerach.

* As the case may be.

(a) With the majority; no longer a Unionist. (b) Gone to render his account. (c) Taking his part in Hades. (d) Waiting for the signal. (e) Anticipating "Arise."—Sinona.

(a) His last closure. (b) His last bus. (c) Gone to the second stage. (d) May no signals be "against" him. May he keep away from "the stoker"! (e) Awaits the "settling day." May he "bear" it! —Xnihps.

(a) He has joined the majority. (b) He has gone to the bank. (c) He has played his last part. (d) He was ever in the van. (e) He is ready for the last call.—Welsh Harp.

(a) Dissolution at last! (b) Always behind, he is now gone before. (c) He is keeping the pit in a roar. (d) The "late" John Smith. (e) He will come up for the account.—Melrose.

(a) He who worked by majorities has now joined the majority. (b) He was a man of fare (fair) dealings. (c) He brought down the house, till he was himself brought low. (d) He started many trains, then he himself started to an unknown bourne. (e) He got below par and broke.—Wild Thyme.

(a) His place is safe with the "majority." (b) Changed into an "angel." (c) "The gods" propitious, need he fear "the pit"? (d) On the "up" train. (e) Lying low, waiting for a "rise."—Ludwig B.

(a) I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever Ps. xxiii. 6). (b) Thy word runneth very swiftly (Ps. cxlvii. 15). (c) Let not the pit shut her mouth upon me (Ps. lxix. 15). (d) The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places (Ps xvi. 6). (e) What shall a man give in exchange for his soul (Matt. xvi. 26).—Aston Villa.

(a) He whom majorities followed now follows the majority. (b) He has gone higher up. (c) Exit clown (Shakespeare). (d) We must all change. (e) He is waiting for the rise.—Mercutio.

(a) Forgive! and forget. (b) Last home journey. (c) Curtain. (d) "Right away"—for ever. (e) Settling-day.—Tan Tun.

(a) For now he hath obtained more excellent "ministry." (b) Mors "omnibus" communis. (c) Set up on high those that be "low." (d) The "Guard" dies, but never surrenders. (e) Worshipped "stocks" and stones.—C. F. Reid.

(a) Majorities once gave me power; the majority I've now joined does not. (b) Mors mihi omnibusque finis. (c) I've left the stage, and now occupy the pit. (d) Released from care; life's terminus attained. (e) Gone to his final settlement and account.—Apemantus.

(a) Here rests a great leader, awaiting a coming session. (b) In his last journey, he fared well. (c) He played his light part, then the curtain fell. (d) We must all travel in his train. (e) He's gone to meet his last account.—Elk.

(a) He has gone to take his seat in the Upper House. (b) He has gone "all the way," and has no night work. (c) He has taken a long engagement as either angel or demon. (d) He has gone on his longest journey, and will not return. (e) He has carried his account over to the other side.—Espèrance.

(a) Here lie I; between mine and the other party lies the truth. (b) Peace evermore; he lies inside who stood outside before. (c) From gay to grave. (d) Now I shall pay for my whistle. (e) The final call; a rise at last.—Triumph.

(a) Gone to another place. (b) He fares where there is room inside. (c) By a quick change he joined the stars, where ghosts walk. (d) Having reached life's terminus, he was returned empty by the "underground." (e) Awaiting settlement of account after a deal in futures—with no option.—Caer Glowe.

(a) He has been sent for. (b) He has gone on his long journey. (c) He has made his final exit. (d) In many a progressive movement he was in the van. (e) He awaits the great settling day.—Wig and Gown.

(a) Joined the majority, no more fear of joining the minority. (b) No more fares, let us hope he fares better. (c) From gay to grave. (d) All change here. (e) Gone to his last settlement.—Rustic.

(a) Of his calling and election sure. (b) He had to travel by underground at last. (c) He shall not be judged by his acts alone. (d) Now in the train of the saints. (e) In life bearing many things, he awaits a joyful settling-day.—Gallio.

(a) He is sure of finding himself with the majority. (b) He is gone to the yard. (c) He has passed from gay to grave. (d) He rests after a long journey. (e) Broke by a fall; waiting for a rise.—Almaviva.

(a) O, fading honours of the dead! O, high ambition, lowly laid! (Scott). (b) After many short stages he takes his last long journey. (c) He passes from the comic to the grave. (d) A train of mourners attest his devotion to his work. (e) Low he lies after many ups and downs.—Excelsior.

(a) All his talents and ambition "shrunk to this little measure." (b) Thou hast taken thy last fare —fare thee well! (c) He has played many a humourous rôle, now comes the grave. (d) After watches often, he may rest securely in God's acre. (e) He has speculated much, now he knows; or, Sometimes he has gambled on the turf, now under the turf.—Esperanza.

(a) I now defy opposition. (b) All the way. (c) Birth, mirth, earth. (d) Terminus. (e) Waiting for a rise.—Frivola.

(a) He has gone where there are no opposition and divisions. (b) Knocked off his perch by Death, his ups and downs are ended. (c) The gallery favourite awaits, in the pit, the final scene. (d) He made it "all right" for others and himself. (e) His time-bargains are recorded for eternity.*—J. McGrigor Allan.

* The judgment was set and the books were opened (Daniel, vii., 10.)

(a) A plague o' both the houses! I am sped. (b) Right behind! (c) I hope I don't intrude! (d) Full inside! (e) An absolute gentleman, full of most excellent differences!—Yellow Leaf.

(a) He has made his last treaty with a higher Power. (b) Mates, he has moved "higher up." (c) He'll tread the boards no more; but, we hope, the golden floor. (d) Another hand has put the break on for him. (e) His account is closed for the last settling day.—Chittabob.

(a) "I have rest; the Commonwealth repose" (Daniel). (b) Mors omnibus communis. (c) The last act crowns the play (Dr. Quarlès). (d) A man can earn his Victoria Cross in charge of railway trains ("Lays of a Londoner," Clement Scott) (e) He deserved hanging; but he died in his bed ("Obiter Dicta.")—Ivy Leaves.

(a) Out of reach of minority, he has joined the majority. (b) All the way for nothing. (c) Exit (L. c.) (d) All change here. (e) He shares with all this great exchange, a fall for a rise.—Moonstone.

(a) A certain convocation of politic worms are e'en at him. (b) He touched the bell, and took his last fare well! (c) The great Author's "gag" has stopped his. He is played out. (d) He has reached the terminus; we must all follow in his train. (e) "Hammered" at last, no more to range through the ringing grooves of 'Change.—Baritone.

(a) Gone out with the flowing tide. (b) He has taken his last fare well. (e) One whom the "Gods" loved. (d) Tipped off the track. (e) Waiting for the settling day.—Roughty.

(a) Returned to (higher) power with an overwhelming majority. (b) He has left the road-car for the "underground." (c) A higher rôle he plays now—drawn from life. (d) He has changed for the up express—next stop, heaven. (e) In-vestment dull, earth holds him for a "rise."—Treddust.

(a) Out of office, but with the majority. Resurgat. (b) Having punched his last ticket below, has gone to gather treasure above. (c) The Gods loved him, and he died (dyed). (d) This punctual soul has reached his last station in time. (e) In this corner he confidently awaits a rise at the final settlement. —Kappa.

(a) Resigned to fate, not fated to resign. (b) He left his traces upon earth (c) Again he has chosen the better part. (d) He was ever in the van. (e) All fate gave him to bear he did cheerfully.—Quatrebras.

(a) No fleeting "majority" here. (b) Gone by the "board." (c) If there be humour here, 'tis dry as dust. (d) Hard lines, long hours, endless sleepers: sleep on. (e) Waiting for "settling day."—Envoy.

(a) He is numbered with the majority. (b) He has taken his "fare"-well of the world. (c) He has gone a stage higher. (d) He is lying with the heavy sleepers. (e) 'Change in life, change in death.—[illegible]

(a) He has been elevated to the "Upper House." (b) He has taken his last "fare"-well. (c) The curtain has dropped upon the "scene." (d) Here he has reached the terminus of life. (e) He has gone to settle his account.—Granite.

(a) His ambition has found its last vault. (b) He left the road for these vaults. (c) My bill's advanced a stage. (d) He is still with a long train. (e) His account is closed.—Speedwell.

(a) From the steps of a throne to a crown of his own. (b) From short and crowded journeys to a long and solitary rest. (c) He couldn't out-grin death. (d) A terminus and a turn-in. (e) He hopes not to be "hammered" on settling-day.—Robert Martin.

(a) The King has sent for Mr. ——. (b) He aspired to the box, and got it when Death hailed him. (c) Death took him off, who took off everybody. (d) Waiting for the up-express. (e) Holding on till Gabriel trumps "arise!"—Cochran Field.

(a) Gone to the Upper House. (b) On thy last journey fare thee well. (c) Resting. (d) Among the sleepers still. (e) Carried over for the great account. —Mandeville.

(a) Gone to the country during dissolution. (b) He has gone behind the curtain. (c) Never a friend of electricity, he is now a non-conductor. (d) Shunted to up line; awaiting signals. (e) Hic Jacet, J. Bull, semper eadem.—Scissors.

(a) Dissolution has placed him in a great majority. (b) His is the blessed assurance of escape from eternal woe (woa!). (c) He considers Death's "gag" uncalled for and ill-timed. (d) He sleeps without a break. (e) He died because he had no option.—Quilp.

(a) Dissolution came, and he very soon after found himself with a vast majority (i.e., gone over to the majority). (Inscriptive motto, "No further seek his merits to disclose, nor draw his frailties from their dark abode."—Gray.) (b) Taking his last "fare" well; in response to the call "Higher up!" up he went! (i.e., "Higher up" shouted by conductors on stopping at usual places). (Inscriptive motto, "Mors venit omnibus.") (c) The last scene in life's drama reached, when comedy becomes tragedy—curtain! (Inscriptive motto, "All the world's a stage."—Shakespeare. (d) "Right away"! Terminus reached—brake it gently. (Inscriptive motto, "Quis custodiet ipsos custodes?") (e) Gone to his last account—that distant settlement where there is no backwardation. (Inscription motto, "Bear and forbear.")—Verax.

(a) He still holds his place by the majority. (b) His last drive was to the Angel. (c) He could raise the spirits even of the grave. (d) He rests among the sleepers. (e) He has gone to his account, which is a good deal.—Sceptic.

(a) In recess here he calmly faces a grave situation. (b) He has taken his last "Fare"-well! (c) From gay to grave, the last was his first tragic exit. (d) Once alert, but now a sleeper in a permanent way. (e) Still the head of "a quiet little corner" . . . in marble.—Ooloo.

(a) After dissolution he retired from public life. (b) Formerly he went behind, now he's gone before. (c) From gay to grave. (d) He changed here for Heaven. (e) Affairs wound up, health run down; now he's in process of liquidation.—Simonides.

(a) He no longer needs council from his Cabinet. (b) He is full inside, and cannot get out even to oblige a lady. (e) He has played his last part; the curtain has fallen. (d) His journey is over; he has reached the terminus. (e) His stock remains at par, waiting the Settling Day.—Neko.

(a) Farewell, a long farewell to all my greatness (King Henry VIII., act iii., sc. 2). (b) Just slipped off for change.* (c) He is now "made up" for a new part. (d) Gone to report himself at headquarters. (e) His last "deal" was an "odd" lot.—Tweet.

* "Change" oft denotes coins of small value.

(a) He wrote his last despatch; then was despatched himself. (b) Who stood so long outside now lies at rest within. (c) Thy jokes are ended in the solemn grave. (d) By express training for his last long journey quite prepared. (e) Though "dropped" awhile, we hope he'll "rise" again.—Haldon.

(a) The evil men do—lives; the good is oft interred with them (apologies to Shakespeare). (b) Alive, he cried "There's room above," dead, he goes to prove it. (c) He laughed, may be you cried; he played—then poor Tom died. (d) His journey done, his terminus won, he reaches home at last. (e) Life is a fluctuating game, here lies one who played it well.—Violet.

(a) His end was peace with honour, or at any price. (b) Fare thee well. (c) His last quick change from dusty boards to dust itself (d) He has gone up by the last through train. (e) He need "Bear" no more.—Crock.

(a) The light of his time, but often going out (b) His knell was the bell of tickets pierced. (c) Playing his own life, no lower could he fall, nor higher rise. (d) Points caught his well-trained eye, and fell in the van. (e) Not of old stock himself, but dealing in it.—The Hen.

(a) Removed to the Upper House. (b) The Angel and World's End this journey only. (c) He has gagged his last, and is now resting. (d) Right ahead, there! His signal's down! (e) 'Tis settling day.—Snaresbrook.

(a) Gone over to the majority. (b) Closed thoroughfare. (c) Resting. (d) Arrived at the terminus. (e) Hiding from the "Bull."—Pigtail.

(a) "Lieder (leader) ohne wörter." (b) He has received the buss (kiss) of peace. (c) What he never was in life—a good digester (die jester). (d) A signal example of good training, now beyond reach of all raillery. (e) Gone to his last account; life's ups and downs are o'er.—Bredon.

(a) "Ayes" and "Noes" turned up his toes. (b) Though he liked a short fare better, he took a long fare-well. (c) A chappie of infinite jest—quite chap-fallen. (d) "Down" till the Resurrection morn, then "up" guard. (e) Victim to a "Bear" in "Mysore," he went to his account.—G. R. M.

(a) He is where he always wished to be—with the great majority. (b) He has given up the buses and gone underground. (c) Impersonator of the droll, how has the grave become thy rôle? (d) He is travelling "up," in his narrow last compartment. (e) Don't disturb me! I am getting ready for the account.—Great Gun.

(a) He has been raised to a higher house. (c) He is in a new piece (peace). (d) Checked off the wheels of life. (e) Bear, and forbear.—Phyllis.

(a) He has joined the majority. (b) He has taken farewell. (c) He has made exit and joined another company (d) He has reached the terminus. (e) His final "settling days" appear: life's "limited share" did he well "bear."—Viper.

(a) Alas! Tho' diplomatic lies he often uttered, he now lies still. (b) Hic est finis omnium et (cum) omnibus. (c) The calling low we trust is called on high. (d) His travelling days are o'er. (e) Engrossed in "puts," the "call" has come.—Enigma.

(a) He is transferred to another state. (b) His conduct was scrupulously fair. Aweel! (c) Exit to mirth sublime. (d) He has gone on a journey without a break. (e) He has gone a deal further.—A. E. L.

(a) Resigned under pressure. (b) If his sweetheart wishes a last buss, conduct her here. (c) Gone from gay to grave, (d) Death took the wheel, and put on the brake. (e) He lies quiet, and waits a rise.—Toria.

(a) Prime here amid his fellows, now he swells a crowd. (b) The late conductor is conducted by his late conduct. (c) Laughter turned into heaviness when he died. (d) God guard him in death who was our guard in life. (e) He suffers change, who once exchanged on 'Change.—C. M. P.

(a) A Unionist—he has found salvation. (b) Going all the way. (c) Promoted to tragedy. (d) For years he followed in the van, now he leads the way. (e) On earth a bull, a stag, a bear, yet human bones lie sleeping here.—Wearside.

(a) Once the people's elect, now God's. (b) "O mighty-mouthed inventor of harmonies."—Tennyson. (c) He has left a gay life for a grave. (d) God has seen him through his journey to life's terminus. (e) Tired of this life of change, he rests here.—Tonks.

(a) All is not gold that glitters. (b) Most haste, worse speed. (c) Failure of the "heart's" action. (d) Sound the loud cymbal. (e) The misfortunes of the many make the fortunes of the few.—Ali Baba.

(a) Death stalked around and chose his victim—the Prime Minister. (b) The whilom conductor now is led—a most unwilling captive. (c) A low comedian had his fling, but he, in time, is flung. (d) Removed from turmoil and from strife, he sleeps a peaceful sleep. (e) Speculators have their day, but Death always claims his pay.—M. E. B.

(a) A Prime Minister: The cabinet-maker has gone to kneel before the carpenter. (b) A 'bus conductor: 'Igher up there, and hon to the Hangel. (c) A low comedian: His first appearance where there is no pit. (d) A railway guard: Transferred from the local to the up train on the main line. A stockbroker: Settlement come, he has carried over and sent in his cheques.—Mac Straube.

(a) In hope of lasting honours from the King of kings. (b) "Conduct him forth in peace."—1 Cor. xvi., 2. (c) The curtain shall rise again on a far more glorious scene. (d) On the route from earth to heaven. (e) In the enjoyment of the safe investment purchased for him.—Notnag.

(a) He has now entered the house of the Lord(s). (b) Who could not survive the last stringent check put upon him. (c) Who, losing his wit, fell into the pit. (d) Gone off by the last express. (e) He is now freed of his bonds.

Epitaphs have been also received from: Speedwell, F. Golders, Lancastrian, Allspice, Etac, Enoch, Irma Lee, Edgcome, Hugo, Coloniensis; Zetus, Mackude, M. M. D., Polly Hopkins, C. W. S., Innocentia, Dottie, W. R. S., Toodles.

PATENT FAST DYED KHAKI MATERIALS.

Absolutely Fast to Washing.
Stand any amount of wear.

Most useful for all kinds of wear
by Ladies, Gentlemen, and Children.

LEEMANN & GATTY'S KHAKI
REGISTERED TRADE MARK.
Contractors to
H.M. WAR OFFICE and INDIA OFFICE.

WOOL.
SERGES.
FLANNELS.
CORDS.
LEG BANDAGES.

COTTON.
DRILLS.
SERGE.
CORDS.

Price List and Patterns Free on application to
E. SPINNER & CO., MANCHESTER AND BOMBAY, Sole Agents.

Shall We Send You a Cat

ALOGUE OF GREENHOUSES from 30s.? BLOCK POULTRY AND RUSTIC HOUSES, IRON BUILDINGS, CHICKEN HOUSE RUNS AND COOPS, TIMBER, IRON, GLASS, AND SUNDRIES.
CLEARANCE SALE NOW ON
at extraordinary Low Prices to clear. Send to-day, as when once cleared, cannot be replaced at anything like the price.
W. COOPER,
Horticultural Provider, 755, Old Kent Rd. London, S.E.

FOR COMPLAINTS of the STOMACH, LIVER, etc., DRINK
VICHY CELESTINS Spring
Sold by all Chemists, Druggists, and Grocers throughout the Kingdom.
Sole Importers: INGRAM & ROYLE, Ltd., 52, Farringdon Street, LONDON, E.C.

SOUTHALL'S PATENT BOOTS.
NO SEAMS OR LACES,
with their disadvantages.
PUT ON IN A MOMENT.
FASTEN QUICKLY AND FIRMLY.
STRAP SUPPORTS THE ANKLE.
Comfort and elegance secured, combined with durability and economy in wear.
Made in all qualities, and for all purposes.
ONCE TRIED ALWAYS WORN.
HUNDREDS OF TESTIMONIALS.
SEND for Catalogue, with designs, prices, and self-measurement forms, direct to the Makers:

SOUTHALL & CO.
Dept. O, 187, Kirkstall Road, LEEDS.
(Please name this paper.)

Genuine Old Welch Dressers

(Inlaid and Carved Oak), from £6. 10s.

ILLUSTRATED PRICED CATALOGUES POST FREE.
ALL GOODS CARRIAGE PAID TO ANY STATION IN GREAT BRITAIN.

HEWETSONS,

TOTTENHAM COURT ROAD, London, W.

FARADAY & SON's

Electric Light Fittings

3, BERNERS ST., LONDON, W.

Quaint Designs from Old Models

SOUND WORKMANSHIP

LIPTON'S TEAS

DIRECT FROM THE GARDENS

NOTE THE PRICES.

FINEST THE WORLD CAN PRODUCE

Per 1/7 lb.

NO HIGHER PRICE.

RICH, PURE, AND FRAGRANT, Per 1/- and 1/4 Lb.

Millions of people are daily drinking and enjoying these delicious Teas, fresh from the sweet-scented Island of Ceylon. Lipton is sole owner of some of the most famous estates in Ceylon, which cover thousands of acres of the best tea-growing land.

Ceylon Offices and Shipping Warehouses:
Prince Street, and Maddema Mills.
Cinnamon Gardens, Colombo.

Visitors to this beautiful Island are cordially invited to call and see over Lipton's Tea and Coffee Warehouses, Maddema Mills, Cinnamon Gardens, Colombo. Those desirous of going up country are also welcome to visit Lipton's Tea, Coffee, and Cocoa Estates, situate high in the hills, where some of the finest Tea can be seen growing at an altitude of about 7,000 feet above sea level.

BUY FROM THE GROWER.

TEA MERCHANT BY SPECIAL APPOINTMENT TO HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

THE LARGEST SALE IN THE WORLD.

£50,513 11 5

represents Duty on over 1,300 Tons of Tea, and is the amount of

THE WORLD'S RECORD DUTY CHEQUE

For TEA, Paid to Her Majesty's Customs, London, By LIPTON,

FOR HIS WEEK'S CLEARANCE.

This speaks for itself, and represents considerably more than half the entire quantity of Tea used per week in the whole of Great Britain.

Indian Offices and Shipping Warehouses:
HARE STREET, CALCUTTA.

LIPTON, TEA, COFFEE, AND COCOA PLANTER, CEYLON.
BRANCHES AND AGENCIES THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.
Chief Offices: CITY ROAD, LONDON, E.C.

THE rapid growth of Hampton & Sons' business during the past few years has necessitated that extensive additions to the Showrooms be made, and in order that these and other important and much-needed developments, consequent upon this growth and upon the conversion of the business into a Limited Company, may be forthwith effected, a great Inaugural Sale IS NOW BEING HELD.

Hampton & Sons Ltd

Great Inaugural Sale. January 1898

SALE NOW RUNNING.

Doors open 9 till 5.

In addition to being a Great Stocktaking Sale with reductions throughout all Departments varying from 25% to 75% the following important Stocks will be cleared

(A) The entire stock of the OLD ENGLISH FURNITURE CO at 25% REDUCTION from prices now marked in plain figures

(B) The entire stock of ORIENTAL CARPETS & SCREENS from the GREAT CITY FIRE at Salvage Prices

(C) A Spitalfields Manufacturer's Stock of rich SILK DAMASKS, BROCADES & OTHER CHOICE FURNISHING FABRICS at less than half price.

(D) Various other stocks as detailed herein, at extraordinary reductions.

For details of Reductions and Extraordinary Bargains in all Departments, such as have been NEVER BEFORE APPROACHED, see Illustrated Sale Catalogue sent free.

DOORS OPEN 9 till 5.

Pall Mall East. S.W.

See special illustrated Sale Catalogue sent free.

See special illustrated Sale Catalogue sent free.

Printed for the Proprietor by LOVE & WYMAN, Limited, Great Queen-st. W.C. and published at 10, Bolt-ct. Fleet-st. E.C. in the Parish of St. Dunstan's-in-the-West, in the City of London. Cheques and Post-office Orders should be made payable to Frederick F. Lowes, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st. Queen Anne's-gate S.W.

· TRUTH ·

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 1098. Vol. XLIII. Thursday, January 13, 1898. Price Sixpence.

NOTICE.

The terms of Subscription to Truth, which are payable in advance, are as follows:—To any address in the United Kingdom, for 3 months, 7s.; 6 months, 14s.; and for 12 months, 28s. The Thin Paper Edition is forwarded to countries within the Postal Union for 3 months for 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; and 12 months, 30s. 8d. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to the Manager, Truth, "Truth Building," Carteret-street, S.W.

ENTRE NOUS.

On pages 98-100 of this issue will be found the List of Prizes awarded in connection with the Truth Toy and Doll Show, lately held at the Albert Hall. It will be remembered that about three weeks ago Major Glubb wrote to me to say that his wife was willing to offer a valuable dog for sale for the benefit of the Truth Toy Fund. Several bids were subsequently made for the animal in question, a small black French poodle (bitch), three years old, of unexceptionable pedigree, and I am pleased to be able to announce that Lieut. Walter E. Elliot, of H.M.S. Mars, has now become its possessor for the sum of £10. This amount will, in accordance with Mrs. Glubb's kind wish, be carried to the credit of the Truth Toy Fund.

A formal acknowledgment was made last week of the sum of £5 which had been received for the Afridi Doll sent to me from the Indian frontier by Lieut. C. E. Macquoid, 1st Lancers H.C. I may say that the Doll was purchased by Miss Hill, a lady who, in giving such a sum for an article of which the intrinsic value was at the most but a few pence, must evidently have been desirous of making a generous contribution to the Truth Toy Fund. Undoubtedly, however, as a relic of the war still in progress on the North-Western Frontier of India, the Afridi Doll possesses an almost unique interest, seeing that its genuineness is above suspicion. Other sums received by me for the Truth Toy Fund since last week are as follows:—

A. Z., £9; White Violet, £1. 1s.; H. O. D., £1. 1s.; P. D. P., £1; W. H. R., £1; Lieut. Walter E. Elliot (for Black Poodle), £10.

It is possible that the Queen may return to England at the end of April through Germany, in order that her Majesty may be present at the wedding of her eldest great-grandchild, Princess Feodore of Saxe-Meiningen, and Prince Henry XXX. of Reuss. This marriage was to have taken place at Potsdam, but if the Queen attends the ceremony, it will be celebrated at Kronberg, and her Majesty is to be the guest of the Empress Frederick at Friedrichshof, her château on the Taunus Hills.

The Prince of Wales will hold a Levee at St. James's Palace a few days after the meeting of Parliament, and there is to be a second Levee before Easter, which will probably be held by the Duke of Connaught or the Duke of York.

The Prince and Princess of Wales are to represent the Queen at the Coronation of the Queen of the Netherlands, which will take place at the Hague early in September, directly after the celebration of her Majesty's eighteenth birthday, when she comes of age officially.

Some of the daily papers have been "doing" the Royal visit to Chatsworth in wonderful style. For example, it was decidedly funny to read of the Duke of Devonshire's "extensive moors" having been "carefully reserved" for the Prince of Wales, inasmuch as people do not usually shoot grouse in January. As a matter of fact, the annual grouse shooting at Chatsworth—which is not of much account—takes place in November, as the Duke is always at Bolton Priory in August. Then we were told of the "crack of the rifles" in the park, as if it was likely that any such weapon would be used for shooting pheasants. Some descriptive writers appear to be under the impression that pheasants are found on moors, and that partridges are sought in the woods.

Princess Louise is next week to be the guest of the Duke and Duchess of Westminster at Eaton Hall, and H.R.H. will fulfil public engagements at Shrewsbury, Birkenhead, and Liverpool during her visit to Cheshire.

Prince and Princess Charles of Denmark, who have been residing for two months at Appleton House, their place near Sandringham, have returned to Copenhagen. They will stay in Denmark until after Whitsuntide, and are then coming back to England to spend the London season at Marlborough House, with the Prince and Princess of Wales. The King of Denmark has placed one of the smaller Royal palaces in Copenhagen at the disposal of Prince and Princess Charles, who resided last winter in a flat in the palace of the King of the Hellenes.

The St. James's Gazette contrives to make an astonishing number of blunders in its account of last year's changes in the Household. It states that "the Lordship-in-Waiting held by Lord Kintore has been given to Lord Denbigh." As a matter of fact, Lord Denbigh replaced Lord Ranfurly, and Lord Kintore is still a Lord-in-Waiting. It is quite untrue that "a new office of Assistant Keeper and Assistant Private Secretary has been made," no such post having been established. Colonel Carington and Lieutenant Ponsonby, who are two of the Equerries-in-Ordinary, assist Sir Arthur Bigge in his duties as Private Secretary to the Queen whenever there is a pressure of work, but there is no new office. Then the St. James's states that Sir Fleetwood Edwards "has been obliged to relinquish the duties of an extra Groom-in-Waiting." There are no duties of any sort or kind annexed to this post, which is merely a complimentary sinecure. An "extra" official in any department of the Household has neither pay nor work.

Lord Harris and Mr. Alexander Yorke will next Tuesday replace Lord Clarendon and Captain Walter Campbell as the Lord and Groom-in-Waiting on the Queen. Sir Arthur Bigge and Lieutenant Ponsonby are the Equerries on duty at Osborne this month.

Lord Lathom's health has much improved during the last fortnight, and he has given up his intention of resigning the office of Lord Chamberlain. He will be represented by Lord Pembroke at the Court functions before Easter, and Sir Spencer Ponsonby Fane is to act as his locum tenens in the administrative business of the department. Lord Lathom and his daughters are going to Madeira for a month.

The Pall Mall Gazette is entirely wrong in stating that Lieutenant-General Godfrey Clark, who has succeeded Sir Lynedoch Gardiner as Groom-in-Waiting to the Queen, "has been for many years Equerry to Princess Beatrice, and was from the time of the landing of the Prince, Equerry to the late Prince Henry of Battenberg." This is a farrago of fictions. General Godfrey Clark has never held any Court post whatever. It is Colonel John Clark who is Comptroller and Equerry to Princess Beatrice, and he was Equerry to the late Prince Henry. It is understood that Colonel Clark will presently replace Sir Spencer Ponsonby-Fane at the Lord Chamberlain's office.

If Sir Edward Bond was regarded as worthy of the distinction of being created a K.C.B., it is a great pity that he was not promoted when he left the British Museum, instead of the Government recognition of his services being postponed for nearly ten years, and coming to him, in fact, only the day before he died. Bis dat qui cito dat is certainly the right principle for Ministers who have honours to dispense to aged officials. Sir Edward Bond served in the Museum for fifty years, and he was Keeper of the MSS. for twelve years before he succeeded Mr. Winter Jones as principal librarian, an office which was not offered to him until after it had been refused by Sir Charles Newton. Sir Edward Bond introduced many important and valuable reforms at the Museum, and he will be gratefully remembered by thousands of readers and students as having established the electric light in the library. Sir Edward entirely reorganised the MSS. department of the Museum.

Commander Jones, who died last week in his ninety ninth year, could clearly remember seeing Nelson's funeral procession, and he was well acquainted with many officers who had taken a prominent part in the great war. Commander Jones entered the Navy in 1812, and he was engaged in the hostilities with the French off Toulon. He served for long in the Mediterranean, in South America, and in the East Indies, and was known as an excellent and gallant officer; but those were the worst days of favouritism, and he was not backed by any powerful interest, so that he was most unlucky in his promotion.

Mr. Munro-Ferguson is going to manage a wood of 2,000 acres on his Raith estate in Fifeshire on the system which has been successfully adopted in the German and French State Forests. It was Sir Walter Scott who put the idea of extensive planting into the heads of Scotch proprietors, and towards the close of his life he expressed the opinion that zeal for planting was all very well, but he would like to see a little more care in the management of the woods.

English travellers in Italy, especially in the south, are always painfully struck by the absolute indifference which the Italian of the "lower orders" evinces to the feelings of animals. Letters on the subject are continually reaching TRUTH office, but foreign criticism is rarely effectual in cases of this kind, and often does more harm than good. Can anything be done? I have just had a letter, which seems to answer this question, from an Englishman at Naples. He points out that the blame for the prevailing state of things really rests upon the priests, who are not only utterly callous in regard to the sufferings of animals, but expressly teach that "animals are not Christians," and have no claim on Christian sympathy or charity. It is owing to this religious teaching that all attempts to check cruelty to animals in Southern Italy have been so futile, and my correspondent contends that the law, however stringent it might be, must be absolutely powerless to protect animals until the attitude of the priests is changed. It is therefore suggested that those who feel strongly on this subject should approach the Pope himself, who by a single word, or a single stroke of the pen, could probably do more than any other agency is likely to accomplish in the course of years and by the

---

For the TRUTH HOTEL LIST, see page 110 in the present issue.
For HOSPITALS and APPEALS, see page 109.
For AMUSEMENTS, see page 111.
For OUR PUZZLES, see page 121.

unlimited expenditure of money. As there are many, Italians as well as English, who feel keenly on the subject, and among them, doubtless, many good Catholics, this suggestion may be worth noting.

Here is another case furnished to me in illustration of the flimsy ground on which the muzzling order is introduced into particular localities. A woman occupying a cottage in a Devonshire village had a dog, and on her going to call her lodger early one morning, the dog went in with her and attacked the man, and, as he asserted, bit him. A cry of "mad dog" was raised, a gun obtained, and the dog shot. A local "vet." declared that the dog was not mad, but on the strength of this case the muzzling order was imposed in the district. A lady whose name, if I were permitted to give it, would be a guarantee for a thorough knowledge of everything relating to the animal world, tells me that, although she has lived in the country for forty years, she has never heard of a case of rabies during that period. My own impression is that the present regulation muzzle is of little efficacy in checking the spread of rabies, and calculated to do quite as much harm as good. But, quite apart from this, it has undoubtedly been imposed in many parts of the country on the most insufficient and defective information, and without the slighest real cause.

The Spectator continues to furnish its readers with the most astounding stories of the sagacity of animals. In the latest case to hand a fox is described as having hypnotised a pheasant, while it was sitting on a tree, by walking rapidly round the tree until the hapless bird became dazed, and fell into the jaws of the intelligent quadruped. It would seem from this that our old friend the fox has been studying in the school of Professor Charcot. There is an old story, which doubtless some of my readers have heard, of a method of capturing owls by walking round them in the same way. The owl fixes his eyes on the hunter, and as the latter marches round the tree the bird turns his head to follow him, until it eventually wrings his own neck. That a man should have the intelligence to capture his prey in this manner is not surprising, but when it comes to a fox, it does seem rather a large order on one's credulity.

The following suggestive communication was received the other day by a nurse who was, at the time, engaged upon a somewhat critical case. The writer is a pushful undertaker at the West End, whose name some of my readers may remember. One has heard before now of doctors of a certain class taking commissions from undertakers. If nurses are working in the same way, a new terror is added to existence. It might be as well, at any rate, for parties engaging nurses to inquire if they know Halford Mills, and to act accordingly:—

From Halford L. Mills, London.

To NURSE ——,

Please send me a note at your convenience, and let me know how things have been with you since last I heard from you or met you. I hope you are still nursing, finding plenty of work, and that you will remember that I am always ready for business and at your service.

Having had some considerable experience of journalism, I am extremely reluctant to ventilate in TRUTH complaints of disappointed competitors in puzzle competitions in other newspapers. One recent case, however, in regard to which I have been favoured with a vast amount of correspondence really seems to call for a word of notice. It relates to a competition advertised for some months in the latter part of last year by my contemporary Answers. The problem was to solve the names of various British authors pictorially represented, and the prizes offered were:—(1) A fifty guinea piano, by John Brimsmead & Sons; (2) a "highest grade" bicycle by another firm; (3) a typewriter of the latest pattern; (4) a £10 note; and beyond this thirty prizes of 10s. It was further expressly notified, and this is the strongest point in the case, that if more than one correct list were sent in, the prizes, or their value, would be divided. Notwithstanding this notification, it was announced on December 4 that, as 933 correct results had been received, and a division of the money would result in each one receiving about 2s., the editor had "decided to select the neatest lists." On this basis the awards of all the prizes were published. A hope was expressed that the course taken would "give general satisfaction;" but I am in a position to say that this hope has certainly not been realised, for I have received about fifty letters from successful competitors who strongly resent the course taken, and even go so far as to suggest that they have been defrauded.

What else could be expected, I really do not see. It having been expressly announced that in the event of a "tie" the money value would be divided, every competitor who sent in the right answer was entitled to two shillings. A person who is entitled to receive two shillings is not likely to be satisfied with less than that amount. No stipulation was made for "neatness," and the editor has no more right to award a prize on that basis than to give it to a competitor who used a particular coloured ink. In order not to do any injustice, I sent to Mr. Harmsworth to hear what justification he could offer of such an arbitrary proceeding, but the Mr. Harmsworth whom my representative has had the pleasure of seeing, so far from being able to justify what had been done, seemed rather to share my representative's views, that it was not altogether fair. Under these circumstances, I think I must agree with those competitors who have complained on the subject, that they have been somewhat unfairly treated.

I am sorry to say this, because nobody who knows the proprietor of Answers would doubt that he desires to deal fairly and honourably with the readers of his paper. Such unscrupulous and wholesale frauds, however, are perpetrated on the public in the form of prize competitions, that it seems extremely desirable that those run in respectable newspapers should be conducted in a manner above criticism. Another singular fact in connection with this case is that the published address of the winner of the "first-class typewriter" is a mere accommodation address in the Caledonian-road, and the prize-winner is not to be found there. I understand from Mr. Harmsworth that the prize, for which an order has been sent to the address of the winner, has never yet been claimed, but that does not make the matter less mysterious.

"THE DINNER TABLE."—A large pattern book sent (postage 3d.), containing samples of the newest & most exquisite designs in Table Damasks.—IMPERIAL LINEN CO., 42, Wilson-st. Finsbury, London.

In a six-column article devoted, in last month's Bookman, to the family of Harmsworth and its publications, the remark is attributed to Mr. Alfred Harmsworth that he rarely engages anybody over twenty-one years of age. Nothing succeeds like success, and possibly the prosperous condition of the Harmsworth enterprises may be due to the extreme youth of the staff employed. Looking at the above case, however, it has occurred to me that possibly if some one who has reached years of discretion were entrusted with the delicate business of awarding competition prizes, the prosperity of the Harmsworth journals might be even yet enhanced.

The Daily Chronicle has taken the field with its usual energy in support of the movement for the acquisition of the Crystal Palace by the State. The Chronicle finds that nearly all the representative Londoners whom it has consulted are in the abstract in favour of this scheme, when it is put as the alternative to the prospect of the Palace being pulled down and its site covered with suburban villas. In the abstract, I suppose there are few who would not take the same side. When, however, we come to concrete details, strong differences of opinion are likely to arise. While I should be sorry to see the Palace disappear, I should be sorry to see the British taxpayer relieving the shareholders of a white elephant at the price of the ordinary-coloured and more serviceable animal.

The Chronicle hints that the Directors are prepared to sell at about half the nominal capital value of the concern. What, however, we have to fear is that as soon as a purchaser with a long purse appears in the field Crystal Palace stock will go up, and the views of the Directors will expand in proportion. If there is any immediate probability of the Palace being closed and the site sold on building leases, it is clear that no public authority ought to give much more for it than the site value, plus the value of the buildings as old iron and glass. Is there any prospect of a deal on these terms? From what I can make out as to the position of the Company, I should think that a good way of going to work would be for the Government to buy up the debentures, and foreclose at the first opportunity.

The United States will shortly be flooded with cheap reprints of Motley's "Rise of the Dutch Republic," as the copyright in that work has just expired. Motley's brilliant book originally appeared in 1855, and American law only protects a work for forty-two years from the period of its publication. It is satisfactory to find that a book of this character is still so popular, for the demand for it is so brisk and so steady that a number of editions are already advertised, besides an abridgment, in which Motley's three volumes are condensed into one.

I seem to have hurt the feelings of an Irish doctor very much by remarking, about a month ago, that actors are so far as I knew, the only profession who ever give their time and work in the cause of charity; and after nursing his wrath for three weeks, the aggrieved medico has written to tell me that the remark is "grossly unfair and thoughtless." Many doctors, he points out, are working every day for "the relief of suffering humanity in the large hospitals of great cities." By all means let the doctors have all possible credit for this devotion. It is often no doubt genuinely philanthropic; but I must say that a great deal of hospital work is also done for purposes of professional advancement, or for the benefit of the experience it affords. So true is this, that many hospitals have been founded largely for the advantage of medical men, and I am familiar (and so are most of my readers) with a notorious case where a so-called "medical charity" was founded and run for years by a London doctor, obviously for advertising purposes.

However, I have no objection to qualify my remarks about the actors, for what I had in my mind when writing the obnoxious paragraph was, not so much the general philanthropy of actors, as their never-failing readiness to come to the assistance of distressed members of their own profession and their dependants. The paragraph was written with special reference to a performance for a professional charity. Another case in point may now be seen in the forthcoming benefit performance for Miss Nellie Farren. In this respect I still think the actors are unique.

We seem to be progressing in educational matters, as far as the qualifications required of assistant masters are concerned, if one may judge by the printed particulars of an appointment at a school in Derbyshire. The candidate must be "a Christian and a gentleman," of punctual and business-like habits, sound physique, good health, and free from weakness of eyes, ears, voice, &c., a graduate of a recognised teaching institution, "intending to follow Teaching as his Life Work," "prepared to devote his whole time to the educational work of the School," and

"HÔTEL BURLINGTON," AT SUNNY BOSCOMBE. (200 rooms). Every luxury. Delightful grounds. Magnificent golf links. Sea water baths. Moderate charges.—Bournemouth East Station.

CHILDREN OF ALL AGES who enjoy innocent mirth and harmless laughter, and at the same time desire to forward a good work among sick and miserable Waif Children, should be sure to attend the Royal Albert Hall on Saturday afternoon next, the 15th inst., at 3 o'clock, when the Young Helpers' League are going to let loose in the arena the recalcitrant "Cow that Jumped over the Moon," Ha! Ha!! Ha!!! Prices of Admission from 1s. to 7s. 6d. per seat.

a non-smoker and teetotaller for choice. He must be able to teach (1) French ("thorough command of the spoken and written language"), French geography, history, and literature ("with practical knowledge of France itself"); (2) Mathematics, including practical and theoretical geometry, mensuration and engineering, physics and dynamics, practical surveying, and elementary drawing. It is "desirable" that he should be able to teach elementary Latin, and English geography, history, and language; while singing, good cricket, and shorthand would be "useful." While this points to progressive ideas in one direction, it would hardly seem that we are getting on so well in the remuneration of teachers, for the paragon who obtains the post is to receive not less than £100 a year, if untrained, or £140 if a trained man, and is to be engaged only from term to term, with no obligation on the other side to give more than a day's notice before the end of term if he is not to be re-engaged. Considering the capital expenditure required in order to enter it, it is open to question whether it is not a better investment to bring up a boy as an omnibus driver than to a profession where the conditions of employment are such as the above. But, of course, teaching is more genteel, and one cannot be genteel without paying for it.

In reference to what was said in last week's TRUTH respecting the exclusion of a headmistress from employment in elementary schools after fifty years of age, I am told that in the case of high schools, endowed secondary schools, and others of the same class, it is most difficult for a headmistress to obtain a fresh post after thirty-five years of age, no matter how successful she may have been, or how good her credentials. My informant states that thirty-five is often fixed as the maximum age in advertisements, or in inquiring after candidates, and is tacitly understood in the educational world as the limit for admitting a headmistress to a new post. I must say that it seems to me that such a limitation is absolutely idiotic At thirty-five any person, male or female, unless in very exceptional cases, has arrived at the full maturity of intellectual power, and for a post like that of director of an educational institution, where tact and experience are the first qualifications, a master or mistress over thirty-five years of age would be, to my mind, infinitely preferable to one under. This view is certainly acted on in the case of men, and why should there be a different rule in that of women?

After all the elaborate fuss that was raised about the Lambeth Conference, and the enthusiastic hysterics of the Church papers, it really seems to have been a complete and ignominious failure, for all practical purposes. The American and Australian prelates have been expressing themselves with remarkable candour on the question of the Archbishop of Canterbury's proposed supremacy, and they all appear to be most decided in their opposition. There is a good deal of flummery about a "willing and loyal recognition" of the Primacy of the Archbishop, but these Bishops are emphatic in repudiating his Grace's supremacy, and anything else is mere fiddle-faddle. If a prelate who was a wide-minded statesman (such as Tait or Magee) had presided over the Conference, the result would probably have been more satisfactory.

Canon Fleming is to preach at the Chapel Royal, St. James's Palace, on Sunday next, and Canon Teignmouth Shore will occupy the pulpit on the 23rd. The next vacancy among the Queen's Chaplains-in-Ordinary will be filled by Prebendary Turner. The Queen now has three special chaplains, who are never called upon for any duty—Dean Liddell (who is the sole survivor of Prince Albert's ecclesiastical household), the Provost of Eton (Dr. Hornby), and the Headmaster of Eton (Dr. Warre). Dean Farrar, who has replaced the Rev. W. Rowe Jolley as Deputy Clerk of the Closet-in-Waiting, will be nominally on duty until April 1, when Canon Dalton (who succeeded Dean Vaughan) comes into attendance (merely on paper) for four months.

Archdeacon Fitzgerald is to be succeeded, both as Archdeacon of Wells and as Vicar of South Brent, by Prebendary Salmon, who has been one of the best known, most popular, most useful, and most influential clergymen in the diocese of Bath and Wells for the last quarter of a century. Bishop Kennion has made an excellent appointment, and it is one which will please both the clergy and the laity of the diocese. It is satisfactory to find a prelate thus recognising hard and valuable work in a practical way. Prebendary Salmon is not only an excellent parish clergyman, but also an admirable preacher and a first-rate man of business. Ten years ago he was removed by Lord Arthur Hervey from Martock (where he had been vicar for twenty-one years) to Weston-super-Mare, where he replaced Canon Buckle.

The Archbishop of York, in his New Year Pastoral insists strongly upon the necessity of personal contact between the clergy and individual members of their flocks, and deplores the "tendency to growing neglect of pastoral visitation" Possibly his Grace had in his mind when penning these words the notorious case of the Vicar of Scarborough, who, with one of the largest parishes in the diocese, is only present among his flock for brief intervals during the year. By a curious coincidence the number of the Yorkshire Post which contains the Archbishop's Pastoral also contains the announcement that "the Bishop of Hull will deliver a course of lectures in the Ladye Chapel of York Minster during Lent."

BEXHILL-ON-SEA.—The Mentone of England.—THE SACKVILLE HOTEL, an ideal winter and spring residence. Special inclusive terms till Easter. For tariff, &c., apply to Manager.

ST. ERMIN'S, Victoria-st., Westminster, this high-class residential Hotel, especially suitable for families coming to London to enjoy the Xmas festivities. Handy for Theatres & Army & Navy Stores.

The Vicar of a parish near Chelmsford inserts a notice in his parish almanack that marriages cannot be celebrated either on Sundays or Christmas-day. Unless I am mistaken, a refusal to marry on these days is absolutely illegal, and the Vicar ought to be aware of this. A resident in the neighbourhood, calling my attention to this fact, remarks that if the Vicar had merely published an expression of his wish that his parishioners would not ask him to celebrate marriages either on Sundays or Christmas-day, it would probably have had the desired effect, whereas the publication of a notice which is contrary to the law is extremely likely to provoke opposition. There seems to be some fatality which always compels the clergy, where there is a right and a wrong way of doing a thing, to choose the latter in preference to the former. This is, of course, largely due to the fact that too many of them, especially in the country, regard themselves as the autocrats of their parishes in all matters ecclesiastical.

Talking of the eccentricities of parsons, here are some strange utterances of a suburban vicar in a letter to his parishioners. His reverence begins by asking permission, "with his garrulous pen," to say a few words about a recent Mission. After thanking the Bishop "for the shove-off he gave the boat at the outset," he pays the following mysterious compliments to the Missioners :—

> A more genial and loveable set of men I never met. They put up so patiently with our dismal shortcomings, domestic and other. . . . . Perhaps they ought to have been severer with me about some things, but there could not have been a more energetic firm of exchangers to whom an idle servant might entrust his one talent for more lucrative use in the great Bank of the Church. . . . .

After much more in a similar style, the good man concludes with an exhortation to "make the best and most of what we have, without gummidging." The gentleman to whom I am indebted for a glimpse of this document says that it is the first hint of any interest in his soul's welfare that he has received from the vicar during six years' residence in the parish. I can only recommend him to make the most of it, without gummidging.

There is a further interesting incident which may be added to the account given in last week's TRUTH of the relations between the squire and parson of Compton-Chamberlayne. In his capacity of patron, Mr. Penruddocke has suddenly invoked the authority of the Bishop for the purpose of compelling the incumbent to carry out certain repairs at the vicarage. The Bishop, if he had the will, has probably not the power to refuse, but he has kindly given the Vicar the opportunity of saving the expense of a surveyor's inspection by carrying out the desired repairs at once. A pleasant little Christmas-box this for a poor man struggling to keep up the position of a parish priest on something under £2 a a week! One can only suppose from the action of the village autocrat that his desire is to drive the Vicar into resigning his living, and probably this desire would have been realised long ago, if the Vicar had seen any prospect before him but that of stepping out of the frying-pan into the fire. There must be many patrons of livings in England who are sometimes at a loss for a suitable man on whom to bestow their patronage. It would be a kindness, indeed, if any one in that position would rescue the Vicar of Compton-Chamberlayne from his embarrassing position. Why does not the Bishop of Salisbury, with this scandal right under his nose, adopt this kindly and sensible means of terminating it?

Here is another example of the "intolerable strain" which Queen's Anne's Bounty imposes upon the country clergy under present circumstances. A rector who has held two different livings in Northamptonshire, the first of which was under £100 in annual value, had to pay on entering into possession £10. 10s. for first-fruits, followed by a subsequent annual payment of £1. 5s. as tenths. For the privilege of holding his present living, which amounts to barely £150 a year, he has had to pay to Queen Anne's Bounty in the first year £20. 9s. 8d. for first-fruits and tenths, which is to be followed by an annual charge of nearly £2 as tenths. All this, of course, is in addition to the exorbitant fees charged by episcopal officials on institution, about which the public has already heard a great deal. It really does seem a monstrous thing that a fund like Queen Anne's Bounty, ostensibly intended for quasi-charitable purposes, should be converted into an instrument of remorseless oppression, and the discredit for this state of things rests largely upon the higher ecclesiastics who figure on the governing board of the fund. Those reverend dignitaries are like the Scribes and Pharisees of the Bible. They lay on the shoulders of their humbler brethren burdens grievous to to be borne, but they themselves will not move them with one of their fingers.

It is almost superfluous to explain that the following advertisement is taken from a religious journal. Only in a religious journal would anybody have the assurance to offer a "handy man" who is to be a clerk-cook, carpenter, porter, phonographer, and photographer all rolled into one, for the munificent wage of 8s. a week and his board :—

> WANTED, a HANDY MAN, single, between 20 and 30, in a house as an extra. Willing to turn his hand to anything, or willing to learn. Any one who knows anything of one or more of the following accomplishments may apply:—Typewriting, shorthand, carpentering, cooking, porter's work, waiting at table, book-keeping, keeping of accounts, letter-writing, photography. The knowledge of shorthand and good accountant essential. 8s. a week, board, lodging, and washing offered. Any one accustomed to Evangelistic work, a Christian, and an abstainer appreciated. Must be energetic and clever. An ex-soldier preferred. . . . .

THE LONDON HOSPITAL, E., APPEALS FOR SUBSCRIPTIONS. This Hospital for Men, Women, and Children, is the great General Hospital for the toiling poor of East London, & help is sorely needed.

The Maximum of Effect at the Minimum of Cost.—An Object Lesson in Decorating and Furnishing can be obtained by inspecting Messrs. WARING'S Suites of furnished rooms at 175-181, Oxford-st. W

The new regulations with regard to the extension of Service and the rejoining of Reserve men in the Guards are not only good in themselves, but promise well for the changes which we may expect to see shortly in the corresponding regulations throughout the Army, or, at any rate, the infantry regiments. A bounty of £2 is offered to men extending their service from three to seven or seven to twelve years; and a limited number of Reservists are to be permitted to rejoin without refunding deferred pay or gratuities, with free kits allowed, and the right to resume good conduct badges and (with the C.O.'s permission) former rank.

Now I should like to know why a similar system of service to this cannot be extended to the whole Army. Why cannot all men be (1) enlisted for three years' service at home with the colours, and a further period in the Reserve or Militia (their age being proved, not taken for granted); (2) allowed to re-engage for a further term of five years abroad, with gratuity or increase of pay (whichever is found the more efficacious); (3) and then either be sent to the Reserve or Militia (the latter for choice because it is trained annually), or allowed to complete twenty-one years, with a pension at the end of it, and the right to return to the Home battalion after a specified number of years' service? If an arrangement of this kind were combined with the abolition of deferred pay, and full liberty to either three or eight years' men to rejoin the colours within a certain time after discharge to the Reserve or Militia, we should get over the difficulty of combining long and short service, and we should considerably raise the average age of our soldiers whether at home or abroad.

I trust that the Government scheme of Army re-organisation, whatever else it may or may not contain, will do something to remedy the deplorable condition of the Army Medical Staff. This is a matter on which the welfare of the whole Army depends, and unless energetic measures are taken, it would become a matter of the gravest importance in the event of a real war. Somebody connected with the Department has just issued a statement which, though it has a sensational ring about it, embodies, I believe, nothing but authentic facts. Here are a few of them:—

The Department is one hundred officers under strength; the Home roster is two years. Foreign service indefinite; leave impossible, and study leave a farce. . . . . In other branches as a man becomes senior, his administrative abilities may be utilised and his work and experience varied. A Medical Officer with Field rank is detailed to perform the same duties as a last-joined subaltern. . . . .

The Army Medical Staff are charged with ignorance. . . . . At present there is no allowance for language leave, study leave, or ordinary leave, as to other Officers, and with the large amount of banishment on Foreign and Field service, how can a Medical Officer keep himself au courant with modern knowledge? . . . .

It is, at least, remarkable that no Medical Officer has ever been so foolish as to put a son into the Army Medical Staff. . . . .

To further render the life of the Medical Officer in the Army intolerable, besides social and official snubs, he has frequent silly changes of uniform which are costly and senseless; his tours of foreign service are onerous in the extreme (at least fifteen out of twenty years), endless moves of station, which ruin him in pocket and do not add to efficiency in work. He is not considered an officer at all until it suits the Military Authorities to quote his honorary rank on a question of discipline; and lastly, his professional career may be ruined in an adverse "confidential" report by a so-called combatant officer, against which he has no redress, as Section 42 of the Army Act, 1881, is useless. . . . .

A correspondent of the British Medical Journal calls attention to a recent order of the P.M.O., India, in which the Medical Staff are again singled out for exceptional and unfavourable treatment. The order in question requires that every Medical Officer sent back to India on account of ill-health shall be brought before a Medical Board and the proceedings forwarded to the P.M.O.'s office. As no such requirement is imposed on combatant officers under the same circumstances, the implication would seem to be either that the P.M.O. considers the Medical Staff at the front are malingering, or that the supply is so short that, notwithstanding failing health, the men at the front must be frightened if possible from coming back. Neither of these readings of the order is likely to improve the present feeling of the Medical Staff, or to encourage the supply of recruits.

I publish the following extract which has been sent to me from an officer's letter from the North-West Frontier, in view of the bearing which the concluding paragraph seems to have upon the remark of a previous correspondent on the way staff appointments are obtained in India:—

As you see, we are still in this place, but, with any luck, ought to know in a few days what they are going to do.

They have made a mess of this business, as I dare say you have seen from the papers, and, as far as killed and wounded go, the enemy have given us as much as we have given them. Of course we have burnt their villages, &c., but when there is plenty of wood and labour cheap, this does not do them much harm. However, we have the satisfaction of knowing that they are being frozen now, and that their food is getting pretty short. [Highly satisfactory!—ED. TRUTH.]

They ought to weed out some of these useless old Generals, who have only reached their present position by having pretty wives with amusing parlour tricks.

My attention has been called to another case of fraud and robbery in the Royal Engineers, which came to light last month, but had escaped my notice. In this instance a corporal was court-martialled for embezzlement and forgery at Milldam Barracks, and was sentenced to six months' imprisonment and reduction to the ranks. Cases of this character seem to occur with the regularity of clockwork. For my own part, I do not believe that the N.C.O.s in the Royal Engineers are worse specimens of human nature than are to be found in other ranks of life. The reason for these repeated scandals must rather be looked for in the rottenness of the system under which the men do their work, and the absence of effectual supervision. It is this alone which makes the difference between the conduct of employees in responsible positions in the Royal Engineers and those in similar positions in business houses.

A good instance of the slights put upon the Marines when they are at sea comes from the Mediterranean. Two or three weeks back a party of seven N.C.O.s (five sergeants) on board the Royal Sovereign were being regularly put through "physical drill" under a second-class petty officer. The men are said to have known this drill well, and it is highly improbable that any five sergeants in the Royal Marines would not do so. But even if there had been any necessity for putting them through the drill, that is no excuse for putting a second-class petty officer in command of them, and humiliating them before the whole ship's company.

THE FAMED "ADELPHI" TURTLE forwarded from the Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool, to all parts of the country. Per quart jar, 18s. per pint jar, 9s. 6d., carriage paid.

Here is the other side of the case with regard to the requirement of first-class education certificates for the promotion of clerks in the Army Service Corps :—

Any clerk should be able to obtain a first-class certificate. It requires a good deal of study, but a good many clerks, sooner than give up a few hours pleasure, will not go to school, and in consequence see themselves passed over. First-class certificates of education are by no means uncommon in the Supply Branch, A.S.C., and in my opinion a clerk who cannot pass the examination, or will not take the trouble, is unfit to be an N.C.O. in the administrative branch of the Service.

I may add that I have five years' service, am in possession of the first-class certificate, and am fully qualified as a clerk, but am still waiting for the lance stripe, and mine is by no means an isolated case. This altogether contradicts the statement that mere recruits with first-class certificates jump over old soldiers with second-class certificates only.

A few weeks back an artilleryman in a company stationed at Allahabad was brought before his C.O. for a minor offence. Before he came up, the sergeant-major added a second count to the indictment. This irritated the prisoner, who, when he came before the C.O., protested that "they would not give him a fair chance to soldier." On this the C.O. enlarged the indictment by adding the further crime of "impertinence," and awarded his man fourteen days' C.B. and the loss of a good conduct badge. Feeling more aggrieved than ever, the soldier then appealed, was remanded for a district court-martial, and eventually got sixty-eight days' imprisonment. I narrate this history primarily as a warning to soldiers that it is better to bear the ills they have, than fly to others that they know not of. At the same time, it is not altogether consonant with justice that a prisoner should have an increased punishment because, in a fit of temper, he makes a disparaging remark about his prosecutor, and there seems no justice at all in awarding a man sixty-eight days' imprisonment for an offence which his Commanding Officer had previously thought sufficiently punished by fourteen days' C.B. It is quite clear that this long term of imprisonment was awarded as a punishment to the man for appealing, and to discourage others from taking the same course. This is absolutely wrong.

By the way, in the above case, the prisoner's sectional officer, who was called as a witness in the case, was a member of the Court. Surely, this is not in accordance with the regulations. If it is, it is only another instance in which military procedure is totally at variance with civil ideas of justice.

During the last year or two, I have noticed that complaints have become more and more frequent from battalions in India on the subject of young N.C.O.s coming out from home and blocking the promotion of men senior to themselves. For instance, in one battalion it would seem that for some years past men have served, on the average, eighteen months to two years as unpaid lance-corporals, and two and a half to three years more as paid lance-corporals; that is to say, four or five years in the lance rank before becoming full blown corporals; while several full corporals have come out with drafts who have not had more than a couple of years' service altogether.

This, I suppose, is an incidental result of the juvenility of the Home battalions, about which we have heard so much lately. While that state of things prevails, that is to say, while a corporal in the Home battalion has not on an average more than a quarter or one-third of the service that a corporal has in the foreign battalion, it is obviously unfair that the second battalion should have these youngsters foisted upon it. The corporals should be kept at home until they have matured. Indeed, the only fair way all round would be to keep them at home permanently; and if it is necessary to put some one in authority during the voyage out, let the rank be given temporarily. Perhaps, when Lord Lansdowne is re-adjusting the linked battalions, he may see some way of getting over this difficulty.

I have got into hot water with the Warrant Officers of the machinist electricians, R.E., in consequence of a paragraph referring to them in TRUTH of December 30. In view of particulars which have been given me of the service of the six men concerned, I cheerfully admit that they have some cause for complaint. With one exception, they all seem to have done a very respectable share of foreign service, and looking at the length of their entire service—again with one possible exception—a junior must certainly be very impatient who wants to get rid of them in order to expedite his own promotion. I would advise the aggrieved juniors to wait until their turn for warrant rank, when their views as to the length of time which a warrant officer should be allowed to serve, and the amount of foreign service he ought to put in, will probably undergo modification.

In my desire to do justice to the Royal Engineers, I last week apportioned, to the best of my ability, the blame for the recent fire at Dover Castle between them and the Army Service Corps. I am now told, however, that I have been far too tender to the Royal Engineers. The fire was undoubtedly caused by a defective flue, for which the Army Service Corps are not responsible. On the contrary, both the construction of the chimneys and their quarterly inspection is a duty resting with the Royal Engineers. I am also told that the Army Service Corps have no special responsibility in connection with the sweeping of chimneys, and this also seems to be correct. The matter is dealt with in sec. xv., par. 66 of the Queen's Regulations, where the Army Service Corps is not mentioned in any way. I take it that the duty of chimney-sweeping rests upon the corps occupying the barracks, and that all that the Army Service Corps can have to do with it is to make the contracts and pass the accounts on the certificate of the quartermaster, or his representative. And now, as my R.E. correspondent said last week, "Palmam qui meruit ferat."

For Truth, and all other Newspapers, Magazines, and Periodicals, send your Subscriptions to WM. DAWSON & SONS, Ltd., Cannon House, Bream's-bldngs., London. (Estab. 1809.) Catalogue gratis.

Colchester being one of our principal garrison towns, the following advertisement, which appeared in the East Anglian Daily Times, has naturally caused a good deal of annoyance in the locality :—

WANTED, good sober Stableman and Strapper in job yard; no ex-soldiers.—Rayner & Son, Colchester.

Messrs. Rayner & Son are evidently unmoved by the special appeals that have lately been made to employers of labour to find work for discharged soldiers. It might be worth the while of the military authorities who have been looking into the question of civil employment for soldiers to inquire the reason for the objection thus advertised. Employers, presumably, do not refuse to engage "ex-soldiers" without reason, and it is to the interest of all parties that the nature of the reason should be ascertained.

A recent letter from Malta raises a question of some importance in the domestic economy of the Army. It seems that at that station the married women who "take in" Tommy's washing have to deal with a number of articles in addition to the usual regulation kit, including such heavy work as suits of khaki clothing, no extra allowance being made for the additional articles. The ordinary local charge for washing a suit of khaki is 3d. or 4d.; the entire allowance for a soldier's washing is ½d. per day, or 3½d. per week. It is scarcely necessary for me to say that I am not in favour of imposing any additional charges on soldiers, whether for washing or for other purposes, but we must not rob Peter, or even Mrs. Peter, for the purpose of paying Paul; and there certainly ought to be some fixed limit to the amount of washing which soldiers' wives are expected to do at fixed inclusive prices. That limit should, I think, be the ordinary regulation kit, and if at particular stations other articles, such as khaki suits, are worn, the washing of them should be provided for from some other source than the pockets of either Tommy or his washerwoman.

The following order has just been issued from the Army Clothing Department :—

The pantaloons forwarded with this delivery have the buttons attached by a new process. The pantaloons should be issued in the usual way to men doing the ordinary duties of a soldier, so that the buttoning may be subjected to a thorough trial.

After the pantaloons have been in constant wear for six months, a report will be furnished stating whether the new method of fastening the buttons is in every respect satisfactory, and whether it is considered to be as good or an improvement or otherwise upon the present method of sewing them on with thread.

Doubtless it will be a very good thing for Mr. Atkins if an improved method of attaching the buttons to his pantaloons can be devised by the intelligence of the higher military authorities. But suppose for a moment that the new machinery fails to keep the buttons on the inexpressibles, what a painful predicament poor Tommy will be in during the period of six months' probation!

MAJOR HOWE & Co.—Fashionable BOOTS and SHOES.—16, Coventry-st., W. (also 60, Strand), and City, London.

Below I pillory a further instalment of "Tommy's" grievances, all of which seem to call for attention :—

4th Battalion Connaught Rangers, Galway.—Reference was made in TRUTH a fortnight ago to the employment of the colour-sergeants of this battalion on such duties as regimental guards, canteen duty, orderly sergeant, and orderly corporal, while the depot colour-sergeants are entirely exempted. The following particulars as to the way in which the depot N.C.O.'s are employed decidedly accentuate the grievance. Four of them, besides the orderly-room sergeant, are in the orderly room—surely a very extravagant staff for such a station; one sergeant is acting schoolmaster, one corporal assistant schoolmaster, and one corporal drill instructor (a duty on which the 4th Battalion colour-sergeants ought to have the first claim), the latter corporal also acting as the sergeant-major's gardener. The assistant schoolmaster, who is the son of the depot quarter-master-sergeant, has not done any duty since he arrived at the depot, and during the school holidays he has been favoured with employment in the quartermaster's stores. When, at the same time, the colour-sergeants of the Permanent Staff are doing such work as orderly corporal, it is clear that a redistribution of duties all round is called for at this depot.

2nd Northamptonshire Regiment, Aldershot.—Complaint is made from this quarter that the caterer of the sergeants' mess has to live out of barracks, and at a distance of at least half a mile from his work, while a set of quarters bearing the inscription "Mess Sergeant," and presumably intended for the accommodation of the caterer, are occupied by a colour-sergeant of the battalion. This arrangement is not merely inconvenient to the caterer, who has to leave his duty three or four times a day for his meals, but also interferes with the proper discharge of his work, which affects the mess generally. What is the reason for it?

2nd Battalion Somersetshire Light Infantry, Aldershot.—A company of this battalion, which by a recent order ought to be paid on Tuesdays, received no pay on the 4th inst., and the men have been told that they would have to wait till Tuesday the 11th. By that time they would have been eleven days without pay. It is not right that soldiers should be kept waiting for their modest stipend so long as this, and steps ought to be taken to make such delay impossible, for it seems to be of frequent occurrence.

Fort Carlisle, Cork Harbour.—On the 22nd ult. four men of the Hampshire regiment here reported sick, but the doctor not turning up on that day, the matter was referred to the Captain in command, who ordered the men to do fatigue duty during the day, and to report themselves sick on the day following. On the following day the men professed that they were better, and had no occasion to see the doctor, but they, of course, had to do so, and three of them were marked by that gentleman as free from ailment, while the fourth was marked "dyspepsia" and "medicine and duty." In consequence of this report the three men discharged by the doctor were punished by three hours' marching in marching order. This seems decidedly irregular. The doctor did not see the men on the day when they professed they were ill, and because he agreed with them on the second day when they declared they were all right, they are punished for malingering. Is an officer justified in ordering men to report themselves sick when they have no wish to do so? Again, how comes it that the doctor was not present on the first day? Was he sick, too? And if so, why has he no substitute to perform his duties? This is not the first occasion on which complaints have been made with regard to the irregularity of the medical attendance at Fort Carlisle, and it seems unfair that the men in the garrison should suffer because the doctor is, from one circumstance or another, unable to discharge his duties regularly.

At the same station a few days ago some person unknown broke into the coffee room and robbed the till. In consequence, the sergeant in charge and the man employed in the coffee room were dismissed. It appears that there were four days' takings in the till at the time of the robbery, although the rule is that the till shall be cleared every day, and a book with entries for the daily takings is provided for the purpose. As it is highly probable that the accumulation of money in the till was an incentive to the robbery, it would seem that the officer who had neglected to have the till cleared was quite as much to blame for the robbery as the sergeant or the private. Is he to be dismissed also?

1st Battalion, The Royal Scots, Edinburgh.—A waiter was last week wanted for the grocery bar—a good billet, carrying extra pay at the rate of 1s. 6d. a day. In the order notifying the vacancy it was laid down that only Englishmen would be eligible for the appointment. It is, on the face of it, so utterly incomprehensible that, in a well-known Scotch regiment, Scotchmen should be told that they need not apply for any paid employment, that in fairness to the authorities one must assume that there was some special reason for it in this case. It might remove a good deal of dissatisfaction if the nature of this reason were explained.

While we are hearing so much about the duty of the War Office and the Government to old soldiers, the following case is of peculiar public interest. George Egan, after having served for twenty-five years in the Army, was, on his discharge, appointed as a barrack labourer at Charles Fort, Kinsale. He filled this post with perfect credit from March, 1885, to December 31, 1897, when he was suddenly discharged, without complaint made or reason given, on the order of the General Officer Commanding the Cork District. The only possible reason that can be suggested for Egan's discharge is that his daughter, a girl of fourteen, was recently charged at Petty Sessions, in company with another young girl, with stealing a shawl, value 2s. 6d., from the shop door of a local draper. After stealing the shawl, the children pawned it for 1s., and bought sweets with the proceeds. The justices, taking a very right and proper view of the childish nature of this offence, dealt with it under the First Offences Act. Now was this circumstance, or was it not, the reason for Egan's discharge? If it was, it comes to this, that the military authorities, not satisfied with the action of the magistrates in dealing with the girl, have thought it incumbent upon them, although they have no earthly business to interfere in the matter, to visit the sin of the child upon the father and upon the rest of the family (which is a very large one) by throwing the man out of work, and exposing the whole household to the risk of destitution and starvation. This would be such a gross abuse of authority that it is to be hoped some other explanation of Egan's discharge will be forthcoming.

A Parliamentary paper recently issued gives returns of the number of courts-martial held on seamen in the Navy during 1896. There were 158 courts-martial, at which 160 persons were tried, out of whom seventy-nine were charged with striking or attempting to strike a superior officer. Only four trials resulted in an acquittal. Five men were sent to penal servitude, and sixty-eight were sentenced to terms of imprisonment with hard labour. Two hundred and twenty courts-martial were held on Marines ashore for the trial of 331 offences, and no fewer than 2,542 minor punishments were inflicted. Only two of the Marines tried by court-martial were acquitted, and 178 were imprisoned.

Some few weeks back an extraordinary story was told by a correspondent of the Standard illustrating the operation of the law of naturalisation at Gibraltar. By a local Aliens Order no wife of an alien can reside in Gibraltar without an official permit. An Englishwoman married a Spaniard named Garzon, and, by permission, resided with him on the Rock; but he died, and his widow, together with a child born after the husband's death, were thereupon expelled from Gibraltar. This is a hard enough case, but from a discussion that has been going on in the local Press it seems that others as hard or harder have occurred, and that even worse evils lie behind. The nature of these may be readily guessed. For instance, had the lady in the above case followed the example of "the woman who did," she would have escaped the penalty which now falls upon her because she preferred the legal status of a wife. Another effect of the aliens regulations is a most repulsive abuse of the marriage ceremony by foreign women desirous of obtaining the right to reside on the Rock, who are able to gain that end whenever they can induce some degraded British subject to confer his name upon them before a Registrar. There is ample ground here to justify the emphatic condemnation of the regulations by the local Press as cruel and immoral. It is, doubtless, necessary to exercise some control over the number of aliens admitted to the very limited space on the Rock; but it should be possible to prevent overcrowding without creating worse evils.

A very unpleasant impression has been made upon the public at Port of Spain, Trinidad, by some exceedingly strong criticism of the way in which the local harbour improvement scheme, which is estimated to cost £132,000, is being carried out. The critic is a civil engineer, and in his communications to the Port of Spain Gazette he enters into a detailed examination of the work for the purpose of showing what he alleges to be the incompetence, dilatoriness, and wastefulness of the methods pursued. How far these charges are true must be, to a great extent, a question for experts; but, seeing that it is public money that is being spent (or squandered), such an attack certainly calls for a reply from the responsible authorities, and they are very ill-advised in ignoring it. The natural result of this silence is to convince the taxpayers that the attack is not answered because it is unanswerable.

I drew attention at some length a few months back to the utterly indefensible action of the Inland Revenue authorities in forbidding black and white reproductions of postage stamps, including even those of foreign countries, for the purpose of illustrating stamp albums. It is satisfactory to be able to state that the protests that have been made against this action have had the desired result. The Board of Inland Revenue have now communicated to Messrs. Stanley Gibbons, Limited, that, having regard to the fact that these illustrations are part and parcel of a large and legitimate industry, the Board and the Postmaster-General are willing in future to abstain from interfering with the illustrations of stamp albums, provided (1) that the illustrations are not in colour, (2) that the Board of Inland Revenue are consulted before the illustrations are made, and are satisfied as to the proper custody of the dies, blocks, plates, &c. The concession is also limited to certain specified classes of publications. It will be remembered that in their interference with these reproductions the Post Office and Inland Revenue authorities were apparently acting at the behest of the American or some other foreign Government, with the result that, as other Governments had not taken similar action, the printing of illustrations for stamp albums and philatelic publications was simply being sent from this country to the Continent. I congratulate the authorities concerned on having taken a more rational view of their duty, but I confess I do not quite understand how they ever came fall into such a monstrous blunder.

The other day a resident not far from Exeter, who keeps a horse and trap, was surprised by a visit from a stranger, who wanted to know if he could have the vehicle on hire. The explanation of this impertinence was subsequently forthcoming in the fact that the party who had made the application was the local Excise officer. Presumably this individual was using the "trap" for the purpose of catching its owner in a breach of the Inland Revenue regulations. It is a most outrageous thing, as I have frequently pointed out, that public officials should thus act as agents provocateurs. Is it the desire of the Inland Revenue authorities that their local representatives should adopt this rôle? If not, as the abuse is frequent, special instructions should be issued on the subject, and steps taken to see that they are observed.

For reasons best known to the authorities at St. Martin's-le-Grand, registered letters for the evening Irish mail must be posted in London before 5.30 p.m., although with a late fee they can be posted for a short period after that hour. The Irish mail does not leave Euston till 8.45, and it seems a monstrous thing that the public should be compelled to post registered letters three hours and a quarter before that time. Unless I am mistaken, the time of posting was fixed years ago, when the Irish mail left Euston considerably earlier.

The truth of the matter is that the hours for posting foreign mails are fixed to a great extent for the purpose of extorting fees from the public on late posting, as may be seen in the case of the Irish mail, where you can pay fees up to the amount of 1s. for posting up to the last minute. This, of course, serves the double object of saving the Post Office from employing the larger staff which would be required if the mails were made up later, and extorting more money for the services of the existing staff. How long will it be before we get a Postmaster-General who will make a root-and-branch reform of all these tricks, and conduct the Post Office on the principle of giving the public the greatest convenience and the best possible value for their money?

I thought the Chancellor of the Exchequer had long since arranged that the Post Office would deliver letters at any house in the United Kingdom to which they may be addressed. That was the impression which he conveyed in his last Budget speech, and he has had all the credit of carrying out a reform which has been demanded for years. How comes it, then, that a lady living within two miles of Waterford is still unable to get her letters delivered? The Post Office drops them at a cottage five minutes' walk from her house, and from that point she has to fetch them, no matter at what inconvenience. As remonstrances to the Waterford postmaster have proved fruitless, it would seem that either Sir Michael Hicks Beach was imposing on the House when he promised a universal letter delivery, or that the Duke of Norfolk has failed to carry out his instructions. Unless, of course, Ireland has been excluded from the concession made to the rest of the Kingdom.

Reference has frequently been made in TRUTH to the excellent example which the Americans set us in repressing the misuse of the postal service. A further illustration of this may be seen in the following extract from a recent issue of the Scientific American:—

> A fraud order has just been issued by the Post Office Department against John Wedderburn, John Wedderburn & Company, and the National Recorder. An order of this kind deprives the parties against whom it is directed of all use of the United States mails. Hence, all mails received for the parties mentioned at the Washington Post Office will be marked, indicating that the business of these attorneys is fraudulent, and will be returned to the senders. Money orders sent to the firm or the paper will be similarly dealt with.

The order referred to above is issued under the United States statute which forbids the use of the mails for any "schemes devised for the purpose of obtaining money or property under false pretences;" and the order is issued by the Postmaster-General, on his own sole authority, after satisfactory evidence of the fraudulent designs of the parties has been laid before him. A similar power in this country would effectually squelch a whole legion of rascals preying upon the public by one trick or another. Why is the thing practicable in the United States and not here?

With reference to the Peer-like signature of the Town Clerk of London, to which one or two references have been made in TRUTH lately, Sir Reginald Hanson sends me an interesting letter, in which he states that, without professing to have made an exhaustive search, he has found a similar mode of signature in use as far back as 1485. This, I think, is good enough to settle that Sir John Monckton's official signature is in accordance with official precedent. But whether as good cause can be shown for the use of a similar signature by any provincial clerk, whether to a municipality or to Justices of the Peace, is, I should think, highly doubtful.

Now that questions of sanitary administration are so much to the front, the following story is interesting. The owners of some houses in a suburban district near London desired to improve the connection of the houses with the main sewers. For this purpose application was made to the surveyor to the District Council for the plan of one of the sewers. The surveyor could not find his plan, nor could he explain how it had been lost, but he asserted very positively that he distinctly remembered that the sewer in question had been laid a few years back. On this assurance the work was put in hand and completed up to the proposed point of connection with the main sewer. Then a difficulty arose. The sewer could not be found, and for the best of reasons. It did not exist, and never had existed except in the imaginative brain of the official who said that it did!

The Lewisham Guardians have just taken the singular course of stopping the Roman Catholic services in the workhouse on the ground that "other people" anxious to hold services there have been debarred from doing so. Who the "other people" are I do not know; but it is quite conceivable that a difficulty would be experienced in arranging for services to suit all the diverse religious (or irreligious) views of the paupers. The creed register shows, I am told, that, apart from members or those who profess to be members of the Church of England, there are in the house thirty Catholics, six "Nonconformists," three Wesleyans, two Congregationalists, one "Protestant," one Jew, and one Agnostic. The law provides, at the cost of the ratepayers, for the spiritual needs of the paupers belonging to the Established Church, and for many years past services have been held by voluntary efforts for the thirty Roman Catholics. To abolish these services because half-a-dozen different services cannot also be arranged for the remaining dozen or so inmates, is unreasonable and illogical in the extreme.

The Bumbles of the Knaresborough Union are still harping upon the Queen's Jubilee. Some months ago, as I casually mentioned at the time, these worthies resolved to commemorate the event by adorning the Board room at the workhouse with their photographs. This might have been thought a sufficiently complete, imposing, and enduring memorial of the record reign; but it has somehow failed to entirely satisfy the aspirations of the Guardians, and they have now, after a protracted, and, at times, heated debate, resolved to place the photographs of two relieving officers with those already on the wall. It was jocularly suggested that the Board might as well order a picture of the paupers; and really that would give the most appropriate finish to this curious memorial of the Jubilee.

The Japanese Constitution contains a provision for the independence of the judiciary, but some information sent to me from Kobe shows that those in power are quite prepared to set the principle aside, if it suits their purpose to do so. It appears that, after the war with China, the Japanese Government established a judiciary in the Island of Formosa, and Mr. Tokano was appointed Chief Justice of the High Court. He held this office until a short time back, when certain charges of corruption were preferred against officials in the island. Men in the highest circles were involved in these charges, and as soon as it was seen that the Chief Justice was determined to investigate the case without fear or favour, he received an order from the Premier to repair to Tokio, and he was there informed that the Cabinet had resolved to place him upon the retired list. This decision was arbitrarily carried out in direct contravention of an article of the Constitution, and by way of protest against Mr. Tokano's treatment, four other Judges in Formosa resigned their posts. The affair derives a special interest from the fact that the new treaties will bring foreigners in Japan under the laws of the country and the jurisdiction of the Judges, who have received this practical illustration of their subservience to the Ministry.

A recent appointment to a second grade judgeship by the Government of the Punjab affords a striking illustration of the unsatisfactory manner in which the ranks of the judiciary in India are recruited. Mr. A. Kensington, the gentleman selected for the post, is doubtless an able member of the Civil Service, but for the last ten years he has been engaged in the performance of non-judicial duties, and since 1891 he has been employed in the Finance Department. A sound practical legal training should be a sine quâ non for a Judge, but under the preposterous system of reserving these berths for members of the Indian Civil Service, that is about the last qualification that is thought of.

I am afraid I cannot adopt the suggestion of a correspondent that a niche in my Legal Pillory should be devoted to the decisions of County Court Judges in regard to the committal of debtors. It would be somewhat difficult to do this, though I have no doubt that there is great diversity of practice in making such committals. My correspondent, speaking from a painful personal experience, draws a contrast between the procedure at Leeds and at Bradford respectively. The point of it is that Judge Greenhough, at Leeds, commits more readily, and for longer periods, than Judge Bompas at Bradford. In Armley Gaol recently there were several debtors from Leeds, who had been committed for terms of from fourteen to thirty days on judgment summonses for very small amounts, such as twenty shillings; whereas there was no debtor from Bradford whose debt was under £5, nor was there any case where the sentence exceeded fourteen days. For impecunious persons who can manage to keep their liabilities within a modest limit, Bradford would seem, therefore, to be a more comfortable place of abode than Leeds.

How widely some of the County Court Judges differ on this question of imprisonment for debt has often been pointed out. In form, of course, imprisonment for debt has long been abolished, but, in fact, it remains under the guise of a commitment for contempt in failing to comply with an order of the Court for the payment of a debt when the Judge is satisfied that the debtor has the means to pay. Everything depends upon the view of the individual Judge as to what constitutes proof of ability to pay. In some Courts the power to commit is freely exercised on almost any evidence, in others it is only used as a last resort after the most complete proof that the debtor is actually in a position to comply with the order that has been made upon him. This lack of uniformity is very similar to what prevails in the punishment of criminals, and, though it may be diminished, it is difficult to see how it is to be wholly avoided.

The brutal harshness with which fishing apprentices are treated by the Grimsby Bench was strikingly illustrated last week. An apprentice named Gaskin was charged with neglecting to go to sea in his employer's steamer, and committed for fourteen days' hard labour; at the same time, three fishermen, charged with the same offence, were dealt with by the infliction of fines of a guinea each. The disparity between the sentences in these cases effectively knocks the bottom out of the argument that the imprisonment of a fishing apprentice for neglecting to go to sea is justified on account of the loss and inconvenience his absence entails upon the smack owner. The failure of adult members of the crew to sail must cause a still more serious loss and inconvenience; yet they are invariably let off with a moderate pecuniary penalty, while the youthful apprentices are invariably sent to gaol. The truth is, of course, that these lads, recruited almost exclusively from the workhouses of the country, are looked upon during their apprenticeship as little better than slaves, and punished for acts of disobedience with a vindictive severity which would not be tolerated for a single day in any other town or any other industry. It is to the lasting shame of the Board of Trade and the Local Government Board that the iniquitous system has been tolerated so long at Grimsby.

A letter in the Yorkshire Post, dated from a place called Seacroft, states that on several recent occasions the police have been seen returning in the morning from night duty in looking out for poachers; and it is further stated that while the police have been thus engaged, there have been two robberies in the district from which they have been withdrawn. It is high time that some legislative restriction were placed upon the employment of the police as gamekeepers. The practice is really a fraud on the ratepayers, for it enables the game-preserving magnates who govern the country police to provide themselves with gamekeepers at the public expense, while at the same time the public are deprived of the services of those whom they pay for guarding their lives and property. Remonstrances against this abuse have been loud and frequent for many years past, and as they are entirely disregarded by the game-preserving interest, Parliament ought to take the matter in hand.

The complainant in a recent case of assault at the Winslow (Bucks) Petty Sessions found himself saddled with the costs, in spite of the fact that the two defendants were both convicted and sent to gaol. In reply to a protest the magistrate's clerk stated that "it was the established rule for the complainant to pay the costs on the committal of the defendants," but he omitted to explain on what authority this rule was based. The advice of the Home Office was then sought, and the complainant was informed that the question had never been definitely settled. If this be so, it is surely high time a definite settlement was obtained, for the point crops up almost every day, and the enforcement of the rule referred to is frequently—as in the case I cited a few weeks since from Linton—the cause of most grievous hardship and injustice. It is, indeed, a flagrant injustice to mulct the complainant in costs in any case of assault in which the defendant is convicted and sent to gaol. The sentence of imprisonment is passed because the offence is too serious to be dealt with by a fine. To make the complainant pay the costs means, therefore, that he is actually penalised on account of the severity of the injury he has suffered; for when the defendant is let off with a fine he has also, nine times out of ten, to pay the costs in addition. If a definite settlement of the question cannot be obtained in any other way, it is to be hoped some complainant will have the courage to refuse to pay costs in such circumstances. The result would be interesting, and if it really turned out that the magistrates had power to send the complainant, in default of payment, to join the defendant in prison, the law would speedily have to be amended.

In reference to the recent edict of Sir A. Reed, the head of the Royal Irish Constabulary, giving his august sanction to the riding of bicycles on the public footpaths, an Irish J.P. points out that the order in question is in direct opposition to the law, as it is expounded by Sir A. Reed himself in his book, "The Irish Constable's Guide." In that book, under the heading of "bicycle," he explains that a person riding a bicycle on a footpath along the side of a public road commits a breach of the law, even if there is no actual obstruction to the free passage of any foot-passenger. But though he knows that this is the law of the land, Sir A. Reed evidently thinks himself quite competent to render it null and void at his pleasure.

Lord Ludlow presided at the trial of nine cases at Wilts Quarter Sessions last week, and in six out of the nine the brief for the prosecution was held by his son, the Hon. H. L. Lopes. Far be it from me to suggest that the position Lord Ludlow occupies as Chairman of the Court is in any way accountable for the great demand for the services of Mr. H. L. Lopes at these Sessions. It is quite unnecessary to suggest anything of the kind in order to see how undesirable it is that a son should practise in a Court over which his father presides. The objections to such a state of affairs have been pointed out over and over again, and in the case of County Court Judges and their sons it has been abolished by order of the Lord Chancellor. It seems high time a similar order was applied to Quarter Sessions.

More in sorrow than in anger, a magisterial friend of mine mentions that I have on several occasions placed him in my Legal Pillory for sentences of which he disapproved as much as I did. "It certainly seems a little hard to be pilloried indiscriminately," he says, "when one has exhausted one's influence with one's colleagues in the very direction suggested." This is true; but, as he is reasonable enough to admit, it is a little difficult to see how this hardship is to be avoided. The sentence is given as the sentence of the Bench, and I cannot assume that the Bench was otherwise than unanimous, unless it is so stated. If, as sometimes happens, a magistrate likes to write to tell me that he was not responsible for a sentence that has been pilloried, I am always willing to publish his disclaimer. In the Court of Appeal, judges express their dissent from each other's decisions every day; but I am afraid that among the Great Unpaid such a custom would be in danger of provoking undignified squabbles, and I should be sorry to counsel its adoption. Those who are pilloried, like my correspondent, in cases in which they have disagreed with the sentence, must console themselves with the reflection that this discipline, though unnecessary for them, is wholesome for their erring colleagues.

ONE HUNDRED PIECES FOR £1. 1s.—Send a postcard to the Pearson Pottery Co., Hanley, Staffs., for particulars of the most wonderful package of crockery the world has ever seen. Sold all the world over.

In my Legal Pillory this week the Coventry J.P.s supply an effective object-lesson in the comparative value of previous convictions as factors in the apportionment of sentences. If magistrates will persist in the system of making a man's past misdeeds, rather than his present offence, the measure of the punishment to be inflicted upon him, they ought, at any rate, to have the decency to be consistent and apply the principle to all offenders alike. What they do, however, is to limit it almost exclusively to charges of petty larceny, poaching, and vagrancy. At Coventry, for example, there were two defendants with very similar records. One had been guilty of a trumpery theft, and he was sent to gaol for a month; the other had committed a serious assault, and he was let off with a small fine, his previous appearances at the Court being wholly ignored. Another instance of the same practice comes from Cirencester, where a farmer convicted for the seventh time of cruelty—to say nothing of a score of previous convictions for other offences—escapes with a penalty of £3. On the other hand, the Chorley Bench pass sentence of a month's imprisonment on a girl of seventeen for a theft which was her first offence:—

Coventry City Police-court. Before Messrs. G. E. Banks, J. Bill, T. H. Harris, and T. Burbidge. Thomas Shenstone, convicted of assaulting David Woodfield. Without any provocation defendant struck complainant many blows on the head, knocking him to the ground, and so injuring him that he had to attend for several days at the hospital. The Bench considered it a serious assault, and defendant had been before the court several times previously. Fined 10s. and costs.

Cirencester Police-court. Samuel L. Wheeler, convicted of cruelty to a mare by working her while in an unfit state. It was a very bad case, and defendant had been cautioned not to work the mare. There were twenty-six previous convictions against him, including six—the last in November—for cruelty to animals. Fined £3 and costs.

Mundford Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. H. M. Upcher, — Pillack, H. Burrell, and Rev. J. D. Gedge. Alfred Bugg, charged with assaulting his wife. He struck her, pushing her on to the floor, and kicked her whilst she was down. Fined 5s., and 12s. 6d. costs.

Scarborough Police-court. Henry Ward Drake summoned for cruelly ill-treating Annie Foster, aged 13. The child was employed in defendant's house as a servant. On different occasions he had seized her by the throat and shaken her violently; struck her on the mouth, knocking out two of her teeth; and given her a heavy blow on the head, making her dizzy, and reducing her to a state of nervous prostration and terror. Fined £2 and costs; or one month.

Coventry City Police-court. Before the same magistrates. Edward Saunders, charged with stealing three sticks of celery and two haddocks from a shop. He had been before the Court several times previously. Twenty-eight days.

Tamworth Borough Police-court. Before the Mayor and other Magistrates. Jane Wynn, charged with stealing a decanter of port wine from a public house. She was under the influence of drink at the time. One month.

Chorley Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. R. L. Crosse and J. Kirkman and Dr. Harris. Esther Collins, a girl of 17, charged with stealing a shawl, a handkerchief, and a pair of boots belonging to her mother, and a shawl belonging to a neighbour. The girl left home, taking these articles with her. Her mother said she had had no trouble with her before. One month.

Peterborough Police-court. Before Lieut.-Colonel C. J. Strong, Rev. W. Hopkinson, Messrs. J. Hunting, J. T. Miller, W. Cliffe, and J. H. Beeby. Robert Coulson, charged with stealing growing turnips, value 1s. Fourteen days.

Louth (Lindsey) Police-court. Before Major Allott and other Magistrates. Frank Harrison charged with trespassing in search of game. Fined £2. 18s. 6d.

Welshpool Borough Police-court. Before the Mayor, Messrs. D. P. Owen, W. Rogers, D. Wall, and M. Jehu. Alfred Owen and Thomas Gardner charged with stealing two fowls. Three months each.

Spilsby Petty Sessions. Before the Rev. W. Cracroft, Rev. G. H. Hales, Messrs. W. D. Gainsford, J. W. Walker, H. Walker, and W. H. Ward. Charles Jacklin charged with assaulting a child, aged two years. He struck the child several times on the head, causing its mouth to bleed and bruising both cheeks, and then threw it violently on the bed, swearing that he would kill it. Fined 30s. and 10s. costs.

Heanor Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. W. Smith and T. Mayfield. Herbert Moore and Thomas Booth, charged with assaulting Wm. Richards. Complainant was knocked down, and Booth then held him whilst Moore kicked him. Moore fined 10s. and Booth 5s. and costs.

Torquay Police-court. Before Messrs. R. Andus Clark, W. B. Hamlyn, and Dr. Last Smith. Frederick W. Norcutt, charged with cruelty to a pony. The animal, which was being worked, was described as nothing but a bag of bones, and apparently starving. It was very old and covered with bad sores, the harness being saturated with blood. There was a previous conviction. Fined £4 and costs.

Ilkeston Police-court. Before the Mayor, Messrs. F. Sudbury, and W. Tatham. Jesse Elliott, convicted of assaulting Joseph Richards. As complainant was going home he was attacked, without any provocation, by the defendant, who struck him a heavy blow under the jaw, rendering him insensible. Fined £1 and costs.

Glamorganshire Quarter Sessions. Before Judge Gwilym Williams. Thomas Lewis pleaded guilty to stealing a shawl. Six months.

Spalding Police-court. Ashby Fovargue, labourer, charged with sleeping out in the open air and having no visible means of subsistence. Seven days.

Stowmarket Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. H A. Oakes, A. C. Pretyman, B. B. Booth, and W. Wade. John Gray, charged with stealing dead stakes value 6d., the property of some person or persons unknown. One month.

Chipping Sodbury Police-court. Frederick Alpass, summoned for trespassing in pursuit of game. Fined £2, and in default of payment committed for one month.

Watton Petty Sessions. Before Rev. A. T. Crisford, Messrs. A. N. Hemsworth, and J. E. Alexander. Bertie Carter, charged with stealing 1 cwt. of coal. Two months.

Carnarvon Police-court. Hugh Lovell and Edward Jones, charged with poaching. Committed for fourteen days and seven days respectively, in default of paying fines.

Gloucestershire Quarter Sessions. Ellen Goldsmith, aged 22, charged with stealing 2s. and a basket. Four months.

The appeal in the case of Hendry v. French in the Dumfries Sheriff Court was not, as I supposed, when writing last week, an appeal from the Sheriff to the Court of Session, but from the Sheriff Substitute to the Sheriff Principal. The latter has since given his decision, refusing the appeal and affirming the judgment of the Sheriff Substitute in favour of the farm servant, Hendry, who sued Mr. French, a tenant on the estate of the Duke of Buccleuch, for board and wages for his wrongful dismissal. The dismissal was brought about at the instance of the Duke's gamekeeper, in accordance with a condition in the leases of tenants on the estate prohibiting the employment of any person who has ever been convicted of poaching. I am amused to note that a Dumfries journal defends the Duke's tyrannical system of boycotting and compelling his tenants to boycott poachers as a "just and lawful method of managing his own lands." No doubt the local scribe knows on which side his bread is buttered. He could hardly be expected to condemn a powerful landowner and game preserver. But the system in force on this estate certainly is not just, and I question very much whether the persistent persecution and repeated injury to which Hendry has been subjected since his conviction three years ago is lawful.

There is plainly an extraordinary difference of opinion between the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman of the Lancaster Quarter Sessions respecting the punishment of old offenders. At the October Sessions a man named Shaw, against whom there were numerous previous convictions, was sentenced by the Vice-Chairman, Mr. E. B. Dawson, to seven years' penal servitude, to be followed by five years' police supervision, for the theft of a sovereign and a shirt front. Last week another old offender named Stafford, whose career was almost identical with that of Shaw, pleaded guilty before the Chairman, Mr. J. Fell, to a charge of stealing a waistcoat, and also to three charges of obtaining goods by false pretences. The sentence passed upon him by Mr. Fell was twelve months' imprisonment. It would seem, therefore, to be a mere chance whether a prisoner at Lancaster Quarter Sessions gets one year's imprisonment or seven years' penal servitude—the former if Mr. Fell is in the chair, the latter if the presiding magistrate is Mr. Dawson. A certain amount of chance there must always be about the length of a sentence, but it ought not to be so wide as this, and the Lancaster J.P.'s would do well to replace their present vice-chairman by some one of a less draconic temper.

---

Subscriptions greatly needed by THE ROYAL SOCIETY FOR PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.—6,929 convictions this year; 7,320 last year. Address complaints of cruelty, contributions, letters, &c., to SECRETARY, 105, Jermyn-st., London.

Congratulations to the Home Secretary, condolences to Mr. Justice Grantham, on the release of Frank Wallace Spriggs. This young fellow appears to have been a victim of judicial cynicism. He was charged with assaulting and robbing a lady cyclist in the neighbourhood of Rhyl. The prosecutrix first identified him by means of a photograph shown to her by the police, and five other witnesses, who were called to speak to his movements in the neighbourhood on the day of the crime, also identified him mainly through the production of this photograph. The fact was that Spriggs had been in trouble at Rhyl some time before, and the intelligent police jumped to the conclusion that he must be the guilty person. For the defence, on the other hand, no fewer than twelve perfectly respectable and credible witnesses swore that on the day and at the time when Spriggs was alleged to have committed this robbery and assault at Rhyl he was at his home here in London, more than 200 miles away.

Some judges might have doubted after this whether it was not a case of mistaken identity. Not so Mr. Justice Grantham. He incredulously brushed the alibi aside as "too artistic," summed up strongly against the prisoner, and on a verdict of guilty being returned sentenced him to five years' penal servitude, with the genial remark that though "no one's friends could have done more to get him off than his friends had done" he had been most properly convicted. If his lordship had been right, what these friends had done was to commit most barefaced and deliberate perjury. Fortunately, the Home Secretary was prevailed upon to have the case thoroughly investigated by officers from Scotland Yard. The result has been to show that the "too artistic" alibi at which the judge scoffed was, in fact, absolutely true, and the prisoner has now been liberated. The Home Office has done very well in this case, but it is, nevertheless, another argument for the establishment of a Court of Criminal Appeal. The redress of such miscarriages of justice ought not to be left to the chance of action being taken by the Home Office.

It is also satisfactory to see that the Home Secretary has reduced by half the sentence of two months' imprisonment which was lately passed on a man named Young, at North London Police-court, for neglecting his child. I had several communications respecting this case at the time it occurred, but I refrained from commenting upon it in consequence of a usually trustworthy daily paper expressing the opinion, after making special inquiries, that sympathy with Young would be misplaced. It now seems that my contemporary was misinformed as to Young's character and conduct—indeed, judging from what has since come to light, the month's imprisonment he has suffered was a month too much.

There was a disgraceful abuse of the right of cross-examination in a case of assault at Southport Police-court last week. The complainants were Miss Millar and Dr. E. P. P. Macloghlin, who, it appears, have demonstrated in a practical way their disagreement with orthodox views on the marriage question. Their opinions, whatever may be thought of them, were not connected in the remotest degree with the assaults which were committed upon them whilst they were cycling, and for which two defendants named Lund were fined. Nevertheless, Mr. F. A. Jones, the defendants' solicitor, subjected both the complainants to a most vexatious, irrelevant, and insolent cross-examination in reference to their domestic relationship. Mr. Jones doubtless conceived, through some strange professional aberration, that it was his duty to do this. He is not so much to be blamed as the Solons on the Bench who made no attempt whatever to check a series of questions which had nothing whatever to do with the case, and which were, in every respect, indecent and improper.

The R.S.P.C.A., and the public by whom its humane work is supported, have good reason to complain of a decision given by Sir John Bridge at the South Western Police Court last week. The driver and the owner of a horse were summoned for cruelty by working the animal when it was in an unfit state. No defence was offered, and after a personal inspection of the animal, Sir John Bridge said he found that it was totally unfit for work, that it was very lame, and that it ought to be destroyed. He was willing, however, to discharge the accused on condition that they had the horse put out of its misery, and to this they agreed. The officer of the Society thereupon asked that the defendants should be ordered to pay the costs, which amounted to £1. 17s. 6d. "Certainly not," was the magistrate's answer; "the Society is supported by the public, and therefore I will not allow any costs." Coming from such a source, this non sequitur is indeed surprising. Why should costs be refused because the prosecution happened to have been undertaken by a Society supported by the public? The course taken by the magistrate showed that, in his opinion, the defendants had been guilty of a gross act of cruelty. Yet he practically fines the R.S.P.C.A. for bringing the perpetrators of this cruelty to justice, while the guilty parties are merely called upon to do what they ought to have done before the offence was committed. Cruel owners and drivers might reasonably conclude from the result of this case that they are quite entitled to work wretched, worn-out horses, fit only for the knacker, until they are caught; and, furthermore, that, when they are caught, the penalty for the cruelty will fall, not upon them, but upon the Society.

Thanks to the gullibility—not to mention the greed—of mankind, the venerable fraud of the Spanish prisoner is still being successfully practised. One can scarcely refrain from admiring the really wonderful activity of the gangs who work the swindle from Valencia and Barcelona. Almost every part of the world is laid under tribute to their ingenuity. Lately they have been paying a good deal of attention to people in India and Australia, and one infatuated noodle at Glen Innes, New South Wales, admits that he has parted with a draft for £200. For every victim who becomes known there are probably another dozen who bear their loss in silence rather than expose their folly. Although it is now several years since the trick was first tried in Australia, the Melbourne Leader is still in such a state of innocence as to refer to it as an "alleged" and "suspected" attempt at fraud! But, after all, this is not so very surprising. It is a much older swindle in this country; it has been much more frequently exposed in the Press, and yet it is still in operation here, and we still have among us credulous simpletons who cannot see through the trick until their money is gone.

Isaac Gordon, otherwise James W. Ryland, of 6, Livery Street, Birmingham, and other aliases and addresses too numerous to mention, excels himself as a polite letter-writer in the latest product of his genius in this line that has come under my notice. The victim of the bloodsucker on this occasion was a widow at Derby—a poor, bedridden old lady of over seventy. She borrowed £20 from Gordon, and at the end of five months had repaid £23. She then wrote to ask him how much she owed, adding, "It cannot be very much, as I only borrowed £20 and have repaid £23, and only had the money five months." This simple remark filled Gordon with wrath, and in his reply, after stating that the amount still due was £9. 10s.—the interest he charged being £12. 10s. on £20 for six months—he went on:—

Your professed ignorant and innocent way that you do not know how much you owe, &c., may do very well elsewhere, but not for me, as I am pretty well used to people of your sort, and to their professed simplicity, and I know well how to treat them. A summons has already been issued against you for the same yesterday, and the bailiffs will be slipped in nice and quietly, and you will be sold up stick and stock at the very earliest opportunity, as I consider you have treated me awfully shabby, and no treatment can be too bad and shabby for people of your type. Your way of putting your creditors off with your extreme innocent and simple ways may do very well elsewhere, but not for me. You will have to pay me forthwith or bailiffs will go in possession before many more days are over. No more of your tricks and dodges for me, as I am up to any trick and dodge you can think or dream of, being quite an old hand at the game. Please do not write me any more unless accompanied by the full amount of summons and costs, as I have something else to do than to keep a correspondence up with you to no purpose, and for which I do not get one penny.

A more impudent, remorseless, and unscrupulous scoundrel than this Gordon has never adorned the profession of usury.

The following letter has just been sent to a gentleman on paper bearing the Royal Arms and the words "Scarborough County Court." What is the meaning of the use (or abuse) of the stationery of the Court by a professional debt collector? On the face of it this is a gross irregularity, which the Registrar of the County Court ought to explain:—

3, Moorhouse-yard, Auboro'-street,
Mr.—— Scarborough, January 6th, 1898.

Sir,—I am requested by Mr. G. W. Bowman, Glass and China Merchant, Hope-st. Filey, to apply to you for the immediate payment of 7s. 4d. owing by you to him. I respectfully ask you to forward to me this small amount forthwith and so spare any further costs. You must send the money to me direct as this is entirely out of Mr. Bowman's hands. Awaiting your reply,—Yours truly, J. H. ALLANSON, Accountant.

For a couple of years past—as many readers of TRUTH will remember—there has been knocking about the world a "snowball" or "chain" letter, started by some person in Australia, and exemplifying in an aggravated form all the absurdities of this method of raising money. In the process of reduplication the letter has become so altered that it is quite impossible to discover the name of the person who is at the bottom of it, the address from which it was originally started, or the name of the charity which it is supposed to benefit. The story which it tells is on the face of it an absurdity, namely that, if a million used postage-stamps can be collected, a philanthropist has undertaken to buy them at a price which will pay for the erection of a children's wing in a cottage hospital, at some unrecognisable place in New South Wales. That number would have been reached by the time the letter had been repeated a dozen times; yet the misguided idiots to whom the thing is sent are told to go on repeating it up to sixty, seventy, eighty, and in the last instance, one hundred and eleven times, by which time, of course, countless billions of stamps—more, probably, than have ever been struck in the whole world—would have been forwarded to the unknown address in New South Wales. The truth, of course, is that children and fools, of both sexes, who assist in carrying the thing on, alter at their own sweet wills the maximum number which is supposed to limit the repetition, just as they alter the names and addresses; and so you arrive at the result that the thing goes rolling on its insane course for an indefinite period, and no earthly power can stop it.

All this has been said so often in TRUTH and other papers, that it may be asked, why repeat it now? I repeat it, because, incredible though it may appear, a Dundee paper, the other day, got hold of this precious

EVERY SAHARA (TURKISH) CIGARETTE bears the name and trade-mark of the sole manufacturers, W. D. & H. O. WILLS, Limited, as a guarantee of the exceptional quality of the Tobacco.

"snowball," and published some remarks about it, which are certainly not calculated to enlighten the infatuated dolts who engage in this form of folly, but must rather tend to encourage others to adopt the same means of raising money. It is really deplorable that influential local newspapers cannot serve their readers better. The last copy of this Australian snowball letter that I have before me is numbered "78." Allowing as you please for breaks in the chain, that must mean that thousands and ten thousands of letters must have been written in connection with it, that hundreds of pounds must have been spent in postage, and probably hundreds of thousands of old postage stamps sent —where? Heaven only knows. I published a few months back a list of about twenty different variations of the address appearing in these letters. In the last week I have seen three new letters each with a fresh address. In one of them the lady who is to receive the proceeds of the appeal, and who has hitherto generally borne some name resembling "Griffen" or "Suffen," has become "Mrs. Dudley Gibbons," and is to be looked for at "Montague Mills, New South Wales;" while in another she is once more Miss Griffen, but has removed to "Hartville, U.S.A." The Post Office authorities of Australia and the United States ought to be able to tell some startling stories about this snowball.

The following advertisement seems to indicate that agricultural depression is not universally prevalent. When a landlord can pick and choose his tenants in this way, and treat himself to the luxury of boycotting all who do not share his political and religious opinions, it is clear that land is not exactly a drug in the market. It is an agreeable reflection that we have just been voting a couple of millions of public money to relieve the landed interest of its burdens, and thereby facilitated boycotting of this character by "distressed" landlords:—

TO LET, Unfurnished, on the famous Chiltern Hills, six miles from Henley-on-Thames, an Old Fashioned Farm House and fifty-one acres of Splendid Pasture Land. Beautiful situation, 600 ft. above sea-level. Suitable for a Gentleman's Dairy Farm. Tenants must be Church people and Conservatives. Rent, £140 per annum.—"J. P. D. L.," &c.

In my last reference to the treatment of bank clerks I published a letter from which it appeared that in the establishments of the Yorkshire Banking Company the juniors start at £20, and that a manager of an important branch, with immense responsibility resting upon him, has been receiving under £4 a week. One would have thought this was the ne plus ultra of bank sweating, but such does not appear to be the case. I have since heard from a man in the service of the Mercantile Bank of Lancashire that the juniors in the service of that company start at £10 a year, with an annual increment of £5 for five years, after which a further advance is problematical. It is stated that many thoroughly competent clerks from twenty-two to twenty-five years of age, who have been several years in the service of the bank, are receiving less than 30s. a week. As for managers, my informant remarks that most of them would be only too happy to see a chance of £200 a year, £130 being the present payment in some cases. On the other hand, the directors are well paid, and the dividends are on the increase—as they ought to be under such circumstances.

The gentleman who sends me the foregoing information is of opinion that the only hope for the bank clerk is for the public to refuse their custom to banks where the staff are not properly paid. He thinks this a more efficacious remedy than combination among bank clerks. If you could get the public to do it, I have no doubt it would be highly efficacious; but no movement in that direction has ever had any success yet, and I doubt if it ever will have. Besides, we must not forget that so eminent a light as Dean Hole has publicly taught that a Christian has no business to trouble his head about the conditions under which the labour is performed of which he gets the benefit. Under these circumstances, I stick to my former advice to bank clerks to put their trust in the principle of "collective bargaining."

Anent a paragraph in TRUTH of the 30th ult. respecting the circulars of the Newspaper Development Syndicate, Ltd., the secretary asks me to mention, in justice to his Company, one or two facts not there stated. (1) The promise of further substantial advantages not specified in the circular was only a postscript affixed to the later circular. (2) These advantages include, as since announced, a free copy of a new trade journal which the Syndicate are issuing. (3) The combined contents bills are issued for weekly as well as monthly publications. (4) The form of contract has now been altered so that the newsagent merely promises to exhibit the bills or to advise the Syndicate to stop sending them. The second and last points seem to meet the mild criticism passed on the original circular in TRUTH, but I really hardly think there is any necessity to discuss the subject further.

The subjoined letter from Mr. Billson does not seem to me to carry the burning question of red dinner coats for golfers much further. I publish it, however, first because Mr. Billson seems so very anxious that I should; secondly, because I hope it may relieve me of the necessity of discussing this absorbing topic any further:—

Leicester, January 9, 1898.

DEAR SIR,—You were quite right in gathering from my former letter that—in common, I am sure, with the general body of golfers—I cordially agree with what appears to be the outcome of the discussion in your columns about the golfer's evening dress coat, namely, that, although the garment in question is not in itself Pickwickian—and that was the immediate point of my first letter—no golfer should wear it unless he is a captain or other chief officer authorised to do so by his club, and then only at private club meetings. If these conditions were imposed by all clubs (as I think they already are by some), and were strictly observed, I do not see why the dress should not be retained as a picturesque survival without giving offence to any one. For my own part, I confess it seems to me of very little consequence whether it is retained or not, but the way of dealing with the difficulty suggested above may be the most practicable.

As the short extract given in this week's TRUTH from my last letter—although very hastily written it certainly offered a very neatly taken opportunity of verbal "scoring"—did not fully express my views. I trust to your sense of fairness to publish these lines in full.—I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully,

CHARLES J. BILLSON,
(President, Leicestershire Golf Club.)

Here is a grain of comfort for those who suppose that every article sold in England is made in Germany. I hear that Prince Bismarck—the recent reports about whose health, by the way, appear to be entirely unfounded—has just ordered an invalid chair in London, the recipient of the order being Mr. John Carter, of New Cavendish-street. So that some articles for the German market are actually made in England.

Imagine what a terrible outcry would have arisen from the Tory Press if the Nationalists had packed the register of voters for the St. Stephen's Green Division, Dublin, with bogus votes, as the Unionists are shown to have done! Yet, so far as I have seen, the Tory Press has been studiously silent concerning the amazing revelations which have appeared in the Daily Nation during the past week. That paper gave a list of the lodger voters for the division, which showed on the face of it that many names must have been inserted by means of fictitious qualifications. Apart from the fact that some of these lodger voters were minors, and therefore not eligible for the franchise, it was impossible to suppose that the Attorney-General for Ireland, several of the Judges, and other well-known and wealthy or well-to-do residents in the division, actually took in lodgers, and charged their own sons or other persons from five shillings to ten shillings a week for the use of a bedroom. The scandal was rendered all the more serious by the belief, for which there seems to have been ample foundation, that the pending election in the St. Stephen's Green Division was deliberately delayed until the register of voters for the present year came into force.

Still worse is the aspect the affair assumes in view of the disclosures that have been published from several of the voters and fathers of voters on the list. The Attorney-General states that the name of one of his sons was placed on the register without the authority or consent of either of them. Neither this son nor two other sons of the Attorney-General signed, or authorised anybody else to sign, the claims which were put forward in their name at the Revision Court, and which, in two cases out of the three, were rejected. Similar denials have been forthcoming from Mr. W. Gibson, son of Mr. Justice Gibson; Mr. E. H. Kenny, son of Mr. Justice Kenny; Mr. A. Holmes son of Mr. Justice Holmes; and the sons of Mr. Baillie Gage, Solicitor to the General Post Office; all of whom figure on the register. It is clear that in these cases—as in all probability in many others—a most audacious fraud has been committed. Every claim to a vote must bear the signature of the claimant, which must be duly witnessed by a second person. Some person or persons have, therefore, been guilty of forging these claims in the interests of the Unionist party in the division; and it is clearly the duty of the Government to leave no stone unturned in order to discover the culprits and bring them to justice. It will be interesting to see what course the authorities at Dublin Castle take in the matter. What they would do, and do promptly, if Nationalists were concerned, everybody can guess.

THE "MAILED FIST" MADE MANIFEST.

Kiao-chau has been leased to Germany for fifty years. The draft agreement was signed on Thursday last.—Daily Paper.

The fist that was mailed, as we all recollect,
  Was to quite an assortment of things do;
'Twas to revel in all those phenomenal feats
  Which the fists of excitable Kings do;
'Twas to spread the new Gospel of Wilhelm the Great;
  'Twas round Heinrich's forehead to twine a
Redoubtable chaplet of bays; 'twas to aid
  In the smashing to atoms of China;

'Twas to take German trade, so to speak, by the hand,
  And to newly-made markets to lead it;
'Twas to carry the flag of St Michael afar,
  And to crush all who dared to impede it:
But this same mailéd fist which the Kaiser described—
  (Whatsoever his brother and he meant)—
Has only been used, after all, just to sign
  A sort of house-agent's agreement.

The smashing of China was loudly proclaimed,
  And the Kaiser was mad for a piece of it;
But, lo and behold! he is now quite content
  To take a mere fifty years' lease of it:
And in spite of the way that its pinions were flapped
  By the painfully wild German Eagle,
It now would appear that this truculent fowl
  Is nothing at all, if not legal.

So be it! say we. We the omen accept.
  In future, let all hostile ventures
Give place to a system of neatly-drawn deeds,
  With their easements, and stamps, and indentures.
In future let's hope that all despots who once
  Were so ready to fling down a war-gage,
Will obtain what they want of their neighbours instead
  By judicious advances on mortgage!

For then mailéd fists will no longer induce
  Any feeling of dread or of awe here,
When we know that the weapon they wield is the pen
  Of a not over-scrupulous lawyer;
And when the fierce fights, now so ruthlessly fought
  'Midst the woes of a bloody "campaignery,"
Are replaced by the practice, undoubtedly sharp,
  Of two rival adepts in chicanery!

A letter which the Times published last Thursday from its correspondent at Kassala contains an exceedingly instructive comparison between the methods adopted by the Italians in recruiting and maintaining the native soldiery serving under their flag in Erythrea and the Soudan, and those adopted with the soldiery serving the Egyptian Government under British control. It is a comparison which will not be to the liking of some of our perfervid patriots, who are never tired of expatiating on the inestimable superiority of our aims and methods over those of all foreigners in dealing with native races. The correspondent of the Times states that though the Italian military authorities have done their utmost to persuade the men belonging to the garrison of Kassala and those of the neighbourhood to remain in the country and take service under the

If you want to entirely Furnish your House or select any article of Furniture or Carpet, &c., send for HEWETSONS' Illustrated Priced Catalogue.—HEWETSONS, Tottenham Court-road, London.

PREVENTION OF ZYMOTIC DISEASES.—Have the drainage and water supply of your residences certificated by CARTER BROS., 65, Victoria-st., S.W., Consulting Sanitary Engineers to Hotel Cecil.

Egyptian flag, all their efforts have met with failure. The Soudanese and Abyssinian soldiers have to a man refused to enlist under the new comers. This, the correspondent says, was only what was to be expected, and he thus explains the reasons:—

In Egypt there is conscription for the fellahin, and there, too, every able-bodied Soudanese black is impressed for military service, not for a term of years, but to remain with the colours until old age overtakes him, when he is discharged as useless. Moreover, the parsimony with which the military operations in the Egyptian Soudan have been conducted for the last few years has not rendered service on that dreary frontier any the lighter. In Erythrea and the Italian Soudan, on the other hand, the native troops are all volunteers. They enlist for only one year; desertion is unknown, and, as a rule, the time-expired men renew their engagements. Their pay is high; the private soldier receives forty-five liras a month, and after five years' service two-and-a-half liras a day. The people here are somewhat distrustful of Egyptian rule, even if it be under British control. It must be remembered that in no European possession in Africa are the natives more kindly treated, or are they more happy and contented under an alien rule than within the Italian territory. If we would retain the native soldiery and a civil population with which to cultivate the rich plains round Kassala we must promptly and definitely reassure these people, who are already preparing to abandon the country The methods which have been found possible in the Egyptian Soudan will not succeed here, and we must be prepared to treat the volunteers we enlist at Kassala with generosity, as we do our native troops in India and the Colonies.

SCRUTATOR.

HOW CHARTERED SHARES WERE SOLD BEFORE THE RAID.

WHEN the South Africa Parliamentary Committee was sitting, I wished to examine its Directors as to their financial relations with the Chartered Company in the matter of shares. Objection was taken to this, and it was decided that I could only ask each Director what his dealings had been in shares within six months of the Raid. I declined to put this limited question, and it was put by the Chairman. I now publish exact particulars of what was done in the way of selling shares by several of the Directors, and by some of the leading spirits of the Company. In regard to the Raid, my conclusion is this: Most of those who were acquainted with the condition of things in Rhodesia, and who were personally interested in the Company, were aware that the prospect of finding gold in paying quantities was nearly hopeless. They were also interested in many schemes in the Transvaal. They, therefore, determined to risk the funds of the Company in promoting a revolution in the Transvaal, and in sending the Company's forces to aid and abet in that revolution, with a view to the financial benefit of the Transvaal companies with which they were financially connected. These companies were good, bad, and indifferent. A good many which have been launched would probably pay under no conditions. But if the revolution had been successful, and if a large reduction in taxation had been announced, it is probable that there would have been a "boom," which would have enabled the promoters to get rid of their shares in these latter companies at a high premium.

The Chartered Company started with a capital of one million in £1 shares. This million was in the main subscribed in cash by its promoters. Its assets were a lease from the Concessions Company of the Concession granted by Lobengula, the terms being that one half of all profits should belong to the Chartered Company, the other half being retained by the Concessions Company. After the Matabele War, the Chartered Company extinguished the Concessions Company by purchasing it and its one-half of prospective profits for one million of Chartered shares, and these were distributed pro ratâ amongst the holders of Concessions Company's shares. This million of shares was, therefore, obtained without any cash payment, beyond the few thousand pounds which had been expended in getting the Concession. In the summer of 1895, an issue of 500,000 shares was made at £3. 10s.—i.e., at a premium of 250 per cent. These were distributed pro ratâ amongst the then shareholders of the Chartered Company. When the Chartered Company was constituted, there was no public issue of shares. The shares were, however, at once dealt in at a high premium. When the one million of shares was paid to the Concessions Company the Chartered shares were at a high premium. After the new shares were allotted at £3. 10s. to the shareholders of the Chartered Company in the summer of 1895, they were quoted in the autumn of that year at well over £8. The profits, therefore, accruing to the gentlemen who were original shareholders, who received shares as shareholders of the Concessions Company, and who received allotments of shares in the summer of 1895, must have been enormous, and every farthing of this profit has come, not out of Rhodesia, but out of the British public, who were induced to buy the shares of the Chartered Company by puffs of Rhodesia as an El Dorado.

In respect to the following return, I believe that one of the syndicates or joint holdings consisted of shares held in trust for the De Beers Company, but which of them this was I do not know. The holding of the Goldfields Company is included, because this Company was under the joint management of Messrs. Rhodes and Rudd, and they had been its promoters. The price of the shares of the Chartered Company varied largely between 1890, when the Company came into existence, and 1896. At one time they were saleable at £9 per share; but I hardly think that the public would have been so desirous as they were to buy them at a high premium, had they been aware that those best likely to know the truth about the future prospects of the Company were selling their holdings in the wholesale fashion that the return shows them to have been doing. The holdings of these intelligent gentlemen on March 31, 1896, are taken from the register of the Company, as made up on that day, but the selling, with the exception of a very few shares, would have taken place before the Raid of the previous December. Here are the details:—

DUKE OF ABERCORN.

Holding as original shareholder	...	9,000 shares.
Allotment of shares, July, 1895	...	1,354 ,,
Holding March 31, 1896	... ...	6,773 ,,

Therefore he had sold 3,581 shares.

BRIGHTON.—NORFOLK HOTEL.—Old-established County and Family Hotel. The best situation. Replete with comfort, style, and luxury. Moderate charges.—JULES A. CREIGHTON, Manager.

DUKE OF FIFE.

Held as original shareholder ... 8,000 shares.
Allotment on holding, July, 1895 ... 900 ,,
Holding March 31, 1896 ... ... 5,223 ,,
Therefore sold 3,677 shares.

EARL GREY.

Held as original shareholder ... 9,000 shares.
Allotment on holding, July, 1895 ... 1,271 ,,
Holding March 31, 1896 ... ... 3,368 ,,
Therefore sold 6,903 shares.

LORD GIFFORD.

Held as original shareholder ... 10,300 shares.
Acquired as Concessions Company shareholder, 1894 ... ... 32 ,,
Allotment on holding, July, 1895 ... 278 ,,
Holding March 31, 1896 ... ... 1,013 ,,
Therefore sold 9,597 shares.

SIR HORACE FARQUHAR.

Held as original shareholder ... 8,000 shares.
Acquired as shareholder of Concessions Company, 1894 ... ... 8,000 ,,
Allotment on holding, July, 1895 ... 1,589 ,,
Holding March 31, 1896 ... ... 2,357 ,,
Therefore sold 15,232 shares.

MR. RHODES.

Held as original shareholder ... 45,112 shares.
Acquired as shareholder of Concessions Company, 1894 ... ... 108,000 ,,
Allotment on holding, July, 1895 ... 12,945 ,,
Holding March 31, 1896 ... ... 29,463 ,,
Therefore sold 136,594 shares.

MR. A. BEIT.

Held as original shareholder ... 16,000 shares.
Acquired as shareholder of Concessions Company, 1894 ... ... 100,000 ,,
Allotment on holding, July, 1895 ... 6,376 ,,
Holding March 31, 1896 ... ... 7,496 ,,
Therefore sold 114,880 shares.

MR. ROCHFORD MAGUIRE.

Held as original shareholder ... 18,695 shares.
Acquired as shareholder of Concessions Company, 1894 ... ... 40,000 ,,
Allotment on holding, July, 1895 ... 338 ,,
Holding March 31, 1896 ... ... 1,818 ,,
Therefore sold 57,215 shares.

GOLDFIELDS OF SOUTH AFRICA.

Held as original shareholders ... 97,595 shares.
Acquired as shareholders in Concessions Company, 1894 ... ... 11,000 ,, Allotment on holding, 1895... ... 10,772 ,,
Holding March 31, 1896 ... ... None ,,
Therefore sold 119,277 shares.

THOS. RUDD.

Held as original shareholder ... 935 shares.
Acquired as shareholder in Concessions Company, 1894 ... ... 2,000 ,,
Allotment on holding of July, 1895 75 ,,
Holding March 31, 1896 ... ... 26 ,,
Therefore sold 2,984 shares.

C. D. RUDD.

Held as original shareholder ... 17,897 shares.
Holding March 31, 1896 ... ... 1 ,,
Therefore sold 17,896 shares.

F. R. THOMPSON.

Held in 1893 ... ... 12,161 shares.
Acquired as shareholder in Concessions Company, 1894 (about) ... 17,000 ,, Holding March 31, 1896 ... ... None.
Therefore sold about 29,161 shares.

LORD ROTHSCHILD.

Held as original shareholder ... 10,000 shares.
Acquired as shareholder of Concessions Company, 1894 (about) ... 30,000 ,,
Allotment on holding, July, 1895... 2,309 ,,
Holding March 31, 1896 ... ... 1,410 ,,
Therefore sold 41,899 shares.

GEORGE CAUSTON.

Held in July, 1895 ... ... 6,957 shares.
Allotment on holding of July, 1895 1,739 ,,
Holding March 31, 1896 ... ... 2,000 ,,
Therefore sold 6,696 shares.

BEIT SYNDICATE.

Held as original shareholders ... 32,500 shares.
Holding March, 1896... ... ... None ,,
Therefore sold 32,500 shares.

BEIT AND RHODES.

Held as original shareholders ... 210,000 shares.
Holding March 31, 1896 ... ... 509 ,,
Therefore sold 209,491 shares.

BEIT AND CAUSTON.

Held as original shareholders ... 6,475 shares.
Holding March, 1896 ... ... None.
Therefore sold 6,475 shares.

RHODES AND BEIT.

Held as original shareholders ... 11,300 shares.
Allotment on holding July, 1895 ... 100 ,,
Holding March, 1896 .. .. None.
Therefore sold 11,400 shares.

RHODES, RUDD, BEIT.

Acquired as shareholders of Concession Company, 1894 ... ... 17,000 shares.
Holding March, 1896... ... ... None ,,
Therefore sold 17,000 shares.

RUDD AND BOYLE.

Acquired as shareholders of Concessions Company, 1894 ... ... 270,000 shares.

But how these shares were allotted in Chartered Company does not appear.

ECKSTEIN, WERNHER, WAGNER.

(Partners in Wernher, Beit, & Company.)

Held largely in their individual names. But difficult to trace their holdings at any particular period, as they were constantly "in and out."
Holding March, 1896 ... ... None.

GEO. HUISH, AUG. REIS.

This was an ordinary broker's account until 1894, when it rapidly became one of the largest on the list.
Holding March 31, 1896 ... ... None.

I have already said that I believe that one of the syndicate holdings was for the De Beers Company. But, taking the figures as they stand, the gentlemen mentioned must have sold, between 1890 and the commencement of 1896, close upon one million shares. It is, of course, exceedingly difficult to find out whether shares were sold speculatively for the account. But it is only reasonable to suppose that some of the "patriots" who were unloading their holdings in this wholesale fashion on the public, did also pick up additional money by "Bear" sales. Had the Chartered Company been an ordinary one, it might fairly have been said that they only did what promoters have done a thousand times—i.e., get rid of their shares so soon as they could find fools to buy them. But it was not an ordinary Company. The fact of its having a Royal Charter led people to suppose that, in some sort of indirect way, the Government was mixed up with it. It traded on this, and on the idea which was carefully inculcated, that it was a sort of Association of Patriots desirous of extending the area of the Empire, to whom monetary gain for themselves was a matter of indifference.

I have only stated what the transactions of these "patriots" were in regard to the shares of the Chartered Company, but this must have formed a very small amount of the gains of those connected with Rhodesia, for numberless sub-companies for mining, developing the country, and so forth, were brought out, the shares of which were sold to the public at high premiums, and the value of which is entirely dependent upon Rhodesia being an El Dorado. This it has not proved to be, and I do not believe in the country being converted into a paying concern by mere agriculture. There may be in the north part of Mashonaland plateaus suited for European settlement. On these, farmers may possibly make two ends meet in a rude fashion. But even on these plateaus it will be the old story. Wherever there is a black subject race, there Europeans eschew manual labour, and consequently they do not attract the hardy self-reliant pioneer who can extend the borders of civilisation. Towns may be run up and peopled by men who hope in some sort of speculative way to become rich. Railways may be built to connect them with the outer world. But as soon as it is discovered that the country itself will not yield a return for industry, commensurate with the objections to residence, then the whole thing collapses like a house of cards. We have had numerous examples of this in history. Enterprises such as Rhodesia, have before now been puffed and financed. Not one of them has ever proved remunerative, except to those who traded upon the credulity of the public, and the credulous have had eventually to pay for their sanguine anticipations. Possibly in Klondike there is money to be made, but only because there really is gold. If there were rich goldfields in Rhodesia, there would have been money to be made there. But, according to all reasonable probabilities, there are no such goldfields, and that any one should imagine that he will make money by what is to be got out of a few farmers, perched on the high plateaus, and seeking, with the aid of black labour, to force out of the soil a bare subsistence, must—if he will allow me to say so—be exceedingly foolish.

However, I am not concerned just now with what will occur in Rhodesia in the distant future. My allegation has been that the promoters of the Chartered Company made enormous sums for themselves by creating shares and getting them off their hands at huge premiums—all the while posturing as unselfish patriots, engaged rather in a patriotic mission than in a financing business. This allegation, it seems to me, the figures given above amply prove. The Chartered ring have made money, the investors who bought their shares have lost money. Whatever has been spent in Rhodesia has come from capital obtained in this fashion; not one farthing has accrued to Great Britain from Rhodesia, nor—unless I am very much mistaken—ever will accrue. The shareholders must find their reward in having converted the Beits and the others connected with the Company into millionaires, and with having been privileged at that cost to enlarge the area of the Empire by adding to it a vast tract of country in the centre of Africa, which nature never intended to be the habitation of Europeans.

EXTINGUISHING THE WAR CORRESPONDENT.

Two questions of great importance to the public have just been raised with reference to the relations between the Military authorities and the Press. At the dinner of the Institute of Journalists, Mr. J. M. Maclean, M.P. —who speaks on this subject with some authority—asserted that the English Press has failed to convey to the public the whole truth about the Indian Frontier Campaign. He did not go so far as to say that there had been deliberate suppression of the truth, and he expressly disclaimed any intention of impugning the rectitude of the newspaper correspondents on the spot. But he asserted in so many words that silence had been maintained about awkward facts, and that the public had not heard all that it had a right to know in regard to the management of the campaign by the Generals, or the conduct of the troops engaged. It is natural that a speaker at a public dinner of journalists should desire to avoid giving offence to any one connected with the Press, but if these allegations are well founded it is difficult to see, in spite of Mr. Maclean's polite disclaimer, how they differ from a charge of deliberate suppression of the truth on the part of some of those whose business it is to make the truth known. That the allegations are well-founded I have not the smallest doubt. As Mr. Maclean himself pointed out, the Anglo-Indian Press has done something to make the truth known, and innumerable private letters written home from the scene of war have confirmed the statements and criticisms of the Indian papers. The information that I have myself had from the frontier comes, I need not say, from private, not "special" correspondents, and it has pointed in the same direction, as readers of TRUTH are aware. But there is no need to go into details. The whole campaign up to the present moment has been a disastrous failure. It is self-evident that the original conception was faulty—quite apart from the wrong headedness of the policy on which the campaign was undertaken—and it is equally evident from the way in which bodies of our troops have been again and again caught at a disadvantage, that the practical conduct of the operations has been marked by repeated blundering. How comes it that these blunders both in the plan and management of the campaign have passed unnoticed in all the great London papers which have representatives on the spot? Does the war correspondent of the present day consider himself limited to the functions of a descriptive reporter? Or have other considerations led the Press representatives at the front to refrain from recording facts unpalatable to the military authorities? The latter seems the more probable explanation. If I remember rightly certain statements published at the commencement of the campaign, several papers have been represented by officers actually engaged in the operations In that case there is no need to look further for an explanation of the "conspiracy of silence" which has undoubtedly prevailed.

The other point which calls for public attention is the official announcement that no representative of the Press, except Reuter's Agency, will be permitted to accompany the coming advance on the Nile. Against this the Daily Telegraph has protested in the most forcible terms, and its protest ought to be endorsed by every newspaper in England. The official reason for the exclusion of the representatives of individual journals is the "great difficulty of transport" beyond the rail head; but the great London newspapers, which are prepared to send correspondents into the Soudan, are also prepared, it may be taken for granted, to grapple themselves with any difficulty in transporting their representatives to their destination. The transport difficulty is clearly only a convenient pretext for excluding the war correspondents. Is there any other good reason? There is, of course, that good old bogey, the danger of communicating information to the enemy; but although the Khalifa is said to keep himself wonderfully well posted up in the latest European intelligence, it would be absurd to suppose that he would be dependent for information as to the movements of the Sirdar's army upon news reaching him viâ London, or that news could possibly reach him by that route in time to be of the slightest value. Besides, every General in command of an army has the power to stop the transmission by telegraph of information which he does not wish divulged, and there has never been any hesitation about making use of this power. What, then, is the meaning of the exclusion of special correspondents from the advance up the Nile?

SPA WINTER SEASON.—Mild climate and only 12 hours from London. Casino open as usual with Concerts, &c. Excellent sport. For particulars address JULES CREHAY, Sec., Casino, Spa, Belgium.

The truth seems to be that a crisis has arrived in the relations of the war correspondent with the military authorities. In India he has been—by what means one can only conjecture—effectually muzzled; and it looks uncommonly as if the ease and success with which this operation has been effected, had encouraged the War Office to try whether it cannot get rid of him altogether. Now, I am interested in this matter, not as a journalist but as one of the public. TRUTH does not deal in war correspondence, and nothing is further from my intention than to send a representative to the Soudan. But speaking as one of the public, I maintain that the presence of independent Press representatives with every British force that takes the field is a matter of vital consequence to every member of that force and to the whole nation at home. The War Office would doubtless be glad enough to get rid of the war correspondent; but the public cannot do without him. We want him, not for his sensational stories of the valour of our troops, nor his sanguinary pictures of the horrors of war, but as the representative of the British public on the line of march and on the field of battle, as the one independent and authoritative witness of the way the campaign is planned and directed, the way our troops are treated and led, the way all ranks acquit themselves of their duties. He is the one unofficial critic of the operations, the one check upon the otherwise uncontrolled autocracy of the War Office and the General in command. The more keenly the military authorities dislike his presence, the more anxious they are to get rid of him, the more certain is the value of his services to the Army and the nation. For these reasons, I trust that the Press will agitate and agitate, and that the public will loyally back it up, until the order excluding war correspondents from the Soudan has been cancelled. It is the thin end of the wedge; and if it be successfully introduced there will never be any certainty henceforth of a war correspondent accompanying a British force in the field. I trust, too, that before many weeks are over one or other of the London newspapers will have the enterprise to send to the seat of war on the North-West Frontier some representative intelligent enough to discover, and bold enough to proclaim upon the house-top, the whole truth about the disastrous and futile operations that have been going on there for the last four or five months. If there is truth in only half the stories that are current as to the blundering of those in authority, and the behaviour of British troops in certain instances, there is an opportunity here of doing the greatest service to the Army and the country that has been done since Sir W. H. Russell went out to represent the Times in the Crimea. In these days of newspaper competition it will be strange indeed if such an opportunity is overlooked.

MR. HARE'S RE-APPEARANCE.

It would be difficult to quote any actor of his age and experience on the English—or, I suppose, for the matter of that, on any stage—who has created so many different types of character as John Hare. Some people say, "Oh, Hare is always an old man!" But he is never the same old man. Now, William Blakeley, a gifted comedian who, alas! has just been taken from us, was always an old man, I grant you, and invariably the same old man. His manner and individuality overcame the requisite proportion of art. It is not so with John Hare, who, moreover, has played young as well as old men. For instance, I shall never forget his Sam Gerridge in "Caste." Whilst life endures there will never be a better, for he was Gerridge. There was no getting away from it; the very smell of putty came over the footlights. No artist in the world could have sketched a more life-like specimen of the honest working man. Benjamin Goldfinch, in "A Pair of Spectacles," was no doubt a masterpiece; so was his old Eccles, a character he also played recently in "Caste," but I award the prize to Hare's young Sam Gerridge.

Now things are altogether different in the new play at the Globe Theatre, which has just been opened—beautifully redecorated and refurnished throughout—under the skilful management of Mr. John Hare. The odour of the Eccles stale tobacco and the sound of his semi-drunken songs have been replaced by the scent of new-mown hay and the "murmur of innumerable bees." David Holmes, a famous critic, a great scholar, and an acknowledged bookworm has grown into an old man—not by the fatal hand of Time, mark you—but he has dreamed his days away amidst the worn pages of learned books, he has become fossilised with wading through endless manuscripts, outside his study door all interest in life has ceased for him, his one all-absorbing thought is work, work, study, study! What cares he if his clothes are ill-fitting, his hair—turned prematurely grey—is unkempt, and his face lined and seamed with grinding over his beloved tomes? Does it matter to him that beyond those open windows of the room in which he sits there is a world of pleasure, of laughter, of gaiety, and of sunshine? Suddenly a change comes into this gloomy man's existence. The door opens and a sweet wild flower is blown across the threshold of his lonely bachelor chamber. John Hare pauses for a moment. The vision is so beautiful, he has never seen anything quite so fair as this lovely child of nature. Is she of the earth, is she real, he wonders? Now, old Martin Beggs, the confidential secretary of David Holmes, is not so easily overcome by a pretty face, and he is horrified at the intrusion. He resents the presence of a petticoat in this haven of single blessedness. But the fair Sylvia—so charmingly acted by Miss Nellie Thorne, daughter of Fred Thorne, a true chip of the old block—is not in the least abashed by Gilbert Hare's scowling countenance. She tells her guardian, as Mr. Hare turns out to be, that life with Miss Susie Vaughan, a soured, but well-meaning old maid, is intolerable. This heartless, nagging spinster washes her hands of such a mischievous little baggage, and leaves her to David and fate! She is, oh, so tired, and oh, so hungry! What's to be done?

"She must have food, the last train has just gone, she can't get home before to-morrow," murmurs Holmes, and while he goes off to fetch her his own little frugal supper, she curls herself up on the critic's virtuous sofa and falls fast asleep. So Martin Beggs and David, having carefully wrapped their unbidden guest up cosily with a warm shawl, sally forth into the streets to find lodgings elsewhere, leaving the slumbering Sylvia to the tender mercies of the housekeeper. Dear, dear, what a highly inflammable quantity is the hard-worked journalist! He tumbles down like a ninepin at the first sight of a woman's face, a touch of her hand, a look from her eyes, a smile from her lips. The frou-frou of her skirts is divine music in his ears, the sound of her voice sets his pulses thrilling and tingling with sensations he is powerless to resist. "Omnia vincit amor" must have been the motto in Miss Martha Morton's mind when she sat down to write "A Bachelor's Romance," for in this charming idyllic play it is love and love alone, which conquers all things in the end. Is it not exquisitely human to watch the change coming over the deadened senses of David Holmes, to see the soul of the inner man gradually awakening once more? It is the dawn of a fresh existence for him. Under the warmth and sunlight of Sylvia's presence he becomes rejuvenated, he trims his hair, dons fashionable clothes, and looks a youth again. Now, for the first time in his life he understands what it is to live and to be loved, and he glories in his new-born happiness. Again, is it not love that transforms handsome Miss May Harvey—who is adored by honest Frank Gillmore, another literary man, whose friend, an equally impecunious colleague, shares with him in the grotesque inconveniences of a "joint stock wardrobe" excessively limited—from a fashionable heartless Society coquette into a simple, gentle, tender woman. Is it not also Sir Cupid, who shows clever Fred Kerr the patience, sweetness, and endurance of Miss Mona Oram's simple nature?

For a few moments in the play I was inclined to resent the renunciation of Sylvia. I did not want pretty Nellie Thorne to marry vain Mr. Charles Cherry. But I was a little "too previous," and should have waited calmly, for everything turns out as it ought to, or rather as I wanted it to. I don't think John Hare, one of the best comedians of our time, a loyal, unselfish, and undemonstrative actor, has ever played anything better than this delightful, lovable character of David Holmes—"My Mr. David," as Sylvia calls him. Of course, every one will liken this fascinating comedy to "The Professor's Love Story;" that goes without saying, but it bears a much stronger resemblance to a story written some few years ago by Mrs. Hungerford called "A Little Rebel," which has, I believe, been dramatised since 1892, but never produced. However, that doesn't signify in the least, and to Mr. John Hare unlimited thanks are due for presenting the English public with such a pure, such an ideal, and such a charmingly human play as Miss Martha Morton's "Bachelor's Romance."

NOTES FROM PARIS.

THE LATE MRS. AYER.

I GAVE you a few years ago a sketch of Carolus Duran's portrait of the late Mrs. Ayer, at the Champ de Mars Salon. Just before the poor old lady sat to Carolus, Chatrain had exhibited in his studio his portrait of Leo XIII. His Holiness, as you may know, is seated and given full front. Carolus Duran was evidently inspired by Chatrain in painting Mrs. Ayer, then reputed the richest widow in the world. Rather curiously, the two portraits were so hung at the Champ de Mars as to face each other. One was the Father of the Faithful denuded of temporal power. He had just body enough to hold his soul at anchorage. The thin face seemed a translucent medium through which beamed soul, mind, and paternal love. Mrs. Ayer was the Popess of Wealth. Carolus Duran had the art to bring out her original good qualities, for she was a motherly, shrewd American woman who had lived from youth to age in the most unaffected homely way. Until Ayer, a Patent Medicine King, died, and she came laden with gold to Europe, she never suspected she was anybody. The portraitist divined all this in showing her in the situation high Society in Europe gave. He softened the strips of black felt that served as eyebrows, toned down the paint and enamel which her dressers applied so unsparingly on her face, and did not see the parchment that was gummed on the lower parts of the cheeks and throat "to sustain them." But he gave the characteristic collarette of narrow goffered lace—a collarette that hid the lower edge of the parchment, as poudre de riz hid the upper. This tiny adornment was applied to a band of tulle, also gummed on the neck, and covered with a dog collar of enormous pearls separated by bars of brilliants. Other pearls of a yet more imposing size covered the bust. Of course, the pale brown hair was youthful, but the painter artfully threw it in the shade by means of other jewels that seemed to light it up. A robe of regal splendour was enriched and lightened with marvellous old point d'Angleterre. Then there was a manteau-de-cour that was draped round a thickly gilded throne-like chair.

Mrs. Ayer must have been on the shady side of seventy when she was thus paraded as the Popess of Wealth. I constantly met her in Society, where she was the most courted person, and received many invitations to her fêtes, but did not avail myself of them.

She had been proposed for by the most brilliant men of fashion, all able to offer her imposing titles. We heard how Prince M. had persuaded her to say "Yes," but that she changed her mind, and that Prince Joseph von B was almost a suitor. He was asked by a benevolent match-maker to dine in her company at the Pavillon d'Armenonville. One saw her at garden parties seated in some open space, on a sofa, with a circle of aspirants, young, middle-aged, elderly round her. She had a very authentic Duchesse to serve as a "foil" when she drove in the Bois, or went to morning concerts. Fair and illustrious worshippers of the golden calf used to pretend they prostrated themselves before Mrs. Ayer because she bought lots of tickets for their bazaars. She certainly had a free hand in giving, and was, though a Protestant, a good deal under the influence of Father Osmond Cooke. He never in vain appealed to her kindness for members of his flock needing it, and on New Year's Day she wrote to him to celebrate a mass for her, which he did. She was then laid low by illness. But the parasites who fattened on her went on giving dinners and parties at her house. An American lady who knew her well, but who took no part in the wretched curée, described the contention among the friends in a strong phrase, which let me whisper into your ear, "They fought over her, like dogs over a bone." When there was no longer room to hope for a line in her will, or further festivity at her expense, there was a general desertion. Her sons and daughters had no esteem or taste for her showy friends, and were living in New York. They were not apprised of her illness, though it lasted five weeks. Father Cooke stood back, from delicate feeling. He only went to her house when invited, or when he wanted her help for some poor and suffering member of his flock. She often invited him to dine quietly with her, and was glad of his friendship. He abstained from proffering her ghostly advice unless she wished for it. The American chaplain, under whom she sat, behaved, I am told, with a like dignified reserve. She was so neglected at the end that, although she died at seven in the morning, this fact was not known until three in the afternoon. An attempt is now made to give out that the poor old lady was in her last moments surrounded by sorrowing friends and domestics.

"The rich man also died and was buried." This text does not yet apply to the late Dr. Evans. Nobody has thought it a duty to celebrate his obsequies. He had only servants and secretaries in his household when he died—of course they were not going to incur expense. The only relatives in Paris were the nephew John Evans, Marquis d'Oyley, and his children, to whom the Doctor did not speak. So the remains were thrust into a vault somewhere pending the opening of the will.

The manner in which the Doctor disposed of his fortune does not surprise me. His virtues were on a small pattern, and vanity made terrible inroads on them. I do not think he ever understood that his international importance was due to the knowledge at the different Courts of Europe of Napoleon III.'s weak character. Evans thought it due to a regard for his own sagacity, and the honest advice he gave the Emperor. He felt himself mentally the Emperor's superior. Since he could not be a Napoleon in politics or rank, he had a passionate desire to figure posthumously as the Napoleon of dentistry and occult diplomacy. He certainly helped to prevent the Emperor acknowledging the belligerent quality of the Southern States soon after the release of Slidell and Mason. (Query, would not Evans drawing the fangs of Secession be a subject for a bas relief on his future monument, so amply provided for in his will ?)

The idea of the Evans Museum must have been suggested by the former Musée des Souverains at the Louvre. One saw there the King of Rome's cradle, his coral and rattle, the silver saucepan in which his pap was made, Napoleon's military boots, his grand Egyptian sabre, coronation robes, plain green uniform, grey surtout, three-cornered felt hat, and the handkerchief that wiped the death-sweat from his forehead at St. Helena. The Evans Museum at Philadelphia will abound with memorials of Imperial and Royal gratitude. They may have an indirect historical value though I have reason to think the Doctor's papers do not contain a single document of any value except as mere autographs. There must be endless memorials of Evans's professional skill and success, and models of the insides of august and princely mouths, with which the doctor's notes on their peculiarities ought to figure. The "mouths" of M. Thiers, Moltke, Bismarck, of the Emperor Napoleon, the Empresess Augusta, Eugénie, Frederick, and their children ought to figure in the Evans's collection of wax models. I wonder whether that of Mme. K., a once famous Russian beauty, is in the lot. This lady was famous for the length and sumptuosity of her trains. She was also lavish of her smiles. One evening, at some grand reception, I was gazing at her as Comte Horace de Choiseul led her through a suite of salons. Dr. Evans came up to me. We talked about the sumptuous train. He then asked, "What do you think of her teeth ?" "They light up her face like sunbeams; they eclipse even the pearls of Mme. de Rothschild's necklace." "It was I who provided them," said the doctor; "no, I'm not joking." "But surely they are too transparent to be of composition?" "They are not of artificial stuff. I chose teeth from the mouths of twelve Brittany girls to make the set." "Why from twelve ?" "Because the twelve had the proper number of faultless teeth. Besides, Mme. K. is superstitiously orthodox. She wanted her teeth to be a reminder of the Twelve Apostles. To please her I inserted a bit of the True Cross in the gold setting. Is not Russian superstition absurd ?" "Yes, but not a thing to quarrel with, if the relics are duly considered in the bill."

They have no Tammany Hall in Philadelphia. But the provisions in the Doctor's will for the Evans monument ought to tempt town councillors into Tammany tricks. The Doctor's monument is not to cost less than £40,000, nor more than £80,000. Would you be surprised if a cheap-looking thing were erected that cost the latter sum ? No provision has been made for the Lafayette Home—the doctor's pet enterprise as a philanthropist. It was to have been a nest for young American nightingales who came to Paris to study singing. Gratitude, of course, was looked for; but the harvest was poor. It always is when you expect to reap in abundance. American nightingales did not like to find themselves treated as objects of charity. They looked the gift-horse in the mouth; they admitted that the general charges for board and lodging at the Home were low. But the necessary extras were numerous and high. In this way they paid the full value for all they received—and more. Some internal arrangements of this institution led to an action for libel. Poor pitiful human nature!

To turn to more pleasing subjects. Mrs. Louis Gould's children's party was the fête of Twelfth Day. It was in honour of her little son. There were some lovely little beings at it. I can scarcely rank the beautiful girls and the boy of Lady Alexander Paget among the "infantry." The eldest is a few years on in her teens. She is sweet, sedate, unaffected, and has an easy Olympian port. Do you know the Caryatides in the Erechtheum? Well, her figure is like one of theirs, and the face almost Olympian, but in a childish, winning way. The second girl is not less attractive, but in a different way. A very small child, Baby Drake, has a precociously clever countenance, with the wax-doll prettiness of infancy. She was a wee fairy for a tale of Hans Andersen. But I should never stop were I to describe all the fair children. There seemed as many as at the Grafton Gallery Exhibition. In the grown-up company were Countess Tornielli, the Hon. Mrs. Gosselin, Baronesses Alphonse and Edmond de Rothschild, Princess Isenberg-Birchstein, Lord and Lady Reay, the Marchioness of Anglesey, Baroness Decazes, Mrs. Austin Lee, Mrs. Henry Drake, M. de Bülow, of the German Embassy, Chevalier and Mlle. de Stuers, the Hon. Horace Porter, and Mme. Bolli. The three Monson boys distinguished themselves as dancers. But Sir Edmund and Lady Monson, being in deep mourning, did not accompany them.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

DEAR LADY BETTY,—Were I to indulge my natural inclination, I should write to you this week an exceptionally entertaining and instructive letter. I am, however, not in a position to do this, for shortly before Christmas a raid was made upon my constitution by a filibustering influenza microbe—I call him "Dr. Jim"—and my attention is still entirely directed upon the removal of this foreign insect. Notwithstanding that the attack has been resisted with all the resources of modern science, and that I have soaked myself with champagne and brandy—two liquids which are supposed to be especially offensive to the betotal microbe—Marmaduke and the microbe are still locked in deadly combat. The situation is depressing, but with heroic courage I am resolved never to surrender—until all the champagne is exhausted!

* * * * *

Several writers, when reviewing the literary record of 1897, have deplored that so few reminiscences of the first importance have recently been made public. It appears to have been entirely forgotten by the literary world that the celebrated Lady Palmerston kept a journal, which, at the time of her death, it was generally supposed was destined to be published, when the proper time came. Indeed, Mr. Hayward mentioned the existence of this diary, and hinted at its probable publication, in his masterly obituary notice of the late Lady Palmerston, which he contributed to the Times of September 15, 1869. As thirty years have now elapsed since the last entry was made in these diaries, it seems reasonable to inquire whether those who have been entrusted with the care of them have come to a final decision as to their fate. It is unnecessary to add that the records kept by Lady Palmerston, who was behind the scenes at a particularly eventful period, should be especially interesting.

As there are many who are searching for material to work with in the same field of literature, it might be mentioned that no one has yet written a "Life" of the late Lord Lyons, who was for many years British Ambassador at Paris, and the man who did most to establish British prestige in France during the past half-century. The late Lord Lyons played a very prominent part in the concluding period of the Second Empire, and also at the time of the Franco-Prussian war. Of course, the one who would be the most fitted to carry out this task would be Mr. Sheffield, who for many years was confidential secretary to the late Lord Lyons.

* * * * *

It has for long been a favourite theory of mine that a work entitled "The Revolutions of the Wheels" would be, if properly handled, a very interesting contribution. The changes effected by the introduction of railways are obvious, and the later developments of the cycle, which enable those who belong to the poorer class to travel almost as rapidly as the rich do, are destined to produce a revolution as great, if not greater. Seeing that the cycle in its improved form has existed only some ten or fifteen years, it is strange that the name of the inventor, to whose genius these initial improvements are due, is already forgotten. Perhaps some enthusiastic cyclist will make the necessary investigation, and will drag from oblivion a name which future generations may have much reason to honour. It is only a suggestion, but the cycle has come to stop. Nothing, not even motor cars or artificial wings, will ever remove it completely from civilisation.

* * * * *

It may be remembered that a small and friendly agitation was organised and directed against the Royal Botanic Society some two or three years ago. The object of the movement was to induce the Society to adopt a more liberal attitude towards the public, which until then was practically excluded from the magnificent Gardens in the Regent's Park. The object of the agitation was attained, and the Royal Botanic Society, which had been threatened with insolvency, has been declared to be now, not only solvent, but to have every prospect of flourishing as it deserves. Within a few hundred yards of busy Regent-street there is a large space of exquisitely laid out grounds, from which no London house can be seen, and into which no murmur of London noise penetrates. The public has only to be made acquainted with the existence of so admirable a retreat in its midst, and to be granted reasonable opportunities of visiting it, to flock there in ever-increasing numbers. If the Fellows will only assist in giving effect to these suggestions, the Society may confidently look forward to becoming one of the most prosperous of Metropolitan institutions.—Believe me to be, very truly yours,

MARMADUKE.

MORTLOCK'S (Oxford-st.), Estd. A.D. 1746.—The collection of China and Glass now on view in their Galleries fully maintains the high reputation and pre-eminence enjoyed by "MORTLOCK'S" for the last century and a half, and well repays a visit of inspection.

SPORTING NOTES.

THE failure of the Ascot Cup, which is far and away the most richly endowed race in England, to obtain an adequate number of entries, fully justifies the view which has always been taken in TRUTH of the absurdity and fatuity manifested by the managers of that meeting in persisting in throwing away £4,000 on this event. The Gold Cup would have obtained just as many entries if only £2,000 had been given, and it would not get any larger number if the value of the race were raised to £10,000, as has been insanely suggested by some sighing simpletons. In 1874, when there was one of the most interesting races ever known for the Cup, there were twenty-four entries with £500 added. In 1884, with £1,300 added, there were twenty-seven entries. In 1893 the value of the Cup was increased to £3,000, and there were thirty-eight entries and four starters, the race having dwindled down to a match in the previous year. In 1894 there were thirty-four entries and five starters. In 1895 we had twenty-six entries and three starters, odds of 11 to 2 being betted on Isinglass, who won. Last year the added money was increased to £4,000, the result being an entry of thirty-six, with four runners. Now we have only thirty entries, and many of the animals engaged are mere rubbish when seriously considered in connection with a race of this kind. I was enabled to announce, several weeks ago, that Mr. Rose's Cyllene and Sir John Kelk's The Baker would be entered for the Cup, and it may be hoped that they will both "go for" the race, as their meeting with Galtee More would be most interesting, for many good judges are of opinion that they were decidedly the best four-year-olds of last season, and they both looked like training on and developing into stayers. It is only the meeting of Cyllene and The Baker with Galtee More which could make the Cup a good race, as Mr. Gubbins' horse can perfectly well take care of such candidates as Limasol, Count Schomberg, The Rush, Merman, Silver Fox, St. Cloud II., St. Bris, and Labrador; while Love Wisely and Winkfield's Pride are not at all likely to stand a preparation for such a race as this. Lord Rosebery has entered Chelandry, but Galtee More holds her perfectly safe on the St. Leger running. As to the superlative merits of the Australian horse, Newhaven II., about whom there has been so much laudatory jargoning, I shall believe in his giving 4 lb. to Galtee More over this course only when I see it. M. Blanc has three four-year-olds in the race, one of them being Masque II., who won last year's Ascot Stakes, and there was afterwards a great deal of delirious cackling about his then owner's ardent desire to run his steed against Galtee More at even weights, which of course was all moonshine and gasconading. Some of the older horses in the entry have no pretensions whatever to stay a Cup course.

I have also vainly protested against the idiotic folly of throwing away £1,500 on the Alexandra Plate, an event which ought long ago to have disappeared from the programme, for if there is one race in the whole year which has unquestionably been weighed in the balance and found wanting it is this stake. Last year there were twenty-four entries, but only two starters, although there was £100 for the third horse, if anything else in the race had merely been cantered over the course. Now we have twenty-three entries, including Newhaven II., St. Bris (who won last year), Count Schomberg, Masque, Limasol, The Rush, Comfrey and Labrador.

Perhaps the most interesting item among the Ascot events is the entry for next year's Rous Memorial Stakes, which may be studied with profit, and people who go carefully through the list may obtain some valuable hints. There are sixty-seven entries, but actually only two four-year-olds—Lord Derby's Crestfallen and Mr. Lorillard's Sandia. Indeed, there are very few three-year olds, the best of the lot being Brio, Cap Martin, Champ de Mars, Orzil, Palandra, Alt Mark, Dieudonné, St. Ia, The Baker, The Convict, Vatel, and The Reeve.

Mr. Gubbins has entered Galtee More for the March Stakes of £500 at the Newmarket First Spring Meeting. Twenty-three horses have been engaged in the event, including Newhaven II., Berzak, and Knight of the Thistle, who won the same race last year, but he is now unsound and a bad roarer.

I hear that Lord Derby hopes to have a good candidate for the One Thousand and Oaks in Alt Mark, who was well tried last season, and who has come on wonderfully during the winter. Alt Mark was badly amiss when she ran for the Prendergast Stakes at Newmarket in October.

Lord Rosebery may be congratulated upon owning a couple of the very finest and most racing-like two-year-olds at Newmarket. These are Corposant, half sister to Ladas and Chelandry by Sheen, and Apennine, own sister to Velasquez. They are well-grown fillies, with beautiful action, and if they fail to distinguish themselves on the Turf, their numerous admirers will be grievously disappointed. They are both very heavily engaged. I hear that if all goes well with Corposant she will make her début in the £3,000 stake at the Kempton Park July Meeting, and she has summer engagements at Epsom and at Ascot, besides the Prince of Wales Sweepstakes at Goodwood, which will be worth £2,600. Apennine will want more time, and it is probable that her first race will be the £5,000 stake at Sandown Park in July, for which her stable companion Elba ran Cyllene to a head last summer.

Mr. Leopold de Rothschild, who won last year's Brocklesby Stakes at Lincoln with Gay Lothair, may not, himself, have a dangerous candidate for the same race on March 23, but Watson's stable will probably be to the fore with Mr. Raphael's colt by Janissary out of Ladykin, who won a good trial the other day, at Newmarket, over five furlongs, in which he easily defeated Chevron Sable, who is believed to be in capital form just now.

If Mr. Brassey is disappointed with the three-year-old career of Orzil, he may reasonably look for compensation to Boniface, that animal's half brother, by St. Simon, who is a truly magnificent colt, and there is nothing in good looks, with fine action, and the very best of running blood, if he fails to develop into a flyer of the highest class. Boniface was entered for fourteen races when he was a foal, and he is now one of the most heavily engaged two-year-olds in training. He will probably make his début either at the Epsom Summer Meeting or in the Coventry Stakes at Ascot.

The American horse Voter is a great tip for the Lincolnshire Handicap, and it is believed at Newmarket that he is a very smart animal over a mile. Voter has also been entered for the Kempton Park Jubilee Handicap.

Mr. Leopold de Rothschild at present has fifty-one horses in training at Newmarket, of which twenty-seven are in the stables of Hayhoe, and twenty-three are under the charge of Watson. I expect we have seen the best of Gulistan and Goletta, but Little Bob ought to be able to win a good T.Y.C. handicap early in the season if he goes on all right. Isabenda, the dark three-year-old sister to St. Frusquin, was not trained last season, but she is confidently expected to distinguish herself on the turf, and it must not be forgotten that she is entered for the Derby. Mr. de Rothschild will have to depend mainly on his two-year-olds next season, and among them is St. Gris, half-brother, by Galopin, to St. Frusquin. Another is San Carlo, half-brother, by St. Simon, to Goletta. Guava is a filly by Galopin out of Nellie. There is an own brother to Vatel. There is no relative to Galeazzo. One of the best bred two-year-olds in Hayhoe's stable is M Ephrussi's Ambrosia II. filly by Galopin out of that good mare, Alicante, by Hermit, who won the Cambridgeshire in 1890.

The National Hunt Steeplechase is to be run this year

SAHARA (TURKISH) CIGARETTES.—Messrs. W. D. & H. O WILLS, Ltd, the sole manufacturers, invite the attention of connoisseurs to the excellence and regularity of these high-class Cigarettes.

at Gatwick on March 8, and it will be a race of £1,000, the liability on each entry being only £5 if declared, with an additional £5 if left in. The race closes on February 1, and with such generous pecuniary conditions, there ought to be a large entry.

The Grand Military Meeting at Sandown Park is fixed for March 4 and 5.

In the course of the next nine weeks there are three steeplechase meetings at Kempton Park, three at Manchester, three at Windsor, three at Plumpton, three at Sandown Park, two at Gatwick, two at Lingfield, two at Hurst Park, two at Hamilton Park, and, indeed, every week is fully occupied. Where on earth horses are to come from to fill half the events at half these meetings it is impossible to conjecture, and so apoplectic a plethora in the list of fixtures is likely to result in a paralytic tenuity in the fields. There ought to be a rule that no event of any sort or kind at a steeplechase meeting is to be of less value than £100, and this salutary reform would lead to a considerable reduction in the present utterly preposterous number of fixtures.

Among the entries for the All-Aged Stakes at Ascot are Berzak, Alt Mark, Bridegroom, Melfitana, The Convict, and Vatel. This race was one of the worst of the numerous Ascot failures last season, there being twenty-four entries and two starters only, with odds of 20 to one betted on the winner.

A few weeks ago I predicted that we should soon see Regret winning a hurdle race. Mr. Ward's horse cantered away with the Twickenham Maiden Hurdle Race at Kempton Park last Tuesday. Regret has been abused in every form of invective by some of his former admirers as an arrant rogue. The real fact is that the horse cannot stay, and a great blunder was made at Kingsclere in persisting in training and starting him for races out of his distance. If he had been kept as a three-year-old for T.Y.C. events he would have done very well.

Six subscriptions to Isinglass are advertised, the fee being 300 guineas, which is certainly a most exorbitant demand for an untried horse. Considering that St. Frusquin's fee is only 250 guineas, I do think that it is preposterous that 300 guineas should be demanded for Isinglass, who is not so highly bred; nor was he a better horse on the turf, if, indeed, he was so good. It seems that seven of the mares sent last season to Isinglass proved to be barren, which was a grievous consummation after so heavy an outlay. This horse had nineteen foaled, including colts out of Jenny Howlet, St. Marguerite (dam of Seabreeze), and Novitiate (dam of Marco), and fillies out of Glare, Reprieve, Satchel, and Sweet Sauce (dam of Kirkconnel). There were also three foals which died.

The Shire horse sale season begins this afternoon, when thirty-six mares and fillies from Lord Rothschild's celebrated stud at Tring Park will be offered there, the catalogue including many prize winners. On the 27th fifty mares and fillies (including a number of winners) from the stud of Mr. Muntz, M.P., at Dunsmore, near Rugby, will be sold. On Friday, February 11, the Prince of Wales has a sale at Sandringham, when fifty-five mares, fillies, and stallions from the Royal stud at Wolferton will be offered. During last year 740 Shires were sold, the average price being £84 3s. 2d., which is a remarkably high figure. Four figures were reached only twice during the year. Captain Duncombe sold a stallion for 1,100 gs., to Mr Victor Cavendish, M.P., who also gave 1,000 gs. for a horse at Lord Llangattock's sale. Mr. Cavendish has established a very choice stud of Shires at Holker Hall, Lancashire. As to the various sales, the best average of the year (£195. 17s 5d. for forty-five lots) was obtained by Lord Llangattock, and next came Lord Wantage with £135. 6s. 4d. for forty lots.

In a recent note in these columns I referred in stringent language to the conduct of the Council of the Lawn Tennis Association in dealing with cases of veiled professionalism. The circumstances under which I did so may be briefly summarised. I stated that players had received not only expenses, but also board and lodging, as an inducement to play in tournaments. The officers of the Association courteously informed me that two resolutions were to be proposed at the ensuing meeting; one was to the effect that the Council deprecated such practices, and considered that except in the case of private hospitality players should receive no inducement to play, and the other was framed to inflict a punishment on offenders. The same officials, without further comment, sent me the resolutions which were passed. These were that the Council deprecated such practices, that no assistance except private hospitality should be accepted by players, and, as a rider, that the Council was of opinion that there were few persons who had infringed the tenour of these resolutions. Not a word, so far as I could gather, was said or done with a view to drawing up a code of rules to punish offenders, the resolution on this branch of the subject being apparently dropped. In these circumstances, it seemed to me that the sting was taken out of the proceedings. I described the resolutions which were passed as emasculated, and I further suggested that the Council was afraid to tackle the subject, and that the blessed phrase, private hospitality, would cover the cadging system I had condemned. I knew that one member, at least, of the Council had stated himself to be utterly ignorant of the practices I was denouncing. Since I criticised the Council I have received information which shows that the attack that was made upon it was not justifiable, though for this I am not to blame. Mr. Wilberforce was responsible for the original resolutions. At the Council's meeting it was found, I now learn, that the resolution proposing penalties would, if passed by the Council, have no legal effect, as such a rule would have to be passed by the general meeting of the Association itself. The penalty resolution was thereupon withdrawn, and the proposer gave notice that he intended at the general meeting to propose rules not only penalising such misconduct, but also giving the Council power to act in all matters that might affect the interests of the game. In this way he intends, I suppose, to deal with those meetings that cadge for people to put up players. He certainly is of opinion that this form of entertainment is not private hospitality. It is very satisfactory indeed to find the members of the Council making such efforts to eradicate an evil that is threatening the game. They have themselves admitted the existence of the trouble to which reference has been made. Let them uproot the system, while it is yet young, and before it has time to do further harm. And if they would do so in a really drastic fashion, I again venture to refer Mr. Wilberforce and the rest of the Council to the rules of the Amateur Athletic Association and the Rugby Union regulating the payment of expenses. These rules have stood the test of practical experience, and the reformers will find in them valuable precedents, which will require but few additions and modifications to suit the circumstances of lawn tennis. It is much wiser to have a really strong set of regulations from the first than to add to them from time to time as different cases present themselves. I agree with Mr Wilberforce that it is a pity the Council was attacked. But such an attack would never have been made had Mr Wilberforce sent earlier in the day the valuable communication I have now received.

It was a nasty jar to see the early evening papers, which appeared about 9.30 a.m., last week, placarded with "startling result of the great match." And what a whipping! I know the wicket is blamed. But, then, the Englishmen never seemed to get hold of the Colonial attack. Ranji did not fail, and Storer, as usual, came to the rescue. Mr. Druce was in form, and Briggs was almost at his best. In the Colonial team it was highly gratifying to find new men like MacLeod and Noble distinguishing themselves. But if the Colonials hope to win over here they must play a little faster. It looks as though our men tried the same stick-in-the-mud style of batting. But, as they are not used to it, the game will not pay. The Colonial success will do a lot of good in Australia, and the match was won without George Giffen. A man may fancy himself worth a high prize, but when one is getting a middle-aged cricketer it is just as well to be modest in these respects.

A correspondent is very much agitated by the possibilities of trade-unionism in Association football. He considers it so subversive of all ideas of sport. A poor idiot he must be to talk in this way of a system of football based on the sale and purchase of men who are little better than slaves. It is nonsense to talk of sport. A gang of men run a football team as a syndicate may a theatrical piece. Their sole object is to get dividends, and so different gangs arrange rules which will prevent any one of them too flagrantly taking an advantage of another's temporary impecuniosity. The animals who bring the profits are not considered in the matter at all, except in one way. The chief object of many of the rules is to prevent poaching. In other words the best player is prevented by a set of rules in the framing of which he has no voice, from getting the best market value for his services during his short football life. No wonder, then, that the players are said to be organising to protect their own interests. The only wonder is that they have not done so before.

The tussle in the League games this year for leadership has been a great one, and public interest has been accentuated by the numerous prizes offered for correct forecasts of results, and also by the fact that the really important matches for the Association Cup will soon be played. For the first time this season Aston Villa and Sheffield United have met. The match was a very fast one from start to finish. At a comparatively early period Sheffield, who had the advantage of playing on their own ground, scored a goal. If the Villa's forwards had shown anything like the form when in front of goal that they did in mid-field they would have at least made a draw of it. Considering the injuries members of their team have received, Derby County did remarkably well in their match with Wolverhampton Wanderers, although at the beginning of the second half they were very much at sea, and looked like being badly beaten. In the second division Woolwich scored a very easy win over Newton Heath; while Luton, who were going to do such marvellous things at the beginning of the season, had a terrible thrashing by Walsall. There was a very fast and close game between the Caledonians and Upper Clapton at Upton, and the home team just won.

In Rugby football, the two fine displays by Blackheath against Cardiff and the Old Fettes-Lorretto Boys, have made it a matter for regret that for a few weeks the Club was in such a poor way. At the present time, the longer the match lasts, the better they are forward. The Harlequins turned out as strongly as they could, but they were simply crushed. The Scottish were ignominiously beaten by the Kensington men. The forwards were well led by Gibson, but the outsides literally threw chance after chance away when on the Kensington goal line. The Lennox team have been showing excellent form this season, but the Northampton team, on their own ground, were just too good for them. Croydon, another team that has certainly gone one better this season, scored a ridiculously easy win over Rosslyn Park. The Nomad forwards, with their University contingent available, simply over-ran the Richmond pack.

A few years ago there was a great agitation for the University Sports to take place in the summer instead of the spring. So much better times would be done. Sports were for the summer and not the winter months. This would be so true were it not for the fact that the chief professional handicaps are at Christmas and New Year's time. The marvellous times that Downer has been doing show the winter season does not militate against pace. He has challenged the world up to a quarter, and it will be interesting to see who takes up the gauntlet.

The GRAND HOTEL, Monte Carlo, the most fashionable hotel & restaurant on the Riviera Perfect English sanitation Now under English management.—Managing Directors, Messrs. NOEL & PATTARD.

MAMMON.

FROM MOSES MOSS TO BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN,—At last we have active markets such as had been predicted for the New Year, and many of the movements have had quite a pronounced New Year's flavour about them. It is no longer a question of half-point rises, but the advances have in several instances taken the shape of jumps of from two to four points, and quite an optimistic wave is sweeping over the markets. Readers of TRUTH cannot complain that they have not had timely notice of the coming animation, and it is satisfactory to see that almost in every instance the improvement has taken place precisely in the stocks which I had selected for the purpose.

OPTIMISTIC STOCK MARKETS.

The apprehensions which had been entertained in some quarters that trouble was brewing in the Far East have not been borne out, and the most optimistic views are now being expressed as regards the possible results of British action, should this country see fit to help China to raise a large loan, to be devoted in part to the paying-off of the indemnity to Japan. Negotiations there have no doubt been on this point, but they have probably not proceeded as far as some of the sanguine ones would have us believe. In the meantime, it is a matter for congratulation that the British Government have not allowed themselves to be persuaded to embark upon an adventurous policy as a result of recent Russian and German land-grabbing in China. The Money market has become much easier. In fact, rates have been falling away a little too fast, and the withdrawal of half a million in gold for Buenos Ayres administered a welcome check. Very cheap money we must not look for in 1898, as business promises to become exceptionally active, and the absorption of surplus funds will therefore assume large proportions. But the value of money will probably be moderate for some time to come, and thus speculaton will be stimulated. The important recovery in American Rails, which I foreshadowed, has promptly made its appearance, and the transactions of the past week have again illustrated the well-established view that, when Yankee Rails get very flat, a big improvement is nearly always at hand. The jump in Union Pacifics, by the way, is altogether in accordance with my frequently-expressed opinion. An even more drastic advance has to be recorded in Canadian Pacifics and in Grand Trunks, that in the former reaching 4½ points, and in Grand Trunk First Prefs., 7. Argentine Government bonds have also continued on the up-grade, as I anticipated, and Home Rails are distinctly firmer, especially such stocks as I have for some time singled out for a rise, viz., Great Central, Dover "A," Metropolitan Districts, and the Scotch deferred stocks. The South African department at one time suffered from realisations and inactivity, but a recovery is already in progress, and it is noticeable that continued support is being given by leading South African houses. In West Australians movements have been somewhat irregular, but a satisfactory feature from the point of view of my readers, is that an upward movement has taken place in precisely the shares to which I have of late directed special attention, notably those of the London and West Australian Exploration group, amongst which Hannan's Brownhill have gone ahead from 6$\frac{15}{16}$—at which they were quoted a week ago—to 8¼. There have also been important improvements in the Industrial section, notably in Apollinaris—Johannis, Hudson Bays, and Schweppes.

HOME RAILS—A SHARP IMPROVEMENT.

The hopeful tone which I adopted when discussing the position of Home Rails during the last few weeks has been fully borne out by recent events. The greater ease in the money market was naturally a supporting factor, and the more favourable view taken of the Chinese question was equally so. Without much basis for so sanguine a view, moreover, the market has come to the conclusion that the end of the engineering trouble is in sight, and since Thursday quotations have been put up on this idea, the Scotch section showing the way on large purchases made by Glasgow operators. Somehow or other, in the North the view that the difficulty is about to be solved is more pronounced than elsewhere. Advances of a point and more have occurred in both Caledonian Deferred Ordinary and North British Deferred, and the actual settlement of the engineering struggle would doubtless produce a further rise. With the dividend question I dealt at length in last week's issue. The first dividend to be announced will probably be the Brighton distribution, which is expected on Wednesday, and the estimate is from 6¾ to 7 per cent. on Brighton "A." On the same day the Metropolitan dividend is expected, which will probably be from 3⅝ to 3¾ per cent., to be followed by the Great Central announcement. The South Eastern declaration is also due this week, and great efforts were made at one time to convey the idea that the distribution on Dover "A" would be unsatisfactory. The estimate is from 3¾ to 4 per cent., but even the lower dividend would not be exactly unfavourable on the basis of the present range of prices. The "Bears," however, elected to commit themselves in he neighbourhood of 114½ to 115, and the division who generally lead the speculative movements in "Doras" encouraged them to the top of their bent. When the ursine operators had done selling, however, insiders turned the tables on them, with the result of an advance to 116¼, and although a relapse to 115½ has followed, I should not be surprised to see Dover "A" considerably higher. Brighton "A" have risen to 182⅝. Their yield on the present market estimate is very satisfactory, and while there is no disposition to enter into large speculative dealings in "Berthas," it would not be surprising if investment purchases were to put them higher. Great Eastern have been flagging, being quoted 123¼, and I have already expressed the view that they are quite high enough when compared with Dover "A," taking the prospective yield as a basis. A further upward movement has taken place in all the various Great Central stocks. I still hold the opinion that the 1894 Ordinary, which has now moved up to 43½, is the best purchase, but the "Omnium" stock, which is convertible, after the opening of the London extension, into 1894 Five per Cent. Preference stock and 1894 Ordinary in equal halves, is also worthy of attention, the quotation being 81. The Six per Cent. Preferred Ordinary has improved to 74, and the "A" stock to 23¼. Great Northern Deferred have received some attention on the part of those who expect that the end of the engineering strike will benefit the line, while, apart from the coming competition of the Great Central, the dividend outlook is satisfactory. Should a favourable distribution be announced, there might, therefore, be an immediate rise, in anticipation of which the quotation has been put up to 60¾. The stocks of the Heavy division have not so far moved up to any extent, although they would no doubt reap the chief benefit of the settlement of the engineering struggle. The underground stocks have been remarkably firm. Metropolitans have advanced to 135. Districts to 30¾. The tap which had been on for some time in Districts has at last dried up, and there seems to be nothing now to stop a further important improvement, which is fully justified by the present promising position.

THE YANKEE MARKET—A GENERAL ADVANCE.

The view which I expressed a week ago that, probably after a temporary reaction, a considerable further improvement would take place in the active list, has been borne out by the events of the last few days. On Tuesday the tendency was still very flat under the influence of a variety of rumours which were put about in Wall-street by the "Bears." The cables were to the effect that serious rate-cutting was in progress amongst the Grangers, and that Mr. Russell Sage was dangerously ill; but on the very next day the Sage of Wall-street walked down to his office hale and hearty. The rumour had no doubt done its duty, and who knows but that Mr. Russell Sage allowed it purposely to depress the market so as to get hold of more cheap stock! Amongst the favourable rumours which have since gained currency are the satisfactory prospects of the winter wheat crop, the denial of rate-cutting, and the announcement that Mr. Pierpont Morgan had purchased a majority of the stock of the Susquehanna and Western in the interest of the Erie. Favourable rumours were also current with reference to the coming Burlington and Quincy dividend, which is now estimated at 1¼ per cent., while increased market estimates of the New York Central dividend helped to assist the improvement, and had notably a favourable effect upon Lake Shore and Illinois Central. The extent of the recovery will be gathered from the following list of quotations, which also contains the comparison with the 1897 prices:—

—	Price, Jan. 2, 1897.	Highest in 1897.	Lowest in 1897.	Jan. 5, 1898.	Jan. 11, 1898.
Atchison	14⅜	17⅛	10	13⅛	12⅜
Do. Five per Cent. Pref.	23¾	36¼	17¾	30½	32
Canadian Pacifics	57¾	87⅞	46¾	85	88½
Central Pacific	15½	18½	7½	11⅜xd	12⅝xd
Denver	12⅛	15½	9 7/16	11⅝	12
Do. Pref.	42¾	51⅞	37⅝	46⅞	47¾
Erie	15¼	19 1/16	12	14⅞	15⅜
Do. First Pref.	35	46½	28⅝	38	39¾
Grand Trunk 1st Pref.	—	62¼	30⅛	59½	64¾
Do. Guaranteed	—	73	39⅝	71	73¼
Lake Shore	144	183	156	176 xd	176½xd
Louisville	49¼	65¼	43⅛	56¾	58
Milwaukee	75⅛	105⅛	71⅞	96¼	98¾
Mis., Kan., and Texas	13½	17⅜	10¼	12¼	13¼
Norfolk Adjust. Pref.	—	50	22½	47¾	48¾
Nor. Pacific New Pref.	—	61⅞	34½	60⅛	64⅛
New York Central	96½	118⅛	95⅛	109¼	114¼
Ontario	15⅛	20 9/16	13	16	16⅞
Reading	13¾	15¼	9⅞	11¾	11¾
Southern Ordinary	9⅝	13	7 11/16	9¼	9¾
Do. Pref.	26¾	39	25	30⅞	32⅞
Union Pacific	9¾	35 7/16	19 13/16	27	29¾
Wabash Pref.	15¾	24¾	12⅛	18¼	19

The sudden change which has taken place again shows that the time to buy American Rails is when they are very flat, as then the turn is always near, and, as I have often said, there is no market to which can be more fitly applied the old adage, "The hour is darkest before the dawn." A further rise has been established in Union Pacifics, and the advance since the last carry-over now amounts to 3 dols. It is anticipated that the new stocks will be issued in less than a month's time, and the Prefs. have now improved to 54⅞, the Four per Cent. Mortgage bonds to 93. The fact that the Central Pacific defaulted on the January Government interest was used as a handle to put down Central Pacifics, but the explanation since given in a cablegram received from the New York correspondent of the Financial News shows that it had always been expected that when the Government debt became due some arrangement would have to be made, and negotiations are in progress between the United States Government and the Central Pacific, which have so far taken a satisfactory course It is expected that a foreclosure will be arranged by the Government without the necessity of a receivership. After receding to 11½xd. Central Pacifics have rallied to 12⅝xd. Louisville and Nashville as well as Milwaukee still remain the favourites on this side with the few operators who are taking a hand in the Yankee department, and both look promising, the former in view of the refunding scheme, the latter in view of the continued large grain shipments. By the way, the position of the Chicago wheat deal, in which Mr. Phil Armour was the seller and Mr. Leiter was the buyer, is one of considerable interest, and in true American fashion Messrs. Armour have availed themselves of the event for advertising purposes by sending out circulars in which the ability displayed by Mr. Armour in supplying in a comparatively short time the wheat of which Mr. Leiter demanded delivery, is extolled in glowing terms. The following paragraph extracted from the circular will indicate the high flight of the writer's enthusiasm :—

Mr. Armour found that he had a matter of 6,000,000 bushels to get, and at once all the various activities of the complex mechanism of the superbly organised house of Armour & Co. were set in motion. The wheat wanted was stored in the warehouses of Duluth, Minneapolis, and the North-west. This wheat had to be bought, transported to Chicago, stored and inspected by the first week in January. It was a problem from which most men would shrink. To buy goods is easy if one has money or credit. It was the physical question of carrying such a vast quantity over tremendous stretches of land and water. It was, in a way, a battle not between Armour and Leiter, but between Armour and nature. And Armour won.

The passage about the battle between Armour and nature is truly precious. The question of course arises as to what Mr. Leiter will do with the 6,000,000 millions of bushels of wheat which Mr. Armour has collected by rail and steam for his benefit from all parts of the States and from the North-west. Experience hitherto has been that such corners never succeed in the end. The most important point about the present position of American Railroad stocks is that traffics continue on a large scale. According to the New York Financial Chronicle, the earnings of eighty-five railroads in the third week of December amounted to 8,147,946 dols., an increase of 578,142 dols., and the earnings of sixty-two railroads in the fourth week of December were 10,247,835 dols., an increase of 1,239 148 dols. Amongst the traffic returns for the last ten days of December, the following were the principal increases shown :—Missouri Pacific, 154,000 dols. ; Chesapeake and Ohio, 93,646 dols. ; Milwaukee, 68,000 dols. ; Kansas and Texas, 56,607 dols. ; Wabash, 34,296 dols ; Southern, 26,073 dols. ; Texas and Pacific, 21,728 dols ; Louisville. 16,254 dols. Amongst the stocks which have of late been in favour, and which are likely to attract considerable attention, are Northern Pacifics New Prefs. and Norfolk Prefs. The fact that Canadian Railway stocks have so completely borne out my prognostications is a source of gratification to me, as it will be to those of my readers who followed my advice. I expressed the very strong opinion that Canadian Pacifics, in view of dividend prospects, should go considerably higher, and the quotation of 88½, which this stock has now attained, is close to the level of 90, which I mentioned last week as the goal. The traffic return for the last ten days of December was again very satisfactory, showing a gain of 106,000 dols. Equally favourable was the traffic return of the Grand Trunk for the same period, which showed an increase of £22,452. Grand Trunk Guaranteed have risen over three points during the week to 73¼, the First Prefs. over seven points to 64¾, and the Second Prefs. have also joined in the upward movement, having put on 5⅞ at 42¾.

FOREIGNERS AND SOUTH AMERICANS.

While interbourse securities have generally displayed a steady tendency, there has been no disposition to put quotations up. with the exception chiefly of Spanish, which have been supported by reports that the Cubans are advised by their supporters in the United States to come to terms with Spain. Turks are slightly firmer, and Ottoman Banks are the turn higher. Dealings have, however, been chiefly confined to the South American section, in which a further upward movement has to be recorded, more particularly in Argentine Government and Railway stocks. The 1886 Loan has risen to 93½ xd., the Funding Loan to 90¾ xd., Buenos Ayres Water and Drainage bonds to 73½ xd. The shipment of £500,000 in gold from London to Buenos Ayres has served to draw attention to the improved position in which the Argentine Republic finds itself through the very satisfactory wheat crop, which leaves a considerable quantity available for export. It is said that a million and a-half more in gold will have to be shipped for the same destination, but this requires confirmation, and a considerable portion will doubtless be taken from Paris, as France is importing a number of cargoes of wheat from Argentina. The gold premium in Buenos Ayres has now dropped to 168, and looks like falling lower. If General Roca, as is generally anticipated, be elected President next year, it is probable that the unification of the Debt will be carried out, and, barring accidents, I look for a further advance in Argentines, in which Cedulas will doubtless participate, especially the National Series, which benefit directly by the fall in the gold premium. The provincial loans have also been firm, the Santa Fé 1888 Loan having improved to 46. Further purchases are being effected of Argentine Rails, nearly all of which may be considered a good purchase, in view of the very considerable traffic increases which must shortly be announced as the result of the moving of good crops. Buenos Ayres Great Southern now stand at 149½, Buenos Ayres and Rosario at 77, Central Argentine at 83½, Cordoba Central First Prefs. at 94, Cordoba and Rosario Second Debenture stock at 90, and Cordoba Central (Central Northern Section) Income Debenture stock at 60. In the latter stock a more important rise would doubtless have occurred had it not been for the continued large traffic decreases, and even for the last week which compares with a small traffic last year (59,000 dols.) there is a decrease of 12.500 dols., the return being only 46,500 dols. A sharp advance has taken place in Bahia, Blanca and N.W. Prefs. to 60. I advised the purchase of this stock, on December 9, when quoted 50½. Urugnay bonds have reacted slightly to 41½ for the Old Loan and to 52xd. for the New Loan, but the market is now hardening again, as the reconstruction of the Cabinet is cabled from Monte Video, the new Ministers having a good record. It is now hoped that acting-President Cuestas will take more energetic measures as regards the Chambers, and according to latest cablegrams he has called the National Guard out for the purpose. There is so far no improvement in Brazilians, and Chilians have kept steady. Peruvian Corporation Prefs. and Debentures have been picked up by knowing investors. Mexican Sixes have gone ahead sharply, the Old Loan being quoted 97¾ xd., the New Loan 95¼. Advices from Mexico are still to the effect that the country is prospering. An important advance has been established in Mexican Rails, the First Prefs. being quoted 76¾, and it is still believed that the Mexican Government will look favourably on the proposal to adjust rates according to the price of silver.

THE KAFFIR CIRCUS.—MODERATE FLUCTUATIONS.

It is characteristic of the upward movement in South African shares, which has been in progress during the last few weeks, that every now and then reactions ensue, which are certainly calculated to keep the "Bull" account within narrow limits. Such a reaction has taken place during the last week, and is now being gradually recovered. It cannot be said that the public have so far taken any important part in dealings, and the support has chiefly come from the leading South African houses who have taken the market in hand. It is no doubt the policy of the latter to let prices flag now and again, and when some of the weak speculators have been shaken out, to give renewed support. There are signs that French operators are again entering the market, and some purchases have been made for Paris account, which are distinctly traceable to this source. The electoral campaign in the Transvaal is not conducive to business activity in Johannesburg, but matters should improve when it is over. It would be important that Mr. Schalk Burger, although he has little chance of defeating Oom Paul, should be backed by a large number of votes, as this would indicate that his progressive policy is being supported by a growing number of Boers. In the meantime crushings for December make a somewhat irregular showing, the returns from the Deep Levels being, however, again good. The Rand Mines group has attracted a good deal of attention, and large transactions have taken place not only in the shares of the parent Company, but also in those of the Angelo and Driefontein, the former being now quoted 6, and the latter 4⅛. I may here be permitted to remind my readers that I gave particulars of the promising position of the Driefontein in TRUTH of September 23, when the price was $3\frac{5}{8}$. The rise which has since been established has fully justified that recommendation. East Rands were at one time $5\frac{1}{2}$ bid, but have reacted to $5\frac{3}{8}$, and in Rand Mines a slight fall to $34\frac{1}{2}$ has to be recorded, but I venture to predict that this will prove only a case of reculer pour mieux sauter. Consolidated Goldfields have been more or less neglected at $5\frac{5}{16}$, but Goldfields Deep have been active at $10\frac{3}{8}$ on the issue of the Directors' report, the substance of which I gave already in last week's issue. I may be permitted to add to my last remarks that the Directors state that they have acquired a predominant interest in the Vierfontein Syndicate, thus securing, in conjunction with other leading firms, a means of establishing a water-supply second to none on the fields. The Directors, of course, point with satisfaction to the large crushings of the Rose Deep, in which the Company has a considerable holding. Claim interests, equal to eighteen additional claims, have been purchased during the year, and the total holding of unfloated claims is stated as 528. The mining properties are unchanged, but to the shareholdings in subsidiary and other Companies there have been added shares in the Elandsfontein Estate, Village Main Reef, and Vierfontein Syndicate, while the holdings in the Rose Deep, Glen Deep (reserve shares), and Rand Victoria Mines have been increased.

The following is a list of the shareholdings on September 30, 1897 :—

Name of Company.	No. of Shares.	Total Issued Capital of Company.
City and Suburban Deep, Limited	7,284	£60.000
Elandsfontein Estate Company, Limited	9,143	30,000
Glen Deep, Limited	177,062	550,000
Johannesburg Brick and Potteries Co., Ltd.	22,000	103 000
Jupiter G. M Company, Limited	165,459	460,000
Klipriversburg Estate and G. M. Co., Ltd.	12,168	110,000
Knights Deep, Limited	153,350	443,093
Rand Victoria Mines, Limited	136 084	630,000
Robinson Deep. Limited	3[illegible]0,000	400,000
Rose Deep, Limited	55,200	400,000
Simmer and Jack East, Limited	39,225	600,000
Simmer and Jack West, Limited	21,804	300,000
Turffontein Estate	8,553	40,007
Vierfontein Syndicate	16.800	28,000
Village Main Reef G. M. Company, Limited	5,714	250,000

The capital of the Goldfields Deep is £600,000, which at £10 per share works out to £6,000,000. Taking merely the holdings in seven companies we arrive at a present total value of these of £4,500,000. These seven mines, however, represent only, as pointed out in the Financial News, 370 claims, so that the 528 claims not yet dealt with would, doubtless, bring up the total to a much higher amount than the present capitalisation, altogether apart from the other valuable assets. Under all the circumstances, a further rise would be fully justified. As regards the progress made in Deep Level mining, nothing can be more satisfactory than the remarks made by the Chairman of the Goldfields Deep at the recent meeting of that Company in Johannesburg. The great drawback to Deep Levels in the past was the amount of time necessarily consumed in preliminary operations before results could be obtained. But the rate of sinking has been so greatly accelerated that, whereas a year or two ago it was considered satisfactory to sink 60 ft. or 70 ft. per month, nowadays 100 ft. is looked upon as only moderate, and it is quite a common thing to sink a shaft 125 to 135 ft. in a month. This means that formerly a Deep Level Company could not start crushing under about four years, but that to-day the same work can be done in two and a-half years, and at far less cost, for whether a Company sinks 50 ft. in a month or 150 ft. it has to retain exactly the same permanent staff, and the standing charges remain unaltered Since the meeting the Goldfields Deep has liquidated £100,000 of its debentures, which now stand at £400,000 instead of £500,000, and the position of the Company is more promising than ever. The Simmer and Jack directors have been selling some of their "outside assets," with the result that the Company is now entirely free from debt, and has already more than enough money to pay off the remaining debentures, now amounting to £300 000. Moreover, it still holds a large block of shares, which are likely to be readily saleable as progress is made with the second row of Deep Levels. It should not be forgotten that when this Company owed about £900,000 in direct and contingent liabilities the shares stood at a much higher price than they are at present quoted.

Prices of other Deep Level shares have been firm, and are as follows : — Crown Deep 14, Nourse Deep $7\frac{3}{8}$, Rose Deep $7\frac{3}{16}$, Durban - Roodepoort Deep $4\frac{5}{16}$, Jumpers Deep 6, Knights Deep $2\frac{5}{16}$. In the Barnato group a considerable improvement has occurred in Barnato Consols, which have moved up to $2\frac{3}{8}$. There has been also a better tendency for Johnnies Investment, which stand at $2\frac{1}{8}$, for New Primrose at $4\frac{9}{16}$, and for Glencairn at $2\frac{1}{2}$. The Robinson group, on the other hand, has shown dulness, and Randfontein more especially are flagging, and have not raised themselves above $2\frac{1}{8}$. An advance has, however, taken place in Langlaagte Star to $1\frac{3}{8}$. Modderfontein have recovered to $3\frac{1}{2}$, and a rise in Knights to $4\frac{7}{16}$ has been a feature. Chartered shares have followed their usual erratic course, reacting to $2\frac{7}{8}$, and rallying to $3\frac{3}{16}$. Mail advices have now been received from the Woodstock Mine, which throw light on the disappointing nature of the first crushing, and clearly show that this is a case of injudicious management on the spot, and that there are other parts of the mine now being developed which contain payable ore, and should give a satisfactory yield. This view is confirmed by the Gold Fields News, according to which the ore at present developed is of too low a grade to yield a profit on the working costs, and the intention has always been to continue the low level to No. 2 block, where a large chute of high grade ore is proved, from which it is a distance of 500 ft, when crushing is expected to recommence profitably. My contemporary adds that the reef near the battery—an entirely new reef—is opening up well, being 3 ft. wide, and showing visible gold freely, and panning well. It is evident, therefore, that the prospects of the mine are still hopeful, and that the shares should be held for a substantial recovery. Diamond shares are firmer, De Beers being quoted $29\frac{3}{8}$, New Jagersfontein $8\frac{1}{8}$.

GOLDEN WEST AUSTRALIA.

Advices from Western Australia are in every respect satisfactory, and, according to the cablegram received by the Agent-General, the revenue of the Colony for 1897 was £2,843,775, against £2,440,390 in 1896, showing an increase of £403,835. The exports of gold in 1897 reached 674,993 oz., of a value of £2,564,976, thus largely exceeding Sir John Forrest's estimate of £2,000,000 given when in this country. This output of 674,993 oz. in 1897 compares with 261,265 oz. in 1896, 231,512 oz in 1895, 207,131 oz. in 1894, and 110,890 oz. in 1893. Truly a splendid record of an increasing gold yield! It would not be surprising if the output for 1898 were to reach 1,000,000 oz. Another piece of satisfactory news is the statement that good rains have fallen all over the Colony, a satisfactory supply of water being one of the first conditions of satisfactory mining. While on the point of West Australian finance, I may as well mention that the Colony is inviting tenders for £1,000,000 of Three per Cent. Inscribed stock (being the first instalment of a loan of £2,500,000) at 95, and that this loan is already quoted 2 premium. The proceeds are to be applied to the scheme for providing a permanent supply of water to the Coolgardie goldfields, to which I have repeatedly referred. The market for Westralian mining shares is already feeling the effect of the re-opening of the Australian Stock Exchanges, notably of Adelaide, and business has been more active during the week, although all the movements have by no means been in the upward direction. It so happens, however, that the London and Western Exploration group, with which I dealt most exhaustively in last week's issue, has given rise to the most active dealings at a general advance. The shares of the parent Company have risen to 1 $\frac{5}{8}$, London and West Australian Investment shares have improved to $\frac{7}{8}$, and the leading mining shares of the group, viz., Hannan's Brownhill, have gone ahead to 8$\frac{1}{4}$, a gain of 1$\frac{1}{4}$. From the statement which I made in last week's issue with regard to this Company, however, it is evident that this is only the beginning of the rise. East Murchison United have improved to 1$\frac{1}{8}$, ex the dividend of 1s. per share. Consolidated Murchison have moved up to 6s., and Great Fingall Reefs are up at 8s. on the participation of this Company in the Sons of Gwalia deal. Concerning the latter new Company, a pamphlet dealing exhaustively with all the reports on the property has just been issued, and as I have already furnished a good deal of information on this mine, I need but mention that the engineers state that "the known ore-bodies will yield a monthly profit of £20,000, which represents a return of 24 per cent. per annum on a capital of £1,000,000." The capital of the Company has, however, been fixed at £300,000, and the shares are therefore worth a substantial premium. A considerable number of crushings have come to hand, of which the following is the list:—

—	Tons of Ore Crushed.	Ounces of Gold.	Assay of Tailings per Ton.
North Boulder	375	426	—
Ivanhoe	1,178	2,273	—
Lady Shenton	215	1,000	—
,, ,, (from plates)	—	355	—
City of London G. M. ...	193	210	—
Cue One	375	423	—
Menzies Crusoe	185	199	12 dwt.
Consolidated Murchison.	292	295	—
Hannan's Oroya... ...	756	275	—
Mount Malcolm Prop. ...	292	362	17 dwt.
Great Boulder Main Reef	530	899	—
Northern Territories ...	—	696	—
Blevin's Find	130	131	—
Great Boulder Perseverance	780	816	—
Great Boulder Perseverance	242	601	—
Agamemnon	285	136	2$\frac{1}{2}$ dwt.
Golconda	370	850	2 dwt.
Menzies Mining and Exploration	75	85	—
Lake View Consols ...	543	705	13 dwt. 13 gr.
,, ,, ,, ...	4,447	4,876	13 dwt. 8 gr.
,, ,, (Cyanide)	2,978	2,634	2 dwt.
,, ,, (Concentrates)	20	400	—
Lindsay's Consolidated...	170	56	—
Belle Vue Proprietary ...	230	461	—
Burbank's Birthday Gift	312	550	—
Norseman	680	412	—
Hannan's Reward ...	452	165	3 dwt.

Amongst the above crushings the most interesting is that of the Lady Shenton, which shows a large increase in the percentage of the yield. The previous return was 1,012 oz. of gold from 400 tons of ore, while in the last return a yield of 1,000 oz. was obtained from 215 tons, altogether apart from the gold obtained from the plates. This confirms the view which I took some time ago, on the authority of those best acquainted with the property, that considerably better returns can be expected as the lower levels of the mine are reached. Calculating roughly, it may be said that 1,000 oz. per fortnight, or 2,000 oz. per month, would mean a total yield of 24,000 oz. per annum, of the value of, say, £91,000. Deducting milling and mining costs on the average of the last return, which would amount to about £10,300, there would be a net profit balance of £80,600. The capital of the Lady Shenton Gold Mine is £160,000, so that dividends of 50 per cent. per annum would appear to be in sight. Why, under these circumstances, the shares do not rise to a much higher level it is difficult to understand, and one can only assume that one of these days they will suddenly take a jump. Great Boulder Proprietary shares have been firm at 24s. 6d., advices from the mine continuing satisfactory. Lake View Consols have been somewhat dull, and after being dealt in below 11, are quoted at about this figure. Some of the rumours which have been current about the Lake View Lode having given out are obviously beyond the mark, as the known quantity of ore in sight in this mine is very large, so that disappointing developments in one part of the mine would not, to any extent, depreciate the value of the property as a whole. Ivanhoes have been firm at 6$\frac{3}{8}$, and London and Globes have displayed a strong front at 2$\frac{5}{8}$, at which they have been mostly buyers. It is understood that the amalgamation of various sub-Companies of the London and Globe Finance Corporation is now being proceeded with, and particulars will shortly be published. Hampton Plains have remained firm at 1$\frac{1}{4}$, West Australian Goldfields at 2$\frac{7}{16}$. I am told that the West Australian Goldfields have acquired a property in Victoria, about 7 000 acres in extent, through which the deep leads are expected to be found. The property has been acquired upon most exceptional terms, and without royalties. Burbank's Birthday Gift have improved to 1$\frac{3}{4}$ on continued satisfactory results, and Belle Vue Proprietary have been firmer at 1$\frac{1}{4}$. Central Boulder have been easier at 1$\frac{1}{8}$. West Boulder at 5s., and Golden Horseshoes have been distinctly lower, the price having reacted to 8$\frac{5}{16}$. The improvement in Golden Links has fizzled out again, and the shares are now quoted 1$\frac{5}{16}$. Hannan's Proprietary have kept pretty firm at 16s. 3d., but the various Kalgurlie issues have been dull. The Associated and Joint Stock Trust group has been well maintained, Associated Gold Mines standing at 4$\frac{1}{4}$. The West Australian Market Trust have issued a circular in which the statement is made that Mr. George Brookman has arrived in Adelaide, and has assumed his duties as local director (in conjunction with Mr. William Finlayson) of the Company, and that all arrangements for the establishment of a colonial register have been completed. The Directors are considering several important projects connected with the Westralian goldfields. The circular winds up with the statement that the Trust continues to earn substantial profits, and that at the end of the present month the Directors will consider the question of declaring an interim dividend. These shares are quoted 1$\frac{3}{16}$. The Hannan's North Gold Mining Company has now also gone in for reconstruction, but I do not consider the prospects at all satisfactory, and the large fees which are being taken by the three Directors are also a drawback. I have received several inquiries with reference to the Menzies Niagara Mine, which, although started in 1895, does not appear to have made any satisfactory progress. It will be of interest to know when crushings will at last really take place? Peak Hill Goldfields have fluctuated somewhat, and after being dealt in at 2$\frac{5}{16}$, are somewhat better at 2$\frac{1}{2}$. The special settlement has just been fixed for January 26. Golden Arrow are higher at 7s. 6d., but Chaffers and Chaffers Extended are easier. By the way, two very useful pamphlets have been issued by the West Australian authorities. One is called "A Land of Promise," and gives an authentic account of the condition and resources of the Colony, by Trant Chambers. In addition to railway and mining information, it furnishes some interesting data on the selection of land, free farms, the conditional purchase of land, and agricultural settlements and prospects. The other pamphlet is entitled "The Land Selector's Guide to the Crown Lands of Western Australia," and contains explanatory notes respecting land selection, under the Land Regulations and the Homestead Acts, with a description of the surveyed agricultural areas and lands open to free selection before survey. The latter has been issued by direction of the Hon. George Throssell, M.L.A., Commissioner of Crown Lands of Western Australia.

GLACIER WINDOW DECORATION.—A pleasant occupation for ladies is the decoration of the windows of the house, and a reliable substitute for Stained Glass, giving warmth and brightness at small cost, should be warmly welcomed. Glacier has now for 15 years stood the test of use in every country in the world. Send rough plan and measurements of any window, and sketch and estimate of cost of decoration with Glacier will be sent free of charge.—M'CAW, STEVENSON, & ORR, Ltd., 29, Cannon-st., London, E.C., & Belfast.

INDIAN, AUSTRALASIAN, AND BRITISH COLUMBIAN MINES.

Indian mining shares have been steady, and advances are marked in Nundydroog and Mysore Gold, but Ooregum Ordinary are easier. In Australian mines, other than West Australian, Aladdin's Lamp are easier at 1¾ x.d. Mount Lyell North are better at 4½, but Mount Lyell are dull at 14½. A rise of ¼ has taken place in Mount Morgan to 4⅝, and in Charters Towers shares Brilliant and St. George United are firmer, while Mill's Day Dawn United and New Queen are easier. The New Zealand section has been steadier, and there has been an advance in United New Zealand Corporation, Hauraki and Waitekauri Extended Woodstock are, however, dull. In copper shares Rio Tinto Deferred have moved up to 26, and an improvement is also marked in Anaconda, Cape Copper, and Copiapo. In British Columbian shares advances have occurred in British Columbia Financial Trust, and New Goldfields of British Columbia; but New Frazer, Hall Mines, and B.C. Development Syndicate are considerably lower. British America Corporation shares have been firm at 3s. premium buyers. It is believed that the first sub-Company of the British America Corporation will shortly be issued, and that the "Le Roi" Mine in British Columbia, which is already a dividend-payer, will be the subject of this flotation. On this point, however, no definite news is available yet, but it is understood that Mr. Whitaker Wright proposes to go to Klondike in March in order to personally superintend the development of the Corporation's interests. Amongst some two dozens of new British Columbian Companies that have been started here, and many more dozens of concerns which have seen the light of day in the United States, the majority are undoubtedly wild-cat enterprises. The public are apparently beginning to realise this fact, and quotations here are becoming more or less nominal, while a collapse of this kind of boom in the United States has also been announced. This is as it should be! A few of the sound undertakings will, of course, survive, and amongst them none is more promising than the British America Corporation. I referred last week to one of the shadiest concerns started here, viz., the Klondyke Gold Mining and Trading Company, and I asked some pointed questions as to what had become of the cash subscribed. The matter has in the meantime assumed a very serious complexion, as certain of the Directors have been under the necessity of informing against their colleagues, amongst whom Augustus Colin Aitken is now charged before the Lord Mayor upon warrants charging him with unlawfully and fraudulently applying to his own use and benefit the sum of £871 and other amounts belonging to the Company, and also for conspiring with Edgar Rodriguez Savigny, to obtain sums of money and valuable securities by false pretences from persons applying for shares in the Company. The matter being now sub judice I am unable to make any further comments, but the occurrence should act as a warning to those foolish persons who are so easily induced by any kind of boom to part with their money. In Mexican mining shares Grand Central have hardened to 1¾ on favourable advices from the mine, and Consolidated Goldfields of Mexico have risen to 1⅜ on the favourable statements made by Mr. Frank Nicholson, the general manager of the Company, who is at present on a visit to England. At the complimentary dinner given at the Hotel Cecil on Friday evening to Mr. Nicholson, the latter related how, when much prejudiced against the property, he first made an examination of it, and came to the conclusion that it was a valuable one. In fact, he at present considered the mine not only a good one, but one of the Bonanza properties of Mexico. The plant was now in perfect condition, and consisted of sixty efficient stamps and a cyanide plant capable of treating 100 tons of ore per day, the latter having started on January 1. Mr. Nicholson explained how the ore in the mine comprised two classes, one specially suited for treatment by the cyanide process, and the other by pan amalgamation, together representing a total treatment of 150 tons per day. This combined treatment commenced on January 1, and at the end of the present month results, therefore, should be announced. With regard to the underground operations, Mr. Nicholson stated that when he took charge of the mine there were in sight 30,000 tons of ore. Having driven 1,000 feet away, he encountered an ore body, which could never have been dreamt of by the people who previously held the property. He stated that the amount of ore now in sight was 84,000 tons, every foot of which was getting better, and the deeper they went the richer was the ore. Mr. Nicholsan also referred to the additional land owned by the Company of 25,000 acres, of which 15,000 at least was mineral-bearing, and stated that the result of prospecting had already shown ore going 2 dols. to the ton in a direction parallel to the Santa Elena. He hinted that this would probably enable the Consolidated Goldfields of Mexico to issue a subsidiary Company with extremely favourable prospects before the end of the year.

NEW ENTERPRISES AND ISSUES.

The prospectuses of the following new enterprises and issues have been placed before the public during the week:—

The Canning Jarrah Timber Company (Western Australia), Limited.—This Company has been formed to acquire as a going concern the business at present carried on by the Canning Jarrah Timber Company, Limited, in Western Australia, and to further develop the same. The business includes a Government concession to fell and remove timber over about 128 square miles of Jarrah Forest; a railway of about thirty miles, connected with Government railways; three large saw mills, and other properties. The share capital is fixed at £250,000 in shares of £1 each, and £75,000 Five per Cent. First Mortgage debentures of £100 each. The sum of £75,000 is to be set aside as working capital.

New South Wales Government Inscribed Stock.—The Governor and Company of the Bank of England are authorised to receive tenders for £1,500,000 New South Wales Three per Cent. Inscribed Stock, at the minimum price of £99 per cent., repayable at par in 1935. This stock will be in addition to, and will rank pari passu with, the Three per Cent. Stock, 1935, already existing. The dividends will be payable half-yearly.

Johannesburg Waterworks Estate and Exploration Company, Limited.—Issue of £250,000 Five per Cent. Mortgage Debentures in Bonds of £100 and £50 each. The whole to be redeemed by December 31, 1925, at par, by the operation of a Cumulative Sinking Fund commencing 1901, or by purchases in the market at any time thereafter if the price is below par; and the Compnay further reserves to itself the right of redeeming the whole on and after December 31, 1911, at a premium of 3 per cent. on giving six months' notice to the Debenture Holders.

The Fibrous Petroleum and Oil Fuel Company, Limited.—Capital, £250 000 in £1 shares. The Company has been formed as a parent concern to acquire, work, &c., an invention and patents for the United Kingdom, and the right to apply for the patent rights for the Dominion of Canada, for the production of a concentrated fuel from crude petroleum and other residual mineral oils.

MY LETTER BOX.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents:—

GOVERNMENT, &C., BONDS.

M. J. K.—I see no objection to your putting the sum in question in Victorian, Tasmanian, and Cape of Good Hope Fours, distributing the amount over the three different stocks. O. N.—Yes, I expect Argentine Government bonds to rise to a higher level. F. R. T.—The future course of Uruguayan bonds depends entirely upon politics. If the political problem is solved there will be an important advance, as the crops are good, and there is every promise of prosperity. Chapfallen.—Keep the Leopoldina debentures for the present. In the general re-arrangement which is being made concerning the Greek loans, it is probable that your bonds will appreciate.

BANKS, TRUSTS, AND FINANCIAL.

Arrow.—As regards the first-mentioned insurance corporation, its business has been unsuccessful, and if you are interested in the matter why do you not write to the secretary? With reference to new insurance offices, prospects for an agent of doing business are very doubtful, and this also applies to the one about which you inquire. H. J. B.—What you require has been forwarded in your envelope. I have always warned my readers against having any dealings with outside brokers, but I must confess that the firm mentioned has not yet come under my notice. Hibernicus.—The list of Industrial Debentures, given in TRUTH of December 9, should answer your requirements. If you want other securities, you must tell me what kind you require. Templar.—I have forwarded the address in question by telegraph as requested, as an exceptional matter. The Poet.—I cannot give you any better advice than to divide the sum in question over a number of the American Railroad bonds, of which I gave full lists in the issue of TRUTH, dated December 30, 1897. Cook.—In view of the improving prospects of London banks, I do not think there is any reason for selling the shares mentioned at present. Musket.—There is no reason why you should not buy these London bank shares but it is quite correct that they are £50 shares, and only £28 paid. You have therefore to run the risk, remote though it be, of the uncalled capital being called up. Inquirer, Brighton.—While the rise in Canadian Rails is fully justified, I hardly think that it will have much effect upon the Finance Company mentioned by you. G. E. G.—I cannot reply by letter. Cunliffe, Russell, & Co., of Paris, are dealing in foreign lottery bonds, and I have repeatedly stated in TRUTH that in many instances they charge prices far above the actual market values. If you wish to buy these bonds you should do so only through a respectable firm of foreign bankers in London, and if you wish it I will send you the address of such a firm. Kiston, Kilmarnock.—As an exceptional matter, your query was replied to by telegram, which, however, was returned, as an insufficient address had been given.

HOME RAILS.

Hereford.—I have all along been in favour of Caledonian Deferred and North British Deferred (1 and 2), and if you had acted on my advice you would have bought these very much cheaper than they are now, and as regards Great Centrals you are sufficiently posted by my repeated remarks, which you have doubtless read. As regards No. 5, as you know, I have never recommended a purchase of these shares. R. V. C.—Midland Deferred are a good investment of the kind, and I see no reason why you should not double your holding. January.—1. It is expected that the Great Central extension to London will be opened in March or April next. 2. I really do not know what the writer in question may have referred to, but you will have seen that the matter was fully dealt with in last week's issue under "Home Rails." 3. Yes, especially the 1894 Ordinary stock, which I prefer. Quero.—I think that Great Northern Deferred are likely to go better on the announcement of what should prove a pretty satisfactory dividend. Then the question will arise as to whether you would like to close in anticipation of the coming competition of the Great Central. I should certainly prefer Great Central New Ordinary as the more progressive of the two.

AMERICAN AND FOREIGN RAILS.

Clifton.—You have done quite right in buying Louisville at 58, and you should await a considerable rise. American Rails seem to be on the up-grade now. Veritas, Piccadilly.—I cannot tell you when the dividend will be paid, but Ontario are certainly fully worth their present price. V. B. O.—Yes, I still hold a favourable opinion of these American Railroad bonds. S. D., Dulwich.—1. Yes, these bonds are a good investment. 2. It is probable that some arrangement will be come to with regard to Santa Fé provincial bonds, and I referred to the matter last week, under "Foreigners and South Americans." Baloo.—You must really tell me what class of stocks you require for replacing your East Indian Railway Debentures. Scotus.—You must be aware that the Baltimore and Ohio Company is in the hands of the receivers. Sooner or later the matter in question will doubtless be adjusted. Ceres.—I have not yet heard as to whether the Calgary and Edmonton Company will benefit by the circumstance mentioned by you. Teacher.—Do not be frightened by these tales, and hold your Central Pacifics for an advance. You should certainly deposit your shares with Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie, & Co. Leo.—The price of Antofagasta (Chili) and Bolivia Railway Ordinary stock is 76 78 xd., according to the Official List, and it is untrue for any one to say that they could not be sold at any price. The position of the guaranteeing company, the Huanchaca Company, has of late deteriorated, inasmuch as its mine is flooded; but after the heavy decline I think it would be unwise to throw away the stock at any price. Anxious, Sheffield.—Grand Trunks are on the up-grade, and you might hold for a further important advance.

MINING SHARES.

Jupiter.—I should think that a stockbroker who is well situated in the Kaffir Circus would easily be able to buy the gold-mining shares mentioned. Linstock.—These Deep Level shares appear to be promising, but you cannot expect shares to at once jump as soon as you have bought them. Greenkeed, Glasgow.—1. Yes, London and West Australian Exploration shares are a good purchase in the light of recent developments. 2. You should at once acquire an interest in The Sons of Gwalia. 3. After the important advance in North Mount Lyall a purchase would be risky. J. McI.—I do not hold any favourable view of this mine and its neighbours. Medico.—You had better assent to any reasonable arrangement. Nothing will be gained by being obstinate. It was an accident. C. S.—There is no option but to hold in the hope that the mine may come right. Nagpur.—1. The price of British Westralia shares is 6. 2. You can meet with more favourable opportunities. Broach.—None of these Companies have so far achieved success, but they should be held in the hope of its being obtained. Regent.—1. Yes, the shares should come right. 2. Probably. 3. Yes. Dingle.—Transvaal Exploring shares should be held. M. J. G.—The vendors of the Menzies Golden Rhine Company have given the Company a new property free of charge and as long as there is a probability of this property turning out all right, it would be folly to encourage this ill-timed agitation. Ingledene.—I am afraid that prospects are by no means satisfactory. This Central Wealth Consolidated Goldfields reconstruction is most unpromising. Kismet.—No, you should hold the shares. Portions of the property are producing good ore, and it is hoped that it will come right. Woodley, Plymouth.—You should hold Knights; the mine is doing well. Anxious, South Shields.—I have a very unfavourable opinion of the much-reconstructed Polar Star Proprietary. Better not throw good money after bad. H. de C.—It is hoped by the management that the mine will turn out all right, although the result of the first crushing was disappointing. G. S., Portman-square.—At this rubbish price they are cheap, but there might be a reconstruction to face. Britannicus. 1. It is certainly most unusual when subscriptions are invited, for a Company like the Great Northern Industrial Gold Company (California) to send out subsequently letters of regret. 2. Possibly the subscriptions were insufficient and the Company did not go to allotment. 3. I do not like this concern. Reader of TRUTH, Workington.—1. The George Goch's prospects are few. 2. The other mine may come right, but the first results were disappointing. Yellowstone.—Hold all the shares, and average Nos. 3, 8, and 9. Ajax.—A fair mining risk. Mars.—No, I do not advise purchase of shares in the Anglo-Australian Exploration Company. C. D.—Your shares, Nos. 1-3, are all very promising. No. 4 may come right. Nos. 5 and 6 are a good purchase; also Nos. 9 and 11. The others are not promising, and you could do better in other shares mentioned under "Golden West Australia." Henoptin. I am glad to hear that you have often been well advised by TRUTH. Amongst the shares mentioned by you I do not think much of Nos. 1 and 2, while No. 7 has not done well of late, but all the others look promising. Disgusted.—This is due, no doubt, to the general adverse influences which have prevailed in the Transvaal of late. You should write to the Secretary of the Oceana Company. Pan.—The Goldfields of Lydenburg have proved very disappointing. It is quite time that the wealthy firm who were responsible for the flotation should take the matter up. The manner in which the shares were unloaded upon the public was disgraceful. T. E. F. S., County Waterford.—The Bon Accord Gold Mining Company was a no prospectus Company, viz., it was floated privately in 1896. It acquired an unproved property, and it is now sought to reconstruct it for want of capital under the name of Beechworth Goldfields, Limited. I should consider this throwing good money after bad. Albion.—There are, no doubt, better portions of the mine than that from which the first crushing was taken. There may be a fair chance for New Flag, but this is quite uncertain.

INDUSTRIAL SHARES.

M. S., Dublin.—I certainly do not advise you to join the new scheme of the Great Horseless Carriage Company. You will find that a movement is on foot to resist this reconstruction, headed by Mr. William J. Hunter, solicitor, 24, Finsbury-circus, London, E.C., and as you have joined this agitation I do not see why you should not go on with it. Atom.—a. The shares are quite high enough, and there is no reason why you should not take your profit, as any day some rival concern may spring up. b. Yes, a fair investment. c. My view is still unfavourable. Lem.—A fair industrial investment, but speculative. It is difficult to say whether an advance is in sight. Novice, Sheerness.—I do not like the concern. You can sell even without the certificate, but only for special settlement, and the latter does not appear to have been fixed yet. Alpha.—1. The Colonial meat trade is not in a flourishing condition, and there is little prospect of improvement in Nelson's. 2. I really should not like to express an opinion on this Tyre Company's future. There may be a recovery. F. T., Douglas.—The rise in Brush Electrical shares is rather due to the revival in the electrical industry than to the point mentioned by you. Astonian.—It is not advisable to sell out now. Belfast.—The Fish Oil deal is confined almost completely to Dublin, and there is very little market for the shares here. Hanover.—The debentures first mentioned (1) are a fair investment but no catch. In TRUTH of December 9 I gave two complete lists of Industrial and Brewery debentures, with yield, &c., and you should make your selection from this. I do not like Salt Union as an investment. Anglia.—No. 4 is a good industrial investment. No. 5 is quite high enough in view of the possibility of competition. The Brewery investments Nos. 1 and 3 are promising; No. 2 fair. I. D. G.—1. It certainly appears to be that there has been reckless trading. 2. This is a matter which you will have to decide for yourself.

CHINA AND GLASS. — Messrs. GOODE, Artists and Designers, solicit an inspection of their collection in their recently-extended South Audley-street premises, now by far the largest and most important in Europe. Messrs. Goode guarantee the excellence of all their productions, and invite a comparison of their prices with those of any co-operative stores.

MIXED INVESTMENTS.

G. de B. B.—The Tubes should be held, but I do not advise you to buy more. You should keep the Westralian shares, as the amalgamation scheme of the London and Globe Finance, which is about to be promulgated, will comprise them. Oceana should be held for an improvement. Nouvel An.—1. I recommended realising profits in Lake View Consols when these rose to 12. There is no doubt that they are worth their present price, but I do not anticipate any important improvement at present. Eventually, however, they should go higher. 2. The Argentine Rails mentioned by you are fairly promising. Dabbler.—1. Your South African shares should be held for a rise, also the others mentioned, notably London and Globe and British American Corporation, but I do not like the Component Tubes. Amongst the Westralians mentioned by you, I should prefer Brownhill Consolidated, and Lake View, and Boulder Junction, but you might have a better chance with the Heavy shares, such as Lake View Consols, Ivanhoe, and Hannan's Brownhill. East Murchison United, Consolidated Murchison, and London and West Australian Exploration shares are also promising. Heather Bell.—1. The Goldfields Deep Company holds large interests in the Deep Level mines mentioned (2 5). 6. The British-American Corporation shares are, for the moment, to be obtained in London at 3s. 3d. premium. 7. The price of Financial Times Ordinary shares is 3, and a dividend has just been announced at the same rate as last time. B. A.—1. No, I do not advise purchase of Bank of Persia shares. 2. Not yet. 3. The South African Gold Trust has declared a dividend of 7s. 6d. per share in 1897. 4. A fair industrial investment. 5. I do not recommend the purchase. 6. The London and Globe has declared an interim dividend of 10 per cent., payable on January 17, and it is expected that at least 15 per cent more will be paid for 1897. Caradoc.—I cannot tell you the result of this liquidation, but I have all along warned my readers against this concern. Hold your Chatham Ordinary Stock for an improvement. C A. P. C.—Both the Foreign Railway stocks Nos. 1 and 2 look now more promising, and should be held. For the investment of your £300 in a speculative concern, Nos. 5 and 7 would be most promising. Hazel.—Yes, you might as well sell the Telegraph stock, and reinvest in Standard Bank of South Africa shares. This a very substantial bank, with the prospect of still greater prosperity. F. C.—The stocks which you have picked out are very promising. As a matter of choice, you might distribute the money over Canadian Pacifics, Lady Shenton, and Sons of Gwalia. Boat Hook.—I. I should not advise you to sell any of your investments, Nos. 1-15. They are all promising of their kind, with the exception, perhaps, of the Turks (7) It looks as if we should have a very general appreciation in values in the present year, with the exception, perhaps, of the very high priced gilt-edged stocks. F. R. G.—1. Welsbachs should be held. 2. This Company has not of late been so successful as it used to be. J. C. W.—Copper shares such as Nos. 1 and 2 have already risen very considerably. Neither do I consider the Brewery stocks Nos. 2 and 4 as promising. But you might buy Consolidated Goldfields of Mexico and British American Corporation stocks with fair prospect of an important advance. Douglas.—1. You might as well clear your profit on them and on No. 2. As regards No. 3 this is a fair industrial investment, but, of course, speculative. Spero.—1. Same reply as regards the London and Globe dividends is to "B. A." (see above). 2. The Flagstaff Company does not look as if it could achieve any sustained success. A great many West Australian Companies are far more promising. You had better exchange into some of the shares mentioned under "Golden West Australia." 3. A very poor industrial investment.

VARIOUS INVESTMENTS.

Rates in the Money Market are distinctly lower at $1\frac{1}{2}$ to $1\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. for short loans, while the rate of discount for three months' bank bills has declined to $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The large withdrawal from the Bank of England for Buenos Ayres have, however, created a disposition not to let rates slide away too much. Consols have receded to $112\frac{3}{4}$ for the account. The downward movement was chiefly due to the consideration that should a large Chinese loan be brought out with an English guarantee this might prove a serious rival to our premier security. At present a 3 per cent. loan at an issue price of 110 is being talked of. I daresay this is all premature, but one cannot help making comparisons with other similar issues, such as the Egyptian Government Guaranteed Three per Cent. Loan, which now stands at $108\frac{1}{2}$. It is true that this is redeemable at par, while a Chinese loan would probably be redeemable at the issue price; but I do not see much attraction in Guaranteed Chinese at 110. Silver is unchanged for the week at $26\frac{7}{16}$d., and Rupee Paper is practically unaltered at $62\frac{1}{2}$. The Chinese and Japanese loans, on the other hand, have advanced, the Chinese Six per Cent. Gold Loan having recovered to 106, the Five per Cent. Gold Loan to 101, while Japanese Five per Cent. Bonds are quoted 102. A little more animation has been shown in the cycle section, but prices have moved the wrong way, and there seems little chance of any recovery to former quotations. Dunlop Deferred are dull at 11s. 9d., French Dunlops at 5s. Humber Ordinary are steady at $\frac{13}{16}$, the Extensions at $\frac{1}{2}$. Cycle Components have receded to $2\frac{1}{2}$, Amalgamated Pneumatic Tyres being lower at 7s. Swifts are quoted at $\frac{3}{4}$, Singers at 15s. $7\frac{1}{2}$d. x.d. Dealings have been active in the Industrial section, a feature having been the strength of Schweppes, on favourable dividend rumours, amongst which the Ordinary stand at 24s. 6d., the Deferred 13s. 6d. Bovrils have been in some request, the Ordinary at $1\frac{1}{8}$, the Deferred at $\frac{15}{16}$. Apollinaris-Johannis have been put up in anticipation of the deal with Pears' Soap, and the Ordinary has risen to $13\frac{1}{2}$. The English Sewing Cotton allotments have not yet been completed, and the quotation is easier at $\frac{11}{16}$ premium. Coats Ordinary are somewhat firmer at 62. Welsbach Ordinary stock has recovered to 101-6. In London Bank shares a considerable business has been transacted, and prices have hardened in several instances. London and Midland Banks have more particularly improved, on the very favourable nature of the balance-sheet, and scored an advance of $2\frac{1}{2}$, while National Provincial, London and Westminster, Capital and Counties, City Bank, and London and Provincial Bank shares have risen $\frac{1}{2}$. The accounts of the leading Banks, which are now being issued, are mostly of a satisfactory nature. In the case of the City Bank an improvement of 1 per cent. is shown in the dividend, and in that of the London and Midland and London and South-Western the improvement amounts to 2 per cent., while most of the other dividends have been maintained at the same rate as a year ago. The outlook for the current year is distinctly favourable, as, barring accidents, business will, doubtless, expand very considerably. Allsopp Ordinary have been dull, the quotation being $161\frac{3}{4}$, and business in the Brewery section generally has been curtailed. I have received the eighth annual issue of "Dunsford's Stock Exchange Handbook," which is a very useful compilation for investors and speculators. The Directors of Appleton, French, & Scrafton, Limited, of Thornaby-on-Tees, have had to fulfil a painful duty in informing their shareholders of a very serious loss, which is shown on the approximate balance-sheet at October 31, 1897, amounting to £92,226. This sum is made up chiefly of the following items:—Loss on forward wheat contracts, £45,233; other losses on grain trading, £18,293; loss on milling, &c., £12,030; bad debts, £10,487. It appears to me that the business carried on by this Company was of a highly speculative character, and that any one investing in such a concern will not be able to enjoy a peaceful night's rest. It is now proposed to obtain further capital to the amount of £70,000, but personally I should be very sorry to find any more money for a business which can lose half its capital in this fashion in a period of twelve months. A reader of TRUTH residing in Lancashire sends me a number of touting circulars which have been received in his district from Errington, Williams, & Co., 53, Warwick-street, Regent-street, W.; R. A. Smith & Co., 30, Moorgate-street, E.C.; and Sanford & Co., 48, Finsbury-pavement, E.C. With regard to Errington, Williams, & Co., the people of Lancashire are tempted to take a hand in their "railway deals," against which I have repeatedly warned my readers. I may again say that there is not the slightest chance of "gigantic fortunes" being made in this manner, as these touts promise. With reference to R. A. Smith & Co., these people also speak of "startling profits of £1,000 to be made with a £10 note," and their advice is equally dangerous; while, finally, Sanford & Co., who practise the "safety system of successful stock operations for individual accounts," are also working the hackneyed blind-pool scheme. They adopt as their motto the following:—"Speculation is a venture based on calculation; gambling a venture based on blind chance." I calculate that a transaction with Sanford & Co. would not turn out better than one with either of the two syndicate touts before mentioned. J. Edwards &

Co., Talbot House, Arundel-street, W.C., have begun the new year with a tenting circular, dated January 3, in which they announce the continued success of their "new system," and another profit obtained in Grand Trunk First Preference Stock. I should like to meet with some of the people in the flesh who have actually obtained such profits from J. Edwards & Co. It is surprising that so soon after some of the members of the fraternity have been sentenced to various terms of hard labour or penal servitude, others should display such extraordinary activity in trying to induce the public to take a hand in similar transactions. The Stock Exchange Year Book for 1898 has been compiled with his usual care by Mr. Thomas Skinner, and is quite as bulky as the previous volume. The work of forming joint stock Companies is going on, as Mr. Skinner points out in his preface, at an ever-increasing rate. In 1896 the registered number of new Companies was in excess of the very large total in 1894, and as far as the figures for 1897 are available, the number of concerns formed in that year is in excess of those brought out in any previous year. The total number of Companies actually in existence in April, 1897, was 23,728, with a total amount of paid-up capital of £1,285,042,021; against 21,223 in existence in April, 1896, with a amount of paid-up capital of £1,145,402,993. —Your affectionate Uncle, MOSES.

P.S.—TUESDAY MORNING.—The raising of the silver spectre, partly by means of stale correspondence in the Times, has only temporarily checked the improvement in American Rails, and there is every indication of the same being promptly resumed. The total crushings of the Witwatersrand mines for December are announced as 310,712 oz., being another splendid record, the previous highest total being 297,124 oz. in November, 1897, while for December, 1896, the output was 206,517 oz. M.

All Rights Reserved.

QUEER STORY.

DOROTHEA'S DAY-DREAMS.

I WILL try to present Dorothea to you. And yet it is difficult to present her adequately. Dorothea was so different from other girls. You know what most girls are like; how their existence is made up of little feminine details, and seldom extends to any interest not personal to themselves. In my own experience—which embraces, I make bold to say, most of the known British varieties—I have never conversed with a girl who did not impress me with her narrowness. I have often discovered shrewdness; sometimes real intelligence; and now and then intellect. But never, never yet have I discovered breadth. And I do not say this in detraction. Providence, who knows best, has made girls what they are, and we men love the dear creatures, perhaps, all the more because of their narrowness, as we are naturally prone to feel tenderness for that which is a little feebler than ourselves. Nay, do not exclaim, ladies. This is indeed the case. I remember my own first love affair. I was eight; my sweetheart, six. And why do you think I was first attracted to her? Simply for this reason: I was so sorry for her because she could not "shy" a ball. You see, a man likes his love to be mingled with a little pity and patronage; and a considerate Providence has limited the capacities of woman accordingly.

Dorothea, however, was different. I don't mean to say Dorothea could "shy." I am writing a true tale; and won't give myself away at the start by a self-evident absurdity. But I do mean to say that she alone, of all girls I have ever encountered, had breadth. Her mind really could soar above the petty and personal details of life, into those wider fields wherein the large and comprehensive spirit delights to wander untrammelled. To converse with her and hear her broad and beautiful views on every kind of subject was a treat indeed. They were views redolent of true philosophy, poetry, art, tinged with a nameless feminine grace, that beautified without enfeebling their essential vigour.

And her face was the index of her mind. From a merely physical standpoint, indeed, it was a lovely face. But it was much more than that: it was rapt, spiritual, heavenly. People said it was the face of an angel. I don't think they exaggerated. At least, I have never seen the counterfeit presentment of an angel on canvas (which, after all, is our only means nowadays of judging what angels are like) that, in divine expression, even equalled Dorothea's face.

Average people, among whom must be included her own family, neither understood nor appreciated Dorothea. That was not surprising. Her father, a Somersetshire squire, cared for nothing but sport, and was incapable of any mental effort greater than was required for the misunderstanding of evidence at petty sessions. Her mother's life divided itself between housekeeping, garden-parties, and maternity doles in the village. Her brother was the sworn servant of athletics. Her two sisters recked only of golf and cycling. No wonder, then, that these intellectual earth-worms failed to appreciate the treasure wherewith Providence had associated them. Because her mind was always occupied with higher things, they derided her as an idle dreamer. And when she went off—as was a common habit of hers—into some deep reverie, in which she was for the time lost to all surrounding circumstances, these crass materialists, her family, would perpetrate facetious pleasantries anent her "wool-gathering wits."

Yet what else was to be expected than that she should be driven constantly into a brown study, there to commune with her own soul? How was she, Dorothea, to enter into conversations about partridges and poachers; about brassies and putters, or L-pins, and clincher tires?

It may easily be understood, therefore, that with such associates, this beautiful-minded girl found her daily life the reverse of congenial. In fact, if it hadn't been for one person, she simply couldn't have borne it, but must have run away from home altogether. This one person was Arthur Ellacombe.

Arthur Ellacombe was the young bachelor squire of a neighbouring village, who had just taken up his residence on his ancestral acres, after travelling about the world for several years. He was good-looking and well bred; also intellectual and cultured beyond the average. Add to this the fact that he had a rent-roll of £7,000 a year, and you will see at once that he was a man who could not fail to be made much of in the society of the neighbourhood.

Among those who had been forward to welcome him to the home of his fathers were Dorothea's parents; and, although he lived ten miles away, he constantly rode over to Dorothea's parents' house. Now a man does not ride ten miles to a place about every other day for nothing. So, at least, Dorothea's mother opined. And it was not long before Dorothea's mother's opinion was justified, and Arthur's engagement to Dorothea became an accomplished fact.

The good squiress smiled many placid smiles of satisfaction over this desirable betrothal. It was all the more welcome to her because she had rather despaired of Dorothea. The eligible men of the neighbourhood had never run after that young lady, beautiful as she was. Probably she frightened them, with her dreamy ways and intellectual converse, as such girls often do frighten bucolic blockheads. With her other two daughters, Nettie and Maggie, it was all right. They golfed and biked, and might be trusted to golf or bike themselves into good husbands. While we are on this point, it may be added that both young ladies subsequently did what was expected of them—Maggie at a gymkhana and Nettie on the links. Indeed, the latter young lady secured her man in rather sensational style. For playing with him one day in a foursome, when everything depended on her stroke, she holed a twelve-yard putt on the home green and won the match. Whereat her partner, a golf enthusiast, was so delighted, that he proposed on the spot. Who says that golf is a useless accomplishment for girls?

But to return to Dorothea. For her at last had arrived the ideal mate, cultured, intellectual, able to appreciate her lofty and expansive mind. What a treat to hold converse with him after the material and phlegmatic bumpkins to whom she had been accustomed! Yea. How thrice sweet the prospect of holding perpetual converse with him through the days of life! And soon the necessary step to ensure that perpetuity was taken. For, after a brief engagement, Arthur led Dorothea, a radiant, dreamy bride, to the altar of her village church, and there the bond was sealed between them which only death—or the Divorce Court—could dissolve.

* * * * *

A few months later, after their return from the honeymoon, Arthur and his bride came over to spend a week or two at the latter's parental home. Dorothea looked very happy and bright; but it was not long before the family noticed a change in her. Not merely did she talk more, and actually stoop to show interest in trivial subjects on which, formerly, she would not have had a word to say, but the old habit, which up to her marriage had seemed to be part of her nature, the habit of constantly relapsing into brown studies, and therein mooning for hours at a time, had almost entirely disappeared.

One evening after dinner, when alone over his wine with Arthur, her father, the Squire, remarked upon this remarkable change in Dorothea.

"Gad, Arthur," he said, as he sipped his claret, "how marriage has improved my girl. I wouldn't have believed that any one could have altered so much in three months! Damme, if she hasn't become quite like other people!"

His son-in-law smiled, but was silent.

"Perhaps you don't consider it an improvement?" said the Squire.

"Oh! yes, I do. The fact is," said Arthur, leaning back in his chair, and stroking his chin complacently. "The fact is, I—I—am rather proud of the change in Dorothea, because I myself have had a good deal to do with it."

"Eh! Pardon my saying so, but I thought you used to like Dorothea's dreamy ways."

"So I did—before our marriage. Afterwards I found them another matter."

"Ah!" murmured the Squire, with a broad grin, as he refilled his glass.

"The truth is," remarked Arthur, gazing up at the ceiling, "that—that—when you're always with a girl, you want her to be a companion, don't you see? And if, five times out of every six that you address a remark to her, you find her too much preoccupied to answer, or even to hear it, it—er—it soon begins to pall on a fellow, you know."

"Hum," chuckled his father-in-law. "I shouldn't wonder!"

"And when," pursued Arthur, "you come in from a day's excursion, devilish hungry, and ready to eat your head, and find that your wife has been day-dreaming to such a tune that she has forgotten to order dinner—well, it's a sort of thing of which once is enough, don't you know."

"More than enough for me," laughed the Squire.

"So we hadn't been honeymooning a fortnight," continued Arthur, whom a good dinner and a better glass of wine had rendered extremely communicative, "before I saw that something would have to be done. The question was—What? Now, a man of less adroitness might probably have committed the insane blunder of openly taking Dorothea to task for her mooning habits—a course which could only have resulted in abject failure. For, like all women, Dorothea is devilish obstinate in the face of opposition. But I myself hit upon a far more excellent way. It cost me two days' thought, but was well worth all the time spent in evolving it. . . . I determined to catch Dorothea's complaint myself."

"Oh!" remarked the Squire, looking rather mystified. Arthur proceeded to explain:

"I began to contract it cautiously, gradually. For I didn't wish to startle the dear girl, or to make it apparent to her that I was simply playing a game. At first, therefore, I only betrayed trifling symptoms of the disorder. When she spoke to me, for instance, I didn't always answer immediately; nor when I did answer, was my reply always strictly relevant. Then I advanced a stage. I went out on purpose to do errands for Dorothea, and came back, in a brown study, having quite forgotten to execute them. I omitted on several occasions to post letters which she entrusted to me. I helped myself to soup at dinner, and forgot to help Dorothea; and on one occasion—a thing which made a great impression—my wife came into the room and found me absently poking the fire with the point of her best sunshade."

"That was an act of great audacity!" said the Squire.

"Yes. It required some nerve. But it was excellent practice, you see, for the still more audacious act which I had in my mind, and which soon afterwards I actually dared to bring off. This was the critical and culminating incident. I must tell you about it. I myself evolved the situation with great pains, and I cannot help feeling proud of it, as a distinct stroke of genius.

"One evening, shortly before dinner, I strolled into the drawing-room, where I knew Dorothea was sitting, though I affected preoccupation, and seemed to be unconscious of her presence. I was in dress clothes, I may add, over which I wore a light covert coat, and I carried in my hand an opera hat.

"'Arthur!' she cried out, in evident surprise, 'Arthur, what are you wearing an overcoat for; and what do you want with a hat? You're not dining out?'

"'Eh? Wha-a-at?' I said, in dreamy, absent tones. 'Not dining out? Oh, yes, my pet. Dining at the Grand.'

"'Why, you never told me! I had ordered dinner here. I must run and smarten myself up a bit. I suppose we shall dine at the table d'hôte?'

"'Yes—at the table d'hôte,' I answered, still with an abstracted, wool-gathering air. 'Jennings and I, you know.'

"'Jennings? Who's Jennings?' she cried, sharply.

"'Who's Jennings! Really, my pet—— Oh, I forgot!'

"And then I seemed to wake up, and to resume, as it were, the possession of my faculties. An appearance of confusion overtook me. I became painfully embarrassed, and profusely apologetic.

"'My sweetest Dorothea,' I cried, 'I am afraid I have done something that you will never forgive.'

"Dorothea stood regarding me, in silence. But the glance of her eye spoke volumes. It invited—nay, commanded—a full and sufficient explanation.

"'My—my—own—dearest!' I stammered. 'D-don't be angry. When I was at Oxford, Tom Jennings was my greatest friend. I—I—hadn't heard of him for years. This afternoon I met him on the Spa. He s-said that he was staying at the Grand, and asked me to dine with him. And—and—here comes in the most absurd part of it. You—you—know I—I—have a most unfortunate habit of—of—wool-gathering, and—and when Tom asked me to dine with him—don't be awfully vexed, my precious pet, it was quite involuntarily—I—I—was so preoccupied, I suppose, with other thoughts, that—that, for the time being I—quite ridiculous it seems, certainly, but it's the gospel truth—I clean forgot I was a married man. Indeed, it wasn't—really it wasn't—until you awoke me from my brown study just now that I—I—remembered you at all, my darling Dorothea!'

"It took every ounce of courage I possessed to say that. But it was worth saying, for it touched the spot exactly, as I meant it should. Dorothea was speechless with insulted rage. I quailed — apparently — before her withering look, and slunk away to dine at the Grand. Not with Jennings, however. Jennings was a myth. But in solitary state. When I returned, my wife would not speak to me. I tried to reason with her. In the face of her stony silence, it was no avail.

"Next morning I renewed my argument. I put it to her this way. It was not only unreasonable, it was cruel, to be angry with what was, after all, a mere physical infirmity. As well might she be wroth with a fellow because he squinted, or had a club-foot. But my infirmity had this advantage over the others. It was curable.

"'And it can—nay it shall—be cured,' I cried, 'if you Dorothea, will be my darling doctor.'

"And how, she asked, beginning to relent, was she to be my darling doctor."

"'By keeping a constant eye on me,' I said, 'and watching for the smallest symptom of my infirmity displaying itself, then recalling me to myself by a look, a word, a touch. I will co-operate as far as any patient can; and, surely, to co-operate with so sweet a physician will be a pleasant, a delightsome, an entrancing task.'

"Then she quite relented. She said she would be my darling doctor. She was. She kept her eye on me persistently. She was always watching for symptoms. And so, you see, by accustoming herself to keep constantly on the alert for my daydreams, she was in reality curing her own. Before the end of our honeymoon, her recovery was complete!"

THE EIGHTEENTH "TRUTH" TOY AND DOLL SHOW.

THE PRIZE LIST.

IT will readily be recognised that the better the Show is, the more arduous does the task of awarding the prizes become. Seeing, then, that the Show recently held at the Albert Hall is on all sides admitted to be the very best of the series, it follows that it has been exceptionally difficult to distinguish between the claims of the many competitors who have distinguished themselves. Never before has the number of dolls exhibited been so large. Never before has the average standard of merit amongst the competitors attained to a higher level. Never, let it be repeated, have the ladies who so kindly consent to assist in the capacity of judges found their task more onerous. They have, however, persevered bravely in their adjudication, and the result of the awards made by them will be found tabulated in a subsequent column of this article.

First, however, a few prefatory remarks are necessary. It will be remembered that a Special Competition was instituted for the recent Show In honour of the Queen's Diamond Jubilee, special prizes were offered for Groups of Dolls dressed to illustrate the most striking changes in costume during the six decades of the Queen's reign. For the best of these groups a prize of a Lady's Dressing Bag was most kindly offered by Messrs. Blondeau & Co., the proprietors of Vinolia Soap. For some reason or another, this particular competition did not prove to be a success. Not to mince matters, it was a failure; for, deterred possibly by the difficulty of the task, competitors did not enter for it in sufficient numbers to make a competition of it. In these circumstances, it was found impossible to award the special prize which had been offered, and Messrs. Blondeau & Co. might, had they acted in literal accordance with their original intimation, have withdrawn their contribution altogether. But this, I am glad to say, they did not do. They most liberally sent a cheque for £25, and expressed their wish to leave the matter in the hands of the Editor of TRUTH. It was accordingly decided to devote a portion of their generous gift to the extension of the ordinary Prize List, and to hand over the balance to the much overdrawn TRUTH Toy Fund. Let it be distinctly understood, therefore, that, though the Dressing Bag offered by the proprietors of Vinolia Soap could not be awarded, a cheque for £25, representing its value, has been sent to the Editor of TRUTH, and has been used in the manner detailed above.

It may also be well to add a few lines of explanation as to the large and effective model of the "Third Act of 'The Little Minister,'" specially constructed by various members of the Haymarket Company, and presented to the Show by Mr. Cyril Maude. As to the admirable spectacular effect of this charming reproduction in miniature of one of the most striking scenes in Mr. J. M. Barrie's popular play, there can be no two opinions. The model scene was one of the most attractive features of a very attractive Show, and would undoubtedly have taken the first prize but for the fact that it was not sent in for competition by its kind donor. It was the work of many skilful hands. The scene painter of the theatre, Mr. Walter Hann, himself painted the scene for it. The property-master ably assisted in the production of the proscenium and there was, I think, not a lady in the company, from Miss Winifred Emery downwards, who did not lend a hand in dressing the doll dramatis personæ. The Editor of TRUTH hopes, therefore, that, though the model, as a whole, must be considered an uncompetitive one, the ladies who took part in the doll dressing will each be good enough to accept a TRUTH brooch as a small memento of their generous labours on behalf of the TRUTH Show.

It will be noticed that the total number of prizes and brooches is this year considerably over 150; but it has nevertheless been found impossible to acknowledge even thus imperfectly the merits of all the exhibitors who deserve special recognition. As to the ladies who are not mentioned in the following lists, it is surely unnecessary to remind them that they by no means go unrewarded. I only wish it had been possible for all of them to have been present during the past fortnight at the numerous Hospital and Workhouse Fêtes which have been held within the Metropolitan area. For they would then have seen for themselves how intense was the excitement, how genuine the happiness, caused by the distribution of their generous gifts. They would have assisted at scenes of delight which it would be difficult to describe in plain, prosaic language. Numerous letters of acknowledgment have been received from various hospitals and workhouses, all expressing the warmest thanks for the gifts that the readers of TRUTH and their friends have dispensed through the hands of the Editor of this paper. To print them all is impossible, but here are a couple of short notes, sent by the Secretary of the Hospital for Sick Children in Great Ormond-street. They were handed to him, he says, by the Sisters of the Wards in which the little patients who wrote them are lying. Here they are, verbatim et literatim:—

The Hospital for Sick Children,
Great Ormond-street, London, W.C.

DEAR MR. EDITOR,—Just a few lines. I thank you very much for sending such a grand Selection of Toys for Christmas. And I enjoyed the Christmas very much indeed if it were not for you I would not quite of enjoyed it so much. I should like you to thank the other gentlemen and Lady Friends for their help. I must say my Mother was delighted with the Toys. I must bring this short note to a close as I have no more to say to you but to wish you a very Happy New Year indeed.—I conclude, Yours respectfully, ARTHUR COLLINS, aged 11 yrs.

Louise word, Great Ormond-street.

DEAR MIS EIDOR,—just a few lines to tell you that we thank you so much for the toys you sent us and they made the Christmas-tree look so pretty and the childrens are so pleased with them. Wishing you a happy New Year.—Your respectively,
GEORGE NICHOLAS, age 11.

It is hoped that these letters will serve to bring home to all the competitors and contributors who aided the TRUTH Show that the toys and dolls their kindness provides Christmas after Christmas not only induce much delight during the season of Yuletide, but continue to cause happiness for many subsequent months. It would surprise the uninitiated to hear how protracted the average life of a TRUTH Doll is, and for how long a period a TRUTH Toy often continues to amuse and delight. Surely it is the knowledge of such facts as these that will constitute the most satisfactory reward of all those who have taken an active part in helping TRUTH. What, after all, are the mere tangible items of the Prize List compared with the hearty and undoubtedly sincere thanks of the thirty thousand children who have been the recipients of the Christmas bounty it has been TRUTH'S privilege to distribute on behalf of so many generous friends?

And now, in the first place, a list is subjoined of the prizes which have been presented by the Editor of TRUTH and others, in addition to the TRUTH Brooches, of which considerably over a hundred will be distributed. The TRUTH Prizes consist of articles made of, or mounted with, silver, and are arranged below in order of their cash value, which varies, it may be said, from £5 to 10s. In addition to these there are the Singer's Sewing Machine presented by the Singer Manufacturing Company; the Lady's Gold Watch, presented by the Goldsmiths' and Silversmiths' Company, from which firm the various silver prizes were purchased; and the Girl's Bicycle, presented by the Directors of the Tom Tit Cycle Company, Limited. The total number of prizes, it will thus be seen, amounts to forty-four. As in previous years, an attempt has been made in choosing them to select things which are at once useful and durable, as well as, in many cases, ornamental, and it is hoped they will form lasting as well as pleasant reminiscences of the Eighteenth TRUTH Toy and Doll Show. The following, then, is the list of the prizes:—

1. Lady's Gold Watch (presented by the Goldsmiths' and Silversmiths' Company, of 112, Regent-street).
2. Diamond Jubilee Sewing Machine (presented by the Singer Manufacturing Company, Limited).
3. Girl's Bicycle (presented by the Tom-Tit Cycle Company, Limited).
4. Fine Gold Curb Chain Bracelet.
5. Chased Sterling Silver Cherub Brush Tray.
6. ,, ,, ,, Manicure Set.
7. ,, ,, ,, Table Mirror.
8. ,, ,, ,, Hairpin Box.
9. ,, ,, ,, Lady's Card-case.
10. ,, ,, ,, Cherub Comb Tray
11. ,, ,, ,, Curling Tongs
12. ,, ,, ,, Sealing-wax Holder.
13. ,, ,, ,, Scent Bottle.
14. ,, ,, ,, Photograph Frame.
15. ,, ,, ,, Scent Bottle.
16. ,, ,, ,, Chased Tray.
17. ,, ,, ,, Puff Box.
18. ,, ,, ,, Mounted Bell.
19. ,, ,, ,, Photograph Frame.
20. ,, ,, ,, ,, ,,
21. ,, ,, ,, Mounted Calendar Frame.
22. ,, ,, ,, Bonbon Dish.
23. ,, ,, ,, ,, ,,
24. ,, ,, ,, ,, ,,
25. ,, ,, ,, ,, ,,
26. ,, ,, ,, Scent Bottle.
27. ,, ,, ,, Mounted Calendar Frame.
28. ,, ,, ,, Photograph Frame.
29. ,, ,, ,, ,, ,,
30. ,, ,, ,, Hair Brush.
31. ,, ,, ,, ,, ,,
32. ,, ,, ,, Button Hook.
33. ,, ,, ,, ,, ,,
34. ,, ,, ,, Gum Pot.
35. ,, ,, ,, ,, ,,
36. ,, ,, ,, Scent Bottle.
37. ,, ,, ,, ,, ,,
38. ,, ,, ,, ,, ,,
39. ,, ,, ,, ,, ,,
40. ,, ,, ,, Bonbon Dish.
41. ,, ,, ,, ,, ,,
42. ,, ,, ,, ,, ,,
43. ,, ,, ,, ,, ,,
44. ,, ,, ,, Dictionary Case with Thumb-nail Dictionary.

 The number of the Prizes detailed above has been considerably augmented, thanks to the kindness of Messrs. Blondeau & Co. (proprietors of Vinolia Soap), the sum of £10 out of their cheque of £25 having been devoted to this purpose.

The above list, both as to the number of articles and their value, will be found to compare very favourably with that of last year. Visitors to the Albert Hall had a chance of seeing most of the above Prizes, together with specimens of the TRUTH Brooches, but it may interest those readers of TRUTH who have not seen the latter, to learn that the design of the Brooch combines in a tasteful and effective way the figures of a TRUTH Doll, a scroll with the word "Christmas" upon it, and the well-known emblems of Faith, Hope, and Charity, viz., a cross, an anchor, and a heart. In accordance with a precedent set two years ago, a Special Prize will be awarded to Mrs. H. P. Truefitt. As on several former occasions explained, Mrs. Truefitt, by reason of her often repeated successes, has been placed, so to speak, hors concours. It was felt that this course was rendered necessary seeing on how many occasions in the past she has succeeded in carrying off the first prize. By moving her into a special class the competition has been made a more open one. I may add that the Editor of TRUTH is now considering what form Mrs. Truefitt's "Special Prize" shall take.

With regard to the other Prizes they have been divided into six categories, viz.:—1. Those awarded for the Dressing of a large number of Dolls. 2. For Dressing Groups of Dolls. 3. For Dressing Large Dolls. 4. For Home-made Model Toys, &c. 5. For Home-dressed Dolls other than the TRUTH Dolls. 6. For Home-made Scrap-books. And the following are the competitors who have been successful in these various classes:—

SPECIAL PRIZE.

Mrs. H. P. Truefitt, for large and small dolls and groups.

I.—THE NAMES OF THE WINNERS OF PRIZES FOR DRESSING A LARGE NUMBER OF DOLLS.

First Prize, Mrs. Rawson (Yoko), 400 dolls.
Second Prize, Mrs. Charles Alexander, 300 dolls.
Third Prize, Miss D. Peet, 276 dolls.
Fourth Prize, Miss L. R. Brown, 130 dolls.
Fifth Prize, Mrs. J. Arlosh, 100 dolls.
Sixth Prize, Mrs. D Levitt, 100 dolls.
Seventh Prize, Miss W. Baker, 100 dolls.
Eighth Prize, The Misses Hamp Adams, 100 dolls.
Ninth Prize, Mrs. Sayer, 72 dolls.
Tenth Prize, The Misses Beynon, 60 dolls.
Eleventh Prize, Miss J. Levitt, 76 dolls.

II.—THE NAMES OF THE WINNERS OF PRIZES FOR DRESSING GROUPS OF DOLLS.

First Prize, Miss May Streatfeild, "Alice in Wonderland."
Second Prize, Miss M. R. Collum, "Ice Carnival."
Third Prize, Miss A. Levitt, "Ballet of Jewels and Metals."
Fourth Prize, Miss T. Hadaway, "Visit of Queen of Greece to a Field Hospital."
Fifth Prize, Miss A. Randall, "Sleighing and Tobogganing Scene."

III.—THE NAMES OF THE WINNERS OF PRIZES FOR DRESSING LARGE DOLLS.

First Prize, Mrs. Burrows, "A Bride," and three others.
Second Prize, Lady and Miss Call, "1837" and "1897."
Third Prize, Mrs. Tomlin's Nurse, "Dolly's Bath."
Fourth Prize, C. E. Birch, Esq., "Where are you going, my pretty maid?"
Fifth Prize, Mrs. A. Rathbone, "Princess Victoria."
Sixth Prize, Mrs. Watson, "Doll in apple green and fraise."
Seventh Prize, Mrs. Neville Campbell, "Mlle. X. and her Bonne."
Eighth Prize, Miss A. M. George, "Chelsea Pensioner."
Ninth Prize, Miss Pearson, "1870."
Tenth Prize, Miss V. Wrigley, "Baigneur and Baigneuse."
Eleventh Prize, Mrs. M. Sacrè, "Boy and Girl in Seaside Dress."
Twelfth Prize, Miss N. Dan, "A Kentish Harvest."
Thirteenth Prize, Miss L. Crofts, "The Twins."
Fourteenth Prize, Miss M. Powell, "Oberon and Titania."
Fifteenth Prize, Miss S. Sandbrook, "Mercia."
Sixteenth Prize, Miss Ethel M. Bartlett, "Old Mother Hubbard."
Seventeenth Prize, Miss Sybil Holland, "Music."
Eighteenth Prize, Miss F. im Thurn, "Phœbe," in "Yeoman of the Guard."

IV.—THE NAMES OF THE WINNERS OF PRIZES FOR HOME-MADE MODEL TOYS, &C.

First Prize, Miss N. Rogers, "Model Village."
Second Prize, Miss Ethel Rawson-Ince, "Model Cottage."
Third Prize, Mrs. Grimston, "Doll's Library, &c."
Fourth Prize, Miss M. Stokes, "Model Village."
Fifth Prize, Miss Staley, "A Peep into Fairy Land."
Sixth Prize, Mrs. McKane, "Twenty-four Doll's-cribs, &c."
Seventh Prize, Miss Pattison, "A Visit from Father Christmas."
Eighth Prize, Mrs. H. Newman, "Model Stable," &c.

V. NAME OF THE WINNER OF A PRIZE FOR THE BEST HOME-DRESSED DOLL.

Miss Lucy Agnes Kitson.

VI. NAME OF THE WINNER OF A PRIZE FOR HOME-MADE SCRAP-BOOKS.

Miss Rawson, who made and contributed 200 Scrap-Books.

Instead of awarding one of the Prizes specifically to each competitor, it is proposed, as far as possible, to let the Prize Winners choose for themselves in turn from the given list. For this purpose the names found in the above six lists will now be arranged in one list, and in the order there given the Prize Winners will be allowed to make their selection in rotation. Thus, Mrs Rawson will have the first choice, Mrs. Charles Alexander the second, Mrs. Burrows the third, and so on. It will, of course, be well for Prize Winners in writing to mention more than one article, so that there may be still some guide to their wishes in case it is impossible to award them the Prize they may select in the first instance.

LIST OF THE PRIZE WINNERS IN THE ORDER IN WHICH THEY ARE INVITED TO SELECT THEIR PRIZES:—

1, Mrs. Rawson; 2, Miss Charles Alexander; 3, Mrs. Burrows; 4, Miss N. Rogers; 5, Lady Call; 6, Miss May Streatfeild; 7, Miss M. R. Collum; 8, Miss D. Peet: 9. Miss

L. R. Brown; 10, Mrs. Arlosh; 11, Mrs. Tomlin's Nurse; 12, Mrs. D. Levitt; 13, Miss W. Baker; 14, the Misses Hamp Adams; 15, C. E. Birch, Esq.; 16, Mrs. A. Rathbone; 17, Mrs. Watson; 18, Miss Rawson (Scrap Books); 19, Mrs. Neville Campbell; 20, Mrs. Grimston; 21, Miss Marguerite Stokes; 22, Miss Pearson; 23, Miss Ethel Rawson-Ince; 24, Miss A. M. George; 25, Mrs. Sayer; 26, Miss V. Wrigley; 27, Miss Staley; 28, Mrs. M. Sacrè; 29, Miss A. Levitt; 30, The Misses Beynon; 31, Miss N. Dan; 32, Miss L. Crofts; 33, Miss M. Powell; 34, Mrs. T. Hadaway; 35, Mrs. McKane; 36, Miss S. Sandbrook; 37, Miss J. Levitt; 38, Miss A. Randall; 39, Miss Pattison; 40, Mrs. H. Newman; 41, Miss Lucy Agnes Kitson; 42, Miss Sybil Holland; 43, Miss F. im Thurn; 44, Miss Ethel M. Bartlett.

It is hoped that the ladies and gentleman included in the above lists will be good enough to write at their earliest convenience and make known their wishes; as it will obviously be necessary to receive all the letters of application before the sending out of the Prizes can be commenced.

There is one more list to be published, viz., of the ladies to whom TRUTH Silver Brooches will be sent on receipt of letters from them stating the addresses to which they wish the brooches forwarded. It has again been found necessary to increase the number included in this year's distribution, though even now the available brooches are not sufficient to enable one to be awarded to every lady who has so kindly assisted in dressing dolls. The name of every one who has dressed a large doll, or not fewer than twelve small ones, will, however, be found below. Or should any lady thus eligible find her name omitted, the omission will be corrected on receipt of an intimation to that effect. Very possibly other errors may have crept into the various lists. It is scarcely necessary to add that if this should be the case, attention will at once be paid to any corrections which may be sent to TRUTH office.

LIST OF LADIES TO WHOM "TRUTH" BROOCHES ARE TO BE PRESENTED.

Mrs. Argenti, Mrs L. Alexander, Mrs. E. Alston, Miss M. Arnott, Mrs. A. B. Appleby, Miss M. J. Berjmans, Mrs. G. A. Benson, Miss E. M. Bartlett, Miss E. M. Boden, Miss A. Bangham, Miss G. Brown, Miss G. D. Burrows, Nurse Barnes, Mrs. Baynes, Mrs. F. Cook, Miss L. Clerk, Miss Crowther, Miss L. Cary, Miss K. Creagh, Miss Carruthers, Mrs. C. H. Cooper, Miss Daish, Mrs. J. Dudley, Miss A. J. Dowling, The Hon. Mrs. Durant, Mrs. Dillon, Miss Davies, The Hon. Muriel Erskine, Miss O. Martin Edmunds, Mrs. Eastlake, Miss Winifred Emery and the ladies of the Haymarket Company who dressed dolls for the "Little Minister" model scene (a TRUTH Brooch each), Mrs. S. A. Flindt, Mrs. J. F. Fletcher, Miss E. Gilmour, Mrs. Gillespie, Mrs. P. Giere, Miss K. Gibb, Miss Gibb, Miss M. Godson, Miss E. George, Miss A. Greaves, Miss S. Herbert, Miss Henderson, Miss M. E. Jackson, Mrs. Jardine, Miss E. L. Johnson, Lady Kemball, Mrs. J. A. Kennedy, Miss Keats, Miss Kearton, Mlle. Laforge, Miss M. Lomax, Miss L. Lewis, Mrs. Light, Mrs. W. C. T. Leggatt, Mrs. Maris, Miss J. C. Myrth, Miss E. H. Madgwick, Miss M. Marshall, Mrs. Meyricke, Miss Magoris, E. S. Musgrave, Esq., Mrs. Moore, Mrs. W. Mercer, Miss M. Meller, Mrs. E. Nathan, Miss L. Nicholls, Mrs. Nathan, Miss Ida Oppenheim, Miss M. O'Reilly, Miss Pearson, Mrs. A. Poole, Miss Winifred Ardill, Mrs. F. Pritchard, Miss C. Pearson, Mrs. Packham, Mrs. A. Robinson, Miss S. Ravenscroft, Miss A. Robjent, Miss Robinson, Mrs. A. Wynter Roberts, Miss Sansom, W. Seddon's Friends, Mrs. Sunderland, Mrs. J. M. Stenning, Miss Satchell, Miss Saunders, Mrs. W. T. Summers, Mrs. Schloesser, The Singer Manufacturing Company, The Stewardess, Aeton Club, Miss A. E. Smith, Mrs. F. Sandford, Mrs. Walsh, Miss Warren, Miss J. F. Walker, Mrs. F. L. Woods, Miss Westmoreland, Mrs. M. Wakon, Miss C. White, Miss Watts, Miss Woodburn, Miss L. Woodburn, Miss Whitla, Lady Muriel Watkins, Mrs. M. Webber, Miss Young.

ART NOTES.

ROSSETTI AND OTHERS AT THE NEW GALLERY.

IF variety in itself be charming, then is the Winter Exhibition at the New Gallery a most fascinating show. Not often is so diversified a collection of pictures got together. Here one finds canvases from artists as widely separated in date and style as Simone di Martino and George H. Mason, Rubens and Rossetti, Backhuysen and Bonington, Morland and Mabuse. But it is not the eclecticism of the Directors which is the principal attraction of the New Gallery just now. The chief interest undoubtedly centres in the collection of the pictures of Dante Gabriel Rossetti, which are hung in the South Room. Never before, I think, has so large a collection of his works—oils, water-colours, and drawings—been gathered together in one place. Fortunately, too, the selection includes some of his best and most characteristic pictures, the canvases which most fully justify his claim to be considered the truest pre-Raphaelite of all the Brotherhood. It was he alone who clung tenaciously to its principles throughout his artistic life. Millais, as is well known, turned away comparatively soon from the straight path of pre-Raphaelitism. Rossetti trod its narrow way until the very end. He was imbued with the Italian spirit to the last.

Hitherto the public has had but few chances of seeing much of Rossetti's work. What, then, it may be asked, is the result of a visit to a gallery containing nearly four score of his paintings and drawings? For my own part, I am free to confess that on me the effect was a somewhat cloying one. I am quite ready to admit Rossetti's unquestionable qualities, but if ever an artist possessed the "defects of his qualities," it was he. Only a blind man could deny the decorative beauty of much of his work. He was not a great draughtsman, but as a colourist he was pre-eminent and masterful. There is the throb of passion, there is true poetry, though it be of an over-sensuous kind, in many of his pictures. But yet, as I have said, the effect of a prolonged visit to the South Room at the New Gallery is not altogether pleasant. One gets sated with too protracted a feast of opulent colour. One wearies of a prevailing sensuousness, which tends to recall the almost forgotten controversy which raged around the so-called "fleshly" school. One's palate becomes cloyed with passion that is apt to degenerate into morbidity. That, at all events, was my experience after half an hour or so with the thick-lipped, full-blooded, voluptuous-looking Liliths, and Fiammettas, and Lucrezias, whose faces meet one at every turn. The air around seemed to grow heavy and enervating with the scent of sickly pastilles and overpowering perfumes as one looked at Lucrezia Borgia playing a lute, as she sits on a couch with her infamous father, Pope Alexander VI., on one side of her, and her equally abandoned brother, Cæsar, on the other, the latter blowing rose petals from his sister's hair as he beats time to her music with his dagger on a half-filled wine-glass. It would be difficult to overstate the relief which one feels in rushing away from the Rossetti room to the gallery where the works of the masters of the British School are exhibited. It is like hurrying away from a feast where the dishes have been over-spiced and the wine too full-bodied, and where the atmosphere has grown heavy with the odour of exotics and low-burning lights, into the clear, pure, fresh air of the South Downs, with the stars shining clearly overhead, and the eternal sea beating in upon the shore.

But very little space is left me to say how much I enjoyed looking at many of the pictures in the North Room. There are to be seen six of George H. Mason's delightful country idylls, including the never-to-be-forgotten "Evening Hymn," in which we see that well-known group of six English peasant girls in their clean print dresses, advancing along a path in the rich golden glow of the setting sun, and singing "Glory to Thee, Our God, this night!" as they go. There, too, are five of Frederick Walker's most charming pictures and drawings; and a most interesting selection from the works of that never sufficiently appreciated artist, George J. Pinwell. The pictures of these three artists, comparatively new men, are hung amongst those of older and acknowledged masters of the British School. The comparison thus suggested is an ordeal of the severest kind. I can only say that they come out of it exceedingly well.

A MOST WONDERFUL PACKAGE of Crockery. Send your name and address to the Pearson Pottery Co., Hanley, Staffs., and we will forward one of our catalogues of cheap Crockery. One Hundred Pieces of Crockery for £1. 1s., including complete Dinner and Tea Services, and other pieces. Even an imitation of this advertisement impossible. Drop a post card for particulars.

MUSIC.

MUSICIANS AT TALK AND PLAY.

IT would be interesting to know what, in the opinion of the chiefs of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, is the net result of the junketing at the Hotel Cecil last week. The spectacle of a certain number of grave Doctors and Bachelors of Music indulging in a "toy" symphony or a parody of a German band may, no doubt, be an edifying one. But it was, at any rate, harmless fun, and was not wasting time more hopelessly than in the reading of treatises upon such subjects as "The Tonic Basis of all Music," or "The Irish Feis Ceiol." Year by year the members meet, dine, dance, hear speeches, listen to more or less learned treatises, and grumble publicly or privately about the wickedness of the fee-cutting amateur, the hard lot of the organist, and the necessity for teachers' registration. But it all ends in talk, and nothing seems to be done except to collect the subscriptions. As a fighting trade union, for which the musical profession continually do cry, the Incorporated Society is of no more practical value to its members than the Royal College of Organists itself. Even one of the most progressive of the speakers could pluck up courage to do nothing more than suggest that the Council of the Society might possibly become a court of appeal between organists and vicars—always, of course, supposing that the vicars were willing.

Some of the suggestions, intended to be practical, were really amusing. For example, Dr. Swinnerton Heap, of Birmingham, gravely announced as an important addition to our musical knowledge that choral novelties were now rarely performed at the Albert Hall, and with the smile that was childlike and bland, he suggested that inasmuch as free libraries had been taken up by municipalities in certain districts, we should impose a rate to subsidise concerts which otherwise did not pay their way. "If," said this guileless gentleman, "concerts were supported out of the rates, concert managers would then have a free hand and would doubtless show more enterprise in the production of new compositions, and thus give some of our many able composers that recognition which was their just due." Dr. Heap, who that day was chairman of the conference, seems a very fair example of the sort of business man to be found in the ranks of provincial musicians. Imagine the reception by paterfamilias, his pockets full of Christmas bills, and his ears tortured by the holiday pianoforte practising of his daughters, of a "musical novelty" rate at threepence in the pound, for the benefit of the great unacted. Imagine the language of a man who hath not music in his soul on receiving his first musical rate paper! The County Council rightly pay for open-air music in various parts of London during the summer, and it is quite open to Dr. Heap or to any one else to try to induce Mr. Warwick Williams to improve his programmes. But considering that, including church, school, and charity performances, over two thousand concerts are annually given in London alone, and that in the season people will not accept a free ticket for an average concert, even with the cab fare and a supper thrown in, to add to the glut by concerts subsidised out of the rates would be sheer midsummer madness. Mr. Joseph Seymour's treatise upon the Irish "Feis Ceiol" was, perhaps, a little more interesting. The Feis Ceiol, it may be explained, is the Celtic for Irish Musical Festival. One of these festivals was held in Dublin last year, and resulted in the best musical "bull" of the century, for the Irish prize novelty was an Italian cantata, entitled "Deidre," by an Italian musician, Signor Esposito.

Sir John Stainer made one of the best speeches of the gathering. Although he deprecated the introduction of the commercial element into such matters—a self-evident absurdity, for without money even Sir John would starve—he nevertheless protested very strongly and very properly against the incompetent teacher who offered to do inefficient work at a lower rate of pay than the ordinary teacher would charge. Some of these people are very inefficiently trained amateurs, who in the day time are engaged behind the shop counter, or at the desk of the clerk. Sir John, it is true, declared he had no objection to the amateur, if that worthy only knew how to teach, a sentiment which, I should imagine, would scarcely be re-echoed by the hard-worked and under-paid professors of music who were his auditors. Sir John explained the humbug's modus operandi as this: In a particular town some known tiro suddenly announces that he has won a certificate from one of the mushroom travelling examination colleges. He takes his admiring friends into his parlour to show them how elegantly it is printed and how beautifully it is framed. Scores of other people, who rightly know how slender his qualifications are, go to him to be coached for the same examination, and the greater number he pulls through the more numerous are his pupils. Sir John Stainer desired to see a Central Examination body under the auspices of the Government, and he seemed to be of opinion that professors who could show no certificate from this examination body should not be allowed to teach music at all. How far such a scheme could be carried out it is not necessary now to discuss. It is, indeed, quite a dream of Utopia. To say that a starving, though incompetent governess, who can get lessons at a shilling each must not be allowed to give them, is the veriest nonsense. Indeed, it is obvious that the bogus diploma is at the root of the evil, for if she could show no real or pretended diploma she would probably get no lessons at any price. There is a far simpler method of dealing with the question, and that I have already pointed out. The dispensation and sale of certificates and diplomas in music should, in fact, be confined by law to Universities and to other institutions having the Royal Charter.

GROANS FROM THE ORGAN-LOFT.

The discussion as to the "Woes of Organists" in the last two numbers of TRUTH has brought me a mass of correspondence. Some of it is not a little amusing. For example, one indignant gentleman sends me a copy of the terms upon which the Church Army desire to engage an organist. It seems a friend of his applied for the post at St. Mary-at-Hill Church, and received a type-written document asking for the name and address of the applicant, and demanding whether he had any deformity, whether he had ever done any Sunday School or other spiritual work, whether he was willing to be a teetotaller, and whether he agreed not to smoke in the rectory. The exact meaning of the last question I do not quite gather. Smoking in a rectory may be a penal act, although some rectors of my acquaintance would, I believe, not think so. Indeed, I fancy I could name a dignitary of the Church who has been known to smoke a short pipe in the cloisters of Westminster Abbey itself.

The fortunate gentleman who gains the post of organist at St. Mary-at-Hill will have duties which are extensive and peculiar. I have before me the official type-written circular of the terms upon which this lucky gentleman will be engaged. There is no nonsense about an eight hours' day. On Sundays business begins early, for there is a Choral celebration at 9, a Sunday school which the organist has to take care of at 11, another Sunday school at 3, a sacred concert at 6, and an entertainment described as "Lantern Choral Evensong" at 7. The organist likewise has the direction of a small orchestra of sixteen, a brass band of twenty, and a small choir. There is an instruction service on week-days besides rehearsals of two orchestral pieces and accompaniments for the lady professionals, while there is a daily organ recital and so forth. This would, I should imagine, be considered tolerably heavy work by the average organist, but at St. Mary-at-Hill they evidently love not drones. It is true that the circular triumphantly declares there are "Three hours a day for giving lessons, rest or recreation," but it significantly adds, "Other time being filled up by helping the officer in charge of the Samaritan Office, or in the rectory, or finding work for the destitute," I should rather imagine that after a year or two of this sort of thing the organist would have no difficulty in discovering the "destitute" for whom the work is to be found. A convenient looking-glass would certainly disclose the grand secret. For this mixture of labour and lessons, rest and recreation, the organist is to receive the munificent salary of £52 a year, with residence in the rectory, and "board by arrangement." His lodging is free, but "sharing bedroom with an Evangelist."

THE GREATEST OF ALL PIANOFORTES.—THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES. New York and London.

Another letter from a Cathedral organist, although perhaps a little more hopeful, shows at any rate that a professional musician who devotes his life to the service of the Church of England is not likely at the close of his career to add very largely to the death duties. My correspondent, who is organist and choir master of one of the leading cathedrals, and who is an M.A., a Mus Doc.Oxon., an Associate of the Royal College of Music, and a Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, writes as follows:—

> One cannot, perhaps, complain of the miserable pay we receive. I am myself—although as highly qualified by degree as it is possible to be, and after spending pounds on an expensive education—rewarded at a fraction over 3s. 6d. for each service. But the musical profession does want a fighting head badly, and there is something very feminine about the courage of the College of Organists and the Union of Graduates Let them form a programme and fight for it. Let it be recognised that to take money for teaching when one is not qualified to teach is gaining money by false pretences. Why not put "Registration of teachers" in the foreground? I can get very little teaching here because, as one somewhat high up in my profession, I charge the exorbitant fee of three guineas for twelve lessons.

Another prominent musician sends me an advertisement in the Church Times as an example of what the luckless organist, particularly in the Church of England, has to put up with. The advertisement runs as follows:—

> Wanted an organist (professional). Must be good executant and choir trainer. Two Sunday services and five choir practices a week. £60 per annum.

Seven practices and performances a week for little over a pound rather beats my friend the Cathedral organist at 3s. 6d. a service. A British working man would, of course, reject such pay with the language it deserved. But the British working man, wisely enough, has formed his trade-union, which efficiently fulfils the duty neglected by the Royal College of Organists and by the Incorporated Society of Musicians.

I have, by the way, also received a letter from Dr. J. G. Bennett, organist of Lincoln Cathedral, in regard to the extracts I made last week from the letters of his predecessor, the late Mr. J. M. W. Young. Mr. Bennett writes:—"Although it is quite true, as you intimate, that on my appointment I was not placed on the Foundation, I am glad to say that the salary I receive as organist and director of the choir is higher than the amount you name as received by Mr. Young." Dr. Bennett likewise states that he now has a deputy, as the Dean and Chapter pay a small salary to one of his pupils who acts as assistant organist. It is, indeed, a comfort to meet with a Cathedral organist who really is satisfied with his lot.

I learn that Herr Bittong and Herr Backur (who was Pollini's business manager) have taken over the Hamburg Opera House, of which they will henceforward be directors. Herr Bittong will be no stranger in London, for in 1882 he was stage manager to Pollini's company, which, under the bâton of Dr. Richter, first produced at Drury Lane "Die Meistersinger" and "Tristan and Isolde." Herr Bittong has also visited us since, and he knows the character of English audiences fairly well. It is, therefore, I think, not unlikely that, eventually, he may again bring over the Hamburg troupe to give us a series of operas in German. At Hamburg the highest price of admission is about five shillings. Even taking into consideration the extra expense of living, and the cost of transport, there ought to be a considerable profit even if the prices of admission to the Hamburg performances in London were fixed at from one shilling to half-a-guinea—namely, double the German rate. Opera, adequately mounted, and performed at theatrical charges, would, beyond much question, pay very well.

Mr. Robert Newman has reduced the prices of admission not only to the Lamoureux performances, but also to his excellent Saturday Afternoon Concerts at Queen's Hall. This, no doubt, is a direct result of the increasing popularity of the cheap Sunday Afternoon Orchestral Concerts. It is perfectly obvious that if a music lover can hear high-class orchestral performances on Sunday afternoons at prices ranging from 3d. to 3s., he is not likely to pay 2s. 6d. to 12s. 6d. for performances by exactly the same orchestra (with a 25 per cent. accession of strength) on Wednesdays or Saturdays. For the Saturday Afternoon Concerts Mr. Newman now offers upwards of 2,000 seats at from 1s. to 3s. each. This practically is a reduction of the charges almost to the scale in vogue in Germany, where down to a recent date concerts were very much cheaper than in this country. No doubt if the movement continues the fees of orchestral players must likewise be reduced, down perhaps to the level of the salaries which, when the Sunday concerts were first started at Queen's Hall, the bandsmen gladly accepted.

The Afternoon Popular Concerts were resumed on Saturday, when Lady Halle gave the only performance this season of Beethoven's Septet. There was a larger audience than usual, for the Septet always has been a favourite work here. Lady Halle will continue as leader of the Popular Concert Quartet during the present month, and afterwards she goes to the United States for her first tour in America. The Ballad Concerts were likewise resumed on Saturday, the best of the new ballads being one entitled "The Young Royalist," from the pen of Mr. Stephen Adams Maybrick.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

MY DEAR MR. WYNDHAM,—The inimitable Mr. Anstey ought to write a "Vice Versâ" for children, wherein the parent, transformed into a five-year old boy or girl, should be subjected to the discipline he imposes upon the nursery. He should be forced to believe all the absurdities, swallow all the inconsistencies, and accept the monstrous doctrine that the principles of poetic justice prevail in our prosaic world. Above all, he should have his tastes dictated to him and be forced to find enjoyable the toys and books grown-ups think he ought to delight in. What a revolution such a lesson universally and severely administered would work in our nursery manners, morals, tastes, toys, and libraries! Certainly in my own experience children seem to like least the toys and books their elders expect them to like most, and vice versâ. It is just possible, therefore, that boys might not delight in "A Villain of Parts" (1) nor girls in "A Houseful of Rebels" (2); but it is hardly probable. A more intensely exciting adventure book than "A Villain of Parts" I have not read for years; and whether boys (for whom, by the way, it is not specially written)

(1) "A Villain of Parts." By Paul Neuman. (London: Harper Brothers. Price 6s.)
(2) "A Houseful of Rebels." Being an Account of Three Naughty Girls and Their Adventures in Fairyland. By Walter Rhoades. Illustrated by Patten Wilson. (Westminster: Archibald Constable & Co. Price 6s.)
(3) "Her Royal Highness's Love Affair." By J. Maclaren Cobban. (London: C. Arthur Pearson, Limited. Price 6s.)
(4) "Whoso Findeth a Wife." By William Le Queux. (London: F. V. White & Co. Price 6s.)
(5) "Sunset." By Beatrice Whitby. (London: Hurst & Blackett, Limited. Price 3s. 6d.)

"HAMPTON & SONS', LTD., Showrooms and Book of Examples afford ample evidence of that ability to put a tastefully furnished Home within the reach of a modest income, for which this firm is so justly famous."—Pall Mall East, London, S.W.

will enjoy it or no, it will infallibly pass for you two or three absorbing hours. "A Houseful of Rebels," to my adult thinking, seems the very book for girls, and especially for girls interested in the excellent "Society for the Suppression of Cruelty to Dolls." It is a true history—as true, at least, as most histories—of the Christian revenge for cruel ill-usage taken by dolls on the little girls that owned them. Transported to fairyland, these desperate culprits were taught in the most delightful country and company and mode and manner imaginable to be more exemplary subjects to their governess and sovereigns to their dolls. "Her Royal Highness's Love Affair" (3) has many claims to be classed with fairy tales, it is at once so whimsical, improbable, and interesting. Mr. Maclaren Cobban, more greatly daring even than the author of "Evan Harrington," has made his hero a counter-jumper and his heroine a Princess of the Blood Royal of England! Every scene and incident of the story is in keeping with this audacious love affair, for Mr. Maclaren Cobban never for a moment deviates into probability. The shop-boy bicycles daily in Hyde Park with the Princess, saunters with her upon the pavement of Piccadilly, shows her through shops (other than his own), and treats her to a sumptuous lunch at a restaurant, where, as ill luck would have it, her father and her fiancé are also refreshing themselves. To save her Royal Highness from this fiancé, Baron Nebulus, a German Jew millionaire, shady as his name, the shop-boy elopes with the Princess, takes her to France, and there secrets her, without her disappearance causing more stir in England than the flight of an autumn swallow! The Prince, her father, and her fiancé, the Baron, however, pursue the couple and find them after many days, whereupon the shopman fights a duel with the fiancé, but restores the Princess, pure as unfallen snow, to her father. Indeed, he is so good even as to explain to the Prince that it was in his Royal Highness' interest that he eloped with his daughter. "I love our country, sir, and I am prouder of being an Englishman than of anything else in the world, and it seemed to me the last and lowest touch of disgrace and infamy that a Princess of our Royal House should marry the grandson of a German Jewish pawnbroker. Royalty, sir, may survive a good many things, but it cannot survive ridicule!" Therefore, to save Royalty from ridicule, the considerate shopman, by the help of a rope-ladder, hauls her Royal Highness over the palace garden wall, smuggles her to Folkestone by a Parliamentary train, gets her and her gouvernante on board the boat (which he contrives to miss himself), and follows them to Pittefaux, where he lives with them humbly but happily till father and fiancé stroll leisurely upon the scene preparatory to the fall of the curtain. The oddest thing about this odd story is that it interests you in spite of its numberless conscious and unconscious absurdities. A no less august personage plays a still more preposterous part in a story of thrilling detective interest, Mr. Le Queux's "Whoso Findeth a Wife" (4). Her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Elizaveta Nicolayevna, niece of the late Tzar Alexander, more famous throughout Europe for her loveliness even than for her rank, suddenly disappears. She had taken it into her head to come to England, where, in the guise of a young English girl, she loves and is loved by the private secretary of the Secretary of War. In order to obtain the Tzar's consent to her marriage to this young diplomatist, she undertakes, as a spy, to ruin him by the theft of a document, which threatens to involve the world in war. There's a situation for you! A girl commits an act of the foulest treachery towards her lover, which involves him in the suspicion of an act of the foulest treachery, in order to secure her uncle's consent to her marriage—the girl being a Russian Imperial Highness and her uncle the Tzar! The diplomatist, never having had the faintest suspicion that the girl he married was other than the young English middle-class maiden she represented herself to be, is a little astonished upon a casual visit to Paris to find her suddenly blossomed out there as the Queen of European society by virtue of her beauty no less than of her rank. The incredibilities of "Whoso Findeth a Wife" are nothing short of magnificent in their audacity, yet they are accepted because you are hurried along too breathlessly to pause and weigh them. There is nothing improbable in Miss Beatrice Whitby's "Sunset" (5), which is a very clever study of the most probable, the most certain, of all things in life—disillusion. Its heroine begins with ambitious hopes and ends by marrying prosaically a good clergyman she rather likes than loves. The sensationalist incident of the story—the fatal illness of an unfaithful wife on the very day of her elopement—is well told.—Believe me, my dear Mr. Wyndham, very sincerely yours,

DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—We went to the first night of the great "Beauty and the Beast" ballet at the Alhambra, and were captivated by the lovely sequences of colour throughout the modern rendering of the good old fairy tale. It is a beautiful ballet. The "Gathering of the Clans," which precedes it, is also a most attractive performance, the different tartans making a most effective display. Young Lochinvar, as we conjectured him to be, danced beautifully, and was a very pretty girl, and the sword dance was well done. The music is very dainty, melodious, and telling. We waited to see the clever performing cats. They would have greatly pleased you. You must not entertain the idea that a music-hall is an impossible place to visit. All that was changed long ago. The audience is now perfectly respectable and well behaved, and the only difference between it and the theatre is the tobacco smoke. The seats are more comfortable than those in most theatres. When you come to town you shall be taken to a nice music-hall, and you will, I know, enjoy yourself very much.

We met a girl so prettily dressed in Regent-street yesterday. She had a skirt and coat of Harris tweed in a beautiful shade of sea blue that I have described to you before, having seen it at the Stafford House sale last year. We felt inclined to invest in a dress length or two on that occasion, but the stuff was sold out immediately. The girl I am telling you about wore a bright tan cloth waistcoat, with small bullion buttons, and her felt hat exactly matched the tint of the waistcoat, and was trimmed with a twist of blue velvet in the shade of the tweed, and some brown and blue feathers. Her gloves were tan as well, and she was a most harmonious girl—a quality that is often equal to prettiness, sometimes superior. There is a sort of wasted prettiness, as you must have occasionally noticed. One discovers with surprise, after a while, that there are well-cut features in a face that one would have described as insignificant, perhaps because the hair is scanty and the complexion poor. Sometimes it is a way of hanging the head that obscures the pretty looks, or an awkward carriage of the chin. It is surprising how much a graceful carriage helps out a pretty face.

And another surprising thing is the way in which belief in one's self and one's attractions impresses others with a similar faith. Lucky are the girls who believe in themselves!

The marriage of the Hon Osbert Cecil, Lord Sefton's brother, with the Hon. Helena Mary Bridgeman, Lord and Lady Newport's third daughter, was rather shorn of its accessories by the advancement of the date. It was to have taken place on Tuesday of this week, but the bride's grandfather, the Earl of Bradford, was so extremely ill, and expressed so earnest a desire that the ceremony should be gone through without delay, that the marriage was solemnised on Saturday. The bridal satin was showered with diamonds and richly embroidered in silver. The high Medici collar was in embroidered satin. The church—St. Paul's, Knightsbridge—was beautifully decorated with pure white flowers. Lady Newport wore a very pretty mauve satin trimmed with old point and straps of pansy velvet.

HUNTING.—An elegant and graceful up-to-date figure is created by the easy and perfect fit of the ingenious and appropriate Stays built by Mesdames SYKES, JOSEPHINE, & Co., The Celebrated Anatomical Corsetières, 280, Regent-st., Oxford-circus, London, W.

From Paris comes the fiat, "blouses are over at last!" I wonder if it is really true this time. Certain it is that everything is tight-fitting, and "blowsy" blouses are not seen in polite society. But then, have not all our blouses been tight-fitting of late? The line from under the arm to the waist—such an important one!—has never been more clearly defined than it is at present. Even a dressing-gown is unsuccessful if it defies this canon of fashionable dressmaking. There is no doubt that bodices contrasting with the skirt in colour will still be worn, and there is, after all, not much difference between one of these and a well-made blouse. Skirts, I hear, are even tighter than ever on the hips, though full and clinging round the hem. Petticoats are on the wane, and will soon be an unknown and forgotten garment. There is no room for them under the tightly-fitted skirts.

Have you seen the new ermine coat? It is cut like a man's morning coat, and fits in to the figure at the back, though the fronts fall straight. Three large white pearl buttons fasten it down one side, and the belt is white doeskin. Not a scrap of colour, you see. And often the toque worn with it is made of ermine, too, with white velvet trimmings and a snowy cock's plume.

Perhaps you think this would be a very trying style? Depends on the complexion, my dear. I saw a pretty woman at a recent wedding in an ermine toque and cape, and she looked like a girl, though she had a tall, grown-up son by her side.

Have you noticed any of the new ties? They are in the shape of men's "sailor's knots," but have the ends finished with ruches of satin in the same colour as the tie. They have rather an incongruous appearance, I think.

I see by a Paris paper that Worth made four gowns in two days for Mme. Duse to wear in "La Dame aux Camélias," at Monte Carlo. The first was white satin with gold appliqués on which flowers were embroidered in relief in white crêpe, silver and strass. The train was gold gauze, veiled with point d'Alençon, which also trimmed the shoulders and formed the sleeves. A drapery of gold gauze passing round the top of the bodice was fringed with scintillating gems.

The second gown was white crêpe-de-chine made over rose silk and opening in front to show an underdress of point de Venise, the lovely lace forming sleeves and chemisette. Three handsome strass buckles fastened the bodice.

The ball dress was in soft white satin, opening over pale green silk muslin and bordered with camellias and marguerites. Over this hung a tulle train draped in Greek fashion. Marguerites and camellias trimmed the lace sleeves. The dying dress was white batiste of the softest description, covered with white silk muslin and exquisitely graceful of outline.

Fancy turning out such gems of art in two days! It would take the ordinary mind as long as that merely to think them out.

On general subjects the papers are just now lively reading. Did you see that case where an unfortunate old caretaker woman was allowed to slip out of this world because sending for a doctor might have given a shock to her employer?

And that is a nice, cheerful story about the wrongful conviction of an unfortunate young man on the charge of assaulting a woman cyclist in Wales, he having been in Essex at the time. Twelve witnesses swore to this, but he was convicted all the same. So much for what the judge described as "the most perfect alibi ever brought into court." The innocent man has hard-laboured in prison since November with the prospect of five years' penal servitude for contemplation in his leisure moments. The woman cyclist who identified him will for the future, I should fancy, hesitate to back her own opinion in the matter of photographic likenesses.

And another inspiriting little circumstance related in the papers was the mixing up of children in the fever hospital. Fancy the dreadful feelings of the poor mother who was sent for to take her four year-old home cured, and found that it was not hers, but that hers had died weeks before!

I have just read "Bijou," by Gyp. It is a wonderfully subtle study of a type not unknown to some of us—the "deep" flirt, all innocence and unconsciousness on the surface. "Bijou" is depicted by a master-hand, and a tiro might skim the book and never detect the hard, narrow, sordid, jealous, sensuous little soul that lies behind the soft, gay manner, candid smile, and youthful brightness and prettiness. She cannot rest until every man she sees is subjugated by her charm. Even her friend's fiancé is not spared, and the means she adopts are as clever as they are apparently harmless. The reader gets half way through the book without discovering Bijou to be anything more than the pretty butterfly she appears to those around her. And this is one of the things that make the story so true to life. These outwardly frank but inwardly sly and deceitful natures often impose on the world as cleverly as Bijou does. I am sending you on the book that you may judge of it for yourself.

I saw such a pretty hat on a tall and graceful girl this morning. It was made of sapphire velvet, the crown a-glitter with dark blue beads to match. A long, softly floating green feather waved over the crown. I see that the note for all the newest hats is flatness, both of brim and crown, and including trimming. Rather a change, is it not, from the startlingly high arrangements to which we are only too well accustomed.

I do wish that the storm collar would go out of fashion. It is all wrong, hygienically and æsthetically, even at its best. At its worst, it is an awful thing. When the fur round it begins to look pensive and fretful the wearer has the air of a sick turkey, a bird which can look more melancholy and miserable than any other, to say nothing of its lamentable "peep! peep!" in a doleful minor key.

Christabel writes from Paris:—

There is an ornament rather in vogue among those who do not know what to do for a change, or with their money. I mention it, but cannot say I admire the idea. It is a poor, wee little tortoise about the size of a large beetle; over its carapace or shell is fixed a light frame of platina, on which is the monogram or initials of the fair owner in diamonds, pearls, or any precious stone preferred. Held by a little gold chain, the poor little wretch is allowed to play about, shake its little head from side to side, and amuse itself as best it can. At night it is placed on a bed of damp moss, and they say is very comfortable, but it seems to me a case for the society against cruelty to animals to interfere. It is almost as bad as the Brazilian belles who stick live fire-flies in their hair!

Now for a short description of some pretty costumes seen lately at various functions. I noticed at the Academy, when M. Vaudal was admitted, a salmon-coloured cloth braided on the skirt with the same shade; the bodice had epaulettes bordered with sable, and in front was some rich guipure with two narrow straps of sable going across, and at the throat a cravat of old rose silk and lace. The tulle toque was spangled with silver with a twist of salmon-coloured velvet going round it and a straight feather of old rose. Another was an extremely pretty semi-pleated heliotrope crêpon skirt, with a silk bodice to match

SAHARA CIGARETTES. Choicest Turkish Tobacco. Every cigarette
SAHARA CIGARETTES. bears the name of the sole manufacturers,
SAHARA CIGARETTES. W.D. & H.O. WILLS, Ltd.

LIBERTY & CO., LTD.—STOCK-TAKING SALE.—This day and daily. Silks, Velveteens, Costumes, Millinery, Carpets, Tapestries, Curtains, Cretonnes, & Furniture at sale prices.—Regent-st.

in colour ornamented with large revers trimmed with lace and high collar at the back. The toque was of heliotrope felt with a fold of the same shade of velvet going round it and a bunch of Parma violets at the side. Mme. Gauthereau had a beautiful long black velvet cloak, with a rich silver belt, wide chinchilla revers, and a large lace cravat at the neck. Her toque was black velvet with grey plumes.

At a wedding the other day I saw a lovely mauve velvet gown, the skirt embroidered with the same shade in silk and bordered round the hem with chinchilla. The blouse bodice had three boleros, each one shorter than the other, all edged with chinchilla. With this was worn a toque of the same fur raised on one side with camellias and a mauve bird-of-paradise plume. A pearl grey cloth looked very stylish cut in princess shape. The bodice had revers of turquoise blue velvet edged with sable, and fastened with black velvet buttons sparkling with diamonds. The turquoise velvet hat had black feathers and a paste buckle. On leaving the church, the wearer of this becoming costume put on a splendid sable stole.

A dance and cotillon were given on Monday from nine till twelve, the chief novelty being that all the gifts and cotillon trifles were arranged on an enormous fir-tree placed in one of the salons (being in the tents of Israel it could not be called a Christmas-tree), but the novelty was that the tree was illuminated with electricity, and the little luminous globes gave a most enchanting effect.

Frances writes from Brighton:—

DEAREST MADGE,—The Fancy Dress Ball at the Brighton Ice Rink on Friday night was smart, amusing, and well attended, above three hundred and fifty being present. Though there were no very striking dresses worn, the costumes were all good, varied, and more numerous than I expected. The Rink was charmingly decorated with hundreds of coloured lights, picking out the arches, and soft pink drapings round the circle enclosing the ice, the Winter Garden of the Club being hung with lanterns, and the lights becomingly shaded. M. Harry Stiegert, in a handsome Austrian skating costume of white satin, embroidered in diamonds, with a red satin sash, gave a very clever exhibition of fancy skating at 11 p.m., which was greatly applauded. The judging for the prizes took place at midnight, when the skaters circled round the judges' table in procession. Lady Call, in a charming green and white seventeenth-century dress, a combination of silk, velvet, and delicately spangled net, distributed the prizes, and Sir William Call, in a handsome red and blue fur-trimmed Russian costume, led those singled out from amongst the skaters to receive their awards, in the shape of valuable prizes and souvenirs. Light refreshments were served in the corridor and suppers in the club rooms after the judging for prizes had taken place.

Clare sends me the following from Dublin:—

DEAREST MADGE,—Christmas literature is bad enough in its own way, yet what is it compared to that which the end of each year calls forth? If only we could ring out the old, and ring in the new, without ringing the same only changes on the same old bells! How tired we get of statistics and lists, of the stock-taking, as it were, in the great going concern, life, to which so many journalistic columns are devoted. We never escape the enumeration of the Princes, Peers, and Baronets who are occupying cradles at the beginning of the new year, or entering their twenty-first year, or their dotage. As for the knights, those made in the record year were a record in themselves. Even Ireland got a fair share of knightly honours, and especially Dublin. No doubt the list of titled attendants at the Castle festivities of the coming season will be considerably augmented.

The Viceregal establishment will move from the Phœnix Park to Dublin Castle, at the end of the month, the season not beginning until February. Lord and Lady Cadogan will pay some visits in Ireland before the move, and will be amongst the visitors to Mount Stewart during this month, which Lord and Lady Londonderry usually devote to entertaining at their Irish residence in the County of Down. Lord and Lady Cadogan have given a good many Christmas dinner parties at the Viceregal Lodge. Lady Sophie Scott joined the family party last week, together with Lady Fingall and other visitors. During the week Lord Cadogan and a Viceregal party paid the first Viceregal visit to the new Theatre Royal, which opened in Dublin shortly before Christmas. Apropos of this season of statistics, our capital was until now the one with, perhaps, the fewest places of evening amusements in the civilised world.

The city of the high death-rate, the greatest number of doctors and of hospitals—in proportion to its size, of course—had also the least number of theatres and places of public amusement. Is there a connection between these facts? It may possibly be, considering the healthful properties of laughter and cheerfulness. Not indeed that the stage dedicated to modern dramas is always calculated to make us cheerful, unless through showing us others in a succession of miserable situations which we have been—most of us—fortunate enough to escape. But what recreation a good, wholesome, cheery comedy is, or an unmorbid, old-fashioned play, which takes us out of ourselves and away from our personal cares and commonplace surroundings for a few hours! Nothing more truly recreates us for the time.

The Chief Secretary did not spend Christmas amongst us, but Mr. Morley, his predecessor, did, which was curious, and made many indulge in speculation regarding the object of his visit. What penalties attach to being a public character; it is like being a published book. Every one feels himself entitled to read you and to construe your words, actions, and intentions, according to his own views. Was it not the great Condé who said of certain historians, "These cads make us act as they would themselves have acted under the same circumstances"? How often must not those who do business in the great waters of the world sympathise with the feeling expressed by Condé. Besides spending some days with Lord Justice FitzGibbon, Mr. Morley was also Lord Cadogan's guest at the Viceregal Lodge and Lord Ashbourne's at Howth Castle. No doubt he also visited other friends, not so much known to Society, for National, or indeed Radical ways, are not those affected in the leading social places in Ireland. We are dreadfully one-sided still and socially seek to ostracise all but the one old Ascendency way of thinking. Does one not shudder at the monotonousness of the mere idea, that every one should think alike? I dare say you do not think that we Irish are ever likely to suffer from all thinking alike on any political subject. Nevertheless, Society up to this has had an almost unanimous anti-National way.

Lord Cadogan, last week, knighted Mr. Justice Bewley, on his resignation of his seat on the Bench. I fancy Lord Cadogan has made many more knights than any of his predecessors for a long time. In fact, the aides-de-camp must be having a good time, for the A.D.C.-in-Waiting supplies the sword that gives the accolade—or rather with which it is given—and thereby becomes entitled to a fee, not of an excessive nature, however, for Viceroyalty, unlike Royalty, is frugal in such matters. Sir E. Bewley is Lord Ashbourne's brother-in-law, Lady Bewley being the elder sister of Lady Ashbourne. Sir E. Bewley was unfortunately obliged to resign, while in full health and vigour, owing to defective hearing. He is a clever and cultivated man, who worked hard in his time.—Yours ever,

CLARE.

I want you to try the following dishes. This way of dressing "artichoke bottoms" makes a delightful entrée, and is an excellent way of using up cold game:—

Pick the meat from the remains of any cold game, chop the bones and stew them for two or three hours with a little vegetable, herbs, peppercorns, and sufficient stock to cover. After which, strain and reduce the liquor to a gill by boiling it without the lid of the stewpan, thicken the broth with a teaspoonful of flour, kneaded with a piece of butter, and, when it boils, remove it to cool. Pound the game with the sauce and rub it through a wire sieve. Warm the purée in a stewpan, adding a gill of cream, pepper, salt, and the yolks of one or two eggs. Pile the purée in the centre of the artichokes, which must be warmed between two plates in the oven, and garnish the top

MENTONE.—Grand Hôtel des Iles Britanniques, Limited. Lighted throughout by electricity. Lift. House heated by steam. Write for Illustrated prospectus.

FURTHER REDUCTIONS.—REDFERN'S SALE now proceeding. All their past Season's Model Gowns, Coats, Mantles, Millinery, &c., including some excellent bargains from their Paris house, are now being offered for sale.—27, New Bond-street, W.

with hard boiled yolk of egg passed through a wire sieve. Place each artichoke on a round piece of fried bread, arrange them on a dish-paper, and garnish them with fried parsley.

Guavas are a delicious Cape fruit, and can be bought tinned, at any good grocer's. A cream made in this way is really excellent :—

Open a tin of guavas and put them on to stew for half-an-hour, add 4 oz. of sugar, and, when it is dissolved, rub the fruit through a hair sieve. When the purée is quite cold, mix it with 1½ gills of stiffly whipped cream, well whisking them together. Now pour the cream into a deep glass dish. Whisk the whites of two fresh eggs to a stiff froth, and press them through a plain pipe on to the cream, making it stand up in little snowy peaks. Dust white sugar over it, and serve it with the following little cakes on a separate plate. Beat together, in a basin, 4 oz. of butter and 4 oz. of pounded sugar, add 1 egg, beating it in till it is light, then mix in 8 oz. of sifted flour. Turn the mixture on to a slab, roll it out until it is ¼ in. thick, cut it in rounds with a cutter about 3 in. in diameter, and bake them a delicate colour in a moderate oven. Remove them from the oven and put them on a pastry rack to cool, when they will become quite crisp.

Calf's tongue and brains make a good entrée :—

Put the tongue into a salt pickle for a couple of days, or, it may be used plain. Then stew it in stock with vegetables, herbs, peppercorns, cloves, a blade of mace, and a bacon bone for two hours. Allow the tongue to partly cool in the liquor, then press it on its side until cold. Cut the tongue into slices, trim them as nearly like cutlets as possible, and warm them in a sauté pan in a little strong stock. Arrange the slices of tongue in a circle, on a border of mashed potato, put the dressed brains in the centre, and pour tomato sauce round it.

To prepare calf's brains :—Remove the skin and soak them in cold water for two hours. Now put them into a stewpan with a pint of boiling stock, a carrot, an onion, a piece of celery, 2 cloves, a blade of mace, and a gill of vinegar, boil them rather quickly for half an hour. When they are done, drain the brains on a cloth, cut them into neat scallops, make them hot in some good tomato sauce, to which a little chopped gherkin may be added.

Ever, dear, your loving cousin,

MADGE.

DIAMONDS OR OLD SILVER
For PRESENTS.
SPINK & SON

SPOONS AND FORKS 2/11 oz. BELOW STORE PRICES.
17 & 18, Piccadilly, W.
AND AT
1 AND 2, GRACECHURCH STREET, CORNHILL, E.C. [Est. 1772.

"SANITAS EMBROCATION."
For Aches, Pains, Sprains, Strains, Bruises, Stiffness, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Rheumatism, and for Veterinary purposes.

"I have little doubt that 'Sanitas Embrocation' will come into prominent favour as a stable requisite and for various other purposes, human and veterinary." (Prof.) WOODROFFE HILL, F.R.C.V.S.

In Bottles, 8d., 1s., and 2s. 6d. Of all Chemists, Stores, and
THE SANITAS CO., LIMITED, BETHNAL GREEN, E.

THE MANUFACTURING
GOLDSMITHS' & SILVERSMITHS' COMPANY,
SHOW ROOMS: 112, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. (Adjoining Stereoscopic Company)
INVITE INSPECTION OF THEIR UNRIVALLED STOCK OF DIAMOND AND GEM ORNAMENTS.

FINE PEARL AND DIAMOND BROOCH.
"Louis" Design.

PEARL NECKLACES FROM £10 TO £10,000.
New Illustrated Catalogue and Novelty List Post Free.
GOODS FORWARDED ON APPROVAL.
GOLDSMITHS' COMPANY, 112, REGENT STREET, W.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN, in all parts, receiving RESIDENT PATIENTS sent gratis, with full particulars. Schools also recommended.—Medical, &c., Association, Ltd., 8, Lancaster-place, Strand, W.C. Tel. Add., "Triform, London." Telephone No. 1,854 (Gerrard).

RESTORATION OF CLONFERT CATHEDRAL.
FOUNDED IN THE YEAR 558.
£1,000 would now complete the work of Preservation of the beautiful, old, historic Cathedral of Clonfert. Canon McLARNEY, Rector of Clonfert, Banagher, Ireland, earnestly appeals for Contributions.

THE ANCIENT WRITING PAPER OF THE PRIESTS.
NOTE PAPER, 5 Quires, 1s.
COURT ENVELOPES, 1s. per 100.
MOURNING ENVELOPES, 1s. 6d. per 100.
THIN, FOR FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE, 5 Quires, 1s.
MOURNING NOTE, 5 Quires, 1s. 6d
HIERATICA (Regd.)
Every Sheet and Envelope Watermarked HIERATICA. Reject Imitations. Any difficulty in obtaining, send stamps to Hieratica Works, 68, Upper Thames Street, London. Samples Free. Parcels Carriage Paid.

A Feature of the Metropolis. SPIERS & POND's
CRITERION RESTAURANT, Piccadilly Circus, London, W.
EAST ROOM. Finest Cuisine, unsurpassed by the most renowned Parisian Restaurants. Luncheons, Dinners, and Suppers, à la carte and prix fixe. Viennese Band.
GRAND HALL. Musical Dinner 3/6 per head. Accompanied by the Imperial Austrian Band.
WEST ROOM. Academy Luncheon 2/6, Diner Parisien 5/-, during both of which the renowned Mandolin Quartette performs.
BUFFET & GRILL ROOM. Quick service à la carte and moderate prices. Joints in each room fresh from the Spit every half-hour.
AMERICAN BAR. Service of special American Dishes, Grills, &c.
Splendid Suites of Rooms for Military and other Dinners.

"JAP" CARPETS

42/-

Size 12 ft. by 9 ft.
Other Sizes. All Colourings.

ASK FOR CATALOGUE.

ORIENTAL CARPETS

Sold at Low Prices
BY

TRELOAR & SONS

LUDGATE HILL.

ASK FOR PRICE LIST.

£10,000.

TEN THOUSAND POUNDS is the penalty payable by any of the rubber manufacturers who may supply us with materials of inferior quality for the manufacture of

DUNLOP TYRES

This tremendous penalty enables us to safeguard the public against unsatisfactory tyres. DUNLOPS are not merely made to SELL, but to RIDE; and when we have sold a tyre we follow it all over the World with our Guarantee, and interpret that Guarantee in the most liberal spirit. And it must not be forgotten that our Guarantee is worth

20s. in the £

The DUNLOP PNEUMATIC TYRE COMPANY, Ltd.
160 to 166, CLERKENWELL ROAD, E.C., LONDON;
Works: ALMA STREET, COVENTRY.
Branches: Birmingham, Wolverhampton,
Nottingham, Manchester, Glasgow, Dublin, &c.

ROWLANDS'

MACASSAR OIL

PRESERVES AND

BEAUTIFIES THE HAIR.

Arrests Baldness, and removes Scurf. There is no preparation which produces such a dressy and beautiful appearance of the hair, and if you have never tried it you are strongly advised to procure a bottle at once, and continue using it for your own and your children's hair

Sizes. 3s. 6d., 7s., 10s. 6d.

ROWLANDS' ODONTO

is the best Dentifrice you can use; it thoroughly cleanses the teeth from all impurities, produces a pearl-like whiteness, and prevents decay, 2s. 9d.
Sold by Stores and Chemists
Write A. ROWLAND & SONS, 20, Hatton Garden, London, for cash prices.

"A POCKET TREASURE."

MADE IN 3 SIZES AT 10/6, 16/6,
& 25/- each.
POST FREE

FLOWS REGULARLY
CONSTANTLY
SMOOTHLY
EASILY

Head Office:—93, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON, E.C.

HAMPTON & SONS

Ancient Embroideries

An important collection of rare and extremely interesting specimens, Secular and Ecclesiastical, is now on view in Hampton & Sons' Antique Furniture Galleries. The prices are extremely low for such rare and valuable specimens. Inspection by connoisseurs specially appreciated.

PALL MALL EAST, S.W.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

MR. ARCHIBALD FORBES'S NEW BOOK.
Demy 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, 12s.

THE LIFE OF NAPOLEON III.

By ARCHIBALD FORBES.
With Photogravure Frontispiece and 36 Full-page Illustrations.

MRS. CROKER'S NEW NOVEL.
Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

MISS BALMAINE'S PAST.

By B. M. CROKER, Author of "Diana Barrington," "Beyond the Pale," &c.

CHEAPER ISSUE, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THACKERAYANA:

NOTES AND ANECDOTES. With Coloured Frontispiece and Hundreds of Sketches by WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY, from his School-Books, &c.

On JANUARY 20th. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

TALES IN PROSE AND VERSE.

By DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY. With a Frontispiece by Arthur Hopkins.

On JANUARY 20th. CHEAPER EDITION. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

IN THE MIDST OF LIFE.

Tales of Soldiers and Civilians. By AMBROSE BIERCE.

"Mr. Bierce portrays the most appalling scenes with a deliberation and force and precision that are rarely seen. The realism of Walt Whitman's 'Specimen Days' is pale compared with that of 'In the Midst of Life.' It is a book that one reads breathlessly and shudderingly. . . . A remarkable literary feat."—Scottish Leader.

THREE NEW SIX-SHILLING BOOKS.

MORE TRAMPS ABROAD.

By MARK TWAIN.

"Mr. Albert Chevalier used to sing a song in which occurs a line, 'Laugh! I thought I should have died!' and that line might fairly be quoted in reply to any question as to whether Mark Twain's latest book was funny. . . . All who appreciate humour or can enjoy laughter should make haste to procure 'More Tramps Abroad.' A more effective remedy for the blues has not been offered in England for many a day."—Publishers' Circular.

THIS LITTLE WORLD.

By DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY.

"Mr. Murray has never done anything better than this fine story."—Birmingham Post.

"Eminently bright, pleasant, and amusing."—Glasgow Herald.

BY THE RISE OF THE RIVER.

By AUSTIN CLARE.

"They are as true to nature as the heather-crested fells and granite boulders of the Cumbrian border from which they hail. Humour and pathos and tragedy jostle each other in this group of Tynedale tales."—Bookseller.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's-lane, W.C.

THE ARGOSY

Now is the time to subscribe.
A NEW VOLUME COMMENCES WITH THE JANUARY NUMBER, NOW READY.

THE ARGOSY

COMMENCEMENT OF A NEW VOLUME.
NEW SERIAL STORY.

COLONEL FANE'S SECRET. By SYDNEY HODGES.

A NOBLE LIFE. The Life of Mrs. Rangabé, in which is introduced a Letter by Sir Walter Scott, hitherto unpublished. By F. M. F. SKENE.

IN THE NIGHT WATCHES. By CHARLES W. WOOD, F.R.G.S. Illustrated by H. W. Brewer.

BARTOLOZZI, and many Short Stories by favourite Writers.

THE ARGOSY

PRICE ONE SHILLING MONTHLY.
London: R. BENTLEY & SON, Publishers to Her Majesty the Queen, 8, New Burlington-street, W.

THE HOUSEWIFE:

A thoroughly Practical, Up-to-date, Illustrated Sixpenny Monthly, concerning Everything in and about the Home. Oldest and best of its class. Only ladies' Magazine sympathetically reporting the New Woman Movement.

"WOMEN'S WORK AND WAGES,"

The "Housewife Annual" for 1898, an extra, price 6d., is also to be had of all Booksellers and at Smith's Bookstalls.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

On JANUARY 15th.
Edited with a Preface by
THE COUNTESS OF WARWICK.

JOSEPH ARCH.

THE STORY OF HIS LIFE TOLD BY HIMSELF.
In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 12s. With Photogravure Portrait.

THIS DAY.

THE CONFESSION OF STEPHEN WHAPSHARE.

By EMMA BROOKE,
Author of "A Superfluous Woman."
In cloth gilt, 6s.

On THURSDAY NEXT.
A NEW NOVEL BY M. E. MANN.

THE CEDAR STAR.

By the Author of "Susannah."
In cloth gilt, 6s.

A LIFE OF PETER THE GREAT
At a Popular Price.
By Mr. OSCAR BROWNING, M.A.

PETER THE GREAT.

With Full-page Illustrations. In cloth gilt, 5s.

"Will well deserve the crowd of readers it is likely to attract."—GLOBE.

"'At the Cross Roads' is the finest work of fiction published this year (1897)."

A FIFTH LARGE EDITION at press.

AT THE CROSS ROADS.

By F. F. MONTRÉSOR.
In cloth gilt, 6s.

THIS DAY.

BEAUTY CULTURE.

By H. E. BROWNING,
Author of "A Girl's Wanderings in Hungary."
In cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

LONDON: HUTCHINSON & CO., PATERNOSTER ROW.

NEW WORK BY MR. MACKENZIE BELL.

Now Ready at all Booksellers' and Libraries.
In 1 vol., demy 8vo, with Portraits and Facsimiles, extra cloth, price 12s.

CHRISTINA ROSSETTI:

A Biographical and Critical Study.

By MACKENZIE BELL,
Author of "Spring's Immortality, and other Poems," "Charles Whitehead: a Biographical and Critical Monograph," &c.

"Mr. Bell has made a permanent contribution to biographical literature, he paints a very complete and graphic picture of a very interesting personality. The volume must needs appeal irresistibly to all lovers of poetry."—THE GLOBE.

"Mr. Bell has been enabled to introduce into his book many vivid touches of portraiture which at once place the volume high among the best of our literary biographies. A number of hitherto unpublished verses, many most interesting letters, and six portraits of Miss Rossetti give additional attraction to this notably satisfactory biography."—DAILY MAIL.

"For restoring to us the remembrance of that inward beauty which all are likely to forget, we owe Mr. Mackenzie Bell our thanks. This volume has evidently been the work of genuine interest and most affectionate memory."—DAILY CHRONICLE.

HURST & BLACKETT, Limited, 13, Great Marlborough-st.

ON THE STŒCHIOLOGICAL CURE OF

CONSUMPTION,

ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, AND LUNG COMPLAINTS.

By JOHN FRANCIS CHURCHILL, M.D.
One Shilling, Post Free.

T. BURLEIGH, LATE DAVID STOTT, 370, OXFORD STREET.

KINEMATOGRAPH at the ROYAL ALBERT HALL, on SATURDAY AFTERNOON, 15th JANUARY, 1898, at 3 o'clock.

FOOTBALL at the ROYAL ALBERT HALL, on SATURDAY AFTERNOON, 15th JANUARY.

YOUNG HELPERS' LEAGUE.

Late President—H.R.H. PRINCESS MARY, DUCHESS OF TECK.
Vice-President—H.R.H. PRINCESS VICTORIA MAY, DUCHESS OF YORK.

THE SIXTH ANNUAL ENTERTAINMENT

FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE FUNDS OF THE ABOVE LEAGUE WILL (D.V.) TAKE PLACE IN THE

ROYAL ALBERT HALL, South Kensington, on SATURDAY AFTERNOON, 15th JANUARY, 1898, at 3 o'clock.

The Whole Arena will be occupied by DR. BARNARDO'S WAIF CHILDREN, who will endeavour for two hours to minister to the enjoyment of the audience. There will be Children's Games, Music by a Choir of 700 Voices and by Young Instrumentalists, a stirring Game of Football, Naval Drill, Musical Movements, an Exhibition of the Kinematograph, Special Limelight Pictures, Gymnastics, Nursery Ditties, a Visit to Slumland, &c., &c.

THE REV. CANON FLEMING, B.D.,

Chaplain to the Queen, and Chairman of the Council of the Y.H.L., will preside, and he has kindly promised to give a RECITATION entitled "The Doctor's Fee."

THERE WILL BE NO SPEECHES.

But MR. DAVID DEVANT will Exhibit the Wonders of Shadowgraphy.

NURSERY DITTIES BY THE CHILDREN—

"THE COW JUMPS OVER THE MOON—AND THAT NAUGHTY DISH."
"JACK HORNER AND WHAT HE FOUND IN HIS PIE.
"LITTLE BO-PEEP AND HER MISSING SHEEP."
"JACK AND JILL IN ADVERSITY."

A VISIT TO SLUMLAND (personally conducted).

HER GRACE THE DUCHESS OF SOMERSET

has kindly consented to RECEIVE PURSES for the Funds of the League, of not less than £2 10s. 0d. each, from Junior Companions, and of not less than £5 5s. 0d. each, from Senior Companions, or from other members of the Public generally. Those who intend to offer Purses should inform Miss Norton at once.

THE DUCHESS OF SOMERSET will also CONFER BADGES upon Companions of the League and CROWN THE VICTORS IN THE GAMES.

TICKETS OF ADMISSION NOW READY. Gallery, 1s. (300 seats only); Balcony, 2s. 6d.; Stalls, 3s. 6d.; Seat in Loggia Box, 4s. 6d.; Seat in Second Tier Box, 5s. 6d.; Seat in Grand Tier Box, 7s. 6d.; Whole Loggia Box (seating eight persons), £1. 5s.; Second Tier Box (seating five persons), £1; Grand Tier Box (seating ten persons), £2. 10s.

(Miss) RACHEL NORTON, Secretary of the Young Helpers' League.
Head Office; 18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

Just Published, crown 8vo, 6s.

WEEPING FERRY,

AND OTHER STORIES.

By MARGARET L. WOODS,

Author of "A Village Tragedy."

London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

A GENEALOGICAL and HERALDIC DICTIONARY of the PEERAGE and BARONETAGE, together with Memoirs of the Privy Councillors and Knights, by SIR BERNARD BURKE, C.B., LL.D., Ulster King of Arms. Edited by his Son. 60th Edition. 1898. Nearly 2,000 pages super royal 8vo, cloth gilt. Price 38s. London: HARRISON & SONS, Publishers, 59, Pall Mall, S.W.

STERILITY IN WOMEN: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. An Illustrated treatise based on the special practise and observation of the last 15 years. Price 3s. 6d.; post free, 3s. 8d.

London: HENRY RENSHAW, 356, Strand.

Post free 1s. 7d.

"PREMATURE DECLINE IN MAN," a Treatise on Some Diseases of the Urethra, Prostate, and Bladder, and their Speedy and Painless Cure by Electrolysis.—H. RENSHAW, 356, Strand, W.C., London.

WOMEN'S LONDON GARDENING ASSOCIATION,
COURT FLORISTS,
62 and 64,
Lower Sloane-st., S.W.

ORIGINAL TABLE DECORATIONS.

Home-made JAMS, JELLIES, FRUIT-PICKLES, CONFECTIONERY, &c.

Bouquets, Sprays, Wreaths, and Floral Decorations of all kinds.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Treasurer:—

F. A. BEVAN, Esq., D.L., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

Supported Entirely by Voluntary Contributions.

This Mission relieves the Sick and Destitute, ESPECIALLY DURING THE WINTER MONTHS. Funds most urgently needed to provide Food, Clothing, Firing, and CHRISTMAS DINNERS, for the DESERVING POOR.

WILLIAM WHEATLEY, Supt.,
4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, London, W.C.

LONDON FEVER HOSPITAL, Islington, N.

Over 80,000 sufferers from infectious fevers have been admitted into this Hospital since 1802, and probably ten times as many other persons have thereby been preserved from infection.

Patients pay about one-fourth of their cost, the other three-fourths falling upon the funds of the institution.

The contributions received in 1897 show a serious falling off compared with those of 1896.

ADDITIONAL HELP is URGENTLY NEEDED.

Governors' subscription, one guinea or more for more than one year; Life Governors' donation, ten or more guineas in one sum.

Governors' own domestic servants and certain employés of subscribing firms, clubs, and hotels, are treated free of all charge.

Help will be gratefully received by

Major W. CHRISTIE, Secretary, at the Hospital.

Bankers: Prescott & Co., 50, Cornhill, E.C.

ROYAL EAR HOSPITAL (founded 1816), Frith-street, Soho.

Patron, HER MAJESTY. The present building being quite inadequate to meet the requirements of the Institution, the Committee earnestly APPEAL for FUNDS for Erecting New Premises. Contributions will be gratefully received by the Treasurer, or the Bankers, Lloyd's Temple Bar Branch.

D. MURRAY, Hon. Secretary.

GREAT NORTHERN CENTRAL HOSPITAL, Holloway.

UNENDOWED and VERY POOR.

PATIENTS ADMITTED FREE, sickness and poverty the only passports to relief.

£10,000 needed annually to support the work of relieving 1,400 in-patients, and 25 000 out-patients.

LEWIS H. GLENTON KERR, Secretary.

THE SURGICAL AID SOCIETY,

Chief Office—SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

President—THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF ABERDEEN.

This SOCIETY supplies Trusses, Elastic Stockings, Crutches, Artificial Limbs, Artificial Eyes, &c., and every other description of mechanical support to the poor, without limit as to locality or disease.

Water Beds and Invalid Chairs and Couches are lent to the Afflicted upon the Recommendation of Subscribers.

22,247 Appliances given during the past year.

Over 280 Patients Relieved every week.

Annual Subscription of 10s. 6d., or Life Subscription of 5 Guineas entitles to Two Recommendations per Annum; the number of Letters increasing in proportion to amount of contribution.

SUBSCRIPTIONS and DONATIONS are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully received by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay & Co., Lombard-street, or by the Secretary at the Office of the Society.

RICHARD C. TRESIDDER, Secretary.

THE EARLSWOOD ASYLUM FOR IDIOTS.

FUNDS URGENTLY NEEDED to maintain the 304 elected Patients now in the Institution.

A debt of £4,630 has been incurred to meet current expenses.

Nearly 130 afflicted cases seeking admission.

Cases received on payments regulated by the Board.

ALDERMAN SIR J. C. DIMSDALE, Treasurer.
JAMES DOWNING, Secretary.

Offices 36, King William-street, London Bridge, E.C.

"TRUTH" HOTEL LIST.

BATH.—LANSDOWN GROVE HOTEL.—Desirable residence, in beautifully wooded grounds, 400 feet above sea level, facing south, and protected from north and east. Air dry and bracing. Assembly and Pump Rooms within easy distance. Omnibus free to and from Hot Mineral Baths. Billiards, Tennis Lawn.

BONCHURCH HOTEL, Bonchurch, Isle of Wight, one mile from Ventnor Station
A comfortable, quiet, and most beautifully-situated Hotel. Pretty garden. Good sea view.
H. RIBBANDS, Proprietor.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HOTEL MONT DORE.—South aspect. 150 rooms, electric light throughout, passenger lift, first-class cuisine, winter garden and lounge, covered tennis court. Turkish, sea-water, and medicated Baths. The Hotel is within two minutes' walk of the Golf Links.—For tariff, address W. KNEESE, Manager.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HIGHCLIFFE HOTEL. Unrivalled position, West Cliff, full south. Splendid sea view. Table d'hôte (separate tables). Supplies from Alderney Dairy Farm. Telephone 27.—J. KILNER, Proprietor.

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old-established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms.
GEO. HECKFORD, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—GRAND HOTEL.
Centre of Sea Front. Electric Light throughout. Lift to all floors. Bicycle room. INCLUSIVE TERMS IF DESIRED from 10s. 6d. to 15s. per day. For particulars apply to A. D. HOOK, Manager.

CARBIS BAY HOTEL, Cornwall. The very spot to obtain rest and quietude. Overlooking the finest bay in England. Mild yet bracing climate. Within easy distance of London by G. W. R. Splendid Golf Links. "A more beautiful spot for residence could hardly be imagined." —Truth.

FOLKESTONE.—BATES' HOTEL, West Cliff Gardens, and LONGFORD PRIVATE HOTEL, The Lees. Oldest established and most select Family Hotels in Folkestone. Reduced terms during Winter and Spring months. Pension (new Coffee-room) at Bates' Hotel.—G. L. HART, Proprietor. Sanitation Certified.

FOLKESTONE.—The LEAS HOTEL.—Situated in private grounds. Adjoining fashionable promenade. Sea views. Refurnished throughout. Passenger lift. Certified sanitation. Excellent cuisine. Moderate tariff. Good golf links and tennis court.

GRAND CANARY.—The Newest and Best Hotel is The METROPOLE. Facing the sea. Delightful position.
Terms most moderate.
Agents, ELDER, DEMPSTER & CO., 14, Castle-street, Liverpool, and 4, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.

JERSEY.—GRAND HOTEL.—Beautifully situated, facing the sea, full south, and sheltered from the north-easterly winds, with all modern comforts and liberal management. Reduced winter terms from October 15th.
D. DE LEIDI, Manager.

MADEIRA.—REID'S HOTELS.
NEW HOTEL, Santa Clara, Carmo, Hortas (German). 3½ days from England. Splendid situations. Large Gardens. Tennis Courts. Sea Bathing. Modern Sanitation. All Steamers met.
Pamphlet free, of F. PASSMORE, 124, Cheapside, E.C.

MALVERN—The IMPERIAL HOTEL occupies the best position, and receives visitors en pension. The golf-links (18 holes) are one of the best in England. Capital stabling for hunters. Droitwich Brine, Turkish and large Swimming Bath in separate buildings.—For tariff, apply to the Proprietor, F. MOERSCHELL.

SANDGATE.—ROYAL KENT HOTEL, a favourite resort of Ruskin. An ideal summer and winter residence, delightfully situated in its own grounds, facing the sea. Redecorated and refurnished. New Coffee-room, Smoking-room, and Conservatory have recently been added. Fifteen minutes from Folkestone. Omnibus meets all trains Sandgate Station.—J. E. TANARE, Prop.

TORQUAY.—IMPERIAL HOTEL.—Under entirely New Management. New sanitary arrangements throughout. It is the largest and best-situated Hotel in Torquay, and the best winter residence on the South Coast. Visitors received en pension or à la carte. Terms moderate.
F. FISCHER, Manager.

All applications for spaces in this List should be made to the ADVERTISEMENT MANAGER,
"TRUTH" BUILDINGS, CARTERET STREET,
QUEEN ANNE'S GATE, S.W.

A FINE HOTEL] DOVER [IN DOVER BAY

Accommodates 400 guests. Is superbly appointed, with all the comforts of a well-arranged mansion, at moderate cost. Perfect cuisine. The Dover Golf Links for use of Hotel Burlington visitors. The finest coast hotel in England Brochure and Tariff free.

Facing the Pleasure Pier and in centre of Dover Bay.

HOTEL BURLINGTON

INNS OF COURT HOTEL, Holborn, London.—A first-class Family Hotel, with 200 bedrooms, &c. All modern conveniences and moderate terms. Electric lights, lifts, &c. The Central Hall, as a lounge for writing &c., is the finest and the Dining-room the pleasantest in London. Public meeting rooms, &c. Visitors may dine at the Table d'hôte or in the new Restaurant. Tariff gratis.

ILFRACOMBE.

A Charming WINTER RESORT, climate mild and equable.

The ILFRACOMBE HOTEL,

First-class Return Tickets issued from London (Waterloo), L. & S. W. R., from November to March, including seven days' bed, board, and attendance, at the Ilfracombe Hotel, £5. 5s. each, available for one month. Ask for Hotel tickets, available by all trains. H. R. GROVER, Manager.

HASTINGS. Due South, Facing Sea.

QUEEN'S HOTEL,

LARGEST AND BEST APPOINTED.
Sunny, and most sheltered position in Hastings and St. Leonards.
ELECTRIC LIGHT. PASSENGER ELEVATOR.
Moderate Tariff. Hotel Flys attend the trains.
WILLIAM GLADE, Manager.

THE INTERNATIONAL PALACE HOTELS.

CAIRO ..... Shepheard's.
CAIRO ..... Chezireh Palace.
NICE ..... Riviera Palace.
LISBON ..... Avenida Palace.

London Office, 14, Cockspur-street, S.W.

CAP MARTIN HOTEL

(BETWEEN MENTONE AND MONTE CARLO.)

FINEST SITE ON THE RIVIERA.

NOW OPEN,

Under the same Management.

Lighted throughout by Electricity, which is available all night. Perfect sanitation of Hotel and District. The Hotel has private Dairy and Laundry. Omnibus meets trains at Mentone.

Address—MANAGER, Cap Martin Hotel, Mentone.

AVONDALE
Hotel and Restaurant,

PICCADILLY.

LUNCHEONS. FIRST-CLASS CUISINE.
DINNERS. SUPPERS.

STRINGED ORCHESTRA.

Managers, MM. GARIN and EUGÈNE.

HATCHETT'S RESTAURANT

(LATE WHITE HORSE CELLARS), PICCADILLY.

Luncheons, Dinners, &c. Fixed Prices, or à la Carte.

FINEST CELLARS IN LONDON.

Managers, MM. GARIN and EUGÈNE.

CANARY ISLANDS.—SANTA CATALINA HOTEL, Las Palmas. In midst of beautiful gardens, facing sea. Sanitary arrangements perfect. English physician and nurse. English church. Golf, tennis cycling.—The Canary Islands Coy., Limited, 1, Laurence Pountney-hill, E.C.

A Lasting Pleasure to All.

The POLYPHON Musical Box is the greatest novelty of the age. It plays to perfection airs from the Operas, or renders most brilliantly any selections of music which a purchaser may desire.

All Dealers, or write for No. 50 Catalogue, sent gratis and post free.

NICOLE FRÈRES, Ltd.
21, Ely-place, London, E.C.

	The Infanta.	The Kleberg.	The Gordon.	The Eugene.
With Six Discs	32/-	51/-	85/-	170/-
Extra Discs	5d.	8d.	1/4	2/6

For higher priced Instruments see Catalogue.

AMUSEMENTS.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.
Sole Lessee, Mr. Frederick Harrison.
Managers, Mr. Frederick Harrison and Mr. Cyril Maude.
TO-NIGHT and EVERY EVENING, at 8.30,
THE LITTLE MINISTER, by J. M. Barrie.
Miss WINIFRED EMERY and Mr. CYRIL MAUDE.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY, at 2.30.

QUEEN'S HALL.
SUNDAY AFTERNOON CONCERTS.
EVERY SUNDAY, at 3.30.
Conductor, Mr. Henry J. Wood.
The Queen's Hall Grand Orchestra.
Admission free. Reserved seats, 3s., 2s., 1s., and 6d.

The "WM. JAMES" COLLECTION
OF
Old English, Sevres, Dresden, and Oriental Porcelain
(Purchased direct from Executor),
On EXHIBITION and SALE at
HARDING'S ART GALLERY,
18, St. James's-square, S.W.

OLYMPIA.
BARNUM AND BAILEY.
GREATEST SHOW ON EARTH.
For a Limited Season only.
Most Gigantic Show ever Devised.
Overflowing with the World's Attractions.
3 Circus companies in 3 rings.
2 Olympian stages, 1 huge race-track.
2 Complete menageries, 3 herds of elephants.
Museum of living freaks and curiosities.
20 Funniest clowns on earth.
70 Horses performing in one ring.
400 Horses, 2 droves of camels, hosts of queer animals.
20 Races, 50 trained animals.
1,001 Marvellous sights and wonderful objects.
2,000 tons of pure moral amusement.
The whole forming a most bewildering, dazzling, brilliant, instructive exhibition, far beyond anything ever dreamed of.
TWO GRAND EXHIBITIONS DAILY, at 2.0 and 8.0 p.m.
Doors open at 12.30 and 6.30 p.m.
Early Gates open (Hammersmith-road) at 12.0 noon and 6 p.m. for 3s. seats and upwards. Early entrance fee 6d. extra.
Owing to the stupendously large show, and the general magnitude of the Exhibitions, necessitating great preparations, the Menageries, Freak, and Horse Fair Departments can only be open from 12.0 to 4.0 p.m., and from 6.0 to 10.0 p.m. No Promenade Tickets sold. Every ticket entitling holder to a reserved numbered seat, and admitting to all advertised departments without extra charge.
Prices. — Amphitheatre, 1s. and 2s.; Arena seats, 2s., 3s., and 4s.; Balcony seats, 3s.; Stalls, 5s., 7s. 6d.; Private Boxes, 5 to 6 seats, £3. 3s.; Single box-seats, 10s. 6d. Special prices for Royal Box when not engaged. At Two o'clock Exhibition only. Children between 4 and 10 years of age half-price to all except 1s. and 2s. seats. Seats for sale at Olympia daily from 9.0 a.m. to 4 0 p.m., and at usual libraries.

CRYSTAL PALACE.
The one absolute novelty this Christmas is to be seen at the CRYSTAL PALACE!
GREAT RIVER SCENE
in ENGLISH STAG HUNT,
at
WULFF'S GREAT CIRCUS.
Hounds, Horses, and Riders, plunge into and swim the river!
Rounds of applause and roars of laughter.
No such scene ever before beheld in any show.
TWICE DAILY, at 3 and 7.30.
Children half-price to numbered seats, both afternoon and evening. Free admission to Palace after 6.30 p.m. to holders of Circus Seat Tickets, which are on sale at Low Level and Central Entrances. Numbered Seats, 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., and 5s., may be booked in advance at Central Entrance and usual London Ticket Agents. 3,000 sixpenny and 2,000 shilling seats.

NEW NIAGARA. SKATING.
Morning, 9.30 to 1; Evening, 8 to 11, 3/-
Afternoon, 3 to 6.30, 5/-
Non-Skaters (Afternoon), 2/6.
SEASON and HALF-SEASON TICKETS ISSUED.

BRIGHTON ICE RINK. SKATING.
Morning, 9.30 to 1 Evening, 8 to 11, 2/6
Afternoon, 3 to 6.30, 4/- Non-Skaters, in the Afternoon, 2/-
Monthly Tickets, £2 10s.
SEASON and HALF-SEASON TICKETS issued.

THEATRE TICKETS.—Boxes, Stalls, Balcony, and Upper Circle Seats in the best positions can be had at any office of the DISTRICT MESSENGERS' COMPANY.—Letters and telegrams, 193, Piccadilly.—Seats for every theatre. If you ever want a MESSENGER FOR ANY PURPOSE, to go any distance, at home or abroad, ask for a "DISTRICT MESSENGER." Offices in all parts of London, open Day and Night. Electric call boxes, to summon messengers, are in every first-class club, hotel, and house.

"Lanoline" Toilet Preparations
Toilet "Lanoline" For Delicate and Sensitive Skins. 6d. and 1s.
"Lanoline" Toilet Soap For Health and Beauty of the Skin. 6d. per tablet. 3 in a box 1s. 6d.
Darling Brand, from all Chemists.
Wholesale Depôt:—67 HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON.

AMUSEMENTS.

DRURY LANE THEATRE ROYAL.—Managing Director, ARTHUR COLLINS. THE CHILDREN'S PANTOMIME, THE BABES IN THE WOOD. Twice daily at 1.30 and 7.30. For full particulars, see daily papers. Box Office open all day.

LYCEUM.—PETER THE GREAT,
in Five Acts, by Laurence Irving,
EVERY EVENING, at 8 punctually.
Peter the Great ..... HENRY IRVING.
Empress Catherine..... Miss ELLEN TERRY.
Box office (Mr. J. Hurst) open 10 to 5, and 7.30 to 10.
Seats booked by letter or telegram. LYCEUM.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.
Proprietor and Manager, Mr. HERBERT BEERBOHM TREE.
LAST THREE NIGHTS, at 8.15,
A MAN'S SHADOW,
Mr. TREE in the DUAL ROLE of LAROQUE and LUVERSAN.
MATINEE SATURDAY NEXT, at 2.30.
SATURDAY, JANUARY 22, JULIUS CÆSAR.
Box-office open 10 to 10. Seats booked from 2s. Doors open 7.45.

ADELPHI.—A. & S. GATTI, Sole Proprietors and Managers. EVERY EVENING, at 8, William Gillette's successful Drama in Four Acts, entitled, SECRET SERVICE. Mr. Herbert Waring, Mr. J. D. Beveridge, Mr. Creagh Henry, &c., &c.; Miss May Whitty, Miss Bella Bateman, Miss Georgie Esmond. MORNING PERFORMANCES EVERY WEDNESDAY, at 2.

GAIETY THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, GEORGE EDWARDES.
EVERY EVENING, at 8 (doors open 7.40),
THE CIRCUS GIRL
(2nd year).
Box-office open daily from 10 till 6.
MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY, at 2,
Doors open 1.40.

SAVOY THEATRE.—Every Evening, at 8.20, and Every Saturday Afternoon, at 2.30, THE GRAND DUCHESS OF GEROLSTEIN. At 7.40, OLD SARAH. Box-office 9 a.m. to 11 p.m.—R. D'OYLY CARTE, Manager.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.
Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER, Sole Lessee and Manager.
TO-NIGHT and EVERY EVENING, at 8 punctually,
THE TREE OF KNOWLEDGE,
A New and Original Play in Five Acts, by R. C. Carton.
MATINEES SATURDAY NEXT, January 15, WEDNESDAY, January 19, and EVERY SATURDAY following, at 2. Box-office 10 to 10.

DALY'S THEATRE.—Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTIN DALY.—EVERY EVENING, and SATURDAY MATINEE, Mr. George Edwardes's Company in THE GEISHA. The book by Owen Hall. Lyrics by Harry Greenbank. Music by Sydney Jones.

COMEDY THEATRE, Panton-street, Haymarket.
EVERY EVENING, at 9,
ONE SUMMER'S DAY, by H. V. Esmond.
Mr. Charles Hawtrey, Messrs. H. Kemble, E. Hendrie, Cosmo Stuart, Kenneth Douglas, Lyston Lyle, Master Bottomley; Miss Eva Moore, Miss Lydia Rachael, Miss Beatrice Ferrar, Mrs. Charles Calvert, Miss Constance Collier.
At 7.50, A SHEEP IN WOLF'S CLOTHING. Mrs. Bernard Beere, Mr. Henry Kemble, and Mr. Henry Neville. Doors open 7.40.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY, at 3. Box-office 10 to 10.

VAUDEVILLE. A. & S. GATTI,
Sole Lessees and Managers.
EVENINGS, at 9,
WEDNESDAYS, at 3 and 9,
A. & S. Gatti and Charles Frohman will present the Farcical Comedy,
NEVER AGAIN,
8.15, THE CAPE MAIL, by Clement Scott.
Box-office open 10 to 10.

CRITERION THEATRE.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.—EVERY EVENING, at 8.15, THE LIARS, by Henry Arthur Jones. Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM, Miss MARY MOORE, and Company. MATINEE WEDNESDAY, Jan. 12, and EVERY SATURDAY.

ALHAMBRA.—Every Evening, New Grand Ballet, BEAUTY AND THE BEAST. Exceptional VARIETY Programme. Doors open 7.30. ALFRED MOUL, General Manager.

EMPIRE THEATRE.—EVERY EVENING, UNDER ONE FLAG and TREASURE ISLAND. Grand VARIETIES. Doors open at 7.45.

TIVOLI, Strand, London.—The Greatest Combination of Talent in London.—Open EVERY EVENING, at 7.45, and SATURDAY MATINÉE, at 2.30, with a STAR PROGRAMME, embracing every Artiste of note.—Manager, Mr. VERNON DOWSETT.

LONDON PAVILION.—ENORMOUS PROGRAMME.—Charles Godfrey, Fannie Leslie, Chirgwin, Vesta Victoria, T. E. Dunville, Marie Collins, Alec Hurley, and many others, including Mark Melford's Sketch, BETWEEN THE TURNS.—Prices from 1s. to £3. 3s. Doors open at 7.30.—Manager, Mr. FRANK GLENISTER.

PALACE, Shaftesbury-avenue. — The HANDSOMEST THEATRE in EUROPE. The finest Variety Entertainment in London. Full Licence. Prices from 6d. Doors open 8.—Manager, Mr. CHARLES MORTON.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION, Baker-street Station.—A True and Realistic Tableau, HERR ANDRÉE and his Two Companions starting in Balloon on their journey to the North Pole. Now on view in Hall of Tableaux. Admission 1s. Children under Twelve, 6d. Extra rooms, 6d.

FOR KLONDIKE,

Passengers should book to Vancouver City, terminus of the CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY. The arrival platform is the departure wharf of all Klondike steamers. Complete outfits can be purchased in Vancouver City cheaper than in the United States. Purchasers save not only in first cost, but escape all Customs duties. Remember Klondike is in Canada. All outfits purchased elsewhere pay an average duty of 30 per cent. Steamers leave Vancouver City regularly direct for the Klondike.

Vancouver Board of Trade,
W. GODFREY, President.

NEW ZEALAND, AUSTRALIA, HONOLULU, FIJI.

CANADIAN-AUSTRALIAN LINE STEAMERS, fastest and finest from American Continent to Australasia, LEAVE VANCOUVER Monthly. For berths, inclusive through tickets, viâ Montreal or New York, and world-famed scenery of Canadian Pacific Railway, apply, C.P.R. Co., 67 and 68, King William-st., London Bridge; 30, Cockspur-st., Trafalgar-square; or C.A. Line (J. HUDDART & CO., Managers), 150, Leadenhall-st., E.C.

JAPAN, CHINA, AROUND THE WORLD.

CANADIAN PACIFIC ROUTE, viâ Vancouver. Largest, fastest, only twin-screw steamers on Pacific.

For berths or descriptive pamphlets, apply PASSENGER DEPARTMENT, CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY, 67 and 68, King William-street, London Bridge, or 30, Cockspur-street, Trafalgar-square.

YACHTING EXCURSION, viâ Magellan Straits (Summer Season).—VANCOUVER, KLONDIKE, &c.
THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY,
having purchased the ROYAL MAIL STEAMERS "TARTAR" and "ATHENIAN," late of the Union Line Cape service, intend dispatching them, from Southampton (for Klondike service) about 1st February next, to Vancouver, B.C., viâ Straits of Magellan, during summer months in Southern latitudes. Ports of call will be Rio de Janiera and Callao, and possibly Teneriffe. The steamers are fitted for first and second class passengers only, are electric lighted, carry a surgeon, and are luxuriously fitted throughout with saloons, library, bath-rooms, &c. They should reach Vancouver about end of March, allowing Klondike passengers ample time to obtain outfits and proceed by same steamers from Vancouver to Wrangel, when Stikine River navigation opens. Liberal baggage allowance.

Prices to Vancouver, 1st class £30, 2nd class £20.- Round trip (including meals and sleeper on train), returning from Vancouver through world-famed mountain, prairie, and lake scenery of Canadian Pacific Railway and Niagara Falls, allowing choice of any steamer from trans-Atlantic ports, price £65. Round the World, returning from Vancouver viâ Japan, China, Colombo, and Suez, £120. Round the World, returning viâ Hawaiian Islands, Fiji, New Zealand, New South Wales, Colombo, and Suez, £125. Break of journey allowed at all Canadian Pacific Railway stations and all steamship ports beyond Vancouver. For berths apply quickly to Company's offices, 67 and 68, King William-street, E.C., 30, Cockspur-street, S.W., 7, James-street, Liverpool, 67, St. Vincent-street, Glasgow, or any of Thos. Cook & Son's offices.

WINTER IN THE WEST INDIES.

SPECIAL TOURS. SIXTY-FIVE DAYS for £65, by magnificent vessels of the

ROYAL MAIL STEAM PACKET COMPANY.

For particulars apply 18, Moorgate-street, or 29, Cockspur-street (West End), London.

£20 TOBACCONISTS COMMENCING. Illd. guide (259pgs.), 3d., "How to open respectably £20 to £2,000." Tobacconists' Outfitting Co., Euston-rd., Ldn. Hairdressers fitted.—H. MYERS.

VERITAS Hygienic

OIL HEATING STOVES

(Central Air Draught System).

Halls, Libraries, Bedrooms, Drawing-rooms, Greenhouses, Offices, &c.

FROM 14/- to £5

NO SMELL.
NO DIRT.
NO FIXING.
NO FLUE.
SAFE.
ECONOMICAL.

GREAT VARIETY OF PATTERNS AND SIZES.

OF ALL IRONMONGERS, STORES, & LAMP DEALERS.

Wholesale only of THE VERITAS LAMP WORKS, Farringdon-rd., London.

HAVE YOU TRIED

CEPHALIA

For HAY FEVER, NEURALGIC PAINS, & COLDS in the HEAD, &c.?
If not, send 13½d. for a Box to
REECE & CO., Medical Hall, Piccadilly, London.
EFFECT SIMPLY MIRACULOUS.

OUR

Fashionable

"CLUB NOTE" has attained an unrivalled reputation as the BEST PAPER and the BEST VALUE in the market. It is a thick, creamy, smooth

Note paper,

delightful to write upon. Supplied (only by us) beautifully headed with address in Gold or any Colour. 100 Sheets and 100 Envelopes for 2/6 post-free.

SPECIAL OFFER (for a limited period only).—One Ream and 500 Envelopes for 8/6 carriage paid; headed with address,

Free of Charge!

Samples of this and other remarkable values on application to

SHARP, WALKER, & CO., 259, High Holborn, W.C.

Best is Cheapest. Fixed prices.

TRADE MARK

DR. JAEGER'S SANITARY WOOLLEN SYSTEM CO. SOLE CONCESSIONARIES. PURE WOOL WARRANTED

PROTECTION FROM CHILL.

Jaeger

PURE WOOL

Underwear, Hose, Pyjamas, Rugs, Blankets, Cashmere Sheets, Dressing Gowns, Shawls, Corsets, Cycling Outfits, Boots & Shoes, Hats and Caps, &c., &c.

"Health Culture" and Jaeger Price List Free.

3 and 4, PRINCES-STREET, CAVENDISH-SQUARE (near Regent-circus).
126, REGENT-STREET (near the Quadrant).
30, SLOANE-STREET (adjoining McPherson's Gymnasium).
456, STRAND (near Trafalgar-square).
85 and 86, CHEAPSIDE (near King-street).
TAILORING (only):—
42, CONDUIT-STREET, NEW BOND-STREET, W.

NEW YEAR'S FIRESIDE GIFTS.

CARTER 6A NEW CAVENDISH ST.

PORTLAND PLACE, LONDON.

ONLY ADDRESS OF ORIGINAL CARTER

LITERARY MACHINE.

For holding book, lamp, meals, &c., in any position over an easychair, bed, or sofa. Deliciously luxurious. A most useful gift. Prices from 17/6

INVALID FURNITURE.

ADJUSTABLE COUCHES and BEDS from £1. 10/-

Bed Lift £3. 10/-
Reclining Boards, 25/-
Walking Machines
Portable W.C.'s.
Electric Bells,
Urinals, &c.
Air & Water Beds.

Bed Rests 7/6
Leg Rests 10/-
Crutches 10/6
Bed Baths 12/6
Commodes, £1. 5/-

Carrying Chairs from £1.

Self-Propelling Chairs from £2

Breakfast in Bed Tables from 30/-

BATH CHAIRS FROM £1. 5/-

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUES POST FREE.

JOHN CARTER, 6a, NEW CAVENDISH ST. Portland-pl. London, W.

VINOLIA TOILET REQUISITES.

4d PREMIER VINOLIA SOAP
(For Family Use)

For Delicate, Sensitive, Irritable Skins.

The CHEMIST AND DRUGGIST reports "An ideal soap, delightfully perfumed."

1/- per box of 3 Tablets.

6d FLORAL VINOLIA SOAP
(For Private Use).

Keeps the Skin as soft as Velvet.

The MEDICAL NEWS reports:— "Beautifully emollient and softening to the skin."

1/6 per Box of 3 Tablets.

10d TOILET VINOLIA SOAP
(OTTO)

Scented with Choice Otto of Rose Perfume.

Beautifies the Complexion.

The GENTLEWOMAN reports: "Strongly recommended to keep the skin smooth and free from roughness."

2/6 per Box of 3 Tablets.

3½d UNSCENTED VINOLIA SOAP.

Keeps the Complexion clear.

The EDINBURGH MEDICAL JOURNAL reports: "Unscented Vinolia Soap cleanses the skin thoroughly and pleasantly, and at the same time leaves it soft, cool, and smooth."

10½d. per Box of 3 Tablets

6d BLONDEAU TOILET SOAPS (Favourite Brand).

You may now obtain Vinolia Soap perfumed with any scent you prefer.
Jequilla Soap, Marequil Soap, Heliotrope Soap, Musk Lavender Soap, Maréchal Niel Soap, Opoponax Soap, White Rose Soap, Baby Soap, Violet Soap, Lys de France Soap, Shampoo Soap, Oriental Soap, Lettuce Soap, White Rose & Cucumber Soap, Jasmin Soap, Cold Cream Soap, Cucumber and Glycerine Soap.
1/6 per Box of 3 Tablets.

1/½ VINOLIA CREAM

For Itching. Face Spots. Chaps, Chilblains

The LANCET reports: "An emollient cream for the skin in eczema, rash, eruptions, &c."

1/½, 3/6, and 6/- per Box.

1/- VINOLIA POWDER

For Redness, Roughness, Toilet Nursery, &c.

The LADY'S PICTORIAL reports: "Superseding the old-fashioned toilet powders which are apt to cause acne spots on the face by blocking up the pores of the skin."

In White, Pink, and Cream Tints.
1/-, 1/9, 3/6, and 6/- per Box.

6d VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP.

(STICKS AND FLAT CAKES)

Causes no Blotches.

STICKS: Premier 6d., Toilet 1/-, 1/6, 2/6. Vestal, 2/-.

FLAT CAKES: Premier 1/-, Toilet 2/-, Vestal 2/6.

Vinolia Shaving Cream, For using without Brush and Water. 6d.

6d YPSYL.

A Coralline Emollient for Dry, Rough, Cracked, or Pallid Lips.
In Rose-Red and White Tints. 6d. and 1/- a Tube.

1/- VINOLIA LAVENDER WATER.

Natural and Very Lasting.

Contains the finest Essential Oils, Concentrated, therefore the Most Economical.

In 1-oz., 2-oz., 4-oz., & 8-oz. Bottles.
6d., 1/-, 2/-, and 3/6.

2d BLONDEAU TOILET SOAPS.

(BRITANNIA BRAND).

Guaranteed Neutral and Pure.

1/- per Box of 6 Tablets

(Assorted Colours and Perfumes).

6d PREMIER VINOLIA DENTIFRICE

Aromatic, Tonic, Refreshing, Preservative.
Keeps the Teeth Ivory White.
Premier, in Round Box and Glass Bottle, 6d.
English—2/6.
American—1/6.
VINOLIA TOOTH PASTE.
Delicately Perfumed 6d

6d BLONDEAU CARBOLIC TOOTH POWDER.

Contains no Grit or Mineral Acids.

In Round Metal Box, 6d. & 1/-.

6d BLONDEAU PERFUMES

Concentrated, Delicate, Pure

*Vinolia Bouquet, *Marequil, *Jequilla, *Losaria, Wood Violet, White Heliotrope, Ess. Bouquet, Frangipanni, Jockey Club, Maréchal Niel, Millefleur, White Rose, Jasmin, Musk Rose, Honeysuckle, New Mown Hay, Lily of the Valley, Rondeletia, Hyacinth, Ylang Ylang, Stephanotis, Opoponax, Patchouli, Musk, Ambergris, Amaryllis, White Lilac, Narcissus, Chypre, Violette de Parme, Mignonette, Clematis, Wallflower, Violet, *Rhine Violets, Peau d'Espagne.

6d., 1/-, 2/-, 3/-, and 5/- per bottle.

* These perfumes are not supplied in the 6d. quality.

1/- Vinolia Hair Wash

Freshens and Revivifies the Hair.

In two kinds, Dry and Moist, 1/- per bottle.

In 3 odours: Portugal, Rose, and Violet.

1/- VINOLIA EAU DE COLOGNE.

Fragrant. Refreshing.

As fine as can possibly be made.

The "Court Circular" reports: "Vinolia Eau de Cologne we consider is absolutely unequalled for strength, purity, and delicacy of aroma."

6d., 1/-, 2/-, 3/3, and 5/6.

3 per 2oz. Packet VINOLIA VIOLET POWDER.

Sanitary. Antiseptic. Soothing.
Specially prepared for Toilet and Nursery use.

In 2-oz. Packets, 3d. In ¼-lb. Packet or Tin, 6d.

BLONDEAU ET CIE., MALDEN CRESCENT, LONDON, N.W.

Prevention is Better than Cure.

Cure is at all Times Uncertain.

BUT

Prevention lies in a sound, vigorous, and well-nourished frame. With exhaustion and in a wasted condition, the body becomes liable to all diseases, and Cod Liver Oil is the means of prevention, for it is the most valuable nutrient in such cases. The best condition in which this valuable stamina-supplying material can be taken is

MELLIN'S COD LIVER OIL EMULSION

For it is easy of digestion even for the young, rapidly assimilated even by the weakly, and is most palatable for all. This cannot be said of plain Cod Liver Oil.

FOR COUGHS, COLDS, &c., &c.

Sample free on receipt of 2d. for postage from MELLIN'S EMULSION CO., LTD., PECKHAM, LONDON.

The Public Benefactor.

HOVIS BREAD

DISTRIBUTES HEALTH.

No loaf genuine unless stamped HOVIS.

All good class Bakers make and sell Hovis.

Hovis Flour and Biscuits can be obtained from all leading Bakers and Grocers, or 6d. and 1s. samples will be sent on receipt of stamps by—

S. FITTON & SON, Hovis Mills, Macclesfield.

FIELD'S OZOKERIT CANDLES

FIVE AWARDS AT BRUSSELS EXHIBITION, 1897.

AN ELASTIC BOOKCASE

TWENTY-TWO AWARDS.
Telephone No. 317 Holborn.

Novel and Useful.

SMALL ENOUGH FOR 10 BOOKS.

LARGE ENOUGH FOR 10,000 BOOKS.

The Wernicke Elastic System combines every feature necessary to a perfect bookcase. It is always complete, but never finished—never too large nor too small, but always just right. It is elegant, practical, and economical.

We guarantee satisfaction. The purchaser incurs no liability unless absolutely satisfied with the goods.

STANDARD STYLE.
2-SECTION, 5-ROW DOOR CASE, WITH FLAT TOPS AND PLAIN BASES.

	With Glass Doors. £ s. d.	Without Glass Doors. £ s. d.
Size D, 10½in. shelves	9 18 0	7 3 0
,, D, 12½in. ,,	10 13 0	7 18 0
,, C, 11in. ,,	9 13 0	6 18 0
,, E, 13½in. ,,	14 5 0	11 10 0

EXPLANATION.

To increase the height, remove top, add another shelf above first one, and replace top on second shelf, and in the same way for any number of shelves. Every part is made to fit exactly and is interchangeable. Each shelf is also fitted with a simple and ingenious locking apparatus so that the bookcases may be extended sideways.

The dust-proof glass door hangs on pivots at its upper corners. It opens by swinging outward and upward, closing instantly when released. The glass door is also removable at will.

Top, Shelf, and Base shown apart.

One shelf with top and base is a complete bookcase as shown.

Top, Shelf, and Base Fitted.

Special Illustrated J Catalogue, fully explaining the above, posted free to all Applicants mentioning "TRUTH." Inspection of Stock Invited.

A Large Variety of Specialities and Novelties in Library and Office Furniture always in Stock.

THOMAS TURNER, (LEICESTER) Ltd. { 44, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C. / 7 and 9, NEWARKE STREET, LEICESTER.

ADVANTAGES OVER OTHER FORMS OF LAMPS FOR DECORATIVE LIGHTING.

THEY BURN CANDLES. This is much safer and cleaner than using oil.
THEY FIT IN ANY CANDLESTICK. It is therefore unnecessary to procure special stands or fittings for them.
THEY LOOK LIKE WAX CANDLES, so are unobtrusive and elegant when in use.
THERE IS NO WASTE, every atom of candle being consumed.
THERE IS NO GUTTERING, and they are extinguished without smoke or smell.
THEY ALWAYS REMAIN THE SAME HEIGHT, however long they have been burning, the appearance of a table therefore always remains the same.
The Outer Tubes are made in all colours, and are CHANGEABLE. This greatly assists in artistically decorating a dinner table.

Recommended by all Leading Society Papers.

PRICES (complete with Shade Supports):—

6-inch, size of a 6's Wax Candle, for small Candlesticks, Pianos, &c. ..... Brass Fitting, 4/6 each. ..... Plated Fittings, 5/3 each.
8-inch, ,, 4's ,, ,, tall ,, Candelabra, &c. ... ,, 5/- ,, ... ,, 5/9 ,, } If by post, 3d. per pair extra.

ARCTIC LIGHTS.—Suitable candles for burning in the Arctic Lamp (highly recommended). { For 6-inch lamps, burning about 4½ hours, 1/4 per box of 12; postage, 4d. / ,, 8-inch ,, ,, 7 ,, 2/- ,, ,, ,,

If a quantity is sent by post, the difference in cost of postage will be refunded.

The Arctic Lamps, &c., can be obtained through any of the leading Silversmiths, Lamp Dealers, and Furnishing Ironmongers in the United Kingdom, or can be seen in use, with a large variety of accessories, at the Showrooms of

THE ARCTIC LIGHT COMPANY, 179, REGENT-STREET, LONDON, W.

Fully Illustrated Catalogue sent on Application. Wholesale Office—49, HATTON GARDEN, LONDON, E.C.

HILDITCH'S ANNUAL SILK SALE

Great Reductions.

Patterns forwarded.

NOW ON.

11 & 12, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON.

WATER ABSOLUTELY FREE FROM DISEASE GERMS, BY USING THE

BERKEFELD FILTER

FOR THE PRIVATE HOUSE OFFICE, FACTORY, HOTELS RESTAURANTS, CLUBS, &c. &c.

Can be Easily and Cheaply Fixed to the Service-Pipe of any HOUSE having ordinary pressure.

Supplied to H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES, DUKE OF WESTMINSTER, K.G., and others too numerous to mention; THE HOUSE OF LORDS, and THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Glass and Earthenware Table Filters, price from 8s. 9d. each.

In use in all the Principal Hotels. Simple in Construction. Most easily cleaned.

PRICE FOR FILTER AS ABOVE, 42s.

SMALLER SIZE, 25s.

For other prices see price-lists.

Offices and Show-Rooms:

The BERKEFELD FILTER Co. Ltd.

121 Oxford St. London W.

NOTE.—Joseph Lunt, B.Sc., F.C.S., British Institute of Preventive Medicine, in his report on the Berkefeld Filter, says, "Exhaustive experiments showed that with London tap-water strongly infected artificially WITH THE TYPHOID BACILLUS, not a single typhoid bacillus was detected IN THE FILTERED WATER for a period of 26 days."

No Country House Should Be Without One.

Shall We Send You a Cat

ALOGUE OF GREENHOUSES from 30s.? BLOCK POULTRY AND RUSTIC HOUSES, IRON BUILDINGS, CHICKEN HOUSE RUNS AND COOPS, TIMBER, IRON, GLASS, AND SUNDRIES.

CLEARANCE SALE NOW ON

at extraordinary Low Prices to clear. Send to-day, as when once cleared, cannot be replaced at anything like the price.

W. COOPER,

Horticultural Provider, 755, Old Kent Rd. London, S.E.

The Best CHAINLESS Cycle!

1898 THE BANTAM 1898

New Regd. 'Alpha' Frame.

List, Testimonials, and "Notes on the Bantam," free; also particulars of Bantamette, Crypto Safety, Gardner Back-Pedalling Brake, Collier 2-Speed Gear, Crypto Carrier-Cab, &c.

CRYPTO WORKS CO., LTD.,

29, CLERKENWELL ROAD, LONDON, E.C.

Clarke's "Pyramid" & "Fairy" Light Co., Ltd., Cricklewood, London, N.W.

"The Old Favourite."

MAX GREGER'S CARLOWITZ

SAFEST, SOUNDEST

Dinner Wine.

PURE HUNGARIAN BURGUNDY.

From 15/- per doz.

Of all Wine Merchants and Grocers.

See that every cork bears the brand "Max Greger." Without it the wine is not genuine.

REAL GERMAN HOLLOW GROUND

KROPP RAZOR

Black Handle 5/6 | Pair, Ivory Handles, in Russia Leather Case, 21/- | Kropp's Duplex Strop 7/6
Ivory Handle 7/6 | Kropp's Strop Paste ...&c.

Wholesale: OSBORNE, GARRETT, & CO., LONDON, W.

☞ Write for Pamphlet, "Shaver's Kit and Outfit," sent post free.

London Depot:

18, HOLBORN VIADUCT, E.C.

THE LATE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD,
SIR MORELL MACKENZIE,
OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES,
MISS EMILY FAITHFUL,
THE LATE GEN. W. T. SHERMAN,

and many other persons of distinction, have testified to the remarkable efficacy of Himrod's Cure for Asthma.

Established over a Quarter of a Century.

Prescribed by the Medical Faculty throughout the world. It is used as an Inhalation and without any after bad effects. A free Sample and detailed testimonials free by post. In tins, 4s. 3d. British Depôt—46, Holborn Viaduct, London; also of NEWBERY & SONS, BARCLAY & SONS, LYNCH & CO., J. SANGER & SONS, W. EDWARDS & SON, MAY, ROBERTS, & CO., BUTLER & CRISPE, JOHN THOMPSON, Liverpool, and all wholesale Houses.

SPECIAL ADVANTAGES TO PRIVATE INSURERS.

THE IMPERIAL INSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED. FIRE. Est. 1803, 1, Old Broad-st., E.C., & 22, Pall Mall, S.W. Subd Capital, £1,200,000. Paid-up £300,000. Total funds, over £1,500,000.—E. COZENS SMITH, Gen. Man.

SUN INSURANCE OFFICE

63, Threadneedle-street, London, E.C.

THE OLDEST PURELY FIRE OFFICE IN THE WORLD

SUN INSURED IN 1896 - £388,952,800.

SUN FIRE OFFICE FOUNDED 1710

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.—Holborn Bars, London.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF LIFE ASSURANCE AND ANNUITY BUSINESS TRANSACTED.
REVERSIONS PURCHASED.

Invested Funds, £30,000,000.

The last Annual Report can be obtained on application to the Secretary.

CENTRAL PACIFIC STOCK.—THE SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY will, after JANUARY 1st, 1898, against delivery to it, at its Office in New York, of DIVIDEND WARRANTS No. 33, appertaining to Certificates of Stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, pay to the persons presenting the same one-half of one per cent. of the par value of the Stock represented by such Certificates respectively. Holders of the London Committee's Certificates in England can obtain the amount referred to above on presentation of their Certificates at Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie, & Co., 67, Lombard-street, London, E.C., where they will be stamped as follows:—"Five Dollars ($5), received from the Southern Pacific Company, against delivery of Dividend Warrant No. 33."—The Certificates may be left any day except Saturday, between the hours of Ten and Two.

NEW YORK CENTRAL and HUDSON RIVER RAILROAD COMPANY.—THREE-AND-A-HALF PER CENT. BONDS of 1997.

Interest payable in New York 1st January and 1st July by coupons, or the bonds can be registered in the name of the owner.

Principal and interest payable in gold coin of the United States of the present standard of weight and fineness without deduction for any tax or taxes which the Railroad Company may be required to pay or to retain therefrom under any present or future law of the United States or of any State or County thereof.

To Holders of Bonds and Debt Certificates or Debentures of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, viz.:—
First Mortgage Seven per Cent. Bonds, due Jan. 1st, 1903.
First Mortgage Six per Cent. Sterling Bonds, due Jan. 1st, 1903.
Extended Four per Cent. Debt Certificates, due May 1st, 1905.
Five per Cent. Debentures, due Sept. 1st, 1904.
Four per Cent. Debentures, due June 1st, 1905.

Having made a contract with the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company for the retirement of its entire bonded debt, as above, at or before maturity, we are now prepared to receive not exceeding $20,000,000 of the above-mentioned bonds, debt certificates, or debentures for exchange into the New Three and One-Half per Cent. Gold Bonds of the said Company. The outstanding bonds and debentures or debt certificates will be received by us at their present value, calculated to maturity on a 3½ per cent. basis, as follows:

Issue.	Due.	Value.	On
		Per cent.
First Mortgage 7s.	Jan., 1903	115.93	Jan. 1, 1898
First Mortgage Sterling 6s.	Jan., 1903	108.41	Jan. 1, 1898*
Extended Debt Ctfs. 4s.	May, 1905	103.27	Nov. 1, 1897
Debenture 5s.	Sept., 1904	109.24	Sept. 1, 1897
Debenture 4s.	June, 1905	103.27	Dec. 1, 1897

* Figured on basis of $973.33 par for each bond of £200.

Remarks.—Interest at the rate of 3½ per cent. on money value calculated from these dates to time of delivery will be paid in addition. The bonds must bear the current coupon.

The new Three and One-Half per cent. Gold Bonds will be delivered in payment at 103 per cent., and accrued interest to date of delivery. Fractional differences will be adjusted in cash.

The existing bonded debt all matures on or prior to June 1, 1905, and the new mortgage provides that none of it shall be extended beyond that date. Consequently, on its retirement, the new bonds will be a First Mortgage on the railroad property and real estate of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, including its railroad, terminals of extraordinary value at New York, Buffalo, and other points, all the equipment of the Company, and also its leases and other property, all as is more fully specified in the mortgage.

Copies of the mortgage securing the new bonds may be obtained at our offices.

J. S. MORGAN & CO., 22, Old Broad-street, London.
J. P. MORGAN & CO., 23, Wall-street, New York.

London and New York, 3rd January, 1898.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

NOTICE.

No Member of the Stock Exchange is allowed to advertise for business purposes, or to issue circulars to persons other than his own principals.

Persons who advertise as Brokers or Share Dealers are not Members of the Stock Exchange, or under the control of the Committee.

A List of Members of the Stock Exchange who are Stock and Share Brokers may be seen at the Bartholomew-lane Entrance to the Bank of England, or obtained on application to

EDWARD SATTERTHWAITE,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.

Committee Room, The Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

BIRKBECK BANK (Estab. 1851), Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane, London. Two and a-half per cent. interest allowed on deposits, repayable on demand. Two per cent. on current accounts, on the minimum monthly balances when not below £100.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK with particulars, post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

LONDON AND COUNTY ADVANCE AND DISCOUNT COMPANY, Limited.—Cash advanced from £10 to £500, without preliminary fees or deductions for interest, for short or long periods, repayable by easy instalments, at moderate rates, upon approved security. Bills Discounted. Forms free. Offices, 57 and 58, Chancery-lane, W.C.—JOHN STONE, Secretary.

"TRITICINE"
FOR PUDDINGS.

The List of Applications will be opened from Thursday morning at 10 a.m. to Friday night at 6 p.m. for Town Subscribers, and Saturday afternoon to 2 p.m. for Country Subscribers.

This issue is made simultaneously in Johannesburg and Cape Town.

JOHANNESBURG WATERWORKS ESTATE AND EXPLORATION COMPANY, LIMITED.

(Registered as a Limited Liability Company in the South African Republic.)

CAPITAL (Issued and fully paid) £500,000,
In 500,000 ORDINARY SHARES of £1 each.

Present Debenture Capital £42,000 First Mortgage 7 per cent. Debentures, redeemable by Annual Drawings; and the whole to be paid off by 31st December, 1900.

Issue of £250,000 5 per cent. Mortgage Debentures, in Bonds of £100 and £50 each. The whole to be redeemed by the 31st December, 1925, at par, by the operation of a Cumulative Sinking Fund commencing 1901, or by purchases in the market at any time thereafter if the price is below par; and the Company further reserves to itself the right of redeeming the whole on and after the 31st December, 1911, at a premium of 3 per cent. on giving Six months' notice to the Debenture Holders.

TRUSTEES FOR THE DEBENTURE HOLDERS.
The Right Hon. The Earl of Denbigh.
Sir Gerald Fitzgerald, K.C.M.G.

BANKERS.—Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie, & Co.

The Johannesburg Consolidated Investment Company, Limited, invite applications for the above issue at par, payable as follows:—10 per cent. on Application; 40 per cent. on Allotment; 25 per cent. on 15th February, 1898; 25 per cent. on 31st March, 1898.

The Debentures will bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, payable half-yearly in April and November, and the first coupon will be payable on November 1st, 1898.

Interest on payments, calculated from the date of allotment and the dates of the subsequent instalments, will accrue at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum up to the 31st March, and will be paid on the date of exchange of the Provisional Scrip for the Definitive Bonds, which will take place on and after 1st April, and will be duly advertised.

Instalments may be paid up in full in advance either on allotment or on the subsequent instalments under a discount at the rate of 2½ per cent. per annum.

Holders of the existing 7 per cent. Debentures can exchange their Debentures at the rate of £100 of the existing Bonds for £100 Provisional Scrip of the New Bonds, and will receive in addition a cash payment of 4 per cent., to cover the difference of interest for the unexpired term, and a bonus of 1 per cent., making in all 5 per cent. The Provisional Scrip for the New Bonds will carry interest at the rate of 5 per cent., from the date of allotment to the 31st March, payable on 1st April, 1898.

The Debentures will be to Bearer with Coupons attached, or they can be registered at the Offices of the Company either in Crosby-chambers, Fox-street, Johannesburg, or of the London Agents, 54, St. Mary Axe, London; but the interest will be payable at the Offices of the Johannesburg Consolidated Investment Company, Limited, 10 and 11, Austin-friars, London, or Colonnade-buildings, Fox-street, Johannesburg, or at the Standard Bank of South Africa, Limited, Cape Town.

In the event of any of the existing 7 per cent. Debentures not being exchanged for the new Debentures, the nominal amount of the Debentures not so exchanged will be set aside and funded in the name of the Trustees, subject to which these Debentures will constitute a first charge on all the Real Estate, Works, Machinery, Properties, and rights of the above Company, including 83,334 Shares of the Zuurbekom Water Company, and will be secured by a Registered Mortgage thereon.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company was formed for the purpose of acquiring and working a Concession granted by the Transvaal Government for supplying the town of Johannesburg with water, and since that time there has been further acquired the sole right of supplying water to the following suburbs of Johannesburg:—Old Doornfontein, New Doornfontein, Fox Reserve, The Berea Estate, Yeoville Estate, Bellevue, Bertrams Township, Lorentzville, Fairview, Jeppes Township, Jeppes Extension, Belgravia, and Houghton Estate.

Johannesburg itself is now an important city, the growth of whose suburbs has been phenomenally remarkable, the present population of both being about 103,000. The Company has now about 85 miles of main and distributing pipes, several large Reservoirs with a capacity in all of 323 million gallons, and extensive pumping and filtering machinery.

The Johannesburg Waterworks Company hold 83,334 £1 Shares of the issued £120,000 £1 Shares of the Zuurbekom Water Company, and has secured the right from the Zuurbekom Water Company to take all the water that may be obtained at Zuurbekom at a price to be agreed upon. The whole of the plant laid down for this scheme, and the works at Zuurbekom, have been paid for and belong to the Johannesburg Waterworks Company. The main works at Johannesburg have been greatly extended and improved, and the whole placed under the charge of the Resident Engineer and Manager, Mr. Thomas Raynes, who was formerly Resident Waterworks Engineer at Birmingham.

This issue is made for the purpose of introducing further improvements in the present machinery and extending the works, so as to be in a position to supply adjacent mines; for paying off the floating debt, amounting to about £50,000; and for the completion of the works, machinery, and laying down of pipes from the Zuurbekom site; also for the redemption of the existing issue of £42,000 First Mortgage 7 per cent. Debentures. The Debenture holders of that issue have the option of exchanging their present Debentures for a like amount of the New Debentures, receiving a cash payment of 5 per cent. But whether such holders do or do not exchange, in view of the funding of the nominal amount of the Debentures not so exchanged the New Debentures of this issue are completely secured.

The profits for the last four years, as certified by the Auditors of the Company, after payment of Debenture Interest, Directors' fees, and all outgoings, are as follow:—

1894	£20,770
1895	£36,078
1896 (after paying £11,663 special services)	£29,585
1897	£46,946

during which period the following dividends have been paid:—

1894	6¼ per cent.
1895	7½ ,,
1896	7½ ,,
1897	7½ ,,

The amount required for the service of this Loan is £12,500 per annum, and for the Sinking Fund to commence in 1901, and within 25 years to pay off £250,000, is £6,856 19s. 5d., or a total of £19,356 19s. 5d.

In the event of the Company going into voluntary liquidation before the 31st December, 1911, the Debentures will be repayable at a premium of 3 per cent.

A copy of the Concession can be seen at the office of the London Agents, 54, St. Mary-axe, and the draft of the Trust Deed securing the Debentures and the Articles of Association of the Company can be seen of the offices of the Johannesburg Consolidated Investment Company, 10 and 11, Austin-friars, where prospectuses and forms of application can be obtained.

Application for Debentures should be made on the form enclosed with the prospectus (white), and may be sent to the Company's Bankers, together with cheque for the application money.

Application for the exchange of existing Debentures for those of the New Issue must be made on the form enclosed with the prospectus (pink), at the Offices of the Johannesburg Consolidated Investment Company, 10 and 11, Austin-friars, E.C., and immediately after allotment fully paid-up Scrip, together with a cheque for the 5 per cent. bonus, will be forwarded.

Failure to pay any instalment will render previous payments liable to forfeiture. Scrip will be issued against Letters of Allotment and cash receipts, and will be exchanged for Definitive Debentures on and after 1st April, 1898.

Where no allotment is made the application money will be returned in full, and when the number of the Debentures allotted is less than those applied for, the surplus will be credited to the account of future payments. Application will be made to the Stock Exchange for a quotation in their Official List.

January 11th, 1898.

The List of Applications will OPEN on WEDNESDAY, 12th January, 1898, and will CLOSE on or before FRIDAY, 14th January, 1898, for both Town and Country

THE CANNING JARRAH TIMBER CO.

(WESTERN AUSTRALIA) LIMITED.

(Incorporated under the Companies Acts 1862 to 1893.)

FORESTS, SAW MILLS, RAILWAY, AND FREEHOLD LAND.

The larger portion of the Company's Forest Land is situate within 30 miles of Perth and 42 miles of Fremantle, the Chief Port in the Colony, and occupies an unrivalled position for the supply of timber to the West Australian mines.

SHARE CAPITAL £250,000, divided into 250,000 Shares of £1 each, of which the Vendors take 83,333 fully paid in part payment of the purchase money.

The REMAINING 166,667 SHARES, and £75,000 FIVE PER CENT. FIRST MORTGAGE DEBENTURES of £100 each, are NOW OFFERED for SUBSCRIPTION at PAR.

The above £75,000 Debentures are part of a total authorised issue of £100,000, redeemable in 20 years by annual drawings at £105 per Bond, and will form a first charge upon the whole Concession, Railway, and Freehold Land and Buildings in Perth and elsewhere.

Interest will be payable to the Registered Holders half-yearly in London on 1st June and 1st December (leaving £25,000 Debentures for issue when required for the further extension of the business).

SHARES PAYABLE.—2s. 6d. per Share on Application, 7s. 6d. on Allotment, 5s. one month after Allotment, 5s. two months after Allotment.

DEBENTURES PAYABLE.—£5 per Bond on Application, £45 on Allotment, £25 one month after Allotment, £25 two months after Allotment. The Debentures can be paid up in full at any earlier date and the amount paid will carry interest from the date of payment.

WORKING CAPITAL.

Out of the above issues, £75,000 have been set aside to provide Working Capital, and out of that sum the Vendors are prepared to accept an amount up to £15,000 in Debentures in part payment for the stock of sawn timber, logs, &c., leaving £60,000 for the provision of further Working Capital, and of which amount Subscriptions for £50,000 have been guaranteed, in addition to the whole of the cash portion of the purchase consideration.

TRUSTEES FOR THE DEBENTURE HOLDERS.

William L. T. Foy, Esq., D.L., J.P., 104-5, Bishopsgate-street, E.C.
Carl Derenburg, Esq., 157, Victoria-street, S.W.

DIRECTORS.

Lieut.-General Sir J. Bevan Edwards, K.C.M.G., C.B., M.P., 28, Cadogan-gardens, S.W.
Charles James Morgan, Esq. (Messrs. Foy, Morgan, & Co.), 104-5, Bishopsgate-street, E.C.
Alex. N. Robertson, Esq. (Chairman Great Boulder Proprietary Gold Mines, Limited).
J. H. Smith, Esq. (late Chairman South Australian Government Railway Commissioners).
William Adams, Esq. (late Managing Director of Thomas Adams & Sons, Limited, Birmingham and Gloucester).

ADVISORY BOARD IN AUSTRALIA.

The Hon Septimus Burt, Q.C., M.L.A. (late Attorney-General for Western Australia, Perth).
Edward Noyes, Esq. (of Noyes Bros., Sydney and Melbourne).
Frank Wilson, Esq., M.L.A., Perth, General Manager.
} Directors of the Canning Jarrah Timber Company, Limited, of Melbourne.

BANKERS.

Parr's Bank, Limited Head Office, Bartholomew-lane, E.C.; 77, Lombard-street, E.C.; and Branches.
Royal Bank of Scotland, St. Andrew's-square, Edinburgh; London; and Branches.
The Union Bank of Australia, Limited, 71, Cornhill. E.C., and Perth, Western Australia.

BROKERS.

London—Messrs. Derenburg & Co., 9, Drapers'-gardens, E.C., and Stock Exchange.
Edinburgh—Messrs. H. Gilmour and Shaw, 18, St. Andrew's-square, Edinburgh.
Glasgow—Messrs. Fraser, Kirkpatrick, & Smith, 88, St. Vincent-street, Glasgow.

SOLICITORS.

For the Company—Messrs. Mayo & Co., 10, Drapers'-gardens, London, E.C.
For the Australian Company—Messrs. Bird, Moore, & Strode, 5, Gray's Inn-square, London, W.C.

AUDITORS.

Messrs. Jackson, Gourlay, Taylor, & Macrae, London and Glasgow.
Herbert H. Holman, Perth, Western Australia.

SECRETARY AND OFFICES—H. St. John Hodges, Finsbury House, Blomfield-street, London, E.C.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed to acquire, as a going concern, the business at present carried on by the Canning Jarrah Timber Company, Limited, in Western Australia, and to further develop the same. The business includes the following:

Government Concession to fell and remove timber over about 128 square miles of Jarrah Forest in one block, situated about 30 miles from Perth and 42 miles from Fremantle.

Railway of about Thirty Miles, connecting the Concession with the Government Railways, together with rolling stock, &c., all in complete working order.

Three Large Saw-Mills in the Forest, manager's house, 75 workmen's dwelling-houses, stores, post-office, shops, &c., situate on about 655 acres of Freehold Land.

Large Timber Yard and Head Offices, covering an area of about 3½ acres Freehold, in the centre of the City of Perth.

Plot of about 14 acres Freehold at Midland Junction, where the Company's Railway joins the Government Line to Perth.

The current contracts and the goodwill of the business.

GOVERNMENT CONCESSION.—The Lease from the Government of this special timber licence is held for an unexpired term of 27½ years from 1st July, 1897, at a nominal yearly rental of £328 up to 1910 and £492 up to 1924. The Concession was granted some years ago, and, accordingly, is on much more favourable terms than can now be obtained. It is estimated that the Forest contains sufficient Jarrah of the finest quality to supply double the present saw-mill capacity, and the great demand for this class of timber for the mines and for export will, it is thought, enable this Company to double the present production.

REPORTS ON PROPERTY.—The Forest has been reported upon by Mr. J. Ednie Brown (Conservator of Forests to the West Australian Government, formerly to the Governments of New South Wales and South Australia), and a copy of his report accompanies the Prospectus.

THE RAILWAY.—This consists of the Upper Darling Range (or Zig-Zag) Railway of about 20 miles, connected with the Government Railways at Midland Junction, with Branches, covering a total length of about 30 miles.

THE FOREST SAW-MILLS, BUILDINGS, PLANT, &c.—These comprise three large saw-mills, fully equipped with all necessary machinery, also large brick-built manager's house, retail store, 75 workmen's dwelling houses, Government school, post-office, church, offices, doctor's quarters, fodder house, butcher's shop, smithy and fitting shops, saddlers', wheelwrights' and carpenters' shops, &c., the whole being situate on about 655 acres of Freehold Land.

The Company propose to immediately erect additional saw-mills, and thereby increase the output capacity to 24,000 loads per annum.

PERTH TIMBER YARD AND HEAD OFFICES.—This portion of the property has been valued and reported upon by Mr. B. C. Wood, City Valuer, and Mr. Alfred Sandover (whose joint report dated 15th September, 1897, accompanies the Prospectus), and is valued by them at £26,724.

FREEHOLD LANDS.—In addition to the Perth Freehold and the Forest Station Freehold of 655 acres, the Company own several blocks covering about 300 acres, including a valuable block of 14 acres at Midland Junction, opposite to the new Government Railway Workshops, and having a frontage of 30 chains to the Company's line. This is intended for a sorting yard for the Goldfields trade, for which it is admirably suited.

THE BUSINESS OF THE CANNING COMPANY.—The business was established in 1891 and the profits have largely increased since its inception, and large contracts have been executed for some of the most important works in Western Australia, such as railways, bridges, &c., and the trade with the mines is a rapidly growing one.

STREET PAVING.—The Vendor Company in Australia have just secured through their Brokers an order for 2,000 loads of their Jarrah wood for street paving.

ADDITIONAL FOREST LAND.—The Company also acquires about 51 square miles of Jarrah Forest held under special Timber Licences granted by the Government of Western Australia.

It is intended to erect steam mills to produce at least 10,000 loads per annum, and from this source a profit of some £12,000 per annum is expected, which will be in addition to the profits of £45,780 per annum estimated by Mr. Holman. The Balance Sheets certified by them have been examined by Messrs. Jackson, Gourlay, Taylor, & Macrae, the Auditors to this Company, and their report is set out in the Prospectus.

Having regard to Mr. Holman's estimates of future profits of the Canning business as mentioned in his report, amounting to £45,780, and to the estimated profit of £12,000 from the Donnybrook property, it will be observed that the total estimated yearly profit from the two properties is £57,780. To pay 5 per cent. on the Debentures will only require £3,750, leaving a large margin for dividends on the Share capital.

MANAGEMENT.—Arrangements have been made to retain for a term of years the services of Mr. Frank Wilson, M.L.A., who has been Managing Director of the Canning business since its inception in 1891, also the staff; thus securing a continuity of the present successful management and working in Western Australia.

PURCHASE PRICE.—The purchase price which has been fixed by the International Trust and Finance Corporation, Limited (who are the Vendors to the Promoters of this Company and resell at a profit), for the Government licences, railway and rolling stock, freehold land, saw-mills, dwellings, plant, live stock, goodwill and contracts, is £250,000, payable as to 110,000 in cash, £83,333 in fully-paid Shares, and the balance in cash or fully-paid Shares at the option of the Company.

CONTRACTS.—See Full Prospectus.

Copies of the Reports of Mr. Ednie Brown and the Accountants, the Valuation herein referred to, and Photographs of portions of the property, and a Map are enclosed with the Prospectus.

A settlement and official quotation on the London Stock Exchange for the Debentures and Shares will be duly applied for.

Applications for Debentures and Shares can be made on the appended forms, and should be forwarded to the Company's Bankers, accompanied by a remittance of the amount of the deposit.

Full Prospectuses and Forms of Application can be obtained at the Offices of the Company, or at the Offices of its Bankers, Brokers, Solicitors, or Auditors.

London, 10th January, 1898.

THESE FORMS MAY BE USED.

APPLICATION FORM for FIVE PER CENT. FIRST MORTGAGE DEBENTURES.

THE CANNING JARRAH TIMBER COMPANY (WESTERN AUSTRALIA), Limited.

ISSUE of £75,000 in 750 FIVE PER CENT. FIRST MORTGAGE DEBENTURES of £100 each, being part of a total authorised issue of £100,000.

To the Directors of the Canning Jarrah Timber Company (Western Australia), Limited.

Gentlemen,—Having paid to the Company's Bankers the sum of £....., being a deposit of £5 per Debenture due on application for..... First Mortgage Debentures of £100 each, I hereby request you to allot me the same, and I hereby agree to accept the same, or any less number allotted to me, and I agree to pay the instalments thereon as required in the terms of the Prospectus dated 10th January, 1898, and I authorise you to place my name on the Register in respect of such Mortgage Debentures. In the event of my receiving no allotment, the amount to be returned in full.

Signature .....
Name (in full) .....
Description .....
Address .....
Date.....1898.

To be written distinctly.

APPLICATION FORM FOR SHARES.

THE CANNING JARRAH TIMBER COMPANY (WESTERN AUSTRALIA), LIMITED.

SHARE CAPITAL £250,000, in £1 Shares.

ISSUE of 166,667 SHARES of £1 each.

To the Directors of the Canning Jarrah Timber Company (Western Australia), Limited.

Gentlemen,—Having paid to the Company's Bankers, the sum of £..... being the deposit of 2s. 6d. per Share on application for.....Shares, I hereby request you to allot me the same, and I hereby agree to accept the same, or any less amount allotted to me, and I agree to pay the instalments thereon as required in the terms of the Prospectus dated 10th January, 1898, and I authorise you to place my name on the Register in respect of such Shares, and I declare that I waive any fuller compliance with Section 38 of the Companies Acts, 1867, or otherwise than that contained in such Prospectus. In the event of my receiving no allotment, the amount to be returned in full.

Signature .....
Name (in full).....
Description .....
Address .....
Date .....1898.

To be written distinctly.

Applications for the supply of over 200,000 tons already received. Negotiations are proceeding for the formation of subsidiary Companies for Manchester, Barrow-in-Furness, and Hull, on terms very favourable to this Company.

A CHEAP FUEL EQUAL TO THE BEST COAL WITHIN REACH OF THE MASSES.

"OF ESPECIAL VALUE FOR USE IN WAR VESSELS, TORPEDO BOATS, &c." — NORMAN TATE & CO.

The Subscription List will Open on Wednesday, the 12th January, 1898, and Close on or before Saturday, the 15th January, for both town and country.

THE FIBROUS PETROLEUM & OIL FUEL COMPANY, LTD.

(Registered under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1896, whereby the liability of the Shareholders is limited to the amount of their Shares.)

CAPITAL - - - £250,000.

There are now offered for Subscription 168,334 ORDINARY SHARES OF £1 EACH, Payable 2s. 6d. on Application, 7s. 6d. on Allotment, and the Balance one month after Allotment.

81,666 Shares (the largest holding allowed to the Vendor by the rules of the Stock Exchange) will be issued to the Vendor in part payment of the purchase money.

DIRECTORS.

Sir Thomas S. Tancred, Bart., C.E., Member European Executive Committee, Pike's Peak Tunnel Mining Railway.
Charles D. Clayton, Ironmaster and Merchant, Doncaster, Yorks.
Major A. Patton-Bethune, Director, Burma Ruby Mines, Limited.
J. Soares, Director, Richmond Electric Light and Power Company, Limited.
*Capt. H. Samman, Managing Director, Deddington Steamship Company, Limited, Hull, and Director, Victoria Dry Docks, Limited, Swansea.
* Will join the Board after allotment.

BANKERS.

The Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, 62, Lombard-street, London, E.C.; Head Office, Edinburgh, and Branches in Scotland.
Brown, Janson, & Co., 32, Abchurch-lane, London, E.C.

BROKERS.

London: George Heavely & Co., 5, Throgmorton-avenue, E.C., and Stock Exchange; Edinburgh: George Denholm, 15, Duke-street, and Stock Exchange, Edinburgh; Glasgow: Douglas Cairney, 45, West Nile-street, and Stock Exchange, Glasgow; Dublin: W. Craig Murray, 51, Dame-street, and Stock Exchange, Dublin; Manchester: Mewburn & Barker, 13, Pall Mall, and Stock Exchange, Manchester; Swansea and South Wales: Stephen P. Wills, 13, Wind-street, Swansea; Bradford: Middleton & Fraser, 206, Swan-arcade, Bradford; Halifax: C. Ramos Appleyard, 3, Harrison-road, Halifax.

AUDITORS.—Davies, Tait, & Co., 168, St. Vincent-street, Glasgow; and 46, Queen Victoria-street, London, E.C.

SOLICITORS.—Spencer, Cridland & Co., 34, Victoria-street, and 215, Piccadilly, London.

SECRETARY AND REGISTERED OFFICES.—J. Collinson, 34, Victoria-street, London, S.W.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed as a parent concern to acquire, work, resell, or otherwise deal with the valuable Invention and Patents for the United Kingdom and the right to apply for the Patent rights for the Dominion of Canada for the production of an economic and concentrated Fuel from Crude Petroleum and other residual mineral oils, such as Shale Oil, &c., and to erect the necessary machinery for producing the Fuel at the rate of many thousand tons per week, and thus enable users of steam power and other industries requiring heat to obtain results which the Directors believe have not been hitherto obtainable.

The repeated strikes in the coal trade and the enormous loss to users of steam and consumers of coal of every class render it most important that a substitute for coal should be discovered. It is claimed that this is accomplished by the introduction of this new Fuel.

The process has been legally protected by Letters Patent Nos. 20,156 and 19,677 of 1896, which include important features for the manufacture of the various compounds used in connection with the Solidification of Crude Petroleum or of other mineral oils.

The validity of the Patents has been certified to by Mr. Fletcher Moulton, Q.C., F.R.S., and by Messrs. W. P. Thompson & Co., of London and Liverpool, the well-known Patent Agents. OPINION.

"I have settled the complete Specification and claims to the application for Letters Patent of D'Humy, Nos. 20,156 of 1896 and 19,677 of 1896, and have examined the prior specifications found upon a search in the English and American Patent Offices which relate to the subject. I am of opinion that the Letters Patent in the form which I have settled are good and valid.

(Signed) "J. FLETCHER MOULTON.

REPORT. "Temple."

"We have not discovered any Patent, either British or American, which, in our opinion, could be held to anticipate the inventions comprised in the Letters Patent of D'Humy, Nos. 20,156 of 1896 and 19,677 of 1896. We are therefore of opinion that the Letters Patent granted are valid, and will be supportable at law. (Signed) "W. P. THOMPSON & CO."

The Inventor has spent many years and expended large sums of money in the discovery and development of his invention, and has, it is claimed, now succeeded in producing a fuel possessing very remarkable qualities. This Fuel may be used under any ordinary boiler or with an open fire-grate. It requires but little draught, and burns with a long bright and intensely powerful flame, and is much superior in heating power to the best coal, whilst at the same time it produces no clinkers and leaves only an infinitesimal amount of ash.

Options on large peat properties have been secured, and others are being negotiated for, the produce of which, by the Inventor's simple process (the materials required being obtainable to an unlimited extent), can be converted into first-class fuel for steam or domestic purposes at very small cost.

A remarkable feature of the Fuel is the fact that after final treatment it is rendered perfectly safe for use even when exposed to climatic or similar heat. It is almost without odour and practically smokeless, and is thus specially adapted for use in steamers, more particularly in torpedo boats and men-of-war, where stowage space and a smokeless fuel capable of raising steam quickly is of the highest importance.

The Fuel is produced in small brick-like briquettes of a bright black colour, with clean polished surfaces, absolutely waterproof, and exudes neither pitch nor tar. It should be said that every grade or quality can be made either in powder or briquettes, absolutely dry, and clean in handling.

A careful perusal of the reports of Messrs. A. Norman Tate & Co., the well-known Analytical Chemists of Liverpool, and of Mr. Chas. W. Lancaster, Consulting Engineer and Expert, Manchester, together with opinions and reports referred to herein, will give some idea of the vast field which is open to this invention.

The Fuel is expected to prove of immense value to metallurgical operations where freedom from sulphur is required. The manager of one of the largest steel-making firms in the country has tried a sample of the fuel and finds it suitable for steel works operations. This should result in orders for some hundreds of thousands of tons.

Briefly, the merits claimed for this new Fuel are:—

For Naval, Commercial, and Steam Raising Purposes.

Economy of space in storage and transit. An immense reduction in the number of stokers.

Being non-explosive, is admirably adapted for all uses. Burns with little draught. Produces a very long bright flame.

Much cheaper and greater calorific power than coal. No clinkers. Free from sulphur.

The refuse of large towns converted into fuel superior to coal at little cost, with small plant and no skilled labour.

For Domestic Purposes.

Clean to handle. No smell. Little or no ash.

Requires little or no attention. Cheap. Safe in use.

This being the parent Company, it is proposed to grant licences to various localities for the purpose of forming subsidiary Companies, preference being given to such districts as are far away from the coalfields, thus effecting considerable saving in the cost of carriage, which is a point of great importance, and one which cannot be over-estimated. It is proposed that the subsidiary Companies should pay for the licences partly in cash and partly in fully-paid shares.

Negotiations are proceeding for the formation of subsidiary Companies for Manchester, for Barrow-in-Furness, and Hull, upon terms very favourable to this Company.

Applications have already been received for the supply by the Company of over 200,000 tons of Fuel. Based on Mr. Lancaster's report, and taking the selling price at 10s. 6d. per ton, which price the Directors propose to adopt as the average rate, these orders alone should result in a profit to the Company sufficient to pay a dividend at the rate of at least ten per cent. per annum. Besides the large profits from the sale of Fuel, there will be the additional revenue from the formation of subsidiary Companies.

The price to be paid to the Vendor for the Patents and Invention for the United Kingdom and the Patent Rights for the Dominion of Canada has been fixed at £200,000, payable as to £81,666 in fully-paid Ordinary Shares (the largest number that can be held by the Vendor by the rules of the Stock Exchange), £50,000 in cash, and the balance in cash or Shares, or partly in cash and partly in Shares, at the option of the Directors.

As the plant required for the manufacture of this Fuel is simple and inexpensive, the Directors, from the details furnished to them, are of opinion that the 50,000 Shares reserved for working capital will more than suffice to provide the requisite expenditure.

Samples of the Fuel can be seen at the Company's Offices.

All expenses of the formation of the Company up to allotment will be paid by the Vendor, except registration fee, all brokerage, and stamp duties.

The following contract has been entered into, and is dated the 11th day of January, 1898, and made between John Morris Catton, the Vendor, who is selling at a profit, of the one part, and this Company of the other part, and this is the only contract to which the Company is a party.

This Agreement, together with Counsel's opinion, the Patent Agent's and all other reports, and the Memorandum and Articles of Association, can be inspected by intending subscribers at the Offices of the Solicitors to the Company.

Other agreements and arrangements have been or may be entered into as to the formation of subsidiary companies, the supply of fuel, and other trade matters, and also as to the formation and promotion of the Company and the subscription of its capital, including agreements with persons interested in the purchase money and for payment to them. Applicants for Shares will be deemed to have had notice of all such agreements and arrangements, and to have waived their rights (if any) to any further particulars of the same, whether under Section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, or otherwise.

Application will be made in due course to the London Stock Exchange for a special settlement in and a quotation of the Company's Share Capital.

Application for shares may be made upon the form below, or by letter addressed to the Secretary, stating the number of shares required, and must be accompanied by a remittance of 2s. 6d. per share.

In cases where the number of shares allotted is less than that applied for, the surplus amount paid on deposit will be credited towards the amount payable on allotment. Where no allotment is made the deposit will be returned in full.

The statements relating to the invention made in this Prospectus are based upon the Reports set forth below.

Prospectuses and forms of application for shares may be obtained at the Offices of the Company, and at the Bankers', Brokers', Auditors', and Solicitors'.

January, 1898.

This Form, when filled up, should be forwarded entire, with the amount of the application money, to the Company's Bankers, The Commercial Bank of Scotland, Ltd., 62, Lombard-st., London, E.C., Edinburgh, or any of its Branches in Scotland; or to Messrs. Brown, Janson, & Co., 32, Abchurch-lane, London, E.C.

TO THE DIRECTORS OF THE

FIBROUS PETROLEUM AND OIL FUEL COMPANY, LIMITED.

GENTLEMEN,—Having paid to the Company's Bankers the sum of £....., being a deposit of 2s. 6d. per Share on account of .....Ordinary Shares in the above-named Company, I request you to allot me that number of Shares, upon the terms of the Company's Prospectus, dated January, 1898, and I hereby agree to accept the same, or any smaller number that may be allotted to me, and to pay the further instalments per Share in accordance with the said Prospectus, and I authorise you to register me as the holder of the said Shares. And I declare that, as a condition of the Allotment, I hereby waive all right to any further particulars of the contracts referred to in the said Prospectus, whether with reference to Section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, or otherwise, whether as against the Directors or the Company, or other interested persons, and I so agree with you as Trustees for and on behalf of all or any such persons.

Name in full .....
Address .....
Description .....
Date .....
Signature .....

HITCHINGS' BABY STORES.

The Premier Manufacturers of HIGH-GRADE BABY CARRIAGES in the World, have extensive Showrooms at

198, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W. (NEAR PETER ROBINSON'S.)

23, 21, & 19, LUDGATE HILL, LONDON, E.C.

(WORKS: LUDGATE SQUARE.)

28, KNIGHTSBRIDGE, S.W. (ST. GEORGE'S PLACE, NEAR HYDE PARK CORNER.)

HITCHINGS, LIMITED, have recently had the honour of building the Baby Carriage for the Baby Prince Edward of York, having previously executed orders for H.M. the Queen, H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, H.R.H. Princess Henry of Battenberg, H.R.H. the Duchess of Fife, H.R.H. Princess Henry of Prussia, &c. Also the Royal and Imperial families of Russia, Germany, Denmark, Portugal, and Sweden.

Hitchings' Baby Carriages from 2 to 25 Guineas, and Baby Cars from 15/6 to 10 Guineas, are not only the Best, but also 25 per cent. cheaper than those sold by dealers and stores. A carriage should always be purchased from the actual manufacturer. Enquiries receive prompt and courteous attention. Illustrations free. Correspondence solicited. 300 varieties in stock.

Bankers: CAPITAL & COUNTIES BANK AND CITY BANK. Telegram Address: "HITCHINGS, LONDON."
LIVERPOOL HOUSE, 74, BOLD STREET. Boston (U.S.A.) Agency: 92, WASHINGTON STREET.

HITCHINGS' "PRINCESS MAY" BABY CARRIAGE IS MOST SUITABLE FOR A CHRISTENING PRESENT, BEING RECHERCHE & UNPROCURABLE ELSEWHERE.

Before going elsewhere send for Hitchings' Pictorial Price Book free on mentioning "TRUTH."

THE "TROUVILLE" BABY-CAR.

IS equally adapted for use as a Sleeping Car for a young baby, or a Mail Car for an older child.

1. New registered design.
2. Runs on four silent wheels.
3. Small light front wheels.
4. Very safe, centre of gravity being very low.
5. Hitchings' Patent Cee Springs. Very easy.
6. Occupies small space.
7. Has deep well for legs and feet. No cramping.
8. Hitchings' Patent "Any Position Hood."
9. Half the weight of a wood body. Fine wicker and grass.
10. Cool in summer.
11. Artistically painted.
12. Beautifully upholstered in pale blue or art green.

Price as drawn.
£4. 4s. nett.

LIPTON'S TEAS

DIRECT FROM THE GARDENS

NOTE THE PRICES.

FINEST THE WORLD CAN PRODUCE

Per 1/7 lb.

NO HIGHER PRICE.

RICH, PURE, AND FRAGRANT,

Per 1/- and 1/4 Lb.

Millions of people are daily drinking and enjoying these delicious Teas, fresh from the sweet-scented Island of Ceylon. Lipton is sole owner of some of the most famous estates in Ceylon, which cover thousands of acres of the best tea-growing land.

Ceylon Offices and Shipping Warehouses:
Prince Street, and Maddema Mills.
Cinnamon Gardens, Colombo.

Visitors to this beautiful Island are cordially invited to call and see over Lipton's Tea and Coffee Warehouses, Maddema Mills, Cinnamon Gardens, Colombo. Those desirous of going up country are also welcome to visit Lipton's Tea, Coffee, and Cocoa Estates, situate high in the hills, where some of the finest Tea can be seen growing at an altitude of about 7,000 feet above sea level.

BUY FROM THE GROWER.

TEA MERCHANT

BY SPECIAL APPOINTMENT TO HER MAJESTY

THE QUEEN.

THE LARGEST SALE IN THE WORLD.

£50,513 11 5

represents Duty on over 1,300 Tons of Tea, and is the amount of

THE WORLD'S RECORD DUTY CHEQUE

For TEA, Paid to Her Majesty's Customs, London, By LIPTON,

FOR HIS WEEK'S CLEARANCE.

This speaks for itself, and represents considerably more than half the entire quantity of Tea used per week in the whole of Great Britain.

Indian Offices and Shipping Warehouses:
HARE STREET, CALCUTTA.

LIPTON, TEA, COFFEE, AND COCOA PLANTER, CEYLON.
BRANCHES AND AGENCIES THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.
Chief Offices: CITY ROAD, LONDON, E.C.

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER

Prevents the Hair from falling off.
Restores Grey or White Hair to its ORIGINAL COLOUR.
Being delicately perfumed it leaves no unpleasant odour.
IS NOT a dye, and therefore does not stain the skin or even white linen.
Should be in every house where a HAIR RENEWER is needed.
Ask your Chemist or Hairdresser for

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER.

Price 3s. 6d. per large Bottle.

Prepared only by the

ANGLO-AMERICAN DRUG COMPANY, Ltd.,
83, FARRINGDON ROAD, LONDON, E.C.

FLORILINE

FOR THE TEETH AND BREATH.

IS THE BEST LIQUID DENTIFRICE IN THE WORLD.

Prevents the Decay of Teeth.
Renders the Teeth Pearly White.
Is perfectly Harmless and Delicious to the Taste.

Of all Chemists and Perfumers throughout the World
2s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE TOOTH POWDER

Put up in Glass Jars, price 1s.

OUR PUZZLES.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 984.—ANECDOTES OF MODERN SERVANT-GALDOM.

TABLEAU (real name and address will be published in due course)... ... ... £2 2 0

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 985.—LINES ON THE UNDERGROUND RAILWAY AS A SANATORIUM.

ALMAVIVA (real name and address will be published in due course) £2 2 0

"TRUTH" TOY AND DOLL SHOW.—SPECIAL NOTICE.

In another part of this week's number of TRUTH will be found the Prize List in connection with the recent TRUTH Toy and Doll Show at the Royal Albert Hall.

CONDENSED RULES.

All answers to the current Puzzle must be sent in on or before the morning of the Monday week following the date of that Puzzle's publication, to the PUZZLE EDITOR, TRUTH Buildings, Carteret-street, Queen Anne's-gate, London, S.W. The answers must be signed by a nom de plume of not more than twelve letters, and must not be sent on post-cards, nor by telegraph, nor by hand; whilst in the case of new competitors the real name and address must be forwarded with the first reply sent.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 977.

The chance, for which I have been waiting so long, has at last arrived, and I am now able to publish a further selection of the "Amusing Sayings by Children," which were received in connection with this competition. The Prize-winner's name will be announced next week.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 986.

As this Puzzle is furnishing material for another TRUTH Competition, the name of the prize winner will not be announced until Competition No. 989 is also decided.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 990.

Many correspondents have asked that another competition involving an extended search through the works of our British poets may be given. It is proposed, therefore, to offer the usual prize this week to the competitor who is able to compile

THE LONGEST LIST OF TOWNS AND CITIES IN ENGLAND AND WALES ACTUALLY MENTIONED IN THE WORKS OF POETS WHO HAVE LIVED AND WRITTEN IN ENGLISH DURING ANY PART OF THE PRESENT CENTURY.

A reference must be given in each case to the poem in which the name of the town or village is found, and a brief quotation furnished including the said name. It should be noticed that the names of towns and cities only will count. It will be useless to quote the names of villages or other smaller communities. Only one quotation dealing with each name sent in is required; it will be useless to multiply quotations naming the same place. All answers must be received by me by the morning of Monday, January 24, at the latest.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

MUGGS.—A similar competition was given three years ago.
W. W.—Please send me the cutting you refer to in your letter.
MEDUSA.—I will look into the matter at once.
BEDJORDIAN.—Your anecdotes came to hand rather too late.
THERSITES.—I am unable to account for the non-arrival of your last letter.
THE HEN.—Thanks for your note. I will make the necessary corrections.
YELLOW LEAF.—I will take care that the transposition of your epitaphs shall not affect your chances in the competition.

THE PUZZLE EDITOR.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 987.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

ROUND GAMES FOR CHRISTMAS PARTIES.

POET LAUREATE.

In this game one person leaves the room while the others sit in a row in the room. On re-entering he goes up to the first person in the company and repeats the first line of a well known rhyme, such as "Mary had a little lamb," the person to whom it is repeated should at once (before the questioner counts ten) compose an impromptu line to rhyme; the one next then taking it up and continuing it, and so on till all the company have joined. Whoever fails to respond in the given time is out of the game. The questioner starts a new rhyme each round, and the person who keeps in longest is Poet Laureate. The idea, of course, is jingling rhyme, and the more absurd, the greater the fun.—Prima Donna.

LIVING PICTURES.

Half the company leave the room, the remaining half—who constitute the living pictures—remain seated, except one who takes the part of showman. The pictures represent well-known men or women, politicians, actors, novelists, &c.; each displays a slip of paper with a short inscription, such as "No. 1, novelist, initials C. D."; "No. 2, artist, initials M. A." The company are then recalled, and studying the inscriptions silently try to identify the different characters. When they have guessed the entire number, the names are written in order on a slip of paper and submitted to the showman, who returns the paper with a cross against each name correctly solved. Ten minutes is allowed for the entire solution, those failing to make a correct list in that time pay a forfeit.—Prima Donna.

THE GAME OF POPULAR ADVERTISEMENTS.

A circle being formed, one of the party throws a handkerchief to another, or in some other way singles out an individual from the rest, and names a letter of the alphabet, immediately afterwards slowly counting ten. Before that number is reached the one selected should mention any well-known advertisement (such as Pears' Soap, or Bovril) commencing with the letter named, and then call on another to do the same, keeping up the game with spirit. Those who are not ready with an advertisement in time incur the penalty of a forfeit.—Excelsior.

The following game was suggested by the accidental circumstance of my brother wondering what train of thought had led him to whistle a particular tune. He found it was suggested by the sight of a picture on the wall. We developed the idea as follows:—Divide the company into two camps, of which the leader on each side must have just sufficient knowledge of music to supply names and tunes of a few well-known musical compositions. Select an umpire in case of disputes. Camp No. 2 leaves the room. No. 1 chooses an object to be clearly visible to all, whose name can be suggested by the words or title of a musical air. Enter No. 2. The tune is hummed, or whistled, or played on any musical instrument by No. 1. The first guesser goes "spots" the tune names it aloud, and his party join round till they find the object selected. Whoever first guesses right is counted "out," and joins the spectators. The No. 2 retires again, and the process is repeated till all the side is "out," when No. 1 camp takes the guessing. If no one can name the tune, they may ask it of the umpire. This can be played by persons of all ages. It is not a "romp," yet contains movement, and can be enlivened by use of a jew's-harp, penny whistle, or combs as musical instruments. It allows of ingenious punning, and is "original." The following tunes, with their corresponding objects, illustrate my meaning:—"Rule Britannia," picture of the yacht of that name. "Onward Christian Soldiers," a toy soldier. "The Marseillaise," a French poodle. "God Save the Queen," a coin head upwards. "My Pretty Jane," a lady of that name. "I Know a Bank," a cheque book. "Harmonious Blacksmith," a horse-shoe.—Pat-a-Cake.

A very amusing game, entitled "Historical Characters," to be played by any number of persons within a limited space, is arranged as follows:—The players must all be seated round the room, at a convenient distance from the door, which is to be set wide open. One of the number is chosen to play the part of "He," and takes up his his position near the door, and another selects from a "Book of History" a paragraph containing the names of several illustrious persons, one of which names he proceeds to give (in a whisper) to each player; so he says, but in reality he gives to only three persons an individual character, whilst to all the others one particular name is repeated, which must not appear previously, in the paragraph, to the other names chosen. He then reads aloud from the book, and it is the object of each player, immediately his historical name is mentioned, to run from the room without being caught. Should he escape, he returns to his seat, otherwise he must remain outside. Thus it will happen that, after three of the players have taken their turn, and the fourth name is mentioned, the remaining players, being seated will unanimously try to run from the room. when great excitement ensues before they realise the "catch" in the game, and how much fun those few who know the game are enjoying at their expense.—Pietro.

A perfectly delightful form of "Musical Proverbs" can be played thus, and is, I believe, new to most circles. Two persons are in "the know," one seated at the piano, the other outside the room. The company choose a proverb, which they communicate to the pianist, and the banished one is recalled. Without sign or look she walks away from the piano, and the player strikes a few well-chosen chords. The other pauses a second, and then repeats whatever proverb the company may have chosen. There are always plenty present who are "sure they can do it," and are eager to try, or it could be scarcely called a "round game." The key is—Pianist chooses the most prominent word in the proverb—such as "cat," "stones," "houses," &c., and spells this out by a number of chords. For instance, "cat," three firm chords for "c," small pause, one fine one for "a;" for "t" we should need so many that we divide the alphabet in two at the letter "l," which is given by two sharp chords like a rat-tat, then single chords for each after. So that for "t" we should start with our rat-tat chord and give eight single chords after. It is very easy to pick up, and I have never found it fail to delight. The chords should be as varied as possible. I always start each letter-group in a fresh key, which brings out the most amusing comments, such as "of course, it's quite simple, I see, a mere change of key." Absolute silence is necessary for the guesser, and these lively ones have to be suppressed, but are given "fair play" afterwards. Should the guesser fail at first word, pianist says mysteriously, "Give you another form?" and proceeds to spell out next chief word. I fear my description is not brief, but please, Mr. Editor, excuse it, and let your readers have the chance of trying this pretty game.—Avis.

KLEPTOMANIA DETECTED.

The game is based on the assumption that in these days of general resort to Stores, ignorance of the Store prices of articles, and of the departments in which they are supplied, and in which the relative "paying desks" are situated, convicts the delinquents of kleptomania. A sufficient number of paper spills having been folded, the president, with a Store price-list before him, calls upon each person in succession to quote the price of an article (that, for choice, of which he or she is least likely to have any experience), and the department in which it is to be obtained. Failure to quote the price within 25 per cent. (or a quarter) above or below its value, or to name the department correctly, is punished by the award for each offence of a spill, to be placed between the fingers of the hand, which is then to remain extended. The person whose ten digits first become filled with eight spills is to be reckoned the champion kleptomaniac. The company is then to range itself in two rows, between which the delinquent is penitentially to walk repeating the following lines:—

Not the "paying desk" to know,
Or the price at which things go,
Are signs, I fear, to show,
That with disorder vexed,
I oft have things annexed,
'Gainst th' eighth commandment text.

Robert Martin.

ROUND GAME AT CARDS.

The following game, while including the ever-varying changes of poker, abolishes the objectionable brag and bluff elements. Eight people may play, but five is the best number, and four makes a good game. The stakes may be anything, from sixpence upwards or downwards; each person contributes equally to the pool. Five cards and a miss pack are dealt to each player, one by one. The elder hand may exchange his hand, after seeing it, for the miss pack; should he elect to do so, he throws his hand face upwards on the table; should he decline, the next player may take the miss; and if he declines, it goes on until the dealer is reached, and if he declines, he takes the miss and turns it face upwards. The elder hand may then exchange one card only from his hand, or he may change his whole hand for that on the table, or he may give a knock on the table, but he cannot take two cards, nor can he decline to take a card; he must knock, which puts a stop to the game. The succeeding players have only one chance of bettering their hands until it comes round to the person who has knocked, when all show their hands, and the best poker hand wins the round. A person cannot take a card and knock at the same time; he can only knock when it comes to his turn to exchange a card. A player must win three separate rounds before he can take the pool. At the club where I saw it played the winner had to treat the players to cigars out of the pool. The value of the hands is the same as at poker:—Straight flush (five cards of a suit in sequence); fours (aces, &c.); full hand (three and a pair); flush (five of same suit); straight (five in sequence, different suits); threes, double pairs (two aces, two kings); single pairs. The ace can run in sequence with the two, three, or with queen, king. The play consists in watching the cards your adversaries are exchanging, and preventing them getting the cards they are after, as much as in making your own hand good. When any player has won two rounds, it is better to sacrifice your own hand to prevent him, and all other players should combine to thwart him, and give the card you think he wants to a player who has only scored one round or not at all. It is good to knock at once if you take up high threes or a sequence. If the changing goes round two or three times, you may be sure that nothing under a full hand is likely to win.—Empregado.

A SPELLING GAME.

Any member can play, and no accessories are required, except, perhaps, a dictionary. One player begins by saying a letter, the others each add one in turn; whoever completes a word loses a life. A good deal of ingenuity can be displayed in avoiding saying a letter which is apparently the only possible ending to the word by making a present participle, &c., such as, hav, which has i put to it instead of the final e. Double words or foreign ones not in common use are not allowed. It is as well to settle beforehand on a dictionary, and to disqualify any word not found therein. Words of less than four letters are not to be considered as completed words. Two minutes are allowed each player in which to think of a letter; if unsuccessful at the end of that time he loses a life. If he adds a letter, which the next player thinks cannot possibly make a real word, he "challenges" him; if he cannot say what word he is thinking of he loses a life, but if he has got a word the challenger loses one. Sometimes a bogus word is spelt out by two or three players before the hoax is discovered, and some innocent and ignorant victim loses a life, as he trusts that the originator knew of such a word. Three lives are allowed each player.—Venatrix.

'TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 977.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

AMUSING SAYINGS OF CHILDREN.

A little boy, aged six years, hearing that a dinner party had been given at Buckingham Palace, from which the Queen was absent, inquired in a puzzled tone, "Then, who carved?"—Josée.

A small boy, walking out with his mother, was attracted by some costly toy, which he begged her to buy for him. Meeting with a refusal, on the grounds that the coveted object was too expensive, the little four-year-old, with a wistful, backward glance, remarked, "Mamma, can't you make dads work a little harder?"—Gags.

A little lad, on one occasion, stealthily entered his father's dining-room when preparations for dinner were completed, and various dishes of fruit were displayed on the table. His mother, seated in a deep recess of the bay-window of the room—unobserved by the boy—watched to see what he wanted. It was soon apparent. Imagining himself alone, he quietly purloined a rosy-cheeked apple from a dish and stole away. The mother, much distressed, determined presently to rate the little fellow soundly. To her astonishment, however, a few minutes afterwards she heard light footsteps again, and saw her little boy once more walk to the table with the apple in his hand. He carefully placed the fruit on the dish from which he had previously abstracted it, ejaculating in gleeful tones at the same time, "Sold again, Satan!"—Parson.

A little boy, who had been severely reproved by his father, showed no sign of penitence. Later on, his mother said: "Darling, are you not sorry you were so naughty to father just now?" Half sobbing, he replied: "I wish I were an orphan!"—Neptune.

A bishop had been asked to lunch at a certain house in the country. Before lunch the host's youngest child, a boy, about six, heard his father telling the servants that the bishop was to be addressed as "my lord." In the middle of lunch the child suddenly turned to his father and said, very solemnly: "Daddy, do you think God would like a potato?" He evidently thought that the name "lord" could only apply to the Deity.—Tracy Tupman.

A nephew of mine, a little boy of five, was standing the other day between his mother and another lady, facing his mother. When reminded by her that he was standing with his back to a lady, he remarked: "Well, I have not got two fronts."—Little Emily.

William, aged eight, was rebuked for taking apples from a forbidden tree. Alfred, aged five, was to be held up as an example of virtue. Materfamilias loquitur: "You wouldn't take the apples, would you, Alfie?" Response ingenuous: "No, muvver, 'cos I couldn't yeach 'em!"

A little boy seated on his mother's knee, is being told the story, 'oft told him before, of Abraham's sacrifice. His mother asks, "And what happened when Abraham took up his knife to kill Isaac?" At once comes the answer, "Why, then, mummy, God said it was only fun."—T. F. B.

My little son aged nearly six had been listening to a family discussion touching the earth's motion round the sun. Some hours after he inquired of his mother, "If the earth goes round, as you say, why don't we get out at Africa?"—Metchley.

Paterfamilias to materfamilias. "Brown tells me his baker's account for the month is only £1. 5s. and there are half a dozen of them. I cannot understand it." Little Pitcher, with long ears, aged ten: "Perhaps they live on fancy bread, papa."—Cochran Field.

1. A crowd was hurrying along the beach, in order to obtain a view of a man far out at sea, in imminent peril. A small child, not yet three years of age, whose nurse was also desirous to be one of the curious gazers, and who was being almost dragged off her small legs, plaintively remarked, between her gasps, "Never mind, nurse, it isn't our favor!" 2. "I'se nearly as big as Lionel," remarked three-year old Eric, speaking of his brother, aged six. "Yes," replied mother, "but not as clever, for Lionel can read and write." "Yes, and say my tables?" the elder boy interposed proudly: "Well!" triumphantly retorted Eric, his cherubic countenance beaming with equal satisfaction, "and I can dust my tables!"—Celandine.

My little boy, aged two-and a half years, had observed that when his sister's dolls became disabled the stuffing would invariably come out. On one occasion he was climbing over a chair, as is the wont of small boys, he was being pulled back by the legs, when he immediately exclaimed, "Don't pull too hard, Minnie, or the sawdust will come out."—Hazard.

Cissy, whose brother had recently died, had been naughty, and her mother said, "If you are so naughty, Cissy, you will never go to heaven to see Willie." "I don't want to go to heaven, and if God sent his angels to fetch me, I would hold tight on to the nursery guard, so they couldn't take me." "But that would make no difference; they could take you all the same." "Well, if they did, one day, when God and Willie were gone out for a walk, I would get a ladder and come down again."—Milly.

A little boy of four years old was sent by his mother to take a book to a friend with her love. The child gave the book to the lady, saying, "Mamma sends you this with her love—here is the book, but where is the love?"—Nika.

Scene: Drawing room, Sunday evening. Mother showing little daughter, Dolly (aged five), a picture, book. Dolly gets tired of pictures and stories, and wanders off in search of fresh fun, returning with a pack of cards, and begins to play with them. "Dolly, dear," says mother, "don't play cards to-night. Come and I'll tell you another pretty story. You know, dear, it isn't good to play cards on Sunday." Dolly dolefully puts cards aside. Silence ensues; but in a few minutes mother hears voice from the corner. "God, mayn't I play cards?" Silence again for a minute, when Dolly runs to her mother, cards in her hand, "Mummie, God says I may play cards," and goes on happily with her game. Mother is speechless.—Posk.

"Granny," said a four-year-old, on coming out of church, attended by him for the first time, "Why did the man in pyjamas do all the talking, and make such a noise?" "Why do you call the clergyman 'the man in pyjamas'? asked his grandmother. "Because he had on a nightgown," answered the child, "and Dada says gentlemen's nightgowns are called pyjamas!"—Quilp.

A little boy of three and a-half, refusing to let his baby brother have his toys, his mother urging him to do so, saying, "See how ill baby is; let him have your toys;" when he replied, "Oh! then I wish we lived in the days of Herod the King!—Uel.

1. Mother: "Boy, how you've torn your coat!" Boy (aged three and a-half): "Do mend it, mother." Mother: "Why, dear?" Boy: "'Cos Dr. Barnado takes ragged little boys, and boy doesn't want to go." 2. Boy (aged four): "Aunt Mary, do you remember when you were born?" Aunt Mary: "No, dear, you see it is so long ago." Boy: "Ah, I expect it was when the sea was rolling where the Severn is now! (Result of geology lesson.)—Kar.

Daisy (aged four) with short curly hair, watching her aunt combing out her own luxuriant locks: "Oh, Auntie, I do wish God had given me a long-haired head."—Dagmar.

A little girl of my acquaintance delighted in singing hymns. One of them had a refrain about departed friends having gone "Through the valley—the deep, dark valley; When shall we meet them once again?" "I know what I should do," said the child. "I should take a cab and go across."—Irene.

ATKINSON'S EAU DE COLOGNE

Is absolutely the finest made.

More fragrant, more lasting, and very much more refreshing than all others.

USE ONLY ATKINSON'S!

ONCE USED, ALWAYS USED.

Single Bottle 2/3 post free,
Case of 6 Bottles 11s. Carriage Paid.
OF ALL DEALERS.

J. & E. ATKINSON, Limited, 24, Old Bond Street, London,

INVENTORS OF THE CELEBRATED

"WHITE ROSE" PERFUME.

"A Charming Scent."—H.R.H. The Duchess of York.

DIAMONDS.—DIAMONDS from the JURA MOUNTAINS.

THE JURA DIAMONDS are very fine WHITE DIAMONDS of great purity, of all sizes, and undistinguishable from Cape and Brazilian Diamonds of the finest quality. The JURA DIAMONDS can be worn at all times both by day and night. The JURA DIAMONDS are mounted in the best style and in the same manner as the most expensive jewels. The JURA DIAMONDS possess the limpidity and scintillating brilliancy of the true diamond. The PRICE of the JURA DIAMONDS is infinitesimal and within reach of every one. DIAMOND Brooches, Rings, Ear-rings, Pins, Hat Pins, Combs, Diadems, Tiaras, Bracelets.

"ORIENT PEARLS," in colour, shape, and weight, are the same as real pearls. PEARL and DIAMOND ORNAMENTS in gold and other settings. The Designs are beautiful and artistic. Goods sent on approval. Illustrated Catalogues and Price List post free.—CORRÈZE DIAMOND SYNDICATE, LTD., Portland House, Basinghall-street, London, E.C.

A REMARKABLE PIPE! Why? Because

The "MASTA" Pipe

Absolutely carries out what is claimed for it—viz., Simplicity of Construction, Perfect Freedom from Nicotine, No Choking, Cool, Dry, Sweet, Clean, & Healthful Smoking.

Prices from 1/6, 2/6, 3/6. Your Tobacconist will supply it. If any delay, write The "Masta" Patent Pipe Co., 153, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

What Smokers say:—H. TYLER BUSTARD, Tyreallen House, Stranorlar, co. Donegal, Oct. 27th, 1897, writes—"I have smoked six ounces of tobacco per week out of the 'Masta' Pipe for some months, and it is, if anything, sweeter now than when I bought it."

Genuine Old Welch Dressers

(Inlaid and Carved Oak), from £6. 10s.

ILLUSTRATED PRICED CATALOGUES POST FREE.
ALL GOODS CARRIAGE PAID TO ANY STATION IN GREAT BRITAIN.

HEWETSONS,

TOTTENHAM COURT ROAD, London, W.

FARADAY & SON's

Electric Light Fittings

3, BERNERS ST., LONDON, W.

Quaint Designs from Old Models

SOUND WORKMANSHIP

THERE IS ONLY ONE
Pill to a dose of

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

AND THERE IS ONLY ONE GENUINE PACKAGE.
It is EXACTLY like this, only the wrapper is printed in blue on white.

The vial contains forty pills, and costs 1s. 1½d. at the Chemist's. This is cheaper than pennyworths of doubtfully compounded pills. It is but a trifle over a farthing a dose, or ONE PILL IS A DOSE, though they are so small that FORTY-NINE of them only measure one inch square.

Cure TORPID LIVER WITHOUT FAIL. SICK HEADACHE, MALAISE, DISTRESS FROM EATING, and SALLOW COMPLEXION promptly done away with.

BRITISH DEPOT FOR
CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS
46, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON. E.C.

"BUT BE SURE THEY ARE CARTER'S."

MAPLE & CO

LONDON AND PARIS

THE LARGEST AND MOST CONVENIENT

Furnishing Establishment

IN THE WORLD

The "Banwell" Old English Arm Chair, upholstered in striped corduroy, finished metal nails 24s 9d

No. 207 M B C
The "Yaxley" Chair, in bamboo with finely-worked matting seat, seat 18 in. high 15s 9d

No. 1860 H
The "Oseko" Bamboo Overmantel, with bevelled centre plate, and shelf above for ornaments; extreme height 36 in.; width 37 in. 19s 6d

No. 597 M B
Half Pedestal Bamboo Writing Table, with lacquer panels, and leather-lined top, five drawers and cupboard; top measures 3ft. × 1ft. 10in. £3 19s 6d

No. 1862 H
The "Katsura" Bamboo Overmantel, with three brackets and ascending spindle gallery, bevelled silver plate; extreme height 37 in. width, 36 in. 25s 6d

No. 397 M S
Folding Screen, in mahogany or walnut, with reversible hinges and clear plate glass panels; 3 ft. 4 in. high and 1 ft. 10 in. wide when closed; 3 ft. 8 in. wide when open £3 18s 6d

No. 1870 H
The "Oakfield" Bookcase, in bamboo and Japanese leather, 2 ft. 6 in. high by 2 ft. 0 in. wide 14s 6d

This Bookcase is made in various sizes.

No. 197 M S
Mahogany or Walnut Screen, with bevelled edge plate glass panel and handle at top; 3 ft. 2 in. high and 2 ft. 4 in. wide £2 18s 6d

No. 316 H R
The "Quernmore" Bureau, in antique carved oak, fitted with four drawers, cupboard, and writing flap, pigeon-holes and drawers £4 15s 0d

No. 1874 H
The "Ermyntrude" Cake Stand, in bamboo, with four superior lacquered trays, extreme height, 3 ft. 2 in. 8s 9d

The "Lincoln" Chair, a very comfortable and restful shape, well upholstered in durable tapestry, in various artistic colourings ... 48s 6d

MAPLE & CO | Illustrations of 400 Useful Presents Post Free on Application | MAPLE & CO

Printed for the Proprietor by LOVE & WYMAN, Limited, Great Queen-st. W.C. and published at 10, Bolt-ct. Fleet-st. E.C. in the Parish of St. Dunstan's-in-the-West, in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to REGINALD E. BOOKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st. Queen Anne's-gate, S.W.

· TRUTH ·

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 1099. Vol. XLIII. Thursday, January 20, 1898. Price Sixpence.

NOTICE.

The terms of Subscription to Truth, which are payable in advance, are as follows:—To any address in the United Kingdom, for 3 months, 7s.; 6 months, 14s.; and for 12 months, 28s. The Thin Paper Edition is forwarded to countries within the Postal Union for 3 months for 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; and 12 months, 30s. 8d. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to the Manager, Truth, "Truth Building," Carteret-street, S.W.

ENTRE NOUS.

BELOW I publish, in accordance with my annual custom, a statement of the receipts and expenditure relating to the Eighteenth Truth Toy and Doll Show, which was held at the Royal Albert Hall on December 21 and 22. The accounts are made up to December 31:—

STATEMENT OF ACCOUNTS IN CONNECTION WITH THE EIGHTEENTH "TRUTH" TOY AND DOLL SHOW, HELD ON DECEMBER 21 AND 22, 1897:—

Cr.
Debit balance of Toy Fund, 1896	£83	16	10½
Cost of 87 large dolls and 3,300 small dolls, including carriage of same to the Ladies who dressed them	114	3	3
Unpaid carriage from dressers	3	8	1
Cost of 26,000 small toys and 89 large ones, together with cost of packing and dispatching the same to recipients	1,029	8	10
Cost of repairing Toy Show boxes	3	17	6
Cost of insurance of Toys and New Sixpences, &c., at the Royal Albert Hall	1	12	0
Cost of distribution of New Sixpences—viz., fares of messengers and postage and registration fees of the coins sent by post	4	3	1½
	£1,240	9	8
Dr.
Total receipts	906	7	6½
Balance against the Fund	£334	2	1½

Believing that I could safely rely once more upon the hitherto unfailing generosity of my readers, I made the purchases of dolls and toys upon the usual scale, so that none of the thousands of poor children in the workhouses and hospitals of the Metropolis suffered the grievous disappointment which a curtailment of the distribution would have occasioned. It will be seen, however, that up to the end of the year my faith was unjustified to the formidable extent of a debit balance of £334. 2s. 1½d. Contributions to the amount of £32. 3s. 4d., have since been received, so that the balance against the fund now stands at £301. 18s. 9½d. No doubt this very unsatisfactory result is due to the extraordinary demands which were made upon the pockets of the public during the Jubilee year, and which have affected many other charitable and philanthropic undertakings even more seriously than the Truth Toy Fund. But I hope that even now, at the eleventh hour, kind friends will be found able and willing to wipe out the deficit. In every other respect the Show was a record one. It will be a pity, indeed, if the shadow of this depressing balance against the fund is cast over the preparations for the next distribution.

The following amounts have reached me towards the deficit of the Toy Fund:—

Antoinette, 5s.; Nurse Shoesmith, 1s.; L. Gibson, 5s.

M. R. P. A. sends me £1 towards Lady Jeune's Fund.

I have a correction to make. It was to "Mrs. Boyes," and not to "Mrs. Baynes" that a Truth Brooch was awarded in connection with the recent Show. I have also received a letter from Mrs. Boyes, in which she complains, in the most courteous and good-tempered way, let me add, of the manner in which her dolls were exhibited at the Albert Hall. In reply, I can only assure her that any defect in their arrangement was due to the exceptionally difficult conditions under which the Show was got ready. The available time was much shorter than it had ever been before, and the number of dolls to be dealt with was more numerous than ever. It was almost inevitable, therefore, that some mistakes should have been made. I am particularly sorry that Mrs. Boyes' dolls should have been the victims, for they were dressed with very great skill and taste, and well deserved a better position than that which, in the hurry of the moment, was accorded to them.

The relations between the Queen and the Emperor William are now most cordial. Prince Henry of Prussia brought over letters and a variety of messages from the Emperor to her Majesty, and the coldness between the two Courts, which has existed for the last two years, has now entirely disappeared. The Empress Frederick, the King of Saxony, and the Grand Duke of Baden have exerted themselves strenuously in order to restore friendly feelings between the Queen and her grandson; and they have at last succeeded in doing so. It is now quite likely (as I announced last week) that the Queen may return from the Riviera through Germany at the end of April, but, in any case, it is settled that the Emperor William is to come to England at the end of July for the Cowes regatta week, when he will be entertained by her Majesty at Osborne

A daily paper announced on Friday that the Queen's arrival at Cimiez is fixed for March 8, which is blundering nonsense. The day mentioned happens to be a Tuesday, so that the Queen could only arrive there by either starting from Windsor on Sunday, or passing that day on board the Royal yacht. According to present arrangements, the Queen, Princess Beatrice, and Princess Louis of Battenberg are to leave Windsor on the morning of Tuesday, March 8, and they will arrive at Cimiez (travelling by way of Portsmouth and Cherbourg) on the afternoon of Thursday, the 10th. It is possible that Princess Christian may also accompany the Queen to the Riviera.

It was announced last week, with a prodigious amount of trumpeting, that the state-rooms of Kensington Palace are to be opened to the public after the building has been put in order by the Government, and it seems that the Estimates for next year will include a vote for this work. This is all a gross job. Kensington Palace is a great useless barrack, of no architectural merit, and it ought to be pulled down, and the site thrown into the public gardens. The Palace is in a state of direful dilapidation in all respects, and the sanitary arrangements are believed to be very defective. The cost of putting the place into good order will involve the scandalous waste of a huge sum of public money.

The best set of apartments which the Palace contains has been privately granted to Princess Beatrice, who will make this house her town residence after the Queen's demise. Another large "apartment" is occupied by Princess Louise; and, indeed, the rest of the Palace is full of persons who are, or have been, connected with the Court. It is a very nice arrangement for the beneficiaries, Royal and otherwise, to have the Palace done up by the Government regardless of expense, but such a reckless squandering of the public money is not likely to be viewed with approbation by the country.

An evening paper printed last week what purported to be an account of the Royal visit to Chatsworth, "by one who was there." If the writer had contented himself with describing the interior of Chatsworth House, the dresses and jewellery of the ladies, and the results of the shootings, I do not suppose any one would have complained. It is, however, quite unpardonable that the private smoking-room conversation of the Prince of Wales with two Cabinet Ministers on an important public topic should be unscrupulously reported by some indiscreet guest or (more probably) some gabbling domestic, whose long ears had caught snatches of talk which certainly were not meant to be overheard by any outsider. If a "special," whose zeal is not according to knowledge, is to be harboured in country houses visited by Royal personages, I should fancy that Princes and Princesses will prefer to remain at home.

The Prince of Wales and the Duke of York were last week the guests of Prince and Princess Christian at Cumberland Lodge, and they had a day's shooting in Windsor Great Park. Prince Christian has since been staying at Buckhurst, near Reading, with Mr. and Mrs. Murdoch, and he attended the hunt ball at Wokingham. Princess Christian has gone to Osborne on a visit to the Queen.

I hear that the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz has privately purchased a considerable part of the Duchess of Teck's old silver, which formerly belonged to the Duchess of Cambridge. A great deal of it is very fine plate indeed.

The St. James's Gazette informs its readers that the King of Würtemberg is the only Knight of the Garter who is also an hotel-keeper King William may be an hotel-keeper, but he is not yet a Knight of the Garter. The Queen has for some time intended to give King William the blue ribbon, and he was to have been invested this month at Stuttgart by the Duke of Coburg. It is understood, however, that the ceremony has been postponed until the spring, as the Duke has been obliged to go to Egypt for the benefit of his health.

Lord and Lady Cadogan, with some members of the Viceregal suite, left the Viceregal Lodge this week to pay visits in Ireland. Besides visiting Lord Londonderry at Mount Stewart, they will stay at Clandeboye, also in the county of Down, with Lord and Lady Dufferin. The usual festivities take place at Mount Stewart—dinners, dances, and the point-to-point races in the neighbourhood, for which most of the country houses in the district are full. After visiting the North, the Viceregal party will visit the South of Ireland, and Lord and Lady Cadogan will be the guests of Sir Charles and Lady Barrington, at Glenstal, one of the most picturesquely situated residences in the county of Limerick. Sir Charles Barrington is a popular and resident landlord; a genial one, too, and not above being an Irishman. Lady Barrington is the sister of the premier Baronet of England, Sir Hickman Bacon.

It is devoutly to be hoped that the Irish Local Government Bill to be brought forward in the coming Parliamentary Session, deals in a drastic manner with Dublin Castle. No institution needs more root and branch alteration. On his arrival in Ireland, Lord Cadogan himself made it known that he favoured the abolition of the Viceroyalty. The delights of Castle rule, however, after two years' experience on the Viceregal Throne, seem to have altered his views. A progressive spirit in the same direction may shortly lead him to a Viceregal application of the doctrine of the "consecrated person," not forgetting its adjunct of the "mailed fist."

The incident of Sir Andrew Reed's late circular—backed by Dublin Castle—is an object lesson in high-handed method. It overrides the law of the land and the decisions of the Irish Judges. This, even for Dublin Castle, may be looked on as "going strong." Can any one in reason maintain that cyclists and pedestrians can, with safety to life and limb, use the same track,

---

For the TRUTH HOTEL LIST, see page 170 in the present issue.
For HOSPITALS and APPEALS, see page 165.
For AMUSEMENTS, see page 169.
For OUR PUZZLES, see page 181.

especially when the width is only that of an ordinary footpath on a country road? With cycles on the footpaths and carriages on the roads, where are people to walk? Sir Andrew Reed does not trouble himself on this matter. Those who can neither afford a carriage nor a bicycle are evidently beneath the consideration of Dublin Castle officialism. The issue of Sir A. Reed's circular only after the "upper circles" had taken to cycling is characteristic.

Mr. Justice Meredith's appointment to succeed Sir Edmund Bewley on the Irish Bench was as sudden and unexpected by the general public as Sir Edmund Bewley's resignation. Mr. Meredith has a high legal reputation at the Irish Bar, and was in large practice. He has most of the qualifications necessary for making a good Judge, nevertheless his appointment is somewhat in the nature of a new departure on the part of the Government, for he has never appeared in the political arena.

On Saturday evening Lord Cadogan and Lord Roberts were entertained at the King's Inns by the Benchers. The traditional dinner hour, six o'clock, was not departed from. The Chancellor and Mr. Justice Meredith were the Benchers of the Day. There was a large attendance of Benchers, together with invited guests.

The nominal abolition of the post of Divisional Commissioner for Ireland has been made the opportunity for a batch of jobs, highly characteristic of Dublin Castle. The officers in question are the successors of the Divisional Magistrates, who were appointed a few years back when the country was disturbed. In the present state of Ireland there is no reason for keeping up these useless appointments, and as two out of the four Commissioners are being superannuated, Mr. Gerald Balfour seems to have come to the conclusion that the other two had better be withdrawn from their local duties.

Under Castle influence, however, this operation has taken the following form. One of the two surviving Commissioners, Mr. Cameron, is brought up to Dublin Castle as Assistant-Inspector-General of the Irish Constabulary and Divisional Commissioner, at £1,000 a year. His colleague, Mr. Head, who is believed never to have sat as a magistrate, is made a Resident Magistrate at £1,000 a year, and thus placed in a better position than any Resident Magistrate in Ireland. At the same time two other Castle officials—Mr. Whelan, of the Constabulary Office, and Mr. Singleton, Commandant of the Constabulary Depot—are made Divisional Commissioners, with their present salaries of £800 a year raised to £1,000. The net result, therefore, is that the removal of the Divisional Commissioners from the provinces has been made the excuse for quartering one of them permanently on the public at his old salary, and for giving an additional £200 a year to Castle officials. The Castle ring have evidently led Mr. Balfour by the nose in this business, and attention ought to be called to it when Parliament meets.

Never before, probably, has an author been mourned at his death by such a host of readers as "Lewis Carroll," for the mourners include not only "grown-ups" of all ages, but the entire rising generation. Even though the quaint and humorous pen had for some time ceased to minister to the general mirth, the huge indebtedness for "Alice in Wonderland" and her fanciful successors still remained as vivid as ever in the minds of countless admirers. Few men, indeed, had such a large circle of unknown friends amongst children of every age as the Rev. Charles L. Dodgson, and not one of them but will say, "Peace to his ashes."

Though so much interest has been aroused by the unique political career of Mr. Villiers, he had virtually retired from the House of Commons before Mr. Gladstone left it, and I question whether he was even known by sight to many members of the present House. Those who knew him regarded him with the interest that attaches to some historical ruin or ancient monument. As a living link with the past—a link stretching from the age of Wellington and Melbourne to that of Chamberlain and Ashmead-Bartlett—no public man, Mr. Gladstone not excepted, has ever held a more wonderful position. He went the way of all the Whigs on Home Rule, but he was one of the few who did not adopt Unionism as a mere synonym for Toryism, and he never totally severed his connection with the Party in which he first distinguished himself.

In an unguarded moment I allowed a paragraph to go into TRUTH the other day, in which the remark was made that Lord Morris's eldest son, on succeeding to the baronetcy which his father held before his elevation to the peerage, would, under the recent edict on the subject, take precedence as a peer's son of "all other baronets," however ancient. I should think that half-a-dozen correspondents have since written to remind me that Lord Morris's successor would not, under such circumstances, take precedence of those baronets who are younger sons of earls. I suppose this would be so. I know nothing whatever about it, except by guess, and care less; but as several worthy people seem much concerned in the subject, let me at once unreservedly withdraw the offending remark.

The following interesting document seems to have been sent to this office recently with a consignment of books intended for review. I regret that by some accident it only turned up on my table a day or two ago, but I hasten to make amends for this delay by now giving it the utmost publicity in my power, for it seems to me of great public interest—though not precisely in the manner which the writer imagined. As I do not insert advertisements in this column, I have taken the liberty of suppressing the names, but I may say that they are in no way material to the context.

The GRAND HOTEL, Monte Carlo, the most fashionable hotel & restaurant on the Riviera. Perfect English sanitation. Now under English management.—Managing Directors, Messrs. NOEL & PATTARD.

A BEAUTIFUL HOTEL AT BOURNEMOUTH.—The "ROYAL BATH." "Hôtel de Luxe of the South." Sea frontage, 1,000 ft.; grounds, 5 acres. Due south. Only Hotel on East Cliff. Moderate fixed tariff.

LITERARY GOSSIP.

Messrs. Blank, Blank, & Co. have in the press for early publication a new novel, which is likely to create considerable interest, especially in theatrical and City circles.

It is entitled "———," and the author is Mr. ——— ———, whose name was so prominently before the public some four or five years ago, as the writer of those very original and startling plays [Here follow names of four plays of which I never heard before.—ED. TRUTH.], which excited at the time of their production a vast amount of criticism from the Press of all English-speaking countries. Mr. ——— ——— is a member of the long-time honoured theatrical family of that name, being the youngest brother of that accomplished actress, ———, and of the late celebrated and beloved ———.

We understand that the forthcoming novel will be the first work of fiction, in book form, from Mr. ———'s pen, although as a boy he contributed a great number of long serial stories anonymously to periodicals of the Bow Bells and London Reader type Mr. ——— in another capacity, is also well known in the City, where for many years he held the chief appointment in an eminent firm of average adjusters.

The strain of writing plays, in conjunction with his heavy work in the City, proved too much for Mr. ———'s health, and he wisely gave himself a long rest and holiday, and went on a pleasure tour of England and the Continent. For the last year or two Mr. ———, who is now in the enjoyment of faultless health, has been spending a large part of his time on his beautiful estate ———, on the ——— Downs.

Since the days when he was one of the busiest and most be-paragraphed men in London, Mr. ———, with the exception of several poems contributed to the ——— and ——— Observer, has produced nothing but the work now about to be issued. [Here follows an impressive description of the book.—ED. TRUTH.]

The author himself expects a fair amount of appreciation of the book from ordinary readers of fiction, for it is by no means merely metaphysical, being full of action and adventure, but confesses that there runs between the lines something which he hopes will especially appeal to thinkers.

Nous verrons.

Will the Editor kindly make copy?

The editor would make copy with all the pleasure in life, but he cannot manufacture bricks without straw. All I find in this fulsome and twaddling puff is that the author of the promised novel has written four plays, of which neither I nor anybody of my acquaintance has ever heard, that as a boy he contributed anonymously "to periodicals of the Bow Bells and London Reader type," that he became something in the City, that for reasons quite undiscoverable he was once one of the "most be-paragraphed men in London," and that he has since contributed to the Poet's Corner of a seaside newspaper. This is the sort of stuff that is sent round to the Press by the enterprising tradesmen who have the novel in hand with the request, "Will the editor kindly make copy?" and this is the impudent way in which the log-rolling business has come to be carried on. For the sake of the author, who is not responsible, I presume, for the tricks of the publishing trade, I heartily wish that the novel may create the sensation which the publishers anticipate. But if it does no better than the four plays which created such a stir in the "Press of all English-speaking countries," I fear that both author and publishers will be disappointed.

Here is another good example of the off-hand way in which some editors seem to think themselves justified in treating competitors for prizes which they have offered. In a weekly paper, called Anecdotes, a certain prize was offered on November 6 last. Nothing more was said about the competition until the middle of November, when the correct solution of the puzzle was published, but no names of winners or award of prizes were given. In the meantime, of course, the competitors had been purchasing the paper patiently, week by week, and looking anxiously for the award. On seeing the publication of the correct solution, one or two competitors, who believed they had sent in the right answer, wrote to the editor—one of them twice—for further particulars, but no answer has been received, and no announcement of any kind as to the award of prizes has been issued up to the present time.

As the paper in question appears to be a respectable one, and has been in existence for some time, I sent to inquire of the editor the explanation of this strange behaviour. His explanation is a very singular one. He states that some time ago he was prosecuted by the police and fined £50, on the ground that one of his competitions amounted to a lottery. Before starting the particular competition above mentioned, he invited the authorities to express an opinion as to its legality, which very naturally they declined to do, telling him he must take his own risk. As soon as particulars of the competition had been published, he received a notice from Scotland Yard that the police considered it to be illegal, and would prosecute him if he proceeded further with it. This has prevented him from awarding or distributing prizes. My representative pointed out that it did not prevent him from explaining his position to the competitors. To this he answered that he did not care, after having been once prosecuted, to publish the fact that the police had again stopped one of his competitions. This looks to me a little thin, and I would point out that although he might not care to publish the facts in the paper, there is no earthly reason why he should not have communicated them to the competitors privately. This course would have had the advantage to the competitors (though not to the proprietor) that it would have prevented them going on expending their pennies upon the paper week after week in search of the result of a competition which is apparently never to be announced. As it is, the editor has forced upon me the disagreeable necessity of publishing the whole truth for him.

Nothing in regard to the management of companies ought to cause surprise, but I confess to a mild sensation of astonishment on reading in a contemporary that there had been or would be some opposition to the reinstatement of Mr. Henry Sutton as a director of the Alhambra. It is just four years since Mr. Sutton retired from the chairmanship of the company, owing to bad health. During the previous nine years the dividends had averaged, under his direction, over 24 per cent. per annum. During the last four years they have not averaged much above 10 per cent. These figures are certainly suggestive. Mr. Sutton is now restored to health and anxious to return to the board, and it might have been supposed that the shareholders would be only too glad to get him.

ST. ERMIN'S, Victoria-st., Westminster, this high-class residential Hotel, especially suitable for families coming to London to enjoy the Xmas festivities. Handy for Theatres & Army & Navy Stores.

The luxury of a bath is incomplete without the addition of SCRUBB'S CLOUDY FLUID AMMONIA, which refreshes and invigorates. Sold everywhere, but avoid injurious imitations.

The following advertisement which appeared in the Times the other day is suggestive as well as amusing. The taste for "le sport" seems to be spreading in all directions upon the Continent. On the other hand, British landlords are getting into lower and lower water, and fox-hunting seems to be the only rural industry the prosperity of which is unchecked. In this state of things, why should not the country gentry act on the hint given below, and lay themselves out to teach Continental would-be sportsmen "chasser renard," and afford them the "avantages de country life":—

JEUNE HOMME FRANÇAIS désire trouver, aux environs de Reading on Thames de préférence, bonne famille gentleman farmer, pour apprendre Anglais chasser renard, jouir des avantages de country life. Répondre de, &c.

I hear on good authority that the entire cost of erecting the platform in front of St. Paul's Cathedral on the occasion of the Diamond Jubilee Thanksgiving Service —upwards of £1,000 altogether—has had to be borne by the Chapter funds. The whole of the Chapter property being in the hands of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, with the exception of a small portion reserved for maintaining and repairing the fabric of the Cathedral, there is virtually no money available to meet this cost, and the result is to burden the Chapter with a heavy debt. As the Dean and Chapter themselves have not chosen to make this fact public, it must be presumed that they are either content with this state of things, or that they do not anticipate any good result from advertising their grievance. Had they chosen to agitate on the subject, however, I think public opinion would have been entirely on their side. The Cathedral got no advantage out of the Jubilee, and it could not even sell tickets for its own stand; and it certainly seems a scandalous thing that the only result of the Queen's visit and the Thanksgiving Service, so far as the Cathedral is concerned, should be to load it with a debt which there is little chance of paying off, and which looks as if it would operate as a mortgage on the income available for the repair of the Cathedral. The cost of erecting the stand for the Thanksgiving Service ought to have been borne by public funds, and were the Government called upon to find the money, I do not see how they could refuse to do so.

While not a few Jubilee memorial schemes have been dropped or emasculated for want of cash, a more curious and provoking miscarriage of such a proposal has occurred at Much Hadham. It was there decided to provide a new clock with chimes for the parish church, the Rector giving £100 for the purchase of the clock, and the parishioners subscribing £40 for the chimes. A lady whose house is close to the church objected that the chimes would be a nuisance, and depreciate the value of her property; but meanwhile clock and chimes had been purchased, and application was made to the Chancellor of the Diocese for the necessary faculty for carrying out the scheme. The lady, however, persisted in her objection, and as the result of the proceedings the Chancellor has refused to grant the faculty, and, moreover, saddled the Rector and churchwardens with costs which are said to amount to £200. This little bill, and an expenditure of £140 on a clock and chimes which are lying unused at the church, can hardly be described as a satisfactory commemoration of the record reign, and it is only natural, perhaps, that the lady's conduct should have caused a good deal of exasperation in the parish. Those responsible for the promotion of the scheme seem, however, to have been exceedingly precipitate and ill-advised in their method of going to work.

There has been a prodigious clamour against the Bishop of St. Asaph's dispensation of his official patronage, but no episcopal misconduct in this department ought to astonish sensible people, considering the grievous example which is set to other patrons by the present Primate; and it is most discreditable to the Church papers that they have not protested against the flagrant nepotism of Dr. Temple. It is only a few months since the Archbishop pitchforked into the important living of St. Mark's, Kennington, a very young curate, whose only conceivable recommendation to his Grace lay in the fact that he was engaged to a daughter of Dean Farrar, whom he has since married. Now the Archbishop has audaciously ignored the claims of all his own clergy in making an appointment to the valuable living of Brixton, and he has also gone outside of the diocese in which that parish is situated. The fortunate nominee is the Rev. W. Earle, an Irish clergyman, who came over to England about seven years ago, and who is now curate of St. Clement Danes. Mr. Earle is said to be a near relative of the Archbishop's friend the Bishop of Marlborough, but in any case it is scandalous jobbery for the Archbishop thus to put aside all the deserving clergy of Kent and Surrey. The living was originally offered by the Primate to the Bishop of Ballaarat, whose appointment would have been quite as outrageous a job. Dr. Temple is a worthy successor to Dr. Manners Sutton, whose jobbery excited criticism even in the easy-going days of the Regency.

The Bishop of Stepney is to be in residence at St. Paul's Cathedral, for the first time since his appointment to the Canonry vacated by the Bishop of Bristol, during February, and he will preach on Sunday afternoons throughout the month. It is expected that the Bishop's sermons will draw very large congregations.

An appeal is being issued in connection with the proposed restoration of Clonfert "Cathedral," now a parish church, but a building containing many features of great antiquity and interest—notably the famous Romanesque doorway, one of the finest pieces of work of its kind now in existence. Clonfert and its neighbourhood are so poor that this work has a claim upon outsiders much stronger than can generally be urged in support of similar appeals. But it is to be hoped that the job will be limited to judicious repair of what needs repairing, and not extended to the "restoration" of antiquities which can only be destroyed in the process.

Here is a straw which may show how the wind is blowing. At a ruridecanal meeting in the classic county of Northampton last week, it was resolved by a substantial majority "that in the opinion of this meeting Church Reform is the best and wisest means of promoting Church Defence." Although some of the milder members were of opinion that the resolution was too much of a slap in the face for the Bishop, there were others who expressed themselves in terms considerably stronger than the resolution. Some freely advocated Disestablishment as the only possible remedy, and even advised that the clergy should themselves ask for it as a favour, rather than wait to have it forced upon them. "Disestablishment from Within" seems to be moving.

A correspondent of the Church Times calls attention to the following passage from the Quarterly Paper of the Assyrian Mission, and suggests that it requires comment or explanation from the editor of the paper. I would go further, and suggest that the S.P.C.A. should send out a mission to enlighten and reform these missionaries. The other day I commented on the attitude of the Italian priesthood towards cruelty to animals; but the Italians are evidently not much behind some Anglicans. The writer of the passage is the Rev. D. Jenks, a cleric on the staff of the Mission at Urmi, and he discourses thus:—

> In the late afternoon we started to go over the Kuflan-Koo Pass on post-horses which the Valiahd had almost worked to death. It was my fate, though I generally had luck in the choice of horses, to get the most distressed beast this time, and when I had worked myself into a state of exhaustive perspiration with whackings, I resigned the animal to his fate. He died two minutes later. The pass is very fine. . . . The next morning our trouble continued, and I remember flogging Irving's horse for him into the post-house. Gradually we attained to better horses, &c.

Since when has it been the custom of chartered accountants acting for charitable institutions to write letters for the purpose of appeals for cash in the name of the charity? I ask this in view of a letter from Messrs Beddow & Son, of Gresham Buildings, which is being circulated at present by our old friend John James Jones. The letter is addressed to the Committee of Management of the London Samaritan Society, but is obviously written for the purpose of strengthening the hands of the committee, or the director, in their efforts to raise the wind. It points out, what the committee must be perfectly aware of, that the income for the last year has fallen off, and that various increased expenses are being incurred. The accountants then state their opinion that "it is imperatively necessary either to procure a larger income or curtail the Society's work," with other remarks to a similar effect. It strikes me as in every way undesirable that the accountants of a charity should lend their names to appeals to the public, and the objections to this are specially strong in the case of a charity the management of which has justly incurred very unfavourable criticism.

I am asked to mention that a dramatic performance in aid of St. Luke's House, Osnaburgh-street (a Home for the Dying Poor), will be given at the West Theatre, Albert Hall, on February 1 and 2. Tickets may be had of Miss Don, 87, Cadogan-gardens, S.W.

The General commanding the Soudan Expeditionary Force has withdrawn the interdict placed on Press representatives. In other words, he has climbed down, in response to the protests which the order called forth. Nothing more need, therefore, be said on the subject, unless it is "Don't do it again."

The question is raised by one of my Service readers whether an officer retiring on a gratuity of £1,200 after twelve years' service ought to be charged income tax upon his gratuity. "What would be thought," asks the complainant, "of an ordinary business firm if it made a deduction of this kind on presenting an employee with a gratuity which had been promised to him after a certain period of service? I do not consider that Income Tax should be charged on a 'lump sum' which has never formed part of one's income." The first point is one which has often been discussed in TRUTH, and I confess I cannot see any good reason why the servants of the State, merely because they are servants of the State, should be exempted from taxes which are imposed upon the rest of the community. The other question is a more reasonable one, and I should be glad if I could see any argument in support of the objection to the payment of Income Tax on a lump sum of this kind. But with all respect to my correspondent, it seems to me that the lump sum is a part of the officer's income for the year in which he receives it. It is money which he has earned, and is really in the nature of deferred pay for his services extending over the previous twelve years, and under these circumstances it is difficult to see on what ground it should be exempted from Income Tax.

In a company of the Army Service Corps stationed in the Eastern District, the sergeant-major the other day went round, without any warning, to the rooms occupied by his company, while the men were absent at work, searched their kits, and deliberately destroyed all the non-regimental caps that he found there. This proceeding strikes me as a very gross abuse of authority, and one which, in the interests of the Service generally, ought to be further inquired into and punished. Even assuming that the men have no business to be in possession of non-regimental caps, the wearing of such articles for walking out is very common, and is prompted solely by a desire on the part of the men to present a smarter appearance than they obtain in the often ill-fitting caps issued to them from the Army Clothing Department. If it was desired to stop the use of these caps, the men should have had notice to that effect in order to give them an opportunity of disposing of the caps, and getting what they could for them. It is treatment like the above which makes a soldier feel that he has no more rights than a schoolboy or a criminal, and which keeps the more self-respecting young men of the working class out of the Army.

The civilian may well despair of getting at the truth about any details of Army administration. Only last week, on the strength of many facts which have come before me during the last few months, I referred to the grievance of lance-corporals and corporals in battalions serving abroad in finding men far junior to themselves in point of service, coming out to India as corporals in charge of drafts, and passing permanently over their heads, thereby debarring them from promotion. Having frequently heard of such occurrences, I hazarded the opinion that it is one of the results of having all your young soldiers in one battalion at home, and all your old soldiers in the other battalion abroad, but, on the top of this I get a long complaint from a battalion in the South-Eastern district to precisely the opposite effect. Here the grievance is that young sergeants are returned home from the foreign battalion on account either of their own health or that of their families, and block the promotion of lance-corporals and corporals of longer service than their own in the home battalion.

The battalion to which I have referred only returned from foreign service two years ago, and during that time ten sergeants have been transferred to it from the battalion now abroad, five of them during last year; and, in the meantime, only one sergeant has been transferred to the foreign battalion. Meanwhile, in this same battalion there are three corporals who have been N.C.O.s for something like six years, and in one case, at least, the sergeants who have come home have been junior to these men, both as N.C.O.s and in total length of service. Whether this state of things is of frequent occurrence I am unable to say; my knowledge is confined to the converse process. But what seems to be required is some general rule preventing N.C.O.s being transferred from the one battalion to the other, to the prejudice of other N.C.O.s, senior to themselves, already in the battalion.

During the last week or two I have been favoured with a vast quantity of Press extracts and private correspondence, with reference to the recent court-martial and sentence on Sergeant-Major Sullivan, R.A, at Rangoon. Owing to the bulk of these communications, and pressure of other matters, I regret that I have as yet been unable to deal with the case; but I will take the earliest opportunity of doing so, and as Rangoon is some distance off, I trust that a week more or less will not be of serious consequence.

The Army and Navy Gazette forcibly and most justly protests against the omission of all the "neglected and undecorated heroes" of the Crimea and the Indian Mutiny from the periodical honours lists, while "decorations are showered broadcast upon the paladins of our petty wars." I entirely agree in the view that "those who fought under Raglan and Clyde are decidedly more entitled to the title 'Makers of the Empire' than the vanquishers of barbarous African chiefs, or Colonial Secretaries who have used much red tape, and drawn for many years handsome salaries."

A casual remark was made in last week's TRUTH with reference to a new system of attaching the buttons to the pantaloons of our gallant soldiers. Since that I have had an opportunity of inspecting the new machinery, and it certainly looks very promising. The contrivance is simple, and seems strong and durable. They tell me that "Tommy"—poor fellow—is very often a hopeless muff at sewing on buttons, and I must say he ought to be grateful for the amount of care which some of those in authority take to relieve him of little difficulties of this kind. There are civilians, however, as well, who cannot sew on buttons (at least with any confidence in the result), and who—worse luck!—have no friendly female hand to help them in the hour of trouble. They may find comfort and security in the new attachment. I see it is marked "patent," and I only wish I had invented it, for there ought to be money in it.

The Pioneer, which has rendered excellent service both by its complete information and its independent criticism during the progress of the Frontier campaign, recently stated that the stores issued for the use of the sick and wounded had been found seriously defective. Special reference was made to "the tinned milk and articles like arrowroot, upon which so much dependence has to be placed for the treatment of patients suffering from fever or dysentery." It was stated that these articles had often been found unfit for consumption, and, in consequence, men who might otherwise have recovered in a day or two had to be invalided to the rear. It is suggested that this state of things may be due to the articles having been several years in store at Peshawur, and if this is true, it is not difficult to understand that the tinned milk must have been a little "off." The statements, however, are equally scandalous, whether the stores have gone bad with age, or whether new stores unfit for use have been delivered, and in either case the matter ought to be investigated, and the responsible parties brought to book.

Will any of my readers be kind enough to send readable newspapers, &c., when they have done with them, to soldiers in the Soudan? The Chaplain to the Expeditionary Force, the Rev. A. W. B. Watson, asks me to state that he will be glad to receive and distribute any papers so sent. They are best sent by post, and not in parcels, which renders them liable to delay; and they should be addressed to the Rev. A. W. B. Watson, Chaplain to the Forces, Soudan Expeditionary Force, Egypt.

Two or three months back a case was noted in TRUTH of an old Army pensioner, who had served through the Sutlej and Punjab campaigns in the 10th Foot, and who is now in Whitehaven Workhouse, although he had earned a pension of ninepence a day at the time of his discharge in 1865. I now hear from Mr. Parker, the pensioner in question, that since he wrote to me he has made an application to the Royal Cambridge Fund. The answer given is that, "in consequence of the numerous cases already noted for future consideration, no further application for assistance can be received for the present."

BEXHILL-ON-SEA.—The Mentone of England.—THE SACKVILLE HOTEL, an ideal winter and spring residence. Special inclusive terms till Easter. For tariff, &c., apply to Manager.

This in itself is a singular proof of the amount of destitution prevailing among old and deserving soldiers. I should uncommonly like to see an authentic return of the number of Army pensioners who, like Mr. Parker, have been compelled to go into the workhouse because they cannot live on their pensions outside, and who have no prospect before them of release from that institution until the time comes for the pauper's funeral and the pauper's grave.

Cases of this class point to the conclusion that our whole system of Army pensions is radically wrong. A pension which will not suffice to keep a man out of the workhouse is obviously of no use to that man; it merely goes into the pockets of the ratepayers. It will be said, of course, that the idea is that the man can supplement his pension by his own efforts. That theory is perfectly sound as long as the man is not too old to obtain employment, but no longer. Either Army pensions ought to be assessed on the deferred principle, or they should be progressive. Possibly the prospect of a deferred pension, say one commencing at sixty years of age, would not be sufficiently attractive for recruiting purposes, although the amount might be greatly increased. If that is so, I would suggest instead a progressive pension. Seeing that a private of twenty-one years' service is not generally over forty years of age at discharge, and should be capable of supporting himself for many years to come, the pension might well be reduced for a certain number of years, and a proportionate increase given later on. The best way of meeting the case, however, is by means of in-pensioner establishments on Chelsea Hospital lines in the principal military districts.

By the way, Lord Wolseley last week told the boys at the Newport Market School and Refuge that the Army is the only occupation within his knowledge in which a young fellow on joining could look forward to earning, before he is forty years of age, "a pension which would be a support to him more or less through life." It would be a kindness to the boys to whom this remark was addressed on such high authority to place before them the case of Mr. Parker, of Whitehaven workhouse, and dozens of other similar cases to be found in other workhouses throughout the country. "More or less" is a very elastic phrase; but looking at these cases I should say that an Army pension is a support less rather than more, and very often no support at all.

A week or two back an Army Reserve man applied for work on the railway at Ipswich station. He had a testimonial from the Army Temperance Society, of which he had been a member for two years, and was otherwise a man of good character. He was told, however, that they did not employ Army Reserve men on the Great Eastern Railway. Is this so? If it is, I think that Parliament should have something to say upon the subject the first time a Great Eastern Railway Bill comes before it. It is bad enough that any employer should indiscriminately boycott discharged soldiers; but when this course is taken by companies which enjoy a valuable monopoly by favour of the State, it is time for the State to intervene in defence of its own servants.

With reference to the question of rewards of one kind or another to the troops who have been serving in Crete, an officer writes from that island as follows:—

> I see you say that we are, perhaps, to get the Jubilee medal. It is the first I have heard of it. If anything is to be given I am sure no officer would wish to have it, if the men are not to get it also. For the same reason allowing Crete to reckon as war service would be of no use or advantage to the rank and file or lower deck.
>
> I think we should all value an international medal, if only as a memento of a most unique and extraordinary experience. As a matter of fact, many of us—notably some of the ships, and particularly all engaged at the relief of Candanos—have been frequently fired at, and there are very few of us who have not at least heard bullets over our heads. As regards loss of life from disease, and the ordinary discomforts of active service, we compare very favourably, if I may use the expression, with the Ashanti Expedition.

It is scarcely necessary to say that I entirely share my correspondent's views that the rank and file should be considered quite as much as the officers. If an international medal will satisfy all parties, an international medal let it be, by all means.

The following case seems to afford a further example of the injustice with which the Marines are often treated when afloat. A few weeks back, in consequence of some little skylarking that had taken place at the mess, some of the Marines on board one of H.M.'s ships at Devonport were brought before the officer of the day and put in charge of the sentry for being drunk. After having been marched up and down the middle deck for a short time—whether or not with the object of testing their ability to walk straight I cannot say—the Lieutenant dismissed all the men to their duty. This would seem to indicate that in his opinion they were all sober. Nevertheless, one man has since been deprived of a good conduct badge. It is clear on the facts that this man is innocent of any offence; why on earth, then, should he lose his badge?

I do not understand why several hundreds a year should be regularly abstracted from the income of Greenwich Hospital in order to maintain the Painted Hall and its pictures. The Painted Hall is a popular resort, and it ought to be kept up by the public, either through a Parliamentary vote or by means of a charge for admission. There are a great number of needy applicants for Greenwich pensions who are sent empty away for lack of funds; and if the annual expenditure on the Painted Hall were to cease, then many additional grants could be made out of the Hospital income.

By an oversight which I much regret, the name of Commander James, who died recently at Brighton, in his ninety-ninth year, was given in last week's TRUTH as "Commander Jones." As the printer has quite enough sins of his own to answer for, I think it only fair to state that the error originated in the hieroglyphic penmanship of an otherwise valued contributor.

THE LONDON HOSPITAL, E., APPEALS FOR SUBSCRIPTIONS. This Hospital for Men, Women, and Children, is the great General Hospital for the toiling poor of East London, & help is sorely needed.

The Maximum of Effect at the Minimum of Cost.—An Object Lesson in Decorating and Furnishing can be obtained by inspecting Messrs. WARING'S Suites of furnished rooms at 175-181, Oxford-st. W.

A gentleman went the other day to Somerset House to obtain a certificate of birth. Having found it, he was told that it would take an hour to make out a copy. As he was unable to wait, or to call again, being only temporarily in London, he asked if it could be sent by post, tendering a stamped and directed envelope for the purpose. The answer was that such a thing could not be done, and that the copy must be called for, either personally or by messenger. There is no other Government Department where the worship of red-tape is carried to such extravagant lengths as at Somerset House. The place is the very temple, or Holy of Holies of red-tape, and the salaried officials installed there may be looked upon as the High Priests of the idol.

The Board of Trade is being strongly criticised in the Teify Fishery district for its action in confirming a by-law passed by the Board of Conservators to extend the season for salmon fishing with rod and line. During the past few years much has been said in official reports as to the deteriorated condition of the fisheries in this district, and in order to bring about their resuscitation and better preservation, the seine and coracle fishermen have been subjected to various restrictions and deprived of privileges they had long enjoyed. In these circumstances it seems extremely inconsistent to increase the facilities for the capture of the fish—at a season, too, when they are out of condition—with rod and line. It may not be altogether surprising that the Conservators should have one code for the poor fishermen and another for wealthy riparian owners and anglers, but it is certainly extraordinary that the Board of Trade should endorse this injustice.

What will the Post Office do next? They exhibit on a certain date a notice to the effect that there may be "considerable delay" in the despatch of telegrams from London to Holland. A telegram is handed in after this notice, and is not transmitted over the wires but forwarded by mail. On discovering this, the sender requests a return of his money, which is refused. The Post Office authorities have given to the Press what they are pleased to call an "explanation" of this proceeding. It is to the effect that at the time the message was accepted it was supposed that one line only was interrupted, and that the telegram could be sent by a circuitous course; but it was subsequently discovered that a recent storm had interrupted all telegraphic communication with Holland. The contention is that the sender, having accepted the risk of "considerable delay," has no right of complaint under these circumstances. On the contrary, the defence only strengthens the complainant's case. When he accepted the risk, he had in his mind precisely what the Post Office people had in their minds, and what they conveyed to him by their notice, namely, that the service was deranged, and that transmission at the ordinary speed could not be relied on. He had no means of knowing that all telegraphic communication was for the time stopped, and that a letter would be delivered as quickly as a telegram. Had he known this, he would of course have sent a letter and not a telegram, and he cannot, therefore, be held to have assented to the course taken. The Post Office have, without his assent (express or implied), taken his money for telegraphing his message, failed altogether to telegraph it, and treated it as a letter. They ought, therefore, by every rule of honest dealing, to refund the difference between the price of a letter and that of a telegram.

Whatever Sir Michael Hicks-Beach may have intended by the promise in his Budget speech of a universal postal delivery in the United Kingdom, it is now perfectly clear that the promise has not yet been fulfilled. A gentleman who has been in the habit of renting a shooting-lodge in Mayo, distant only one mile from a post-office, tells me that he has not yet been able to get his letters delivered. On three days in the week the postman brings the letters as far as the gate (130 yards from the house) and whistles. If the whistle is no theard, the letters are taken back to the post-office. On the other four days even this primitive pretence at a delivery is withheld, and the letters have to be fetched from the office. The same gentleman's keeper has to walk three Irish miles for his letters, if he wants them.

Nor is this another special Irish grievance. I hear of a district in the South of England where a very similar arrangement is in force. The postman brings letters two or three times a week to a certain point, and letters are left there for a house lying further off the round. On the other days the letters must be fetched from the office, if wanted. Inquiry of the postmaster in this instance only produced the response that to deliver letters everywhere would require an enormous increase of the staff, and that the above was the best arrangement that could be made. It would seem from this, that the increase of staff required to give effect to the Chancellor of the Exchequer's promise has not yet been provided, and inquiry ought to be made in Parliament when the time comes as to how the money, which was nominally devoted to providing a universal delivery, has really been expended. I cannot help suspecting that such inquiry will reveal that Sir M. Hicks-Beach has really been fooled by the pig-headed obstructiveness of St. Martin's-le-Grand.

The Indian Post Office is clearly trying to live up to the reputation of St. Martin's-le-Grand for crass stupidity. At the beginning of last September a correspondent of mine posted at Calcutta a parcel addressed to a lady in Austria. The parcel was insured, and a receipt given for it. As it had not reached its destination by the beginning of December, inquiries were made, and the official explanation was that the regulations did not permit of insured parcels being sent to Austria, and that, in consequence, this parcel, after reaching Bombay, had been left lying for three months in the post-office there! It had never occurred to any of the geniuses who run the department to write either to the consignor, or, if his address could not be obtained, to the consignee, pointing out that the parcel could not be forwarded owing to this regulation, which ought, of course, to have been remembered when the parcel was first handed in and insured at the post-office. So far from taking any step to rectify their own mistake, the authorities apparently intended to keep the parcel for the usual six months, and then sell it as "unclaimed."

The paragraph in last week's TRUTH on the signatures of Town Clerks has brought me the information that two former Town Clerks of Liverpool, the grandfather and great grandfather of a gentleman now living, were accustomed to sign the official documents with their surnames only, in the manner of the Town Clerk of London. Evidently, therefore, the custom is not confined to London; but, as the practice seems a very absurd and affected one, I trust that the knowledge that it has the sanction of antiquity in some places will not lead to its adoption in others, where no such precedent exists.

There must be some rare specimens of the genus Bumble on the Bethnal Green Board of Guardians. Out of about 110 children in the workhouse at Bethnal Green, no fewer than 60 are suffering from ophthalmia, skin diseases, "and other diseases peculiar to children." This amazing percentage of sickness among the little ones is just what might have been expected from the overcrowded and unhealthy conditions under which they are compelled to live. Boys are herded together in what is described as a "cock-loft," where they have to wash themselves in pails, and where there is no sanitary accommodation; ophthalmic patients sleep three in a bed; and in the nursery as many as thirty-four babies are entrusted to the care of one attendant. Now an outbreak of measles has occurred, and the children have to be left together because no means of isolation are available. The defence of the Guardians is virtually an acknowledgment of their incompetence. "We are overcrowded, of course," says their official apologist; "we get the same sort of thing every winter, and we do all we can to prevent it." In these circumstances it seems high time the Local Government Board did something. It might have a salutary effect if, as a beginning, these intelligent guardians of the poor could be shut up for a week in the "cock-loft" to which they have consigned the workhouse children.

The Rochdale Guardians had what is described as an "excited debate" last week, concerning a recent paragraph in these columns, and a letter in reference to it which a member of the Board had addressed to a local paper. It was mainly to this letter that exception was taken, my own note on the subject of the scandal at the workhouse being discussed, I am glad to recognise, in the reasonable spirit in which it was written. The reply of the Guardians to the statements made was that they only acquitted the attendant of the charge preferred against him after a searching investigation which failed to produce anything in the shape of corroborative evidence; and in view of the fact that the woman making the charge was a certified lunatic, it is undoubtedly difficult to see how any further steps could have been taken in the matter.

MAJOR HOWE & Co.—Fashionable BOOTS and SHOES.—16, Coventry-st., W. (also 60, Strand), and City, London.

The Kent County Council appears to be one of those bodies which love to do their work by stealth and blush to find it fame. A correspondent complains that the ratepayers are kept almost wholly in the dark as to the proceedings of their representatives. Practically, all the business is conducted in the privacy of committee rooms, and the quarterly meetings of the Council—known as the quarterly gallops—are strictly confined to a hurried and perfunctory adoption of cut-and-dried reports and resolutions. Any attempt to depart from the routine character of the meeting is at once resented and checked. The remedy for this state of things lies, of course, in the hands of the ratepayers. If they want a more free and open ventilation of their affairs they must send to the Council men independent enough and strong enough to break down a system which has been continued from the time when county government was left to a magisterial oligarchy, but which is quite unsuited to the constitution of a popularly-elected body.

It is one of the great aims of poor-law administrators, particularly in rural districts, to diminish the number of vagrants claiming the hospitality of the workhouse casual ward. No doubt a great deal may be said in defence of measures for this purpose, so long as they are not unreasonably rigorous and are at the same time reserved for the professional tramp. As often as not, however, the same treatment is meted out indiscriminately to all comers, and occasionally it is positively inhuman in its brutality towards wretched homeless outcasts. Two bad cases of the kind were lately brought before the Bridge Guardians by the Guardians of the neighbouring city of Canterbury. In one of these cases a woman with four children alleged that she and her little ones, all wet through, reached the Bridge Workhouse at five o'clock in the evening; that they were kept waiting outside in the rain till six o'clock; and that they were then told that they were not wanted there, and were so harshly spoken to that they walked on to Canterbury, three miles distant. The master and the porter at the Bridge Workhouse denied that the woman had been turned away, but they did not deny that she had been refused admission to the casual ward from five till six o'clock, and the master furthermore confessed that he knew this was contrary to the law, but pleaded that he had followed the custom of the district. The Bridge Bumbles expressed themselves satisfied as to the conduct of their officers, which was tantamount to saying that they cared nothing for the hardships inflicted upon this poor woman and her young children, or even for the deliberate violation of the law. Their object is to get rid of vagrants, and any means to accomplish it seem to be considered justifiable.

There is one place at least in the United Kingdom where the rate-collector has ceased from troubling, and the people, assessed though they be, are at rest. It is the Island of St. Kilda, which is nominally, at any rate, within the district of the Inverness County Council, and the inhabitants of which are, nominally also, liable to the payment of the usual rates. These rates have for some time been written off as irrecoverable, but the auditor of the county accounts objected to this, and the Secretary of Scotland decided that the objection must be upheld, unless it were found "difficult" to collect the money. In an interesting and amusing report the collector has now shown that the recovery of the rates would be an exceedingly difficult and an excessively expensive operation. Even if the islanders were ready to pay up on his visiting St. Kilda for the purpose, the cost of the journey would exceed the amount to be collected. But the St. Kildans are not the sort of people to pay voluntarily, and the cost of an expedition of sheriff's officers to distrain upon the goods of the defaulters and bring them to the mainland for sale—for no purchaser would be found in the island—would be enormously out of proportion to the amount of the assessments. This being the case, it has been prudently resolved that St. Kilda shall continue free from rates. Happy St. Kildans!

A "SWEEPING" REFORM.

[On Wednesday last the following curious advertisement appeared in the Daily Chronicle:—

"Crossing Sweeper.—Pitch, with goodwill, in the fashionable West End; held by present owner 14 years; good opening for a respectable man. Address Chas. E. Collins, Rowton House, Vauxhall, S.W."]

In times like these, when younger sons,
  Though bless'd with limitless presumption,
Find it so difficult to use
  Their little cash and still less gumption;
When they have not sufficient nous
  To fill Colonial situations,
And cannot pass, "cramm'd" though they be,
  The Army's stiff examinations;

When, day by day, the City grows
  With keen competitors more flooded,
And fails to furnish berths for youths
  Who, at the most, are but "blue-blooded;"
At times like these, when clubs are filled
  With smart young drones who can't make honey,
Welcome indeed should be this hint
  By which they may earn heaps of money.

Yes, West End idlers, who upon
  An impecunious sea are tossing,
Here clearly is the chance for you—
  Go and secure at once a crossing!
The future income you may earn
  May in amount become transcendent,
And think how sweet 'twould be to feel
  Your broom had made you independent!

Nor need the work be very hard,
  Your "pitch" would yield you lots of leisur.
Whilst its surroundings could not fail
  To be a source of endless pleasure.
For, on your crossing, your address
  Would, so to speak, be quite untainted,
For you'd be near the Clubs and Squares,
  With which you are so well acquainted.

You would remain with your own set,
  And those who toss'd to you donations
Would be your own patrician friends,
  Or, possibly, your rich relations.
Whilst surely your warm heart would glow,
  And swell with rapturous expansion,
To feel that p'raps your industry
  Was watched from many a neighbouring mansion.

Think how much better this would be
  Than loafing round club billiard tables,
Or sponging on some millionaire,
  Rich as the Crœsus of the fables;
Or joining, as in time you would,
  That band of ill-conditioned snarlers,
Who, when they are not plucking jays,
  Are haunting money-lenders' parlours.

See to it, then! for if a "pitch"
  Is worth what now the papers mention,
It most assuredly deserves
  Your instant and your close attention;
And if the present sweepers show
  A disposition to defy you,
Call for the West End landlords' aid,
  And they will certainly stand by you.

For when they learn how well it pays
  To claim a crossing and to sweep it;
They will be eager steps to take
  Which in the family will keep it;
And thus in time will have the chance
  Some favoured younger son of giving
A "pitch" outside the ancestral door,
  Worth more than the ancestral living.

So, West End idlers—we repeat—
  Who on life's sea are vaguely tossing,
Seize on this truly splendid chance,
  Go, and at once secure a crossing!
Obtain a besom, set to work
  On one of Clubland's favoured "pitches,"
Mention your purpose to your friends,
  And sweep your way forthwith to riches!

A strange reason was given by the Faversham Guardians last week for the discontinuance of the visits which a committee formerly paid to the Chartham Asylum. The matter came up in consequence of a letter which had appeared in a local paper, making certain allegations respecting the treatment of a patient in the asylum. It has since transpired that these allegations were not well-founded, but the Guardians decided that in future a committee of four of their number should visit the asylum at intervals, and it was stated that such visits had only been dropped for the last few years owing to the lack of courtesy of the officials of the institution who were annoyed at receiving surprise visits. Why the officials should have disliked surprise visits if they had nothing to conceal is difficult to understand, and the fact that such annoyance was shown ought to have made the Guardians persevere in their duty rather than neglect it.

In reference to the charges against certain members of the medical staff of the Royal Hospital for Sick Children and Women at Bristol, which I mentioned on December 16, I am informed that the committee appointed to look into the matter has recommended that a public inquiry shall be held by some independent tribunal. This recommendation has been agreed to, and the inquiry will, it is expected, shortly take place. Nothing else was likely to fully satisfy the public mind, and, in the interests of the hospital, the Committee have done wisely in arranging for such an inquiry.

Mentone.—Grand Hôtel des Iles Britanniques, Limited. Lighted throughout by electricity. Lift. House heated by steam. Write for Illustrated prospectus.

It is always my custom at the end of the year to glance through the file of TRUTH in search of any little matters that I have taken in hand during the year, but which have not been satisfactorily disposed of. Among other little outstanding accounts of this description which I find on my books for 1897, there is the curious story of the summoning of the Clare Grand Jury last summer, which was referred to at some length in TRUTH of September 30. It will be remembered that I made certain remarks upon the summoning of the jury which elicited contradictions from Mr. Studdert, the gentleman whose election to the office of Secretary was the principal business of the jury, and from the High Sheriff of Clare, on whom the duty of summoning the jury devolves. I gave publicity to the corrections offered, at the same time apologising, at the request of these gentlemen, for having fallen into any error of fact in my statements. But in doing this I published some further and quite undeniable facts respecting the composition of the jury, which afforded an ample justification of the comments I had previously made, and which, as I said and still think, called for some explanation from the High Sheriff of Clare.

Up to that moment the attitude both of Mr. Studdert and of the High Sheriff had been most bellicose. Both had placed themselves in the hands of solicitors, who talked darkly of the consequences impending over me. Strange to say, however, from the date when my article of September 30 appeared, giving the full particulars of the composition of the Grand Jury, not another word has been uttered by, or on behalf of, either of the aggrieved gentlemen. The contrast between this silence and the contentious and threatening tone previously adopted is very extraordinary. In the last letter which I had from Messrs. Bolton & Co., dated September 25, it was stated in explanation of a long delay in the correspondence that "Counsel in whose hands the matter is now placed is out of town." Knowing that legal gentlemen take long holidays, I deferred, after this statement, saying anything about the matter until I had very nearly forgotten all about it. Now, however, that I have looked it up, I venture to ask whether counsel in whose hands the matter is now placed has yet returned to town, and what counsel's opinion on the situation now is. My own humble opinion is that the public in the County ought to have heard long since from the High Sheriff who the party was who actually did the business of summoning the jury, and what explanation can be given of the manner in which the names were picked and chosen. That is the question I asked for on September 30, and I do not think I can be considered premature in repeating the request now.

"TRUTH" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all Countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.'s should be made payable to the MANAGER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-street, S.W.

No one can find fault with the verdict of the jury upon the wretched creature Prince. Not only was the murder of Mr. Terriss on the face of it the act of a maniac, but the evidence given at the trial shows clearly that the assassin had been a dangerous lunatic for years, if not all his life. The more clearly this is shown, however, the more certain it is that Prince is a man who ought never to be let loose upon society again. After past experience of the maudlin sentiment which is so easily evoked on behalf of eminent criminals, it would not surprise me if in a few years' time some crack-brained enthusiast were to get up an agitation for Prince's release. In anticipation of that event, I can only say that any Home Secretary who discharges this man from custody will be an accomplice before the fact in any further murder which he may commit, and should be dealt with accordingly.

One of the most appalling features in this case is that this man, who was not only obviously suffering from the most morbid vanity, but had given repeated evidence of his dangerous proclivities, should have been left at large for so many years without his sanity being seriously questioned. Doubtless had the attempt been made, at any time prior to the murder of poor Terriss, to put Prince under restraint, it would have been hotly resisted, and its success might have been doubtful. There are one or two of my respected friends in the Press who would have been the first to cry out against it in the largest type as a fresh abuse of the Lunacy Laws. The story of the Terriss murder ought to remind some of these sentimental gentlemen that side by side with the awful danger of incarcerating a sane person as a lunatic, there is another danger quite as awful, namely that of leaving at large any man who has given evidence of mental delusions, accompanied by a desire to injure his fellow creatures. I suppose it has occurred to the relatives of Prince that they are more responsible than anybody else for the death of Mr. Terriss, and, as that is not a pleasing reflection for them, I should not wish to accentuate the point. It is to be hoped, however, that the case may teach the friends and relatives of other dangerous characters of the Prince type that it is as much their duty to keep a mad relative under control as it would be to keep a mad dog. There are, unfortunately, a good many Princes still at large.

Another point in the case which might furnish a text to a satirist is that Prince was probably left at large because he was a pauper. When a millionaire shows signs of mental aberration, there are always plenty of kind relatives at hand anxious to place him under restraint, and to take the management of his property out of his hands. But when a man owns nothing but the clothes he stands in, it is nobody's interest to look after him, and nobody does.

For Truth, and all other Newspapers, Magazines, and Periodicals, send your Subscriptions to WM. DAWSON & SONS, Ltd., Cannon House, Bream's-bldngs., London. (Estab. 1809.) Catalogue gratis.

One month's imprisonment with hard labour for a woman who steals a shirt from a clothes-line; a fine of twenty shillings and costs for the miner who, by a deliberate violation of a colliery rule, endangers the lives of 500 fellow-workmen. This startling contrast in sentences at Barnsley speaks for itself, though it may be noted that in dealing with the miner the Chairman himself emphasised the absurd lenity of the penalty by first stigmatising the case as a bad one, and declaring that "the Bench would impose a heavy sentence." These muttonheads actually seem to regard a fine of a sovereign as "a heavy sentence" for an offence by which hundreds of lives were placed in jeopardy. There is an equally grotesque decision by the Bolton Solons at the end of the following list; while another instance of magisterial self-stultification comes from Knighton, where the Bench "make an example" of a defendant convicted of "a very serious assault," which they tell him might have resulted in a charge of manslaughter, by inflicting a fine of £1 and costs. Compare the penalties in these cases, and other cases of assault and cruelty, with those imposed for vagrancy, poaching, and petty larceny :—

Barnsley West Riding Police-court. Before Major F. J. M. Stuart-Wortley and other Magistrates. George Dewhurst, miner, charged with damaging and breaking down a brattice provided for the ventilation of the mine in which he worked. Because the brattice was in his way he pulled down six yards of it, thereby causing a great accumulation of gas. The Chairman said this was a bad case. Defendant had deliberately set at naught the rules and risked the lives of himself and 500 other men. The Bench would impose a heavy sentence. Fined 20s. and costs.

Birmingham Police-court. Before Aldermen Johnson and Fallows. George Chadwick, charged with assaulting Emma Lloyd, a former sweetheart. He struck her violently in the mouth, smashing her teeth. Fined 20s. and costs.

Liverpool City Police-court. Before the Stipendiary, James Gannon charged with cruelly neglecting three horses and a goat. The animals were found in a miserably dark and filthy stable, all of them in a most emaciated condition. A veterinary surgeon said they were suffering from systematic starvation. Fined £2 and costs.

Blackburn Police-court. Before the Mayor, Messrs. J. Hoyle, J. A. Watson, and E. Rushton. Patrick Stanton, charged with assaulting his wife. He struck her in the face, giving her a black eye, and kicked her several times. Fined 10s. and costs.

Bradford City Police-court. Robert Rose, convicted of cruelty to a horse. He had been fined for cruelty to the same animal within the past month. Fined 15s. and 8s. costs.

Barnsley Police-court. Before Messrs. W. Woodcock, W. Jackson, and J. H. Gration. Elizabeth Hudson, charged with stealing a shirt from a clothes-line. One month.

Bedford Divisional Petty Sessions. Before Major Higgins, Rev. P. Wyatt, Mr. F. A. Wythes, and General Layard. Oliver Ellis, charged with being found in possession of rabbits and nets when searched under the Poaching Prevention Act. Fined £5 and costs, or two months.

Birmingham Police-court. Before Messrs. Colmore, Brame, W. F. Green, Wright, and Dr. Warden. Frederick G. Goldinghay, charged with stealing a bag of coke, valued at 7d. One month.

Penkridge Police-court. Before Lord Hatherton and Mr. E. A. Foden. Harry Wenlock and George Wenlock charged with poaching. Harry two months, George one month, and a further six months each in default of finding sureties.

Chelmsford County Police-court. Before Mr. T. Kemble and other magistrates. Daniel Shipton, charged with sleeping out and having no visible means of subsistence. Twenty-one days.

Eckington Petty Sessions. Before Mr. J. F. Swallow and other Magistrates. Sampson Green, charged with stealing two fowls. One month.

Knighton Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. H. M. Evans and E. Oldbury. Joseph Price, charged with assaulting Abraham Wilson. While complainant was looking out of a railway carriage window defendant came along the platform and struck him a double-handed blow with a stick on the forehead, causing blood to stream down his face. The Bench said it was a very serious affair, and defendant might have been standing there charged with manslaughter. They should make an example of him. Fined £1, and £1. 4s. 6d. costs.

Llanboidy Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. J. B. B. Protheroe, W. Lewis Phillipps, and John Phillips. David Lewis, convicted of assaulting Catherine Jones. According to the evidence of the prosecutrix, defendant entered her house and assaulted her. Fined 10s. and 12s. 6d. costs.

Accrington Police-court. Before the Mayor, Alderman Entwisle, Messrs. W. Ratcliffe, R. Rushton, and Major Nutter. Thomas Bradley, summoned for assaulting his wife. He kicked her to the floor twice, and afterwards kicked her out of the house. Bound over to keep the peace.

Johnstone Police-court. Before Provost Thomson. Thomas Webster, charged with stealing 1 cwt. of coal. Forty days.

Worthing Police-court. Before Dr. H. J. Strong. Wm. Bahot and Albert Freeman, charged with sleeping out in the open air and having no visible means of subsistence. Seven days each.

Woodbridge Petty Sessions. Before the Rev. R. C. M. Rose, Colonel Whitbread, Messrs. W. Lowther, W. N. Whitmore, E. P. Yonell, H. Harwood, J. Loder, and C. A. Creasey. Herbert Smy, labourer, charged with killing a pheasant without a licence. Fined £1. 1s. and 11s. costs.

Handsworth Police-court. Before Messrs. Farley, J. W. Williams, and J. H. Stone. Albert E. Dudley, a boy of fifteen, charged with stealing a parcel of clothing belonging to his mother. Fourteen days' imprisonment to be followed by four years in a reformatory.

Bolton Police-court. Two Germans, named Kiel and Wehrman, charged with assaulting and robbing J. Hindle. All three were passengers by a train from Manchester, and whilst passing Entwistle the communication cord was pulled, and prosecutor was found bleeding and robbed of his watch. Defendants pleaded guilty to the charge of assault, and were fined £1 each and costs, the Magistrates saying that the travelling public must be protected.

The recent decision of the Court of Appeal in Dublin in the case of the syndicate seeking to exclude the public from the Giant's Causeway, on the Antrim coast, is much to be regretted. It will be remembered that when the case came before the Vice-Chancellor, he pronounced the syndicate entitled to control over the Causeway, and the lands comprised in the lease held by them. The Court of Appeal has now confirmed this ruling as regards the Causeway, but decided by a majority of three to one that the road leading to the Causeway is to be considered a public road, over which the public have a right of way It follows, therefore, that this wonder of Nature will be enclosed, and that a charge will be made for allowing travellers to inspect what, up to now, has been free to the observation of every one—a step very certainly in the wrong direction.

Some admirable remarks upon the treatment of old offenders have just been made by the Recorder of Blackburn and by the Chairman of the Preston Quarter Sessions. At Blackburn it appeared that a man named Lynch, convicted of a petty theft, had previously received two severe sentences at Preston, one of them being ten years' penal servitude, with seven years' police supervision, for stealing two pairs of boots and a duck. The Recorder (Mr. Mattinson, Q.C.) said he would not dream of allowing these previous offences, for which Lynch had been most fully punished," to weigh against him now, and believing that the man had honestly endeavoured to retrieve his character, he discharged him, to come up for judgment when called upon. The change that has come over the administration of justice at Preston since that atrocious sentence was passed upon Lynch is shown by the observations of the present Chairman of the Quarter Sessions (Mr. Worsley Taylor, Q.C.), in dealing with a convict on licence named Brindle, who had been found guilty of house breaking. Brindle had a bad record, but, said the Chairman, "the sentences passed upon him in earlier days were such as would never be pronounced now, and, therefore, Society had borne hardly upon him." Instead of giving Brindle another term of penal servitude, the Chairman simply sentenced him to one day's imprisonment, and, as he seemed ready to do his best to turn over a new leaf, offered to support a petition for the remission of part of the unexpired term of 266 days' penal servitude which he is liable to complete under his last sentence.

Subscriptions greatly needed by THE ROYAL SOCIETY FOR PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.—6,929 convictions this year; 7,320 last year. Address complaints of cruelty, contributions, letters, &c., to SECRETARY, 105, Jermyn-st., London.

If you want to entirely Furnish your House or select any article of Furniture or Carpet, &c., send for HEWETSONS' Illustrated Priced Catalogue.—HEWETSONS, Tottenham Court-road, London.

These remarks are highly encouraging to all of us who have been protesting for years past against the unreasonableness and the inhumanity of the system of cumulative sentences. Mr. Worsley Taylor was wrong, however, in saying that such sentences as used to be passed are never pronounced now. There are still Dracos on the Bench who hold that if a man has had a heavy sentence once he must have a still heavier sentence next time, without regard to the character of the crime for which it is inflicted. For instance, at Sheffield last week the Recorder (Mr. Waddy, Q.C.) condemned one Cusick to the appalling punishment of ten years' penal servitude for stealing a watch from a drunken man. It is true that after a night's reflection Mr. Waddy repented of what he had done and reduced the sentence to eighteen months' imprisonment with hard labour. But in explaining his reasons for taking this course, Mr. Waddy incidentally observed that his sentence of ten years was "only proportionate to the sentences the prisoner had had before;" and he evidently cannot get out of his head the idea that punishment should be proportioned, not to the crime for which it is imposed, but to the punishment the criminal has undergone on previous occasions. If it happens that this previous punishment has been excessive, so much the worse for him—he must have another excessive dose. I should like to commend to Mr. Waddy's notice the views of Mr. Mattinson and Mr. Worsley Taylor, which I have quoted above. Perhaps, if he thinks them over, he may see that Cusick's sentence would stand yet another reduction and even then be quite severe enough.

A legal friend, who has seen something of the Spriggs case, is anxious to make known his opinion that there is no just ground for impugning the conduct of the local police in the matter. He points out that there were twelve (not five) witnesses who swore to the prisoner's identity on behalf of the Crown, and that they were all respectable people fully as deserving of credit as the witnesses for the defence. This undoubtedly makes a strong primâ-facie case, and I agree that it is the duty of the police to prosecute in every such case, and that they would have been wanting in their duty had they failed to do so in Spriggs's case. I should like to know, however, whether all the Crown witnesses originally identified Mr. Spriggs from a photograph, or whether they picked him out from among other men in the usual manner, without previous suggestion. The case ought, anyhow, to teach the necessity for the greatest possible care in using identification by means of photographs.

Can any one give me the present address of the Dairy Produce Direct Company, late of 120, Leadenhall-street? A number of farmers and small proprietors in the north and west of Ireland were some months back induced by advertisements to forward produce to this company, but they have been unable to obtain payment of their accounts, and letters forwarded to the company have lately been returned marked "removed" or "not known." The Irish farmer, like his English neighbour, has quite enough to contend against at present without being victimised in this way, and if the "Dairy Produce Direct Company" can be traced, I should be glad to assist in doing it.

The following advertisement is taken from a recent issue of the Daily Telegraph:—

PIANOFORTE.—Lady, leaving to join her husband in India, wishes to SELL lovely drawing-room upright iron grand piano, in beautiful burr walnut case, with Chippendale panel front, inlaid marqueterie. Seven octaves, full trichord, check action, rich and brilliant tone, charming touch. Particularly suited for classical music. New in March. Quite perfect. Original price 56 guineas; take 19 guineas. Great bargain. Would willingly send on approbation.—Mrs. G., 35, Erlanger-road, Queen's-road, New Cross.

Finding that this announcement has been appearing in the same and other papers during at least three months past, I sent a representative to see "Mrs. G." and inspect her "great bargain." "Mrs. G." did not happen to be in when my representative called, but a gentleman appeared in her place, and showed the piano, which my representative found to be a very ordinary-looking instrument, of a cheap description, and by an unknown maker. If it really cost fifty-six guineas when new, there can be little doubt from the description I have of it, that "Mrs. G." was taken in over the transaction. I am far from saying that the lady is not leaving to join her husband in India, or that she did not buy the piano for fifty-six guineas last March; but it will probably occur to every reader, with the above facts before him, that, in the hands of an unscrupulous dealer, this would be a very effective means of unloading shoddy pianos upon the public at fancy prices.

BEAUTIFUL TORQUAY.—The Imperial Hotel has the best position, and is the leading hotel in Torquay. Grand climate. Cool in summer, warm in winter, and well known as the "Queen of Watering Places."

ONE HUNDRED PIECES FOR £1. 1s.—Send a postcard to the Pearson Pottery Co., Hanley, Staffs., for particulars of the most wonderful package of crockery the world has ever seen. Sold all the world over.

Two or three weeks back, reference was made in TRUTH to the competitions run by a publication calling itself Golden Sovereigns. From the fact of this journal being issued from the office of the "A. T. Hale Company," and other circumstances connected with it, I hazarded the opinion that the whole thing was humbug. Every prize-winner was required to pay 4s. 4d. as a subscription to the paper, and was then to receive a "clock." I now hear from a victim that, after being awarded a prize and paying his "subscription" in the middle of December, he received a small German clock, which he found to be worth 1s. 4d. retail; that he at once returned it and asked for his money back (as promised); and that he only got the money after writing several times and calling personally at the office. I can only say that he may think himself uncommonly lucky to be so well out of it.

The advertisement reprinted below, which appeared last week in a Liverpool paper, is a fresh indication of the good things in store for those young "ladies" who take to governessing in preference to "menial" employment. Doubtless there were plenty of applicants for this valuable appointment. I would suggest to them that if they would only consent to call themselves nurses instead of lady governesses, they could get at least double the pay here offered, plus board and lodging all the year round:—

ROCK FERRY.—A young lady as daily nursery governess; hours 10 till 5; three children, ages ten, four, and one year; salary £8.—Address ——

A schoolmaster vouches for the authenticity of the following answer recently given by a small boy to the question, "What do you know about Elymas?"—

Elymas was a saucerer who tried to sauce St. Paul, and he was made blind for this. He betrayed our Lord, and was called Bar-Jesus.

There are very few among those acquainted with the facts who will not endorse the protest of Sir John Edwards-Moss in the Field against the threatened new railway line between Marlow and Henley-on-Thames. If constructed, this line will run up to Henley on a viaduct along the Berkshire side of the river, cross the London road by a bridge, and then turn across the river between Henley Bridge and Marsh Lock, and join the present line somewhere about the present station. The line looks utterly unnecessary, and will supply no local want of any kind, while it will greatly disfigure one of the most famous valleys in the world. Moreover, if Sir J. Edwards-Moss is right, the scheme is to be accompanied by the construction of a new Henley Station at the south side of the bridge, and the closing of the present station. What will visitors to Henley Regatta think of being put down at this point, and having to cross the bridge to get to all the chief boat-houses, hotels, and club-lawns, not to mention house-boats? If the Great Western directors are allowed to carry out their egregious scheme, they ought at least to be compelled to rebuild Henley Bridge at the same time, for it will be hopelessly inadequate to accommodate the traffic on regatta days.

The engineers appear to have been at last starved into submission. It now remains to be seen whether or not the employers are sincere in their professions that they have had no desire to "smash" the Union. If they have no such desire, the Conference will be reopened on the basis of the withdrawal of the forty-eight hours demand, and a formal treaty of peace will be concluded between the masters' and men's organisations, more or less on the lines of the irreducible minimum which the employers formulated in the last abortive negotiations. On the other hand, if they have the will, the employers are now in a position to dictate almost any terms they please, to get the men back individually and independently of the Union, and to cripple the Union for an indefinite period. It is most desirable for the future peace of the engineering and every other trade in the country that the former course should be adopted. If the victory is not used wisely, there may be worse labour troubles before long than any that we have seen yet.

At the meeting held last week of the shareholders in the Monte Carlo Casino, the Prince of Monaco succeeded in obtaining in substance the terms sketched out in TRUTH of the 23rd ult., with a good deal more for himself besides. The demand for an expenditure of eight millions of francs on the construction of a new port has been abandoned, in deference to the objections of the French Government, prompted by the people of Nice, whose interests the project threatened. But the company are instead to spend £200,000 in constructing new avenues and streets, £80,000 on the erection of an opera house, and to contribute £1,000 to each production (one report says "performance") at the theatre, in addition to the previous contribution to the maintenance of the Prince and his court, and the religious, charitable, sanitary, social, and other public works of the neighbourhood. At the same time, the Prince himself, instead of the progressive increase in his allowance originally asked for, obtains, for himself or his successors, an immediate cash payment of ten million francs, and a further payment of fifteen million francs in 1913—or one million sterling altogether. Such is the price of the renewal of the Casino concession, which has still fifteen years to run.

Of the foregoing payments, only the £200,000 devoted to new streets and roads, can be regarded as expenditure for the benefit of the public, whether natives of Monaco or visitors. The £80,000 devoted to an opera house can hardly be looked upon in this light, because this opera house is notoriously designed for the sole gratification of the Princess. The transaction, therefore, hardly shows the Prince of Monaco in a very engaging or a very dignified light. Indeed, the most venomous assailant of landlordism has never shown up a more impressive example of what landlord rapacity is capable of in the way of appropriating unearned increment.

H. L. SAVORY & CO.'S CIGARETTES.—By Special Warrants of Appointments, to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, H.R.H. the Duke of Saxe Coburg-Gotha, H.S.H. the Duke of Teck, and the House of Lords and Commons. To be obtained of all the leading Houses in the Trade.—Sole address, 59, Piccadilly, London, W.

In regard to the Casino, I have no moral or sentimental feeling, one way or the other. I am not a shareholder; nor am I an Anti-Gambling Leaguer. The place affords amusement to a great many idle people. It probably serves a useful purpose in divesting many fools of money which they are never likely to make any good use of. As a matter of principle, I see no reason why the profits of the concern should not be handsomely taxed by the State, provided the taxation were applied to some beneficent purpose. But it strikes me as a scandal to all the neighbouring Great Powers that a microscopic potentate should be left in independence, merely to use it for the purpose of licensing an international gambling-house on his premises and blackmailing the licensees; and I hold that either or both of the neighbouring Governments would be justified in interfering for the purpose of putting the management of the concern on a less scandalous footing.

When the question of the permanent occupation of Tirah comes to be decided, it may be hoped that the silly notions of Jingo ignoramuses will not prevail against the opinions of the most trustworthy experts in the world. It is understood that a large majority of the members of the Council of the Secretary of State for India are most strongly opposed to the permanent occupation of Tirah, and that their views on the subject are decidedly shared by the Council of the Viceroy.

The more the lodger vote scandal in the Stephen's Green Division of Dublin is investigated the grosser it appears. Many additional cases have come to light in which—as in the cases of the sons of the Attorney-General for Ireland and of the three Judges to whom I referred last week—persons have been registered as lodger voters without their own knowledge by means of forged and fraudulent claims. In several instances the individuals placed on the list, besides being destitute of any qualification as lodgers, are actually under age, and therefore not entitled in any case to votes. Mr. Gibbon FitzGibbon, nephew of Lord Justice FitzGibbon, has denied that he has ever made any claim to the lodger vote which has been conferred upon him, and similar denials are forthcoming from Judge Webb and the Rev. Chancellor Tisdall on behalf of their sons. The most instructive case, however, is that of Mr. G. de R. Engelbach, a lawyer. He was asked to sign a declaration as a lodger in the house of his mother. As the declaration was false, and he knew that he was not qualified for a vote, he refused to do anything of the kind; but, nevertheless, he figures on the register, so that his name must have been forged. This shows the impudent and deliberate nature of the wholesale frauds which have been perpetrated to pack the list of voters in the interests of the Unionist Party—for all these bogus voters are, or are supposed to be, Unionists. Up to the present, nothing has come of the investigations which the authorities are said to be making, but they must be foolish indeed if they suppose that the matter will be allowed to fall through. Any failure to prosecute the offenders will certainly have to be answered for at the meeting of Parliament, which is not now so very far off.

The elections at Plymouth and York do not give us much cause for crowing. The net result is the loss of a seat to the Liberals, and the only matter for congratulation, so far as I can discover, is that we did not lose two. True, the Liberal poll has increased at both places as compared with recent years. But the Tory poll has increased, too, and the increase is obviously more due to the poll being taken on a brand-new register than to any other cause. Everybody knows that the newer the register the bigger will be the working-class vote, and, in consequence, the Radical poll. At both Plymouth and York our candidates were personally everything that could be desired. Bearing these facts in mind, I cannot find in the figures—glad though I should be to do so—any evidence of an overwhelming desire on the part of the electors to eject their present rulers and replace them by a Cabinet of Liberals.

IN FORMÂ PAUPERIS.

AN APPEAL FROM OUR OLD FRIEND, "AH SIN."

Oh, pity a poor Chinee,
Who mobbed a missionaree,
And made his peace
By granting a lease
To Willie of Germanee!

Aye, pity the poor Chinee!
Ah Sin is in difficultee,
And cannot resist
The "mailéd fist"
That is sailing over the sea.

Do pity the poor Chinee,
For useful he may be,
If you'll please contrive
To keep him alive
With a diet of £. s. d.

He has ports some two or three,
With a trade in silk and tea;
So save him from smash,
And lend him some cash,
And then you'll see, you'll see!

You talk most pleasantlee,
But Ah Sin he knows, does he,
That unless you act,
Your words in fact
May be only fiddle-de-dee!

'Tis your liberalitee
Must prove your sympathee;
So a loan produce,
Or 'twill be no use
To pity the poor Chinee!

It seems high time that a strong warning should be given, not only in England, but at the Cape, to young men who contemplate taking service in the Chartered Company's Police. At the end of November there was not a man in the force at Umtali whose pay was not over two months in arrear, while several had received no payment for periods ranging up to four and six months. The food is described as of the worst possible character, comprising only tinned meat of the lowest grade, and a meagre allowance of bread, rice, tea, sugar, and coffee, all of inferior quality. The health of the men had been bad, and their ailments were of a character pointing to bad food. The Company's contracts to supply clothing had in many cases not been carried out, many of the men having served for twelve months without receiving the full kit promised. Bedsteads had also not been supplied, and many of the men were sleeping on the ground. Finally, an iniquitous system prevails of imposing exorbitant fines for the most trivial offences, a sovereign being almost the lowest fine in vogue. Whether the men who have not received pay for the last five or six months have to pay these fines in cash, or are allowed credit until their pay is forthcoming, my informant does not state. Even, however, if credit is allowed, the deduction of £1 on any trivial pretext from pay only amounting to £6. 5s. per month is a monstrous injustice. It is interesting to compare with this scandalous treatment of the servants of the Company in Rhodesia the piling up of millions sterling by the governing ring at home, at the expense of the British public, in the manner detailed in last week's TRUTH.

SAHARA (TURKISH) CIGARETTES are manufactured from the choicest Turkish Tobacco, the excellence and regularity of which is guaranteed by the makers, W. D. & H. O. WILLS, Ltd.

SCRUTATOR.

JEREMIAH ON THE WARPATH.

IN the Review of Reviews Mr. Stead has propounded what he calls "A New Policy for a New Time." Every time is a new time to those who live in it, but in what way the present time is newer than those which preceded it, Mr. Stead does not show at all conclusively. To his mind the novelty of the present situation would seem to be that we are in greater peril than ever before from the aggressive designs of foreign Powers and the competition of foreign traders. He would have us believe that unless we reform our ways at once, national extinction awaits us; and he sees the end so close at hand that he thinks it time to look about for an epitaph on the British Empire. All this, or much else to the same effect, our fathers said, or heard, in their "New Time," and so did their fathers and grandfathers before them. The "New Time" which Mr. Stead finds himself dates back, in fact, at least as far as the Prophet Jeremiah.

In the "New Policy" for this "New Time" the element of novelty seems also somewhat lacking. If I understand it aright, it is that we should greatly increase our Army, continue to increase our Navy, and drop all domestic reforms at present in the air, in favour of improving education, especially technical and commercial education. The New Policy is defined as "Imperialism, plus Common Sense and the Ten Commandments." In China, India, and elsewhere, John Bull is to adopt the motto, "I have dined," and devote himself for at least the next ten years to digesting what he has already swallowed. The ten years' limit seems to indicate that this policy is dictated by Common Sense rather than the Ten Commandments, for Mr. Stead gives no indication of any moral objection to John Bull, as soon as digestion is completed, grabbing and swallowing any further trifles on which he can lay his hands. Moreover, it will occur to many that, to remain in possession of what does not belong to you, against the will of the owner, is directly at variance with the only one of the Commandments which bears upon the point. Mr. Stead, however, finds it consistent with the Decalogue that we should postpone the evacuation of Egypt "until such time as civilised government has been established in Armenia"—which means either till the Day of Judgment or until the Turkish Empire is divided up. It is a strange development of what is elsewhere called "a Policy of Honesty and Truth," that having first seized other people's territory by force, and retained it in defiance of pledges, we can manage to satisfy the requirements of the Eighth Commandment by announcing that we will give it up upon certain conditions fixed by ourselves, and highly unlikely ever to be fulfilled. Apparently, the Ten Commandments would justify me, if I had the requisite force at my disposal, in marching into Mr. Stead's house, and holding it vi et armis until the Review of Reviews was edited to my satisfaction.

All this, it appears, is the teaching of "Rational Imperialists," as distinguished from "Little Englanders" on the one hand and "Jingoes" on the other. The distinction between Mr. Stead and the Little Englander is clear enough, but what separates him from the Jingo? Apparently a mere matter of ten years. The Jingo would have John Bull gorge himself without pausing until he bursts or expires in an apoplectic fit; Mr. Stead would have him wait for a decade till he has digested his meal, and, in the meantime, prepare himself by every means he can think of for the renewal of his gluttonous operations. To this end everything else is to be subordinated, and, apparently, little else is deemed worthy of consideration. Party Government, we are told, has come to an end; the House of Commons is unable to do its work; Democracy is played out. The House of Lords must be let alone, Disestablishment and Local Option can wait. The "condition of the people question" is to be dismissed with the comforting reflection that the people have got to work harder in future than they have been doing of late, and that provision must be made to get rid of Labour disputes. Education is to receive attention, but apparently only as a means to maintaining our commercial and industrial supremacy. This is the New Policy for the New Time. It is based on the assumption that wealth and empire are desirable, not as means to advancing the happiness and progress of the people, but as ends in themselves, to which all else is to be sacrificed. Pile up riches and increase your territory is to be the rule, no matter what the cost. Let the people toil and moil for any pittance that will keep them alive. Abandon all efforts to enlighten and elevate them, except as wealth-producing machines. Let your political machinery grow rusty, and your social system rot. All this matters not, provided your trade returns increase and your neighbour's landmark is periodically pushed so many miles further back. If to regard this teaching as economically, politically, and morally wrong is to be a Little Englander, then I thank God I am a Little Englander.

A RECORD IN ARSON.

Sixteen out of twenty-two of the jurymen who have been investigating the Cripplegate fire have concluded that it originated in the firing of Messrs. Waller and Brown's premises by some person or persons unknown. Opinion among those who have followed the evidence probably stands in much the same position as among the jury. The evidence is only circumstantial, and therefore not logically conclusive, but it raises a very strong presumption that the fire was the work of an incendiary, and not an accident.

There are several questions of great public moment arising out of the fire, but the most pressing of them is whether the verdict of the jury and the public is to be the end of the legal proceedings. Unquestionably further steps ought to be taken; for, if they are omitted, not only will a crime, which, for the magnitude of its immediate consequences, will rank among the greatest of its kind in history, go unpunished, but a very grievous wrong may be done to several innocent persons. The verdict of the jury, as it stands, implicates every one who was near the point of origin of the fire during the period immediately preceding the outbreak. The owners of the premises, their employees, and any casual strangers who may have been in the warehouse, are all placed under a suspicion which, while it points to no individual in particular, must render each individual extremely uncomfortable, and may prove damaging to many. As only one or two parties, at the outside, can have been concerned in the crime, all the rest suffer unjustly. All placed in this position have a moral right to ask that they shall be put on their trial, and an opportunity given them of establishing their innocence. Apart from this, for no attempt at prosecution to be made after such a verdict as the coroner's jury have returned would be a monumental failure of justice. From the point of view of the public generally, no crime is more pernicious and dangerous than arson, and never have its dangers been more conclusively demonstrated. In a general way everybody knows that if he sets fire to his house he endangers his next-door neighbours. But the "person or persons unknown" who, for a reason or reasons unknown, proposed to have a modest little housewarming in Well-street destroyed—no doubt much to his, or their, surprise and discomfiture—three acres of houses, and came uncommonly near burning down half the City of London. The guilty parties have, in fact, established a record in arson. For this reason there never was a case in which it was more desirable that an example should be made for the benefit of others who may contemplate firing houses in crowded cities. It behoves the police and the Public Prosecutor to spare neither effort nor money in following up the clues obtained at the inquest, and bringing the suspects to justice; and whatever the prospects of a conviction, I hold that, for the sake of the parties more immediately affected by the verdict of the Coroner's Court, the case ought not to be dropped until some of these parties have been placed on their trial.

There are other parties who have serious duties placed upon them by the Cripplegate calamity. First and foremost come the London County Council and its Fire Brigade Committee. No one questions that the staff and the rank and file of the Brigade are all that could be wished for in point of courage, energy, devotion, and knowledge of their duties. No one questions that at the great City fire the Brigade did everything that could be done with the resources at its disposal. But grave doubt exists whether our appliances are the best that modern skill and science can furnish, whether the strength and organisation of the Brigade, and the arrangements for promptly meeting a sudden demand on a large scale, are all that they might be and ought to be. Critics from America and Germany, after studying the facts of the late fire, have unsparingly condemned the Metropolitan Fire Brigade as defective in organisation and equipment. The coroner's inquiry has revealed not a few shortcomings, which are dealt with in the findings of the jury. What is to be done under these circumstances? Steps should be taken as soon as possible to bring the equipment of the Brigade up to date and to improve its organisation. For this purpose common sense suggests that foreign organisations, especially those of America, should be studied, and public opinion would warmly approve the despatch of a couple of qualified commissioners abroad for this purpose. The London County Council has immensely strengthened and improved the Fire Brigade since the days of the Board of Works, and it has always shown the greatest promptitude and zeal in tackling questions of public importance. Those who believe in it will be greatly disappointed if it does not rise to the present occasion. The present Council, it is true, has little more than a month to live, but it could not wind up its career with a better piece of work or go the electors with a better title to their gratitude than by taking steps before the month expires to set the reform of the Fire Brigade in motion. By the time the next Council meets the question will have been forgotten.

Finally, there is the question of the rebuilding of the area cleared by the fire—another matter dealt with in the verdict. Here we pass into the domain of the Corporation of London. One does not look to that body for striking manifestations of activity and promptitude, but I confess I am astonished that nearly two months should have elapsed since the catastrophe without any definite measures being taken by the Corporation—unless it has been done in the strictest secrecy—either to acquire possession of the site with a view to laying it out on a new plan; or, failing that, to prevent the streets being rebuilt on their former narrow, inconvenient, and dangerous lines. As was long since pointed out in TRUTH and other papers, the acquisition of the site by the Corporation could probably be made a highly remunerative investment. At the same time it would be a great boon to those carrying on business in and around the area, who would have been relieved from a heavy tax in the shape of extra fire premiums; it would have greatly reduced the liability of the City to any repetition of the disaster; and it would have opened the way for one of the greatest public improvements of recent years. Is the opportunity to be taken, or to be lost? If the former, the decision will need to be arrived at within a very few days.

A MORAL FROM THE MARINES.

Some of my friends in the Royal Marines have been picking holes in a very interesting article which the Daily Graphic published a week or two back on the Royal Marine Depot at Walmer, and the general organisation of the Marines. I dare say that the article may have given an unduly rosy account of the life of the Marine recruit at Walmer, and it seems to have overstated the truth in one or two particulars, notably in the statement that all the recruits at Walmer make and mend their own clothes, boots, and caps. One or two men who have been through the mill state that they never did such a thing during their recruits' course. It is very natural that a Press representative, shown round the place by the Commanding Officer and his staff, should receive an optimistic impression of what comes before him. It hardly seems necessary, however, to reproduce the little criticisms with which I have been favoured. The purpose of the Daily Graphic article was to show how infinitely superior the system of training recruits for the Royal Marines is to that of training soldiers for the Army, and how vastly superior the organisation of the Marines is to that of the Line, whether from the point of view of the attractiveness of the Service to the men, or its efficiency for the special requirements of Imperial defence abroad. These two points were made out very clearly, and they are points which cannot be too strongly impressed upon the public mind while the question of Army reorganisation is in the air.

To reorganise our foreign service army on anything like the lines of the Royal Marines would involve a military revolution which it is idle to look for at the present time. But there are two points suggested by the example of the Royal Marines, the adoption of which is within the range of practical politics. The first is the system of training recruits. Years ago it was pointed out in TRUTH, on the evidence which comes before me from inside the Army, that the regimental depots are rotten at the core, and that the system of training recruits in dribblets for each regiment at a separate regimental depot is radically wrong. That view I have never seen any reason to modify, and it seems to be now confirmed by nearly all the more important critics who have been hammering during the last few weeks at the "Condition of the Army." It probably would not be possible to establish one big training depot for the whole Army, in the same way that Walmer serves the purpose for the whole Marine force. Only from 1,200 to 1,500 recruits are required every year for the Marines on their present establishment, whereas 30,000 or 40,000 are required for the Army. A dozen training depots, however, each accommodating 1,500 recruits, and giving each recruit six months' training, would turn out 36,000 trained recruits in the course of the year. The training of men in such establishments could be done infinitely better, and at much less cost to the country, than it is under the present system; and the substitution of such large training establishments for the present system of training recruits after they have joined their battalions would vastly increase the efficiency and trustworthiness of the Line.

The second point in regard to which the Marines can help us over the question of Army reorganisation is the garrisoning of the coaling stations. In our system of Imperial defence the coaling stations fall naturally under the jurisdiction of the Admiralty, and it would be obviously more desirable that the Admiralty should be entirely responsible for their defence than that the duty should be divided between two different Government Departments. The Admiralty could manage the work more cheaply, the Marines could do the work better, and all the evils of divided jurisdiction would be avoided. If, therefore, an increase of the armed forces of the Crown is to be imposed upon us by our present rulers, as the consequence of our reckless Jingo adventures in all parts of the world, I should prefer the increase to take the form of an addition to the strength of the Royal Marines than to that of the Line.

The Daily Graphic writer warns us against jumping to the conclusion that we can get as many additional Marines as we want by merely holding up our fingers, and he estimates that it would be impossible under present conditions to increase the force at the rate of more than 1,000 per annum, unless the moral and physical standard were considerably lowered. But precisely the same thing may be said in regard to the Army. As we are now being reminded on all sides, in order to increase the number of recruits you must either give increased pay and improved terms, or you must lower the standard, and in any case your additional men cannot be regarded as efficient soldiers until they have served for at least a year or two. The Daily Graphic man points out several particulars in regard to which service in the Royal Marines possesses more attractions than service with the Line, and if he is right in them, as I have not the slightest doubt he is, it ought to be more easy to increase the supply of recruits to the former branch of the Service than to the latter.

THE RETURN OF THE CIRCUS GIRL.

There is no remedy like work to distract a mind heavily laden with a sorrow, and Ellaline Terriss has acted wisely in her resolve to bury her grief, and return to the stage she so gracefully adorns. Who will ever forget pretty Ellaline as Dora Wemyss in "The Circus Girl" at the Gaiety Theatre? The refined face, the well-shaped head, with its crown of waving nut-brown hair, the sweet smile, and, above all, the delightful rendering of such songs as "The Little Bit of String" and the new plantation melody which she expresses with so much intensity to her husband, Mr. Seymour Hicks, called "I love you, yes, I love you, yes, I do." The air is full of the fascinating strains of these "darkie tunes" for the moment; in every pantomime and music-hall I hear one, but there is nobody who can impart such tenderness, such meaning, or interpret them more charmingly than Ellaline Terriss. "The Circus Girl" owes half its success to the freshness, innocence, and brightness of this clever young actress, and it is small wonder that she has become so popular, and is such a universal favourite. The British public is ever ready to extend its loving sympathy towards its idols and its pets, and the hearts of the vast audience which crammed every corner of the theatre the other evening when Ellaline Terriss made her re-appearance on the stage after an absence of nearly five months, were throbbing and thrilling with affectionate pity.

SAVOY HOTEL, Savoy Restaurant, London. Large reception-rooms for fashionable réunions. Orchestra plays daily during dinner and opera supper.

Miss Katie Seymour, the nimble footed, and the inimitable Edmund Payne have introduced a new doll song composed by the ever-tuneful and melodious Lionel Monckton, which is screamingly funny, and I don't think George Edwardes has been ill advised in exchanging Miss Ethel Haydon for Miss Maidie Hope, who now plays "La Favorita." "The Circus Girl," always bubbling over with merriment, is brighter than ever it was.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

ZOLA'S "J'ACCUSE."

I DO not think much of the style of Zola's last manifesto. It is mere "copy," and wants nerve. He accuses with broad egotism, in separate paragraphs, the War Minister, the head of the General Staff, and all the officers who sat on the Dreyfus Court-martial. It is easy to say nine times over J'accuse. Read Zola's letter to Félix Faure, and then compare it with everything Voltaire wrote on Calas. You will then see how much "copy" there is in the one and how little in the other. Every word that falls from the pen of Voltaire is alive, and full of electricity as a torpedo. He forces, by the mere statement of his case, his own conclusion on the reader. What he writes is full of heat, and yet there is not a hot word.

I am not at all sure of the guilt of Dreyfus. But neither his brother Mathieu, Scheurer-Kestner, nor Zola has afforded any reason for believing in his innocence. Esterhazy is a pickle, but that is foreign to the matter. He is descended from the Esterhazy who was so compromisingly intimate with Marie Antoinette, and who was a great rascal. Curiously enough, he looks Semitic, and Disraeli claimed kindred with his family through Father Abraham. What was really against Dreyfus was his rush, his way of climbing over the wall instead of entering at the door, when advancement or opportunities were to be gained. He was, at the École d'Application, a pupil of Colonel Picquart, who did so much voluntary detective work on his behalf. The other pupils said that he "picked the Professor's teeth." This brought him into bad odour. Picquart conceived for him a passionate friendship, and stood by him through thick and thin. The way the Jews have of never admitting that a Jew can be in the wrong tells against him. I am not a believer in officers' justice, at any rate when looked at in relation to technical rules. The charges against Dreyfus may not have appeared convincing to some of the officers who tried him. But they all thought that if he was not unquestionably a traitor, he was an intriguing, selfish fellow, qui voulait toute la couverture pour lui. Some members of the court-martial were certainly hostile to him on race and religious grounds. Major Paty de Clam, who investigated the charges and prepared the case for the prosecution, is an out-and-out clerical. The Dreyfus-Esterhazy issue is being rapidly lost sight of. The question now arising is whether a military Government with an anti-Semitic mission would not best suit the times. General Boisdeffre, the head of the General Staff, is not only clerical, but personally enjoys the esteem of Nicholas II. He was constantly with H.I.M. when he was in France to confer on military subjects. Russia, being anti-Semitic, might be glad to see in France a Gouvernement du sabre et du goupillon.

Mme. Jouffroy d'Abbans, now in prison for blackmailing, has a varied career behind her. It was all ups and downs. Her real name is Chadoud. She is still fine looking. The face is that of a resolute woman. Her figure sets off handsome garments, but she does not wear the cestus of Venus, and probably never wore it. She sprung up, nobody exactly knows how, at Lyons. Her Spanish adventures were a good deal spoken of twelve years ago. Mme. Jouffroy d'Abbans might pass for thirty-five, but her birth certificate is dated 1842. She would have been over fifty when she induced Vicomte Jouffroy d'Abbans to marry her. He was, when he did so, twenty-two, and a dashing young lieutenant of good fortune. He soon after went to Haiphong, where he obtained a divorce. The decision in the case deprives her of his name and the title of Vicomtesse. She keeps them, nevertheless. Ce qui est bon à prendre est bon à garder. Mme. Jouffroy d'Abbans used, before her marriage, to live in an elegantly furnished entre-sol in the Rue Royale. She had many friends at the Cercle over the way—the Cercle where Baron Hirsch was blackballed, though nominated by the Duc de Chartres. The Beau Brummel of the establishment patronised her. She said that her relations with him were of a purely business nature. He used to get up the dinners and soirées on board her yacht Le Jupiter, which lay at anchor near the Cours de la Reine. Guests were often introduced by him. He made her, and kept her, fashionable. King Alphonso, the last time he was in Paris, went from the Elysée to see Mme. Jouffroy d'Abbans at her entre-sol. She had known him in Madrid, whither she followed him to console him for the rough reception he met with from the Parisians. It is said that he used to write to her, and that after his death Queen Christina bought the letters at the price Mme. Jouffroy d'Abbans thought them worth. This lady cultivated military men of distinction both in Lyons and Paris. It was long thought she must be the veiled lady of Major Esterhazy's romance. The reason for seeing in her that mysterious person was her intimacy with Colonel Picquart. He might almost be her son. But in the French Army they like ripe beauty. I believe they always did. Josephine was considerably older than Napoleon.

Baron Mohrenheim will not take back to Russia his collection of Dutch paintings, rare porcelains, and books. They are to be sold by auction. He will coin money by the sale. The Saxony porcelain mentioned in the catalogue decorated the boudoir of the Empress at the Russian Embassy.

The King of Greece must feel very bitter at Russia having fooled him about Crete. He was led to hope that the Czar might, and probably would, support the candidature of Prince George, if the Greek Navy kept quiet. The excuse made for dropping Prince George is that the Sultan (and, of course, also the German Emperor) is dead against him. How could the Sultan tolerate him once King George declared war? It is no use arguing that his Hellenic Majesty did not make war: the declaring it was insolent bluff, and should be resented. The explanation given in TRUTH about the effect of the King's family policy in bringing about the war is correct.

Such numbers of marriages in high life are taking place in country chateaux. The matrimonial bond is now such a slip-knot that people do not incur the expense of grand weddings. What would cost thousands of francs in Paris only costs hundreds in the country. Another change—men of any kind of good standing or well-grounded hopes of advancement are only to be caught by great fortunes. A dowry of £4,000 is thought of no account. Humble workers, such as professors, artists who make their way with difficulty, and obscure doctors, still marry girls with small dowries. But they do so because they want housekeepers and helpmates. The merely ornamental girl, with £4,000, or even more, had better take to cycling. There is no better mode of preparation for an emancipated career. What I wonder at is that any girl of wealth now consents to marry. The divorce law has rendered matrimonial negotiations far more treacherous and exacting than when marriage was on the indissoluble footing. Each side tries to secure, by means of a legal trap or pitfall, the lion's share. In case of divorce, Jewish girls pick up the best Christian matches—a fact that may hasten an anti-Semitic explosion. Daughters of Israel are now much better educated than their brothers, who are at business when the others are cultivating their minds. The rising, or just risen, generation of wealthy Jewesses, goes in for intellectual and artistic pursuits. They are less Semitic in feeling than the men of their race, and have no objection to "fusion" with Christians. Indeed, I know of some who complain that the prejudice is on the Christian side, and that a young Jewess has no chance of finding there a desirable husband, unless a large bribe in the shape of a dowry be offered.

A Ladies' Art Exhibition is being held at the galleries of M. Georges Petit. It is a rival of the one held annually under the auspices of Mme. Bertaux. The exhibitors know the grammar of their art. But they are held down by self-consciousness and the imitation mania. Why is it that most feminine artists will imitate masculine painters? I have no patience with them. They should try to see and think and feel for themselves, and to fly with their own wings. Frenchwomen certainly have artistic feeling, and in all classes. One sees this in a thousand things. But set them to paint on canvas, and it becomes at once paralysed. They have an ingrained notion that to paint well they should paint like men, and so merely imitate.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

WE are all children, dear Lady Betty, especially those of us who are grown up; but, whether we be big children or small, we have all equal cause to regret the death of "Lewis Carroll," the creator of "Alice," and the discoverer of the Looking-glass world—Alice, the > "Child of the pure unclouded brow,

>
> . . . .
>
> The dream-child moving through a land
> Of wonders wild and new,
> In friendly chat with bird and beast."

The rich legacy which the late "Lewis Carroll"—the Rev. Charles Lutwidge Dodgson—has left to literature, will live and will be loved for long; whilst the new worlds which Alice explored in her dreams will for ever be regarded as important additions to imaginative geography. For over a quarter of a century, thousands of men and women when in sorrow or in suffering have fled to Wonderland, and have obtained temporary relief in the company of "Bill the Lizard," of the Contemptuous Caterpillar, of the Cheshire Cat which, disappearing, leaves its grin, of the March Hare, the Hatter and the drowsy Dormouse, of the irascible Queen, of the gentle unsteady Knight, and of the host of other crazed creatures who live in the Wonderland of Alice.

. . . . .

In 1876 "Lewis Carroll" addressed "An Easter Greeting to Every Child who loves 'Alice,'" and, in this, the following passage occurred:—"And if I have written anything to add to those stores of innocent and healthy amusement that are laid up in books for the children I love so well, it is surely something I may hope to look back upon without shame and sorrow when my turn comes to walk through the Valley of Shadows." That time has come, and it is certain that thousands of children of every age to-day look sadly towards the Valley of Shadows which "Lewis Carroll" has passed through.

. . . . .

There is no doubt that the admirable designs by Sir John Tenniel which illustrate "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland," and "Through the Looking-glass," greatly helped these books to attain the popularity which they achieved. "Lewis Carroll" wrote nonsense — it was inspired nonsense—but it required an inspired artist to illustrate that nonsense effectively. Sir John Tenniel was equal to the occasion. But why did he draw a likeness of Lord Beaconsfield to represent the "gentleman dressed in white paper"? By the way, the new generation is so intent upon amassing pounds, shillings, and pence, and more pounds, shillings, and pence, that it overlooks many of the treasures which those who came before it so greatly appreciated. Some of the most beautiful sketches which Sir John Tenniel has drawn are to be found amongst the illustrations of the 1861 edition of "Lalla Rookh," published by Messrs. Longman, Green, Longman, & Roberts. A time will come when books illustrated by Sir John will be much more sought after than they are, and then this edition of "Lalla Rookh" will be valuable property.

. . . . .

Many instances of the prophetic genius possessed by the late "Lewis Carroll" have already been mentioned in the newspapers. The following very opportune quotation has, however, escaped the notice of every journalist. In the Jay v. Sykes case, Mr. Robert de la Poer Beresford was called upon to give evidence. The main question at issue was whether Sir Tatton Sykes had signed certain documents which purported to bear his signature. In his evidence Mr. Beresford said:—

Witness: "I thought he was suffering from incipient insanity. . . . He would go about in ten coats."

Lord Russell: "Ten coats?"

SAHARA (TURKISH) CIGARETTES are manufactured solely by W. D. & H. O. WILLS, Ltd., from a special blend of the choicest growths of Turkish Tobacco. Finest quality obtainable.

Witness: "Seven or eight. I can swear to that distinctly, because there were five covert coats, and one or two silk coats."

In the "Hunting of the Snark" there occurs this passage:—

"The loss of his clothes hardly mattered, because
He had seven coats on when he came,
With three pair of boots—but the worst of it was
He had wholly forgotten his name."

* * * * *

In the Estimates presented to Parliament for the year ending March 31, 1897 (Class I.) the three following items occurred:—

E. Hyde Park.

(15.) Erection of a refreshment kiosk, £1,400.

(16.) Provision of electric light at band stand, £250.

(17.) Provision of electric light on foot-path between Marble Arch and Albert Gate, £900.

Every one of these estimates was passed by the House, which ordered the alterations to be carried out. As the officials are now preparing the estimates for the year ending March 31, 1899, it is necessary to point out that the order of Parliament has been disobeyed. The refreshment kiosk has not been built, and gas has been used to light the Park instead of the electric light. "W. R." addressing the Times of Wednesday, the 12th inst., as to the lighting of Hyde Park, writes:—"Gas, if used, would be very injurious to vegetation in saturating the ground with poisons, as any one may see where gas-pipes are being taken up." Before preparing the estimates for 1897 the authorities had considered this matter carefully, and, as a result of their investigations, had expressly asked the House to permit the Park to be lit by electric light. It is to be hoped that in the estimates for 1898-9 the erection of the Hyde Park refreshment kiosk will be again provided for, and that Mr. Akers Douglas will be asked to explain why gas was substituted for electric light.—Believe me to be, very truly yours, MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

EVEN the Panglosses of the sporting papers are compelled, by force of the irresistible logic of figures, to express disappointment at the beggarly entries for the Spring Handicaps, and the aberrations and caprices of owners in engaging their horses are indeed utterly unaccountable, for here we find fifty-one horses nominated for a race of £1,000 at Alexandra Park, while there are only forty for the Kempton Park Jubilee Handicap of £3,000, which is run over a very much better course. The Lincolnshire Handicap (run March 23) has fifty entries, and the race is likely to be considerably cut up, as six stables are represented by eighteen horses, and four other trainers are doubly represented. The Kingsclere stable is not usually dangerous so early in the season, and it is not probable that Hermiston will be seen out at Lincoln. Mr. Low's colt is likely to have a heavy weight, considering his great reputation, and that he cantered away with the only race for which he started last season. The most notable animals in the entry are Voter (the American horse), Gulistan (who might be dangerous if he could be patched up sufficiently for him to come to the post tolerably fit), Bradwardine, Bay Ronald, Bridegroom, Merman, Chelandry, Merle, and Pedant, besides Melange and Crestfallen, two animals which are quite certain to distinguish themselves next season. There is a marked absence of class in the Lincoln entry, taking it all round.

The City and Suburban (run April 20) has fifty-one entries, as compared with sixty-two last year, but time was when the number exceeded 150. For the gradual decline of this once great handicap the miserable flea-skinning parsimony of the Epsom managers is wholly accountable. With the exception of Ascot, Epsom is by far the richest meeting in England, but the programmes are discreditably notorious for their squalid meanness. If the City and Suburban was a handicap with £2,000 added (as might very well be the case), the sweepstakes also going to the winner, then the number of entries would probably be more than doubled, and it would again become a great betting race. The Egerton House stable has four candidates, including Balsamo (who won last year), Minstrel (who cannot stay the course), and Nunsuch, who would probably have won last year's Cambridgeshire if he had been kept for that race. The class is better than at Lincoln, the entry including Melfitana, Cortegar, Bay Ronald, Limasol, Berzak, Diakka, Sandia, South Australian, Kilcock (who cannot stay this distance), Newhaven II. (the Australian horse), Crestfallen, Voter, Eager, Chelandry, Merman, St. Cloud II., and Ashburn. There are very few three-year-olds, the lot, however, including Hermiston, and, if he should happen to win this event, he would be well backed for the Newmarket Stakes, in which race he may meet Cyllene.

The Chester Cup (run May 4) has fifty entries, which is about the average number of the last few years. The Rush (who won in 1896) and Count Schomberg (the winner last year) have both been entered, and Telescope, Merman, Chelandry, Labrador, St. Bris, Nouveau Riche, Ashburn, Dinna Forget, Carlton Grange, Newhaven II., Nunsuch, Jaquemart, Shaddock, Bradwardine, Limasol, and Piety, are well-known names. The best three-year-old in the race is The Baker, but I fancy Sir John Kelk's horse will be reserved for Ascot, when he may "go for" both the Queen's Vase and the Gold Cup.

The Kempton Park Jubilee Handicap (run May 7) entry of forty is really very disappointing, and it is impossible to account in any rational way for the failure of this race, for which no fewer than seventy-one horses were engaged last year. Why should there be only forty entries for this old-established handicap, when there are thirty-nine for a new venture at Hurst Park, which is worth only £1,000, instead of £3,000 as at Kempton Park? In class, however, the Kempton race maintains its old prestige. Among the older horses are Ashburn, Comfrey, Sandia, Berzak, Diakka, Voter, St. Cloud II., Merman, Bridegroom, Eager, Minstrel, Kilcock, Clwyd (who won last year), Crestfallen, Dinna Forget, and Melange. There is a capital entry of three-year-olds, including Dunlop, Alt Mark, Hermiston, Nota Bene, The Convict, Wildfowler, Sugar Loaf (the half-sister to Galtee More, by Gallinule), and Greenan. I hear, by the way, that Dunlop, who has been backed by some geese for the Derby, is not at all likely to be found a dangerous candidate for any classic stake, as he is tolerably sure to discover himself as a non-stayer.

The Grand National Steeplechase ought not to be included among the Spring Handicaps, and it is absurd for the papers to congratulate themselves upon the fact that the entry for this event, at least, is satisfactory. It belongs to quite another class of race. There are seventy-six entries, which is the largest number for more than twenty years. Five previous winners at Aintree have been entered—Manifesto (who was successful last year), Wild Man from Borneo, The Soarer, Come Away, and Father O'Flynn. Rory O'More, who started such a hot favourite in 1896, when he ran very well, and got over all the fences, is entered, and so is Timon, who made the running so efficiently last year. Filbert and Ford of Fyne, who finished second and third to Manifesto, are engaged, and so are Norton and Cathal. Mr. L. de Rothschild has nominated Bevil, who has been talked about for some time as likely to make a good steeplechaser.

Mr. Bottomley is not likely to have any reason to congratulate himself upon having purchased Hawfinch for the ridiculous price of 5,000 gs. If the horse ever wins back half this sum I shall be vastly surprised, and he would not have been sold out of the Kingsclere stable if he had been the best three-year-old in it. I suspect that both Batt and Hermiston are considerably in front of Hawfinch, who has very few engagements, and not one which he is at all likely to win. Ninus will make a pretty sort of example of Mr. Bottomley's steed whenever the pair meet again, nor is he likely, in any future race, to finish in front of Dieudonné, Orzil, or Royal Footstep.

Sir Richard Waldie Griffith is likely to have a promising outsider for the Derby in King of Thebes, by Amphion out of Thistlefield, dam of Merle, whose name has never yet been mentioned in the betting on the Epsom event. King of Thebes ran only once last season, which was when he cantered away with the Cheveley Stakes at the Newmarket Houghton Meeting, a race for which Elfin and Simylla were most fancied, the winner being the extreme outsider in a field of ten, as he was thought to be too backward to have any chance of taking the prize. I believe that King of Thebes, who is a much-improved colt, is likely to turn out a very smart three-year-old if he goes on all right. He is engaged in the Two Thousand, and if he progresses favourably in his preparation, the colt will very likely start for the Column Stakes in the Newmarket Craven week, in which race his 5 lb. penalty is reduced to 2 lb. by a breeding allowance. He is also engaged in the Hastings Plate of £500, which is run on the day before the Two Thousand. Sir R. Waldie Griffith has a nice filly in St. Ia, who has been much talked of as being likely to win the One Thousand, but I anticipate that she will turn out a non-stayer. She has come on very much during the winter, and ought to win some good races if only she is judiciously placed. Sir R. Waldie Griffith has one of the very finest two-year-olds at Newmarket in the filly by Kendal out of the famous St. Marguerite (dam of Seabreeze), who was purchased at Doncaster for 3,100 gs. by Sir Blundell Maple, who, however, was induced (unluckily for himself, as it will probably turn out) to transfer her, for a small profit, to her present owner. She is a magnificent filly, and highly promising in all ways. There is also in this team a remarkably nice sister to Merle, but she is far inferior to the St. Marguerite filly in appearance.

Lord Dunraven's Cowl, by Galopin out of L'Abbesse de Jouarre, grievously disappointed her friends last season, but I fancy she will do better as a three-year-old. In any case her owner has a grand two-year-old in the colt by St. Simon out of L'Abbesse de Jouarre, and a more racing-like animal is not often seen. Another highly promising two year-old of Lord Dunraven's is the colt (first foal) by Bend Or out of Molly Morgan.

A four-year-old that may be expected to win a good handicap over a short course (six to eight furlongs) is Ardeshir, who would probably have won the Stewards' Cup at Goodwood last July with a clear course and a stronger jockey. Ardeshir seemed to go all to pieces after winning a race at Kempton Park in August, but he has come round again, and is now a very nice horse.

Much surprise has been expressed that there should be so few entries for the Auteuil Steeplechase, which is worth over £5,000, and for the Hurdle Race of over £2,500. The fact is overlooked that these events are confined to entire horses and mares, whereas the great majority of English and Irish steeplechasers are geldings. By the way, when will the somnolent Jockey Club exclude geldings from our own classic stakes, as ought manifestly to have been done long ago?—the Utopian theory that the turf exists for the improvement of the breed of horses is a piece of fiddle-faddle moonshine, which is now only mentioned to be laughed at. Only eleven of our horses have been entered for this great Steeplechase, and a wretched lot they are, excepting Count Schomberg and Soliman, both of whom have distinguished themselves over hurdles; but it remains to be seen how they will like the more formidable obstacles which they will encounter if they are started for this event. There are twenty-one entries for the Hurdle Race, including Soliman, who has already won this rich stake, and he will therefore have to carry 13 lb. extra for his victory last year. It was certainly a sad bêtise for Lord Durham to weed Soliman out of his stable and retain Son o' Mine, who, by the way, has been sold to Count Foy, and he goes to the stud in France. Soliman's penalty would probably stop him, but the English may have a good candidate in either Rampion, Regret (both horses being cast offs from the Duke of Westminster's stud), History, Bowline, or Up Guards, who is own brother to Count Schomberg. Red Heart has been entered, but I hear it is doubtful whether this horse will again stand a thorough preparation.

The best three-year-olds in France are M. Blanc's Cazabet and M. de St. Alary's Royal Mint II. They have both wintered well so far, and so also has M. Blanc's Manitou, who will probably be a dangerous candidate for our Derby in such a moderate field as is likely to start at Epsom. Cazabet has no English engagement, but Manitou is in next year's Eclipse Stakes at Sandown Park, and in the £10,000 Century Stakes in 1900. Royal Mint II. is in the Prince of Wales's Stakes at Ascot, and he may very likely be sent over for that race, as this year it will be run ten days after the Grand Prix, and not only two days later, as has usually been the arrangement.

The Princess of Wales' Stakes of £10,000 for 1901 has again failed to fill, but it is quite likely that the Stewards of the Jockey Club, who appear to be utterly infatuated about this race on its new lines, will accept the number of entries which has been obtained, and, if so, they will act very foolishly. A race of this class from which three-year-olds are excluded cannot by any possibility be a success from the sporting point of view, for in four years out of every five it would be practically a walk over for the "crack" of the season, and it would certainly cost the Newmarket fund nearly four thousand pounds, as it may be assumed with confidence that there would be a huge clear out of hopeless candidates when the first forfeit was declared.

The Newmarket Stakes for 1900 has closed (after having, in the first instance, failed to fill) with 216 entries, and this race would again have collapsed but for the bait of £600 for the public breeders, who have consequently been generous in their patronage. It is monstrous that the Newmarket authorities should set so scandalously bad an example to other meetings by thus diverting nearly a third of the so-called added money (£2,000) from the owners of the horses engaged. It is a great pity that some influential and independent member of the Jockey Club does not call attention to this new plan of thus cutting up stakes, which is grossly unfair to the owners, and it is a device for obtaining entries which, most assuredly, has increased, is increasing, and ought to be diminished. It is to be regretted that the Newmarket people did not give up this event altogether, for it is universally admitted that there is no room for a big three-year-old stake in the short interval between the Two Thousand and the Derby, and any chance there might be of making the race something of a success is destroyed by the absurd and asinine folly of having neither penalties nor allowances, the inevitable result being that it is practically a walk over for the winner of the Two Thousand (as was the case last year) if he has won that event easily.

Mr. Gould has been forbidden to play football as a member of clubs belonging to the English Rugby Union. This is the edict of the governing body of the Rugby Union. It will be remembered that last year the Welsh people started a testimonial to the great International three-quarter, which was enthusiastically taken up. The International Board declared Gould and all who subscribed to be professionals in a resolution which was a masterpiece of pig-headed buffoonery. The consequence was that no subsequent International games were played with Wales. At the beginning of this season the officials of the Rugby Union, bowing to the storm of indignation which was gathering, resolved that Mr. Gould could play in teams that met English clubs. Had this not been done English clubs could not have met Welsh teams. In other words, Gould was whitewashed, if that operation can be described as necessary. Any dirt that had been thrown at him had been slung, not by English players at large, but by a small body of men who were so blinded by conceit of their logical powers as to declare Members of Parliament and ex-Cabinet Ministers who subscribed to the testimonial professionals. It was hoped that the manly and straightforward speech of Mr. Rowland Hill at the general meeting of the English Union had once and for all set matters at rest. The English Union practically reversed the decision to which its representatives on the International Board had come. Unfortunately the Gould case has not yet been terminated. He played for Bristol on Boxing day. Mr. Rowland Hill, the hon. sec. of the English Union, wrote and said that he could do so. His opinion was clearly the logical deduction from the resolution that Gould could play against English teams. The news, therefore, that he has been forbidden to play in the way described has come as a thunderbolt to footballers. The deliberations of the gentlemen who issued the edict were secret. Rumour says that the reason for the proclamation was a desire to throw a sop to the Scotchmen. If the Scotch and Irish really object to the action of the English Union at the beginning of the season, let them say so in a straightforward manner. No publicity has been given to any objection up to the present. If they do not object, then for goodness' sake let the English governing body and the legislators of the other two bodies exercise their logical faculties of which they seem to have a superabundance. It will no doubt strike them that if a man's status is good enough to allow him to play against them, it is good enough to permit him to play for them. The edict of the Union is not sportsmanlike; it is not English; it is not logical. It looks as though it were an attempt of a clique to gag the almost unanimous majority that passed the whitewashing resolution last autumn.

For Mosquito Bites nothing allays the irritation so quickly as SCRUBB'S CLOUDY FLUID AMMONIA, and it is an immediate remedy for Wasp or Bee Stings.

The question then arises as to whether a body that can be guilty of such unwise and unstatesmanlike conduct can be capable of working the Rugby Union ship through the storms that are rising up on every side. It is impossible to believe that persons who gratuitously go out of their way to create a disturbance are fit for the task. In the matter of the Northern Union, where men who have not been paid for playing are seeking to rejoin the old Union, these same officials have taken up a most relentless attitude. They will not have these players back at any price. I can well understand that they should refuse to give way until payment for broken time is admitted to be professionalism by those who indulge in it. The seceders did not at the time of their secession allow this to be the case. They must therefore force the executive of the Northern Union to make a declaration on the subject if they wish to return to the fold. It would be utterly impossible to allow men to return to play as members of the Rugby Union so long as they consider that to receive six or ten shillings for playing on a Saturday is not an act of professionalism. It might have been difficult to get rid of these players merely for their opinions. But as they chose to secede for the sake of their views, the Union is well rid of them until they repent.

From the way in which the authorities of the Rugby Union are acting it looks as though their personal bias and violent antipathies were allowed to swamp any considerations of policy. Strange as it may seem, amateurism is not confined to gentlemen. There are working men who play the game for its own sake, as Mr. F. Mitchell admits the Barbarians discovered on their recent tour. The uncompromising hostility of the Union officials to those who are seeking readmission, coupled with their unsportsmanlike attitude in the Gould case, is rapidly alienating all feelings of popular support from those who have hitherto striven to work with them in their efforts to keep the Union free from professionalism. Nor is this all. Both in the North and in the West there are rumours that a new organisation will be started. Perhaps it will own allegiance to Wales. Unless these officials rapidly make up their minds to frame their policy on a broader basis they will soon find their occupation gone.

The Marlborough Nomads have followed up their brilliant victory over Richmond by giving Rosslyn Park a bad beating. This club has had a brilliant past, and I hope that the Old Boys will now rally round it. There is no reason why the club should not with proper support become again one of the leading clubs in the Metropolis. Unfortunately, not only Old Boys' clubs but other Metropolitan clubs as well suffer by the existence of Blackheath and Richmond. These clubs are regarded as stepping stones to International caps. The possibility of this distinction is dangled before the eyes of a promising player, and he succumbs to the temptation. The Selection Committee of the South will have to be materially altered before any improvement can be expected in a system which is grossly abused. Does any one believe that a brilliant half like Wells would have been so often left out in the cold had he not been faithful to the Harlequins? What chance have players in such rising clubs as Croydon, Wickham Park, and Lennox of proper recognition? What player in the Old Merchant Taylors or Old Leysians, when they were at their best, was ever selected? Perhaps a remedy would be found if county matches were played on a Saturday. Then play in these games might be recognised as being of some merit.

In other Rugby matches the Gloucester team were unfortunately without the assistance of the brothers Stout, and so they deem themselves very unlucky to have been beaten by Swansea, who spoiled the Western county's unbeaten record. By way of revenge for the success of the Welsh club, Newport had their colours lowered by Moseley, for whom Cattell and Byrne both played excellent games.

Richmond are still down on their luck. They went up north, and found Liverpool much improved since they beat them earlier in the season, and the Northerners were able to score a narrow win owing to some pretty play by Swallow. The good form of the Blackheath halves enabled them to beat Manchester City rather easily.

In Association football the League match between Aston Villa and Sheffield United excited as much interest as the final for the Association Cup. Beaten the week before by Sheffield by a goal, the Aston men met their opponents on their own ground last Saturday. There were only half a hundred thousand people present, and a great game resulted. Again Aston lost. They should have won, for one of the Sheffield forwards broke his nose. However, after Aston had scored from a penalty, he turned out again. Then Cunningham scored twice for the visitors. The fine form shown by the Queen's Park Rangers in the London Charity Cup, when they drew with a very strong Casuals team, drew a good crowd to see the replayed tie. It was a very hard game from start to finish. The Queen's forwards played a neat passing game, but the Casuals held the upper hand, and won by a goal. I have received an important letter with regard to the management of League teams, to which I will refer next week.

At Cambridge Mr. Fletcher has been busy on the Cam. There is no doubt about the thoroughness with which he is undertaking his task. In fact the candidates for the crew have had more tubbing during the last week than the University crew had all last year. No doubt the Old Blues will soon get put through the mill in the same way. It is not too much to say that in recent years tubbing with the Cambridge crew has been at a discount. The Oxford men have always had plenty of it. It would be useless to speculate on the ultimate names of the crew. Mr. Fletcher would not be taking such pains with so many men if he had definitely decided who was going to row. I hear, on very good authority, that Gold, the examinations having been safely overcome, will again stroke Oxford.

It is about time that Roberts and Dawson settled up the terms of their match. After the champion's public statement that he was ready to play he has only one course open, and that is to arrange matters without delay. Dawson in a published interview has made charges of the most serious kind against Roberts. These can only be met by a genuine match. Perhaps it may be suggested that these attacks are as much part of the game of billiards as the paper bluff that precedes an American prizefight. If this be so, the public will soon tire of the game. Roberts, at all events, ought, having regard to his position in the billiard world, to take up the gauntlet that Dawson has thrown down, and settle the matter once and for all.

It is impossible to conceive anything more idiotic than to lay a paper-chase course or to have a cross-country run across a railway line. Yet this was done in the neighbourhood of Glasgow; and a young fellow was cut to death by a train. In the Thames Valley Harriers' races, Steadman for the third time came in a winner on a handicap framed from Cottrell, the champion, who was not in form. The Finchley handicap was won by Drury, who could have done with much less start. The two leading clubs, Lea and Thames Hare and Hounds, had an interesting match at Chingford. Lea, for whom the veteran Harold Wade turned out, won rather comfortably.

MAMMON.

From MOSES MOSS to BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN,—I cannot help commencing my letter to-day with a word of caution, which is dictated by the very sharp upward movements which have of late taken place, and by the danger which so often arises in the case of the public of their getting in at the top, and before a reasonable reaction has taken place. I fancy that in several directions the danger signal is hoisted, there having already been premonitory signs of sharp declines the moment inside support is withdrawn. This, of course, applies only to a portion of the Stock Markets, and there are other sections in which, on the contrary, there is every promise of a further advance.

Stock Exchange Prospects—A Timely Caution.

Prospects of the Stock Markets generally are undoubtedly favourable, and have become more so through the fresh decline in the value of money, and the virtual collapse of the engineering strike. Neither are there any indications of political troubles. The Far Eastern question is in abeyance, and it is still hoped that a British guaranteed Chinese loan will provide a solution as far as this country is concerned. In fact, if the Times' correspondent at Pekin is correctly informed, the British Government has offered China a loan of £12,000,000 on a 4 per cent. basis at par, one of the conditions being the opening of three more treaty ports. There has been some uneasiness with reference to the situation in Cuba, and the riots in Havana are certainly not calculated to encourage holders of Spanish bonds. They have also enabled the "Bears" in Wall-street to engineer a fresh setback in American Rails, and it is just as well to realise that at any moment this little black cloud on the horizon may burst into a storm. At all events, those who have large profits to take in consequence of the enormous rise in such stocks as Canadian Pacifics, Grand Trunks, &c., might as well realise a portion of these on the next improvement, as a sharp break in the American department might naturally affect Canadian Railway stocks adversely. There seems to be also a danger of Argentine Rails getting somewhat topheavy, and it would be salutary if the upward movement in these were to be checked until actual traffic returns are somewhat more in keeping with present quotations. It is, for instance, somewhat rash to put up Central Argentine Ordinary to nearly 90, when no better dividend than from 1½ to 2 per cent. can be expected. Matters are looking more hopeful in the Home Railway market, and if dividend announcements should be at all similar to those made by the Brighton and South Eastern Companies, we may look for a very active and advancing market, especially as the settlement of the engineering trouble will cause further traffic increases, and remove one of the chief difficulties under which our trade has laboured of late. In the Mining department there has been some taking in of sail, and South African shares, which at one time rose considerably above the last make-up prices, have relapsed again. In this department there is plenty of room for improvement, and with careful selection investors may still acquire holdings upon which they will receive good dividends, in addition to the promise of a considerable increase in capital value. The reaction amongst West Australians was a healthy one, and there are signs that it has run its course. At all events, there is no unfavourable news either concerning the goldfields or from the market point of view. My caution, however, applies to the fullest extent to certain gambling counters in the Industrial department, which are being worked for a great deal more than they are worth. Amalgamations and combinations are still the order of the day. Capitals are being watered chiefly for the benefit of the wary promoter or vendor, and shares are being run up to excessive premiums. The inevitable result will be that the public will have to carry the baby, and that some of those who are carried away by the excitement in the market will get hurt very badly. The gamble in petroleum and fish-oil shares, for instance, is distinctly dangerous, and the fact that our American cousins are anxious to unload some of their concerns upon us should act as a warning. With the speculative collapse in Coats before us, who will say but that one of these days people will get as badly caught in the English Sewing Cotton Company?

Home Rails—A Brighter Outlook.

The market for Home Railway stocks has been affected by opposing influences during the week, but from the outset a firmer tone was imparted to it by the prospect of the disastrous struggle in the engineering trade coming to an end. At one time weakness was caused by the Great Central dividend announcement, which was at the rate of 2 per cent. on the Preferred Ordinary, being equivalent to 1 per cent. on the former undivided stock. This compares with 1½ per cent. on the latter stock for the second half of 1896, and caused much disappointment in certain sanguine quarters. Yet it must have been evident to the careful observer that the Directors would adopt a very conservative policy in the distribution of profits on the eve of the completion of the extension to London. The small distribution made shows that something like £50,000 more has been charged against revenue than in the corresponding half of 1896. Apparently a great deal has been spent on new locomotives, carriages, &c., in anticipation of a large accession of traffic as the result of the extension to London. The announcement had the effect of putting down Great Central 1894 Ordinary to 44½, the Prefs. to 72, the "A" stock to 23¼. But I adhere to my opinion that there is at present in these Great Central stocks, and notably in the 1894 Ordinary, one of the few opportunities for obtaining, with a little patience, a very large profit. The connection with London must eventually result in largely increased earnings for this Company, and any one who locks the stock up now may expect to see it at no distant date at par, although, of course, the enhanced profits cannot be earned immediately on the working of the extension being commenced. It was unreasonable to argue from the Great Central dividend, which was declared under exceptional circumstances, against satisfactory distributions on the other leading stocks; and this argument was, moreover, completely disproved by the Brighton announcement, which was at the rate of 8¼ per cent. on the undivided Ordinary, as against 8 per cent. last year; giving 7 per cent. to Brighton "A," against 6¾ per cent. for the year 1896; £7,000 less was, moreover, brought into the account, and the balance carried forward is larger by £4,000. Brighton "A" have risen on this satisfactory announcement to 185¼, and, as I have repeatedly pointed out, even at this level, deducting the dividend, the yield is a good one, viz., about £3. 17s. 6d. per cent. The South-Eastern dividend has been announced exactly in accordance with my anticipation. The distribution on the Ordinary for the second half-year of 1897 is at the rate of 6⅝ per cent., which giving 3⅞ per cent. to Dover "A" for the year, which compares with 3⅜ per cent. on this stock for the year 1896, being an improvement of ½ per cent. The amount carried forward is only slightly smaller, viz., £4,000 against £5,520. Dover "A" have thereupon been very firm between 116½ and 117, and are not dear at that, as the yield, reckoning the dividend off, is about £3. 8s. 6d.

A Most Wonderful Package of Crockery. Send your name and address to the Pearson Pottery Co., Hanley, Staffs., and we will forward one of our catalogues of cheap Crockery. One Hundred Pieces of Crockery for £1. 1s., including complete Dinner and Tea Services, and other pieces. Even an imitation of this advertisement impossible. Drop a post card for particulars.

per cent., while the progressiveness of the line in view of the works now in progress, which will eventually become very remunerative, has to be considered. The enlargement of Dover Harbour should also prove of great advantage to the development of the South-Eastern system. The Great Eastern dividend will hardly be such as to justify a further advance. In fact, of the two stocks I consider Dover "A" more tempting as a purchase than Great Eastern. It remains to be seen what results the other lines will be able to show, and I herewith give again my list of comparisons with the second half of 1897:—

—	Date of Declaration of Dividend for second half of 1896.	Dividend at the rate of per cent. per annum.	Amount carried forward.	Dividend for second of 1897.	Amount carried forward.
	1897.
Great Central	Jan. 13	1½	£2,400	1	£2,200
London and Brighton	,, 13	8	22,280	8	26,000
South Eastern	,, 14	6⅜	5,520	6⅝	4,000
Great Eastern	,, 14	4¾	50,918	—	—
Metropolitan	,, 20	3¾	14,130	—	—
Do. Sur. Stock		2⅝	—	—	—
London and South Western	,, 21	8¼	24,805	—	—
London and Chatham First Prefs.	,, 22	4½	64,543	—	—
Lan. & Yorkshire	,, 25	5¾	29,140	—	—
Metropolitan District Prefs.	,, 26	2¼	403	—	—
North Eastern	,, 28	7¼	31,602	—	—
Great Northern	,, 29	5¼	8,096	—	—
Great Western	Feb. 4	7¼	42,884	—	—
London and North Western	,, 5	8	99,779	—	—
Midland	,, 5	7	40,036	—	—
Caledonian	Mar. 2	5	17,418	—	—
North British	,, 11	3	1,484	—	—

The market estimate of the Metropolitan dividend is 3⅝ to 3¾ per cent., and of course with reference to the Chatham the full 4½ per cent. on the First Preferred is again expected. On the Lancashire and Yorkshire the same dividend as last year is looked for. With regard to the Heavy lines a great deal must necessarily depend upon any possible increase in charges, wages, &c., and the following market estimates are hardly likely to be exceeded, while they may possibly be reduced:—North Eastern 7½ per cent, Midland 7 per cent., North Western 8 per cent., Great Western 7½ per cent. In the case of the London and South Western the market goes for as much as 8¾ per cent., and in the case of Metropolitan District Preference for 3 per cent. As regards the Heavy lines the settlement of the engineering trouble is of much greater importance than regarding the Southern and passenger lines generally, and should satisfactory dividends be added to this stimulating feature, a considerable upward movement would be quite on the cards. This also applies to Great Northern Deferred, now quoted 61. In the present price the competition of the Great Central is doubtless pretty well discounted, and the result of a favourable dividend announcement would probably be a smart rise, especially as there is still a remnant of the "Bear" account which was piled up at the time when the large additional capital powers applied for were made public. The Scotch stocks have been very strongly affected by the prospect of the engineering dispute coming to an end, and we have now Caledonian Deferred Ordinary (Coras) at 59¼, North British Deferred at 47⅜. Those of my readers who have followed my advice with regard to the purchase of these stocks have fared well, and they may anticipate a further advance. By the way, I hope that the employers in their hour of victory will deal gently with their workmen, and make their return to work without loss of self-respect as easy as possible. The prospects of the underground lines are undoubtedly favourable. The London extension of the Great Central will bring grist to the mill of both, and so has already the Barnum-Bailey Show. In addition to this there is the prospect of working the Inner Circle by electric traction, while in the case of the District several very valuable extensions are in course of construction.

The Railway News contains an interesting return of Continental passenger traffic, from which I extract the following table:—

Years.	Calais.	Boulogne.	Dieppe.	Ostend.
1889	262,671	75,808	90,741	97,490
1890	248,758	55,991	106,202	74,113
1891	258,255	83,481	91,501	104,529
1892	248,315	87,700	86,328	104,454
1893	228,231	96,519	84,911	111,681
1894	234,409	119,410	90,507	133,302
1895	260,311	114,883	100,847	153,320
1896	265,600	118,639	89,115	165,228
1897	267,816	123,991	111,648	164,190

It would appear that the figures for the year 1897 have beaten all previous records, except on the Dover-Ostend route, in respect to which the highest total was reached in the previous year. The Folkestone-Boulogne traffic shows a steady increase, which is due, however, not only to Continental traffic, but also to the large passenger movement to Folkestone itself, and to Boulogne for the day.

THE YANKEE MARKET—AN ADVANCE AND A REACTION.

While the general position in the United States remains undoubtedly satisfactory, and traffics of the railroads show considerable increases, the market position in Wall-street has been somewhat unsteady, the chief disturbing influences having been a Cuban and a silver scare. Both have doubtless been greatly over-rated, but the very fact that riots have occurred in Havana, in which officers of the Spanish Army took a leading part, points to the possibility of a recurrence of such events. Fortunately there is a disposition on the part of our American cousins to let Cuba alone for the present, the Jingoism in the Senate having greatly abated. Should, however, by any chance, any American subject be hurt in some of the riots, this would doubtless cause a great outcry. The dishing-up by the Times of ancient correspondence concerning the silver question at one time caused a relapse on this side, but New York received the news with great equanamity, and as long as the financial position in the States is as satisfactory as at present, a silver scare is not likely to cause any serious spasms in Wall-street. The Secretary of the U.S. Treasury, Mr. Gage, moreover, is still hopeful of his ability to engineer currency reform. The New York Financial Chronicle makes the earnings during the first week of January of sixty-five railroads 6,099,474 dols. (increase 931,285 dols.), and those of eighty-eight railroads during the fourth week of December 11,650,751 dols. (increase 1,463,481 dols.) For the first week of January the Milwaukee traffic return was satisfactory, showing an increase of 100,000 dols., other increases being as follows:—Missouri Pacific, 94,000 dols.; Wabash, 30,000 dols.; Missouri, Kansas, and Texas, 30,000 dols.; Louisville, 23,000 dols.; Chesapeake and Ohio, 16,000 dols.; Southern Railway, 9,000 dols. According to latest accounts, the "Bears" in Wall-street are again displaying a good deal of activity, and those who wish to take a hand in American Rails should go for short turns, there being no imminent prospect of a very big rise. But even during the past week it would have been possible to realise very good profits by adopting this policy. Milwaukee, for instance, could have been bought at 57½, and have since been as high as 99½. Louisville were at 57⅞, and at one time touched 59⅝. Northern Pacific Prefs. were 62¼ a week ago, and have since risen to 66¼, while Union Pacifics stood at 29⅛ a week ago, and have since touched 33. These are precisely the stocks in which a little operation, carefully conducted, is likely to lead to satisfactory results, but it would be advisable to buy only on distinct reactions, and sell on recoveries. Take the Milwaukee road, for instance, which is earning at the rate of 6 to 7 per cent., and will probably announce another 2½ per cent. dividend in March. Milwaukee should, under these circumstances, be worth about par, but whether any further advance is justified would be quite another question, unless the Directors take a very "Bullish" view, and adopt the same course as that taken last November of declaring

2 per cent., and 1 per cent. extra dividend. The Louisville is doing remarkably well. The working statement for the six months ended December 31, 1897, shows an increase in the gross earnings of 461,820 dols., and while the operating expenses have risen only 231,911 dols. there was a gain of 298,761 dols. in the net income, owing to a net decrease in the total fixed charges and other deductions of 102,040 dols., so that the increase in the surplus for the half-year is brought up to 400,801 dols. over that for the corresponding half year, the total surplus being 1,075,043 dols. against 674,242 dols. In view of this position, and of the coming refunding scheme, the resumption of dividends cannot be far off. As regards the Northern Pacific it is generally anticipated that it will benefit very largely by the coming traffic to Klondike, and the earnings are moreover so large, that the full dividend on the new Prefs. is practically assured for the current year. This stock would, therefore, be a good purchase on any reaction. The position of the Union Pacific is greatly improved by the control of the Oregon Short Line and of the Oregon Navigation Company, which the Union Pacific have lately obtained. The following extract from the Wall-street Journal is interesting as bearing upon the position:—

> Representatives of eastern parties are arriving at Portland to make arrangements for entering Alaska early in the spring. Conservative railroad men estimate that not fewer than 50,000 men will leave the Pacific North-West for Alaska during the first half of 1898. It is estimated that three-quarters of the number will return within a year and that every man who goes is worth at least 500 dols. to the transportation companies in fares and indirectly for supplies. There is some fear that competition for this travel will run into a passenger war, resulting in loss of profit.
>
> Oregon Short Line is quite a factor in the situation on account of the desire for its control. Union Pacific has quite a large interest and if it could secure a little more might be able to control the property. Other interests including Oregon Navigation are greatly interested in keeping the Short Line independent. The disposition that is made of Oregon Short Line has an important bearing upon the railway business of the Pacific Northwest in the coming year.

The Union Pacific seems, moreover, to be on the point of concluding very important alliances, and it appears that the through lines established by the Northern Pacific and Southern Pacific make it desirable for the roads which have no outlet with the Pacific Coast to have a close traffic alliance with the Union Pacific. As the Wall-street Journal puts it, "that Company, with its practically rebuilt track and equipment, will be in a position to do business to great advantage, and the arrangements which appear to have been made seem to assure to the Company a large traffic from eastern connections." The present temporary setback in Union Pacifics will doubtless make way for a fresh important advance, and I quite expect to see this stock at 40 in the near future. In the meantime, Union Pacific New Prefs. have risen to 57½. It will be remembered that the Ordinary shareholders will receive this Preference stock in lieu of the assessment of 15 dols. already paid, and it is expected that the new securities will be issued next month. Other stocks of undoubted merit, and in which short turns can with advantage be taken, unless it be proposed to lock the stock up for a longer period, disregarding immediate fluctuations, are notably the Preference stock of the reorganised Companies, viz., Atchison, Erie, Norfolk and Western, and Southern. I have to congratulate my readers upon the large profits which they must have made in Canadian Pacifics and in Grand Trunks in case they followed my advise to buy these at the much lower quotations current a few months ago. Canadian Pacifics have now improved to 90$\frac{1}{16}$, and on the principle that no one was ever ruined by taking profits, I should personally clear such handsome profits. It is true that the prospects of the road are very satisfactory, especially in connection with the coming boom in British Columbia; but for the present a higher dividend than 5 per cent. can hardly be looked for. Grand Trunks have further advanced to 75¼ for the Guaranteed, and to 66 for the First Prefs. The rise has been continuous and has reached very large proportions. There seems every prospect of the Guaranteed getting its full 4 per cent. in the current year, and from this point of view a gradual further improvement in this stock is justified, although a sharp reaction may have to be faced at any time, should the Yankee market experience a spasm. The First Prefs. at present price are in any case quite high enough, as there is no possibility of their getting their full dividend in the immediate future, and a bird in the hand is better than two in the bush, especially in this instance, as accidents could happen even in connection with the progress of Canada.

FOREIGNERS AND SOUTH AMERICANS.

Interbourse securities have been moderately active, but there has been no general improvement, and Spanish, which at one time rose to 61, dropped back to 60 on the Cuban riots, recovering again to 60⅜. I should be sorry to hold these in view of the precarious financial outlook. Turks and Greeks are slightly firmer, but there is no temptation to take a hand in these under present circumstances. Argentine Government stocks have again moved up a point or two, the 1886 Loan being quoted 94½, the Funding Loan 92⅜, Buenos Ayres Water and Drainage bonds 76¾. The gold premium in Buenos Ayres has now dropped to 164¼, and more of the precious metal is going to Buenos Ayres to pay for wheat shortly to be shipped to Europe. A feature has been the commencement of dealings in Argentine Railway Four per Cent. Guarantee Rescission bonds, which stand at about 63½, and are issued to the various Railway Companies in settlement of the guarantee. Argentine Railways mark a general advance. Buenos Ayres Great Southern are as much as 7 points higher at 157, while Buenos Ayres and Rosario are quoted 78½, Central Argentine 86½ Buenos Ayres Western 12¼. Amongst these stocks that with the greatest prospect of a further improvement is undoubtedly Buenos Ayres Great Southern. Cordoba Central First Prefs. have risen to 95, the Second Prefs. to 51, while Cordoba Central (Central Northern Section) Income Debenture stock is quoted 61½. Cordoba and Rosario Six per Cent. Debenture stock is firmer at 91. Purchases are also being effected of Uruguay Railway stocks, and Central Uruguay of Monte Video is quoted 85, North-Western of Uruguay Six per Cent. Debenture stock 75½. No further official news has been received from Monte Video with reference to the political outlook, but private despatches are of a satisfactory nature, and the old Uruguay Loan is firmer at 42. I keep to the opinion that, should acting-President Cuestas be re-elected, we shall see the dawn of great prosperity in that Republic. Brazilians and Chilians have been dull. There is now a rumour that a Belgian syndicate is negotiating for the purchase of the Central Railway of Brazil. Mexican Sixes have been firm, and Mexican Rails have maintained the previous advance, but the tone has been somewhat dull. A sharp rise has taken place in Peruvian Corporation stocks to 43½ for the Debentures, and to 11 for the Prefs., on a cablegram from Lima announcing that the Peruvian Government had appointed a Commission to endeavour to arrange a settlement between it and the Corporation. I had always expected that it would come to this.

THE KAFFIR CIRCUS.—MINOR FLUCTUATIONS.

The buoyant tone which characterised the Kaffir Circus at the commencement of the week, when the carry-over in this market was arranged easily on moderate terms, has made room for dulness and a moderate reaction in all but the Deep Level shares which remain in favour. It is somewhat surprising that the excellent December crushings, which marked another splendid record, should have been disregarded in the market, and the weakness has been attributed in some quarters to the disappointment with reference to the Simmer and Jack crushing, of which such high expectations had been entertained. The explanation of this return, which amounted to 5,391 oz. from 23,380 tons crushed, and 2,529 oz. from 11,700 tons cyanided, is, however, according to a cablegram received by the African Review, the circumstance that the 140 new plates—which had been running until the end of December six weeks, and the additional sixty plates which were in operation for fifteen days—are the largest in use on the Rand, and absorb a great per centage of gold, necessitating two months' use before proper recovery is effected. The management, it is stated, are convinced that the subsequent yields will prove quite satisfactory. A cablegram from the Simmer and Jack East, dated the 14th inst., is to the following effect:—"Hammond Shaft.—A reef has been found at 1,850 ft., exposing body of reef 6 ft. to 8 ft. wide, and giving assays as high as 22 dwt. Sinking has been stopped and cross-cutting commenced." Market movements appear to indicate that the important financial houses, who have every now and then given strong support to their groups, have temporarily withdrawn the same, but the present is, evidently, merely an occasional pause, and, the outlook being very satisfactory, I look for a recovery, especially in Rand Mines, now quoted 34¼, East Rands 5 5/16, Consolidated Goldfields 5 1/16. The latter, of course, having a large holding of Simmer and Jack, have suffered from the misinterpretation put upon the return. In Chartered shares a strong buying movement developed at one time up to 3¼, but these have since relapsed to 3⅛. Great efforts have also been made, with varying success, to galvanise the different Rhodesian ventures into life; but the public are not likely to touch these until actual crushings come to hand, and the managers of such mines will do well to strain every point to this effect. As already stated, the shares in the Deep Level mines have been well supported, the following being the present quotation:—Goldfields Deep 10⅜, Crown Deep 14⅛, Nourse Deep 7, Rose Deep 7 3/16, Durban-Roodepoort Deep 4½, Jumpers Deep 6 1/16, Knight's Deep 2 3/16. Greater strength has been shown by the Robinson group, Randfontein at one time rising to 2¼, and receding to 2⅛, while Langlaate Star have been firmer at 1½ on the satisfactory crushing. Were it not for the uncertainty concerning the supply of native labour in that part of the Rand we should no doubt have had a more active market in these shares. The attack which has been made upon the Barnato group in a contemporary has led to interviews with Mr. Woolf Joel on the eve of his departure for the Cape with representatives of South Africa and of the African Review. According to the statements made by Mr. Joel, who, by the way, proposes to stay six weeks in Johannesburg, two weeks in Kimberley, and to return in April, the position of the leading mines of this group is distinctly improving. He mentioned specially that working costs were being greatly reduced. Thus, the New Primrose, which in February last was working at 21s. 6d. per ton, has reduced its average cost to 18s. 9d. The Glencairn has come down from 22s. 1d. to 17s. 9d.; the Ginsberg from 27s. 1·66d. to 19s. 5·38d.; the Buffelsdoorn from 38s. 1d. to 19s. 6d.; while the Rietfontein "A" shows a total cost, exclusive of redemption, of 19s. 3d. per ton. With reference to the Langlaagte Royal and the New Crœsus, Mr. Joel said that according to his advices it was possible to restart work at a profit. Concerning the Barnato Consols Mr. Joel stated that the Ferreira Deep was probably the most valuable block of deep level property on the Rand, and of this 42½ per cent. belongs to the Barnato Consols and 57½ per cent. to the Rand Mines, Limited. He had already discussed the question of forming it into a public Company with Messrs. Wernher, Beit, & Co., and when he got to Johannesburg the terms would be settled with the local representatives of that firm. The Company would be floated by the Rand Mines and the Barnato Consolidated jointly, but he could say nothing about the details at present. The statements made by Mr. Joel with reference to the New Primrose and Glencairn were very satisfactory, and he wound up by absolutely denying the gossip about his firm gradually retiring from South African business, declaring that their South African interests were larger to-day than had ever been the case in the firm's history. He also considered that the market conditions were promising, and that, to judge from the share registers of the companies, steady buying was going on both for the account of English and Continental firms. The more favourable advices concerning the Woodstock, Transvaal, referred to last week, have been confirmed by the examination of an independent expert, and the shares have recovered to 10s. buyers. Electioneering news from the Transvaal presents no new features, and although Mr. Schalk Burger may make a good showing in the contest, he has no chance of a majority, which seems to be assured to President Kruger. I trust that, when the latter returns to power, he will use his victory in a moderate and sensible fashion. In an interview with a representative of the Financial News, Mr. J. H Van Ryn, who has just returned from South Africa, gave some interesting information with regard to the scheme of amalgamation in which the Van Ryn West and Van Ryn Estates are concerned. He stated that his faith in the properties was as great as ever, and that on the occasion of his recent visit to the Van Ryn Estate he organised a rearrangement of the sorting of the ore, from which a great improvement in results is expected, and he thought that the return ought under the new arrangement to approach a yield per ton of 8 dwts. on the plates, and 4 dwts. in the tailings. Last month they obtained from 11,500 tons of ore gold to the value of £13,750, and this would be improved upon. With reference to the Van Ryn West, he stated that the property was doing well, and would do better. Last month fifty-five stamps crushed 8,500 tons, and they obtained gold to the value of £13,800. Mr. Wenz, the manager, had just located a number of rich leaders, and had proved them up to the boundary of the Van Ryn Estate. The strong presumption was that they continue into that property, and are similarly rich there. The capacity of the Van Ryn West mill was eighty stamps, and the amalgamated Company would have 160 stamps under its control, besides which they had a complete cyanide plant. A number of economies were now being effected on the property, and the local management of the amalgamated Company would henceforth be with the Messrs. Albu, of Johannesburg, whose capabilities in the way of economical and effective management of mines are well known. A considerable demand has been experienced for Diamond shares, De Beers having advanced to 30, while New Jagersfontein are quoted 8 5/16.

Golden West Australia.

It is satisfactory from many points of view that the loan of £1,000,000 Three per Cent. Inscribed stock, offered by the Government of Western Australia has met with so favourable a reception. While the minimum was fixed at 95, the applications amounted to £2,891,250, tenders at £96. 4s. receiving about 49 per cent. of the amount applied for, the average price obtained for the stock being £96. 6s. 4d. For the whilom Cinderella colony of Australasia this is very gratifying, even when comparison is made with the New South Wales Three per Cent. Loan, for which an average price of £100. 8s. 4d. was obtained last week. The feature of the week has been the publication of the Sons of Gwalia prospectus, according to which the capital is £300,000, in £1 shares, the Company having been formed for the purpose of acquiring a valuable property near Mount Leonora, in the North Coolgardie Goldfield, concerning which I had been able to give full information in advance. No subscriptions were invited for this Company, all the shares having already been placed, and so favourable is the view held of the property that the shares are already being largely dealt in at 2⅛ or 1⅛ premium. According to a British Australasian cablegram, dated the 14th inst., it is computed as the result of recent developments at the North end of the Sons of Gwalia mine, that the net profit value of the ore blocked out or in sight has been raised from £98,000 to £138,000. This calculation is based on an allowance of 32s. per ton for working expenses. At the new find 5,500 tons of high-grade ore have now been blocked out, and the result of numerous assays shows an average value of 3 oz. 17 dwt. to the ton, the lowest assay giving 1 oz. 23 dwt., and the highest 9 oz. 2 dwt. A crushing is also announced from the property of 840 tons of ore for a return of 1,213 oz. of gold, the tailings assaying 35 dwt. The HEERING'S COPENHAGEN CHERRY BRANDY. The most delicious Liqueur. Established 1818. Of all respectable Wine Merchants.

MORTLOCK'S (Oxford-st.), Estd. A.D. 1746.—The collection of China and Glass now on view in their Galleries fully maintains the high reputation and pre-eminence enjoyed by "MORTLOCK'S" for the last century and a half, and well repays a visit of inspection.

following is my usual list of crushings which have come to hand during the week:—

—	Tons of Ore Crushed.	Ounces of Gold.	Assay of Tailings per Ton.
Associated Gold Mines ...	1,750	2,355	—
East Murchison United—
Great Eastern Lease ...	1,060	1,270	10 dwt.
Donegal Leases ...	890	830	4 dwt.
North Star	352	564	9 dwt.
Mountain Maid and Iron Prince...	19	34	19 dwt.
Iron Prince	4 cwt.	106	—
Diorite King	60	102	—
Champion Reef (Nannine)	730	175	—
Sons of Gwalia	840	1,213	35 dwt.
Hannan's Brownhill ...	227	1,339	—
Robinson (W.A.)... ...	660	610	—
Gullewa	169	247	—

Apart from the Sons of Gwalia crushing, the returns of the Associated Gold Mines and of the East Murchison United call for special mention. The latter shares are firm at $1\frac{1}{8}$ x.d., and would appear to be very cheap at this figure. The most remarkable result is, however, that of the Hannan's Brownhill smelting, which shows 6 oz. to the ton. No wonder that, in spite of the recent "Bear" raid on these shares, a smart recovery has ensued which has put the price up to 8 x.d., the dividend of 5s. per share having just been deducted. If the ursine party were to commit themselves to any extent in such shares as Hannan's Brownhills and Lake View Consols they would probably have to go through a very disagreeable experience. Lake View Consols were at one time knocked down to $10\frac{1}{4}$, but have since rallied to 11; and Ivanhoe shares have been firm at $6\frac{3}{8}$. London and Globe Finance shares have not been quite so firm, the "Bears" having also evidently been active in these, so that the present quotation is easier at $2\frac{3}{8}$; but in view of the large profits recently made by this Corporation we may look for a fresh advance. Lady Shenton shares have during the past week been a strong market at $2\frac{1}{8}$-$\frac{3}{16}$, and the "Bear" attack, which was again attempted on Monday, will doubtless recoil on its originators. As my readers are aware, the dividend of one shilling per share is payable on the 19th inst., and is still included in the price. London and West Australian Exploration shares have been strong at $1\frac{5}{16}$, and a good deal of business has also been transacted in Consolidated Murchison shares at 6s., this Company being also a member of this group. Great Fingall Reefs are steady at 8s. A further improvement has taken place in Burbank's Birthday Gift to $1\frac{7}{8}$, and there are indications that the other Burbank's mines will come into favour. Belle Vue Proprietary have been steady at 1, and Brownhill Central have come into demand on the favourable advices received from the mine, the shares being up to $1\frac{5}{8}$. According to a cablegram just received, high-grade ore has been struck in the property in the winze between the 100 ft. and 200 ft. levels from No. 7 shaft at a depth of about 180 ft. from the surface. A satisfactory crushing has been announced by the Robinson Mine, 660 tons having yielded 610 oz. of gold. This brings the total returns to date up to 7,391 oz. of gold obtained from 5,243 tons of ore crushed. The Venture Corporation reports the receipt of a cablegram from the Crœsus Consols property, situated at Hannan's, according to which the present depth of the Diamond drill hole No. 2 is 475 ft., the lode being wide and carrying much mineral. The Market Trust group has been firm, and Associated Gold Mines have risen to $4\frac{1}{4}$, while W.A. Market Trusts have been largely dealt in at $1\frac{5}{16}$. Northern Territories have hardened to $1\frac{3}{8}$. I notice that at a dinner given to the employees of the Joint Stock Institute, which Mr. Horatio Bottomley is now closing, the statement was made by that gentleman that the work he had started would be continued under the auspices of the West Australian Market Trust. In an interview which a representative of the Financial News had with Mr. Bottomley, the latter mentioned that it was just possible that before the year was out he might invite the leading journals and financial groups to let him take their representatives out to the colony, and, in company with Sir William Crooks—the most eminent of all their scientific men on the treatment of auriferous ores—and Mr. Kaufman—by far the best engineer they had had in Western Australia—show them on the spot something of the wealth and resources of the country. This is indeed enterprising. West Australian Gold Fields have been dull at $2\frac{5}{16}$, and Hampton Plains, after reacting, are slightly firmer at $1\frac{3}{16}$.

INDIAN, AUSTRALASIAN, AND BRITISH COLUMBIAN MINES.

In the Indian section a good deal of strength has been developed during the week, and fresh advances are marked, more especially in Mysore West and Wynaad, Ooregum Prefs., Balaghat, and Mysore Reefs. In Australian mines, other than West Australian, Aladdin's Lamp are slightly firmer at $1\frac{3}{4}$. Mount Morgan have improved to $4\frac{9}{16}$ x.d., and Broken Hill Proprietary are the turn firmer at $2\frac{1}{16}$. Mill's Day Dawn United have also hardened, and so have Croydon Consols, now quoted 4s. 6d.; but Mount Lyell have receded to $13\frac{3}{8}$ xd. In the New Zealand section declines have preponderated, notably in Kapanga, Waitekauri Extended, Hauraki, and Consolidated Goldfields of New Zealand; but Waitekauri have hardened. British Columbian mines have been a little more active, and slight improvements have occurred in Golden River Quesnelle, which are quoted $1\frac{1}{4}$, while London and British Columbian Goldfields are also better. A great many rumours are again current with reference to the Klondyke goldfield, and the assertion has been made that the "mother lode" has been discovered, but these and many other tales should be taken cum grano. It would also be unreasonable to take altogether a pessimistic view, and as such I must characterise the following communication which has been addressed by a consulting engineer who has been connected with gold and silver mines in nearly every quarter of the globe, and is at present in London. He has given close attention to the possibilities of the Klondyke, but has not, as he says, "Klondomania." I will let him speak for himself:—

> My investigations have led me to the discovery that there is up to date not one perfect title to a gold-mining claim in the Klondyke or Yukon regions. Of course, there are "squatters'" deeds, which are worthless until ratified. This fact commends itself to me as offering a cause for great caution on the part of investors. The truth or falsity of my statement should be verified through proper official channels, and investors should wait before embarking in a ship that may never return. This letter is not written with an object to attempt to injure any particular Klondyke enterprise, and I have no interest in any Company operating in that region. However, my information is derived from a gentleman who is connected with a large Company in America, and who has just returned from Canada. His Company has delayed coming before the public in America for the very reason that the validity of the claims (all claims) is a mooted question.
>
> Should not capitalists be slow to subscribe to Klondyke Companies until a little more is known of the region; until the titles are cleared; until all the fables which we have heard have been verified or refuted, and until competent, conservative, and disinterested engineers have given their opinion? It is true that we have the statement of Mr. Ogilvie, who is a highly-competent gentleman—yet he may be too enthusiastic; again, he reflects the policy of the British Columbian Government which is to colonise its territory, &c.
>
> The lesser fry who have given their opinions were mostly never heard of before. In the Choco district of South America I have known of finds as fabulous as those of Klondyke, yet they were only occasional pockets; while an Indian woman can get rich from the working of these placers, all the Companies that have been formed have been abject failures. Yet the district, which is scarcely inhabited while the gold is only worked by the women, gives 1,000,000 dols. in gold yearly, and has done so from the time of the Spanish Conquest. The discovery in Klondyke of the "mother lode" is a desideratum of great importance.—Yours, &c,
>
> AN ENGINEER.

The point about the security of the title is one of great importance, and I shall be glad if some of my readers who are in the possession of information on this subject will express their views on the same. At the statutory meeting of the British America Corporation, held on Tuesday last, the Marquis of Dufferin and Ava, who presided, made a very hopeful speech with reference to the position and prospects of the Company. He stated that under the advice of experts, in whose scientific knowledge and experience they had every confidence, they had become possessors of certain properties from the development of which they believed very considerable advantage and profit would accrue to their shareholders. With regard to the options secured he was able to state that they had already acquired the cream of the various enterprises referred to. They had also acquired all the long list of mines in the Province of British Columbia as enumerated in the prospectus, and these were acknowledged to be amongst the richest, if not the richest, in that province. The evidence of the richness of the claims acquired in the Klondike district was of such a nature that it was difficult to describe it, but all the contracts with regard to these properties, were subject to the condition that they should have the right to examine and thoroughly test them by their own experts before taking them over. Only one option acquired by the Corporation, and mentioned in the prospectus, that on the Alaska Commercial Company, had not been exercised, owing to the exaction of provisions on the part of the vendors which were not acceptable. Lord Dufferin concluded by reading a very rose-coloured cablegram from the Hon. C. H. Mackintosh, late Lieut.-Governor of the North-West Provinces, which was as follows :—"The British America Corporation has secured and holds the key to a majority of the golden treasure-houses of British Columbia. We shall practically control the mineral resources of this province. I predict a brilliant future for the Corporation, and congratulate the shareholders." It would have been impossible for the ex-Lieut.-Governor to have said more.

THE ANGLO-INDIAN BANKING CORPORATION, LIMITED.

In a recent issue of my Calcutta contemporary, Capital, reference is made to a new venture which was formed in this country in April last, under the high-sounding title of the Anglo-Indian Banking Corporation, Limited. The nominal capital was £200,000, divided into 20,000 shares of £10 each, and the vendors, the Alliance Debenture Corporation, financial and commission agents, of Bombay, sold to the Company, under an agreement dated April 8, 1897, whatever they had to sell, for £105,000, of which £5,000 was to be paid in cash and £100,000 by allotment to the vendors of 10,000 fully paid-up shares in the Company. The public do not appear to have taken very kindly to this concern, as up to May 27, 1897, when a return was filed at Somerset House, only 187 shares had been subscribed for. As the vendors are entitled to £5,000 in cash, it is evident that this would altogether swamp the amount of cash furnished by the public. The curious part about the matter is that my contemporary, Capital, has been unable to discover the valuable business carried on by the Alliance Debenture Corporation—which has been sold to the Anglo-Indian Banking Corporation for £105,000—in the Bombay Directory, the latter having been searched in vain for any such Corporation! Capital has, however, obtained the information that the promoter of this Bank with the high-sounding name is a Parsee gentleman, named Pestonjee Hormusji Wadia, and that the establishment at 71, Apollo-street, Bombay, consists of this gentleman and two clerks. That also seems to be the number of the staff of the Bank at the London offices, at 226, Winchester House, Old Broad-street, E.C., unless some of these gentlemen were temporarily absent when my representative had a look round. What I should like to know is what kind of business the Alliance Debenture Corporation has sold to the Anglo-Indian Banking Corporation at the high figure mentioned. Perhaps the London representatives of the Corporation will furnish this information?

NEW ENTERPRISES AND ISSUES.

The prospectuses of the following new enterprises and issues have been placed before the public during the week :—

Illinois Central Railroad Company.—This is an issue of 10,000,000 dols. of the Louisville Division and Terminal First Mortgage Three and a Half per Cent. Gold bonds repayable in 1953, and for 5,000,000 dols. similar bonds falling due in 1951. The bonds form part of an issue of 20,000,000 dols., and are under the restrictions provided in the mortgage. The issue price is 93⅜ per cent., or equal to £196. 15s. per 1,000 dol. bond. Applications are to be made to the Bank of Montreal, 22, Abchurch-lane, London, E C.

Liverpool Corporation Stock.—The Bank of England are authorised to receive tenders for £1,500,000 of Liverpool Corporation Stock, bearing interest at 2½ per cent. per annum, payable half-yearly. The minimum price of issue is £98 per cent., and the stock is redeemable at par at the option of the Corporation after January 1, 1923. The stock will be secured upon the revenues of the Corporation, and will rank equally with all stock issued by the Corporation under the Liverpool Loan Acts of 1880 and 1894. The proceeds of the present issue are to be applied to tramways, electric lighting, and other purposes.

The American Fisheries Company, Limited.—This Company is formed under the laws of the State of New Jersey, U.S.A., for the purpose of acquiring the principal works and steamers now engaged on the Menhaden fisheries on the Atlantic coast, for the purchase from the Fish Oil and Guano Syndicate, Limited, of the patent rights by the Stanley process for the treatment of fish, fish offal, and fish oils, and for other purposes. The capital is fixed at 10,000,000 dols. in 5 dol. shares, divided into 400,000 Seven per Cent. Cumulative Preference shares, and 1,600,000 Ordinary shares. The present issue is of 200,000 Preference shares, and each subscriber of 100 Preference shares will have the option of subscribing for fifty Ordinary shares at par, viz., £1. 0s. 10d. per share.

This is a Yankee promotion. Our American cousins are not in the habit of selling us the best of their industrial enterprises, and this Fisheries Company is, to say the least of it, a highly speculative venture. It would be as well that the capital should be raised in the States.

Spencer, Santo, & Company, Limited.—With a share capital of £300,000, divided into Preference and Ordinary shares of £1 each, this Company has been formed for the purpose of developing a building estate at Felixstowe and another at Linford, near Tilbury, and to acquire and carry on the building business conducted under the style of Spencer, Santo, & Co.

This is a concern that had far better be left to private enterprise, as it is very speculative. It would have been as well had the returns of the business acquired been given for the past three years, instead of only for thirteen months.

The Sons of Gwalia, Limited.—This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring and developing gold mining leases known collectively as the "Sons of Gwalia," situated near Mount Leonora in the Mount Malcolm district of North Coolgardie Goldfield, Western Australia. The capital is fixed at £300,000 in shares of £1 each, of which £50,000 is provided for working capital. As the whole of the capital has been subscribed, the prospectus is advertised for public information only.

The Central Supply Company, Limited.—With a capital of £200,000, divided into 100,000 Six per Cent. Preference shares and 100,000 Ordinary shares of £1 each, this Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring and carrying on under one management the businesses of provision and general storekeepers and contractors. Thirty retail establishments in various districts of London have been acquired. The present issue is of 65,000 Preference and 50,000 Ordinary shares of £1 each.

MY LETTER BOX.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents :—

GOVERNMENT, &C., BONDS.

Beaulieu.—1. Buenos Ayres Water and Drainage bonds now pay 4 per cent. interest, but the full 5 per cent. dividends will be resumed this year. The sinking fund was suspended by arrangement until January 12, 1901. F. D. E.—The rise in Peruvian Corporation stocks is due to the news of a fresh endeavour on the part of the Peruvian Government to arrange matters with the Corporation.

BANKS, TRUSTS, AND FINANCIAL.

Major, R.A.—What you require has been forwarded in your envelope. Mrs. J., Leeds.—You had better apply to the Court of Chancery. I cannot reply by letter. Moss, Brighton.—Canadian Pacifics, Northern Pacific Prefs., Uruguay Three and a Half per Cent. bonds, Grand Trunk Guaranteed, and Mexican Sixes should suit you. Hifa.—There is no reason why you should not invest in Trust Companies' stocks, if these are well selected. For instance, the Mercantile Investment and General Trust Preferred, which are receiving 5 per cent. interest, are quoted 108-9; the Foreign, American, and General Investment Trust Five per Cent. Preferred stand at 120; and the Four per Cent. Preferred of the Investment Trust Corporation at 102. I suppose this is the kind of yield you require. Nemo, Southampton.—I should not like to take the responsibility of advising investment in this kind of undertaking, for which a great deal more is claimed in the prospectus than it actually merits. T. L. H.—In the case of a speculative account it is generally a custom here for brokers to charge commission on the purchase, and also to charge a small commission on the continuation; but not to charge any commission on the shares when sold. Norman.—I should advise you to have absolutely nothing to do with any of the outside brokers mentioned by you, but to deal only through members of the Stock Exchange. Many of the firms mentioned are in a very precarious position. F. W.—Douglas, Hungerford, and Williams have absconded with all the money, and I understood that the police had taken charge of their offices. If there were any money to get hold of, the Court of Bankruptcy would doubtless have interfered in the matter, but apparently there is nothing to divide. It is a great pity that, in the teeth of my emphatic warnings, you ever had anything to do with these swindlers. Constant Reader, Barrowdale.—I strongly advise you to have nothing to do with the syndicate touts who are working under the name of the "New Limited Syndicate." I already referred to this concern last week, and am again doing so in this issue under "Various Investments." Weekly Investor.—The address of the Investor's Review is Norfolk House, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

CHINA AND GLASS. — Messrs. GOODE, Artists and Designers, solicit an inspection of their collection in their recently-extended South Audley-street premises, now by far the largest and most important in Europe. Messrs. Goode guarantee the excellence of all their productions, and invite a comparison of their prices with those of any co-operative stores.

HOME RAILS.

R. N. P.—Yes, you should certainly hold Great Central 1894 Ordinary, on which another dividend distribution is to come off. The prospects of the line on the completion of the extension to London are moreover excellent.

AMERICAN AND FOREIGN RAILS.

Trust.—There is no objection to your investing in the American Rails, Nos. 1 and 2, mentioned. C. B. W. B.—In view of the very promising present position of American Rails, I should advise you to hold the stock mentioned for a further improvement. Ibis.—The bonds in question are very doubtful, and I have always warned my readers against them. Prospects of the line are very poor. J. W.—1. The fact that the Savannah Company passed its dividend in 1897 has no effect upon Alabama Midland Five per Cent. Gold bonds, as it rather strengthens the guarantee. 2. Certainly hold; the reorganisation of the Baltimore and Ohio can only benefit these bonds. Tulpa.—The American gold bonds and other Debentures mentioned by you will yield about the return required, and they are well selected.

MINING SHARES.

P. H.—Brownhill Central should be held for an improvement, advices from the mine being favourable. Angola.—1. You should certainly hold Randfontein for a rise. 2. The amalgamation of the Hannan's Golden Treasure, Golden Group, and other mines is expected to be completed within the present month, and you should hold. 3. Yes, certainly. 4. No, I should not buy any of these South Africans now. 5. No. Constant Reader, Torquay.—You should not take any notice of this twaddle. The Barnato stocks will no doubt recover in sympathy with the rest of the South African market. Anxious, Cardiff.—On British American Corporation shares 10s. per share was payable on application, and the same sum on allotment. They are, therefore, fully paid, and can be purchased at about 3s. 3d. premium. You would not have to pay for them until the special settlement has been fixed, which will probably be in about two months' time. Leamington.—I stated the position of the Woodstock (Transvaal) in last week's issue under "The Kaffir Circus." You should hold, and buy more to average. 2. The amalgamation of these Companies is to be effected under the auspices of the London and Globe in the course of the present month. Sold.—Hannan's Golden Treasure and Golden Group are not worthless, but are quoted every day on the tape. Moreover, the amalgamation of these with other Companies is to be carried out this month under the auspices of the London and Globe Finance Corporation. T. S. E. M.—Yes, Consolidated Murchison are a good purchase for a rise. Audoenus.—1. All your South African mining shares should be held for a rise. 2. These South African Land and Finance Companies should also be kept for an improvement, including the various Rhodesian shares in which you are interested. 3. Write to the Secretary, at 19, St. Swithin's-lane, E.C. 4. I think you might average Preece's Point (d); but the other shares you should leave alone for the present—at any rate, until more information is available. R. G.—I cannot trace anything with regard to the concern you mention. Ivel.—1. A settlement of the New Ivanhoe Company is expected in a few weeks' time. 2. Another dividend on Lake View Consols should be payable shortly. Spec.—1. Langlaagte Estate shares have not improved, as there is some labour trouble; but as soon as the mine receives its full complement of native labour it is expected to do better again. 3. Langlaagte Star have hardened to 1¾, and the recent returns have been very satisfactory. 4. Langlaagte Block B and Randfontein should be held for a considerable advance. 5. No option but to hold. R. F.—No; I should not advise a further purchase of Hannan's Star. You can do better in the other Westralian shares mentioned in my letter. Dive.—The mine is in a good position and not far from the Sheba, and it is therefore possible that favourable developments may be reported some time or other; but, of course, speculating in mines is not dealing in Consols. The other Company mentioned is a good industrial undertaking, and should turn the corner. L. B.—1. Yes, you had better buy more to average at the present low price. 2. I gave full information in last week's issue under "The Kaffir Circus." 3. Hold; but do not buy more to average yet. Nevada.—You will do well to hold all your mining shares, A, B, and C, for an improvement, the position is much better than would appear on the surface. Castle.—Hold Goldfields of Lydenburg for an advance. Eblana.—I do not think much of the Company in question, and there is very little market for the shares. A. R. E.—You cannot resist the call in question, unless you can prove misrepresentation in the prospectus, and are prepared to incur considerable expense in going to law over the matter, the issue of which would still be very doubtful. New Club.—For the investment of your £1,000 in good, sound, dividend payers in South Africans and Westralians, I should recommend in addition to the shares Nos. 1 to 7 you now hold, and which you should keep, Langlaagte Estate, New Primrose, Goldfields Deep, Barnato Consols, Lake View Consols, Ivanhoe, Associated Gold Mines, Hannan's Brownhill, and Lady Shentons. F. S. H.—You have done quite right in buying Great Boulder, Lady Shenton, Lake View Consols, and Hannan's Brownhill, and I have no doubt that in due time you will see a very considerable profit on your holding. Cestria.—I do not care for the Anglo-Australian Exploration Company. Grand.—1. Yes, I think it is advisable to average Great Fingall Reefs, in view of their improving prospects through their interest in the Sons of Gwalia mine. 2. Impossible to tell. 3. You are quite right, these shares are rubbish. Progress.—I have never held a favourable view of the West Australian Minerals and Finance Company, neither do I like the Lady Montefiore group, and the news about the assays should not be taken as applying to any possible output. The document is returned. T.—1. You should disregard this twaddle. 2. These should come along again. 3. See remarks in last week's issue under "The Kaffir Circus." 4. You are quite right; it is curious that Randfontein should hang fire, but you may be quite sure that eventually they will experience an important improvement. Melampus.—No; I do not hold a favourable opinion of the shares Nos. 1 to 4. Grappler.—The address of the Australian concern is Blomfield House, London Wall, E.C., and the other Mining Company's offices are at 10-11, Austin Friars, E.C.

INDUSTRIAL SHARES.

R. B.—I do not think much of the first-named Company, neither do I consider Swan and Edgar a very good purchase just now. Red Rose.—Yes, this Company is in the hands of the receivers, owing to the non-payment of the interest on the bonds; but I do not consider it advisable to sell now. E. L. H.—I do not think that there is any considerable risk in holding the Brewery shares in question, and you should hold. I cannot advise you as to the Hotel du Nord shares. Swords.—The trouble about French Dunlops is, that they have fared very badly in the French law courts with their patent litigation, and I do not think anything can be done in the way you suggest. Novice, Sheerness.—When a special settlement is granted for a Company, the shares have to be paid for, and the differences adjusted in the dealings which have taken place between the formation of the concern and the settlement. Carnation.—It seems to me that there is no option but to hold the shares Nos. 1 and 2 for a recovery, which is possible, although not immediately expected. G. T. L.—If you are content to await results, I think your selection of American Breweries would be promising. E. S. R.—This Company has not been doing well, and there is no quotation for the shares at present. A Stair Terrier.—The Dwellings' Company is a new undertaking which may work into a favourable position, but at present no results have been achieved. The other concern is one of those Powder Companies which have not as yet met with any success.

MIXED INVESTMENTS.

Investor, Brockley.—1. A good investment. 2. A fair Industrial share. 3. There is nothing against Midland Railway of Canada First Mortgage bonds, which are now quoted 107-9, and there is no reason to sell. 4. A fair investment, but no catch. 5. If you want to buy Grand Trunks, you had better effect a purchase of the Guaranteed and not the Prefs., least of all the junior Prefs. Rovert.—Hold all your South African and Westralian shares for an improvement. I anticipate a further rise in Argentine Government stocks, and if you are not in a hurry you might as well hold for a further profit. Turn over these Grand Trunks at a moderate profit. Princess.—Instead of buying the shares mentioned, you should make a purchase of the Westralians enumerated in my letter. R. N. D.—1. I think your Anglo-American stocks are quite high enough, and you might as well clear your profit. 2. It is still hoped that the reef will be struck. No. 3 should be held, and there is no option but to keep No. 4 in the hope of favourable developments. Kappa.—1. North British are on the up grade, and I advise you to await a further improvement. 2. Grand Trunks may further advance, but, apart from the Guaranteed, I should not hold too long. 3. Uruguay bonds should suit you. 4. These are quite high enough. Y. P. B.—I am glad to hear that you did so well in London and Globes on my advice. 1. There is no option but to hold these Brewery shares. 2. You will find what you require in my letter under "Golden West Australia." For instance, Consolidated Murchison at 6s. 6d. should suit you. P. B. M.—1. No; I should not advise you to average. This is a very disappointing concern, and it would be better to buy something else. 2. A fair industrial investment. S. S. C.—1. Chatham Ordinary are a fair purchase at present price. 2. A fair industrial investment, but no catch. 3. Yes. 4. If it is worth the while of these people to make this offer, it should be worth your while to keep them. Fors.—1. No reason to sell the Deep Level shares or Consolidated Goldfields now; but South African Gold Trusts may as well be sold as you have a fair profit on them. 2. Hold Inter Oceanic of Mexico for an improvement, especially as you have still a considerable loss to cut. 3. Hold Cedulas. O. K.—1. You might buy British America Corporation shares by preference. 2. Yes. 3. Impossible to tell. 4. I do not think much of these. 5. Dividends can hardly be resumed yet. 6. I have a very bad opinion of Artificial Silks. 7. No; I do not hold any better opinion of this concern. 8. I do not think much of this concern. G. S. H.—1. No reason to sell these Debentures. 2. A good American Railroad bond. 3. No reason to sell now. 4. Hold Denver and Rio Grande Fours for a rise. Randfontein.—I cannot tell you why Randfontein do not improve, as the position is promising. German Threes are quite high enough. H. H. H.—I do not advise a purchase of the Australian debentures (1), but there is nothing against London and County Banks (2). The cycle shares, No. 3, are not promising. No. 4 is a fair investment, and No. 5 should move up again, while No. 6 is a fair industrial undertaking. No. 7 is no catch. M. W., Bath.—Grand Trunk Guaranteed are not cumulative, and therefore arrears of interest cannot be paid. They stand each year on separate terms. I cannot tell you yet when the Dunlop Company will pay a dividend this year. Uncertain.—1. You should hold Missouri, Kansas and Texas for an advance. 2. Yes. 3. A fair mining proposition. O. P., Dresden.—Yes, Great Central 1894 Ordinary is in a promising position, and the present price is 44. There is no reason who you should not buy London and Westminster Bank shares, but you must consider the liability. Canadian Pacifics are a good purchase. Saint.—A. An improvement is possible. B. I do not think much of this. C and D. Fair industrial investments. M., Rugby.—The two Industrial Companies first mentioned are fair value. As regards Brum Deferred, it is the Deferred stock of the London and North Western Railway, issued by the Stock Conversion Trust, and the present price is a moderate one.

VARIOUS INVESTMENTS.

Notwithstanding recent withdrawals of gold, and rumours of further shipments, the money market has shown further ease, and the floating balances are so large that short money has in several instances been obtainable at 1 per cent., the ordinary rate being about 1½ per cent. Rates of discount are also easier, three months' bank bills being quoted $2\frac{3}{8}$—$\frac{7}{16}$ per cent. I am still of opinion that these low rates are exceptional, and that in view of the greater activity in trade, we must not look for a continuation of these figures, and even less look for a further decline. After dropping to 112¾, the closing quotation of Consols is 113 for the account. As I anticipated, the negotiations about a Guaranteed Chinese Loan are likely to prove protracted, but there seems a fair chance of the Celestials coming to terms. Silver has improved to 26⅝d., and Rupee Paper is firmer at 63⅜. The Chinese and Japanese Loans have further advanced, the Chinese Silver Loan rising 1 to 102, while Japanese Bonds stand at 102½. In the Cycle section business is still in the dumps. Dunlop Deferred are lower at 10s., French Dunlops 4s. x.d. Humber Ordinary are quoted 15s. 9d., ditto Extensions ½, Cycle Components $2\frac{9}{16}$, Singers ¾, Swifts ¾, Amalgamated Tyres 7s. In the Industrial department dealings have been most active in Schweppes and Bovrils, although the tone finally has become weaker. Schweppe Ordinary are quoted 1¼, ditto Deferred 13s. 6d. Bovrils have fluctuated a good deal on various dividend rumours, but at the last the idea seems to be generally accepted that the Board will pursue a conservative policy by declaring a dividend of from 6 to 7 per cent. on the Deferred, and carrying forward a balance of as much as about £25,000. The Ordinary have given way to 1⅛, the Deferred to 16s. 4½d. Apollinaris-Johannis are also somewhat easier at 13¼. The English Sewing Cotton allotments are still partly in the air, and there has been quite an outcry at the inordinate delay. On the part of the Directors the excuse has been made that there are 36,000 allottees, which had made it quite impossible to despatch the allotment letters earlier. This I cannot agree with, as exceptional arrangements could doubtless have been made to expedite matters. The price of the Ordinary shares is but little better for the week at $\frac{23}{32}$ premium. In Coats Ordinary very little business has been transacted, and the quotation is hardly changed at 63. A third thread "combine" is now on the tapis, which, however, seems only to comprise Irish linen-thread manufacturers. I really think we are getting too many of these combinations, and sooner or later there will be a sharp set-back. Welsbachs have been rather quiet, while Allsopp Ordinary are slightly firmer at 163; but in brewery stocks generally very little business has been transacted. The large business which is being done in oil shares calls for some special notice. As regards Fish Oil shares, this gamble commenced in Dublin, and the quotation was at one time run up to 39, and now stands at 37. The latest development is the flotation of the American Fisheries Company. As regards petroleum Companies, we have the shares of two enterprises very actively dealt in. Russian Petroleum have been rigged to 7¼ premium, and Anglo-Russians, which make rather a bad second, are quoted ¾ premium. A valued correspondent complains of the action of those who are carrying out the amalgamation of the Maxim-Nordenfeldt Company with Vickers & Co. with regard to the Five per Cent. Debenture stock. It appears that the liquidator of the Maxim-Nordenfeldt Company had arranged for the principal of the Five per Cent. Debenture stock, with bonus and interest, to be repaid on the 15th inst., the following being the liquidator's notice:—

> I have made the necessary arrangements for the principal of the Company's Five per Cent. Debenture stock with bonus and interest to be paid off on the 15th inst. . . . . The interest on the Debenture stock would, in accordance with the notice you received (dated December 11, 1897), cease on the Company going into liquidation, but arrangements have been made that you shall receive the interest up to January 15, if the certificates are presented by the 12th inst.

This seems rather sharp practice, as the debenture holders should certainly be entitled to six months' notice of redemption, whereas in the present instance the notice given to the debenture holders was only from December 11 to January 7, and obviously to be told that interest to January 16 is given as a favour is really adding insult to injury. The clause which applies to the question is Clause 5, as endorsed on the certificate, and is as follows:—

> Any portion of the stock shall, on and after the first day of August, 1893, be redeemable at the option of the Company upon six months' notice, expiring on the first day of August, 1893, or thereafter on any of the aforesaid half-yearly days, being given by the Company to the stockholders by payment of the same amount in money as the amount of stock to be redeemed, with the addition of a bonus or premium equal to 5 per cent. upon such amount.

It certainly is a most unwelcome experience for the debenture holders to find that the Company can redeem its debentures at once by going into voluntary liquidation, and thus evade the necessity of giving the six months' notice of redemption, and put a stop to the running of the interest. Clause 6, moreover, says that "the stock to be redeemed shall cease to bear interest from the date fixed for the redemption thereof." I fully endorse the strong view my correspondent takes of this matter, and I think that the Directors ought to have looked after the interests of the debenture holders, as the liquidation clause was doubtless chiefly intended in the case of a compulsory liquidation, and not in the case of an amalgamation such as has now been carried out. I wonder with what success R. A. Smith & Co., Star Chambers, 30, Moorgate-street, E.C., will meet with the touting circulars they are issuing under the headings of "The New Limited Syndicate! A Want of the Period! An Up-to-Date Scheme!" Of course, these people have an "only system," which is to obtain subscriptions from the public for an issue of 5,000 £1 fully-paid shares, for the purpose of dealing in securities for the rise or fall. In fact, it is nothing more or less than the old "blind pool" plan practised by these syndicate touts under a new title. My strong advice to my readers is to have absolutely nothing to do with this "only system." Readers of TRUTH will not be surprised to learn that Errington, Williams, & Co., the syndicate touts, of 53, Warwick-street, Regent-street, have now disappeared. The funny part about it is that another firm of syndicate touts, which is issuing exactly the same circular, has now cropped up under the name of Currie, Sons, & Co., at 30, Craven-street, Strand, W.C. It is needless to warn my readers to steer clear of all these syndicate touts.—Your affectionate uncle, MOSES.

SAHARA (TURKISH) CIGARETTES. Manufactured by W. D. & H. O.
SAHARA (TURKISH) CIGARETTES. WILLS, Ltd., from a special blend
SAHARA (TURKISH) CIGARETTES. of the choicest Turkish Tobacco

All Rights Reserved.

QUEER STORY.

SIR ARCHIE ARMSHILL'S HEIR.

THE following remarkable story reaches me from Scotland; my informant being a friend who lives at Musselburgh. He assures me that every detail can be substantiated, and of his absolute veracity I have no doubt. But it is possible, of course, to believe in the objective facts of a story without necessarily accepting the psychical inferences therefrom desired by the raconteur; and I do not deny that I find myself rather in this position. However, whether these inferences are accepted or not, the facts in themselves are well worth placing on record. I therefore hasten to do so for the benefit of the public. It may be added that my friend is not a literary man, and that the form in which he sent me his story is unsuitable for exact reproduction in print. For this reason, I have found it necessary to re-write and re-arrange it. I have also substituted fictitious names, personal and geographical, for the real ones which my informant sent to me. I can promise, however, that the gist of the story is not thereby affected; and that I have neither added nor suppressed a single material detail. With this slight explanation, let it be presented to the reader thus:—

"Few landowners were better known or more respected in the Lothians than Sir Archie Armshill, of Armshill. He was not a man of great wealth or extensive estates; indeed, his whole domain scarcely extended to 5,000 acres. But he was the head—and worthy head—of one of the best and oldest Lowland families; a family which had been distinguished when many whose chief now disports an Earl's coronet had been insignificant and obscure; a family whereof the then respective heads had fought among the knights at Flodden, and at Pinkie Mains, and whereof a later representative had borne a part—which, save for the powerful intervention of the Buccleuchs, had surely brought him to the block—in the barren victory of Prestonpans.

"In these material and mercenary days, the value of ancient lineage—apart from marketable accessories—is commonly appraised at zero; and it has come to be regarded as a truism (which only a few bigoted idiots will dispute), that a man is to be judged solely by what he is, without any reference to his father—still less to more remote ancestors. But, in point of fact, the verdict is superficial and one-sided. For, surely, it is absurd to press the nothingness of lineage, on the one hand, as it is to press its everythingness (pardon the coinage) on the other. Of course, it is undeniable that many representatives of old families altogether neglect the claims which the distinction of their ancestry imposes on them, and their damnation is thereby increased. It is equally beyond dispute that many others accept and live up to these claims. Sir Archie Armshill was one. The standard of conduct, indeed, which he felt that his pedigree required of him was perhaps an out-of-date standard; but there are many up-to-date standards less satisfactory.

"It required him to do what few mere modern landlords without grandfathers would recognise as incumbent on them. It required him to live on his estate; to spend all his income in the place from which it was derived; to take a fatherly, if somewhat despotic interest in all his tenants and underlings; to keep his honour above reproach; to fight shy of all commercial speculations, and to believe that East Lothian was the finest county in the finest country in the world.

"By this narrow, though honest, standard, he rigidly shaped his life, and all his neighbours respected him accordingly. To be sure, they laughed at his old-fashioned ways, his old-fashioned notions, his old-fashioned clothes. But their laughter was free from malice. And, if they dubbed him a survival, as they often did, they recognised that he was, at least, a very honourable, kindly, dignified, and courteous survival—adjectives by no means always applicable to more up-to-date personages.

Sir Archie was a widower. He had only one child—a son. And with this son the baronet's chiefest trouble in life was associated. The young man, indeed, was not wild, or dissipated, or in any sense of the word vicious. He showed no disposition to squander his father's estate. Nay, he was quite a model of frugality and steadiness. Nor had he any physical infirmity or drawback, such as often comes to curse the heir in whom a family's hope is centred. Both in mind and body he was well above the average. But in one important—an all important—matter, he disappointed the dearest wish of his father's heart. Nothing could induce him to take to himself a wife.

"The reason which kept him single was such as practical folks considered fanciful and absurd. And yet it did a certain credit to the young man's feelings. The facts were these. Some years previously he had formed a romantic attachment for a very sweet and beautiful girl, to whom he became engaged. She was the daughter of a Highland laird, poor, but of as good a family as the Armshills themselves. Both parents approved the match. Sir Archie, in particular, was delighted. This well-bred, penniless Scottish lassie pleased him, as the mother of the future Armshills, fifty times more than the heiress of the richest commercial in the universe would have done. The day for the wedding was fixed, everything was in train; but a terrible calamity intervened. Only a fortnight before she was to have been united to Sir Archie's heir, she contracted a chill, which developed into pleurisy, and caused her death within a few days.

"Her lover bore the blow more calmly than might have been expected, and superficial acquaintances, forming their opinion from his manner, were glad to see how well he was getting over it. Those, however, who understood him, read his calmness in a different light. They knew that he had received a knockdown blow, from which it would take him years to recover; and that, if his outward air was calm and self-restrained, it was simply because of his natural depth of feeling, which ever drew the sorrow inwards, downwards, instead of letting it fly to the surface and there expend itself in froth and turbulence.

"They were right, and more than right. Year after year went by, but the bereaved man showed no signs of regaining the joy he had once felt in life. His mind was as full of his lost sweetheart, as on the day when she had first been taken from him. Sir Archie began to remonstrate with his son, at first gently, afterwards with more insistence. He pointed out that such nursing of an old grief was morbid, and even wrong; that, however much his son's feelings had been lacerated, this did not absolve him from the duties of life; that it now behoved him to face those duties like a man. And no duty, Sir Archie urged, was more imperative on him than that of marriage. He was the last Armshill in the direct line, and, if he left no son, the name and title would become extinct upon his death; and the estates, held by Armshills for four hundred uninterrupted years, would pass into the hands of strangers.

"'Come, Archie,' the baronet would say, 'remember the family, lad; choose out some nice girl, and make her your wife.'

"And his son would answer, sighing—his answer was always the same—

"'By-and-bye, father; by-and-bye; when I can bring myself to think a little less of her!'

"So things went on, and the 'by-and-bye' never arrived. Young Armshill was young no longer. He had reached the age of forty; yet the prospect of his marrying seemed not a day nearer. Poor Sir Archie fell into a condition of despondency and despair, which excited the pity of all who knew him.

"Matters were in this state, when, one morning, the baronet received a call from a strange gentleman. The card which he sent in bore the inscription 'The Count del Castel Buono,' and was accompanied by a message from the visitor, that although he had not the honour of Sir Archie's acquaintance, he begged to be allowed to see him on important business. Sir Archie directed the butler to show him in. A minute later this was done. The baronet was at once struck, though not very favourably impressed, by the man's appearance. He was tall, swarthy, with long black hair, glittering, dark eyes, and, as regards attire, decidedly rakish and Bohemian.

However, his voice, when he spoke, was pleasant and agreeable, and his manner was easy and courteous.

"'I owe you many pardons for this intrusion,' he said, with a slightly foreign accent. 'But I am encouraged in calling upon you by the thought—I may say, the conviction—that I have it in my power to do you a great service.'

"'Indeed?' Sir Archie remarked, stiffly.

"'And yet I do not pretend,' the stranger went on, 'that I come to you from simply philanthropic motives. I can only afford to do you this great service on certain terms.'

"'Would it not be better for you to explain at once what this service is that you are willing to do me—on certain terms?' suggested the Baronet, with some coldness.'

"'I will,' said the stranger, fixing his keen eyes full on Sir Archie's face. 'It is a service in connection with—your son.'

"Sir Archie was somewhat taken aback. He had not expected an answer of this description, and he merely said, 'Oh!' because, at the minute, he had nothing else to say.

"The stranger went on, speaking more volubly and vehemently.

"'The cruel disappointment which your son causes you by remaining unmarried may—if you wish—be removed once and for all. He may be—nay, he will be—married within the year to a young Scottish lady of a family as old as your own—if you accept my terms and avail yourself of my services."

"He spoke with an energy of conviction that impressed the baronet in spite of himself.

"'A most extraordinary offer, sir, upon my word!' he ejaculated. And then he added, in a tone of incredulous irony, 'And who is this young Scottish lady, pray, that you have in your mind's eye, and how do you propose to effect her union with my son?'

"'Ah!' said the stranger, 'you do not believe me, Sir Archie Armshill. You think, I expect, either that I am crazy, or that I am merely making this a stalking-horse for the perpetration of some fraud. Now, how am I to convice you of my sanity and my honesty? What proofs do you require?'

"'I should wish, first of all, to know the name of the young lady.'

"'And I will tell you; for I know you to be a man of honour, Sir Archie, and I can trust you to treat my communication as confidential. Are you acquainted, may I ask, with Guthrie of Tweeddale Haugh?'

"'Not personally; but by name, of course. He is head of one of the best Border families.'

"'The best—in his opinion,' said the other, smiling. 'And he has, as perhaps you are aware, an only daughter, aged about twenty-two, whose circumstances bear a strange resemblance to those of your son. She, too, lost her affianced husband by death, within a few weeks of the day fixed for their marriage, and she has now sunk into a state of melancholy which, if not soon arrested, must result in the loss of her reason, perhaps of her life. Her father has consulted all the best doctors and tried every conceivable remedy, without avail. But I have seen him, and have undertaken to cure her—on certain terms—which he has accepted.'

"'And—and is this Miss Guthrie, this girl who is in danger of losing her reason, and perhaps her life, the lady whom you propose to induce my son to marry?'

"'She is. But let me explain. I propose to cure her absolutely before she marries. In fact, the love for your son which I mean shall be aroused in her, is to be actually the means by which her cure shall be affected.'

"'You have a strange confidence in your own powers, sir, I must say. How do you propose to arouse this love for my son in the young lady? And, equally, how do you propose to arouse love for her in my son?'

"'That is my secret. It shall be revealed to you on the day when the wedding takes place.'

"Sir Archie was silent for several minutes. Had this man really the power which he professed to have? Psha! Absurd! Impossible! Yet there was something about him that fascinated and impressed one, even against one's will. And Guthrie had accepted his services. But had Guthrie accepted them? Or was this merely a story—part of some cunning design? That point must first be elucidated.

"'You will pardon my caution,' he said at length. 'But this arrangement which you have entered into with Guthrie, of Tweeddale Haugh—I have only your word for it.'

"'Just so,' was the reply. 'But I have no objection to your corresponding with him, in confidence. He is already aware that I have your son in my mind's eye for his daughter; and I was to write and tell him this evening how you received the proposal.'

"'Umph! . . If the lady's health were all right, the match would be unexceptionable,' said Sir Archie musingly and half to himself.

"'I am glad you think so. Guthrie takes the same view. He has a high opinion of your family. Will you write to him and verify my statement?'

"'Yes,' replied Sir Archie, after some reflection. Then he added, 'You spoke of terms. What are your terms, sir?'

"'Two thousand pounds, to be paid on the wedding day,' answered the stranger, promptly.

"'And if you fail, and there is no wedding day?'

"'Nothing,' was the equally prompt reply. 'But I shall not fail. Be quite sure of that. Then you will write to Guthrie? And shall I call again in two days' time, when you have had his answer? Very well. By the way—one thing more. Have you a photo of the girl to whom your son was engaged?'

"'There are several about the house—in fact, there is one there, upon the mantelpiece," replied Sir Archie, not a little astonished by such a peculiar question.

"'That one, there? Pray allow me to look at it for a minute.'

"He caught up the frame, carried it to the window, and studied the photograph carefully. Indeed, Sir Archie could not help noticing—and he often afterwards recalled the fact—that the man's glittering eyes seemed literally to devour the picture.

"'She must have been very beautiful, if this is a good likeness,' he remarked, at length.

"'She was very beautiful. It is an excellent likeness,' said Sir Archie.

"'Good. The better the likeness, the easier—— However, I will not now detain you longer. You may expect me again the day after to-morrow. Good-day.'

"And having replaced the photo on the mantelpiece, he bowed himself out without further remark.

"Sir Archie wrote to Guthrie that evening. But next day, being in a state of increased perplexity about the extraordinary stranger's extraordinary proposal—which somehow had impressed him far more than he would have cared to admit—he took train to Tweeddale Haugh himself, in order to have a personal interview with the laird of that village.

"Guthrie corroborated the Count del Castel Buono's statements entirely, as far as they concerned himself. He admitted that he had struck a bargain with the fellow—of whom, however, he knew nothing—to cure his daughter of the melancholy which had overtaken her. He admitted also that the Count had promised to do so by creating a mutual love affair between the young lady and Sir Archie's son.

"'I dare say you will think me mad,' he said, 'for thus allowing myself to become implicated with a stranger, who undertook what to the reasonable mind seems absurd and impossible. Yet I was at my wit's end about my poor Lena. No doctor could benefit her, and I said to myself, 'This fellow can but fail to do what he promises.' Besides, I will not deny that the Count—if Count he is—influenced me strangely; seemed to cast a sort of spell over me. I can't say how it is; but he has almost forced me to believe in him.'

"'Very strange. He has affected me in the same way,' said Sir Archie. 'In spite of the absurd impracticability of what he undertakes, I am somehow convinced—against my own reason—that he will carry it out.'

The Famed "Adelphi" Turtle forwarded from the Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool, to all parts of the country. Per quart jar, 18s.; per pint jar, 9s. 6d., carriage paid.

"A little later, after further conversation, Guthrie observed to the baronet:—

"'I have the highest opinion of your family, Sir Archie, and nothing would please me better than the proposed alliance.'

"'I fully reciprocate the sentiment,' rejoined the other with a courtly bow.

"Then the two lairds shook hands.

"'People would doubtless vote us two silly old fools for listening to such a man,' said Guthrie. 'Yet if he does offer a chance of happiness to both our families, why not accept it, say I.'

"'Ah! why not?' assented Sir Archie, thoughtfully.

* * * * *

"For lack of space, it is quite impossible to describe the events of the next fortnight. Suffice it to say that by the end of that time, Guthrie and his daughter Lena found themselves Sir Archie's guests at Armshill House. Their visit was one of the conditions which the Count del Castel Buono had laid down as indispensable to the success of his scheme. The Count himself formed one of the party, being described to the young people as an old Italian friend of Armshills, whose acquaintance the baronet had made in Rome many years ago, and whom he now wished to requite for many kind offices then done to him by the Count.

"On the second evening of their visit, Armshill's son—to his father's great surprise; for the younger man had not hitherto been able to endure seeing any one at the piano, where his lost sweetheart had so often sung to him—suggested music, and turning to Miss Guthrie, asked her to favour them.

"Guthrie was astonished to see his daughter smile acquiescence, then rise to comply with the invitation.

"Young Armshill opened the piano, lighted the candle, and stood by her while she sang, asking for song after song. At each request she looked up at him and smiled, and he smiled in response. It was as if these two melancholy creatures had been suddenly transformed.

"The Count sat between the two lairds. He watched the young people at the piano with glittering eyes.

"'Ah!' he said, after a while. 'The spell works. But, for Heaven's sake, notice nothing, gentlemen; and make no remark.'

"Then, by and bye, he added:—

"'If you hear from them, as I think you soon will, something that will strike you as very astonishing, betray no surprise—as you value the success of our project.'

"It was as well that this warning was given. For Lena Guthrie, when she drew her father aside to wish him good-night, flung her arms round his neck, and, with heightened colour and sparkling eyes, whispered in his ear:—

"'Oh, dad, did you ever see such a likeness? Mr. Armshill is the living image of—him.'

"And young Archie Armshill, alone in the smoking-room with his sire, smoked three cigarettes in dead silence. Then, apropos of nothing, he exclaimed suddenly:

"'Father, you could not fail to notice it, could you? She—she—is my own darling come to life again!'

* * * * *

"Let the reader picture to himself the wedding which took place six months later at Tweeddale Haugh. When it has been said that both bride and bridegroom looked radiantly happy, the only material point in that connection has been stated.

"But there is one more important item to chronicle: viz., an interview which took place on the afternoon of the wedding day, in Guthrie's library. The two lairds, and the Count del Castel Buono were the only persons present. The Count, who had just pocketed two cheques, each for £2,000, delivered himself thus:—

"'In accordance with my promise, gentlemen, I will now explain to you how I worked the spell. It has been purely a matter of mental magnetism. You will remember, Mr. Guthrie, that I requested you to show me a likeness of Miss Lena's dead lover; and you, also, will remember, Sir Archie, that I made a similar request of you in respect of your son's deceased fiancée. I carefully studied those photos, and in a few minutes, the likenesses were faithfully impressed upon my mind. . . . . My next step was to exercise upon the young people my extraordinary magnetic influence in the particular way required. It may seem strange to you. It may seem incredible. I myself do not profess to understand the mysterious influence. I only know that I have it. And I know also that over self-centred and morbid natures its power is practically unlimited. To that fact I owe much of my success in the present instance. But I was also assisted by this other circumstance, that the likenesses of their lost sweethearts were still wide awake in the young people's memories. And thus I had not to recreate or revivify these likenesses in them, but simply to will their transference to living objects. How? In what way did the influence work? Ah! I wish I could answer you. I am only conscious of the power. I leave it to wiser men than I to analyse the process.'"

ART NOTES.

MR. DAVID SELLAR is an excessively bold and daring man. He is more temerarious even than the young Shepherd King of Judah, whose front name he bears. The original David, it will be remembered, defied only one giant of Gath. But here we have this modern David defying, not one, but a score of our critical Goliaths, and pelting them, not with pebbles, but with pictures. So far, however, I am bound to say the Goliaths are getting the best of it. They are still maintaining a bold front, and David, in his "helmet of brass" (which, unlike his namesake, he has not discarded), is able to make no impression on their hard heads with the assertions he so audaciously slings out of his catalogue. The fact is that on the present occasion there is not even the faintest chance of Mr. Sellar obtaining a victory. He has by publicly exhibiting the pictures which the City of London declined with thanks, virtually appealed to Cæsar, and without doubt judgment has gone against him. His Old Masters will not do at any price, not even at the price which was bid for them when some of them were withdrawn from sale at Christie's. Old Masters, forsooth! If they ever painted many of the daubs exhibited in their names they must have been not only old but positively in their artistic dotage at the time they did so. Heaven knows the Old Masters have enough to bear upon their belabourred and overladen backs already. But to have the Sellar collection fastened upon them is rather too much of a last straw.

But for my part I am not inclined to be too hard upon Mr. David Sellar. For one thing it is surely a work of needless excess to break a butterfly upon the wheel. For another, Mr. Sellar has given us what we rarely get in going the interminable round of picture-shows—he has provided us with what is really an exceedingly funny exhibition. His catalogue contains bright flashes of unintentional humour—as, for example, when it states in italics in a note to No. 276, a so-called painting by Watteau "There is a copy of this picture in the Dulwich Gallery;"—and the walls of the Grafton Gallery are covered with screaming jokes. Of all the staggerers which strike one in a rapid walk round there is perhaps none more staggering than No. 301 "Robinetta, by Sir Joshua Reynolds." This the catalogue tells us, "is a replica of the picture in the National Gallery." And I notice that in a recent interview Mr. Sellar asserts, with regard to this statement, that he cannot see "that one picture can be called more genuine than the other." Now I have no doubt whatever that Mr. Sellar makes this assertion in all good faith. But unfortunately this allowance of his good faith can only be made at the expense of his judgment. By this one admission of his, that, as far as he can see his "Robinetta" is as genuinely a Sir Joshua as the one in Trafalgar-square, he completely gives himself away as a picture buyer. It is quite easy after that to understand how he got together the extraordinary collection of pictures which he is now exhibiting with a confidence the naïveté of which it is impossible to impair. A man who admits that he does not see any difference between an atrociously bad copy and an indubitable original is but too clearly tempting fate when he goes buying "Old Masters" on his own account. So let us leave Mr. David Sellar with his pictures that are many of them not good enough to hang, and which, but for the sake of their frames, perhaps, it might be advisable to burn. But I may at least add a recommendation to the public to pay a visit to the Grafton Gallery. They will by so doing aid a deserving charity, and can scarcely fail to pass an exceedingly amusing half-hour.

When Munkacsy's "Ecce Homo!" was exhibited in Buda Pesth the effect it produced upon the pious people of that city was such that the gallery became a sort of shrine. In a lesser degree this is what the Dowdeswell Gallery has for a time been turned into now that the above famous painting is on view there. Visitors sit in a subdued light gazing at the picture, and if they venture to talk at all only do so in the faintest whispers. There is an unmistakable feeling in the air of being in church, and the obtrusion of an offertory bag would not, I think, cause the slightest surprise. As a matter of fact, however, "Ecce Homo" is a picture that does not need these adventitious aids to popularity. It is a remarkable work from the brush of a remarkable artist, whose mental collapse immediately after he had completed his great task invests his pathetic subject with a yet deeper pathos. To describe a picture that all London is likely to see is unnecessary. All I need do here is to acknowledge the success with which Munkacsy in dealing with so frequently painted a subject, has steered his way between the fantastic over-sentimentality of the older masters and the crude naturalism with which it is the fashion for many contemporary artists to deal with the more dramatic incidents in the life of Christ. Many will note the curious resemblance between Munkacsy's central figure and the one in Guido's well-known "Ecce Homo" in the Corsini Palace at Rome. But this detracts but little from the general excellence of a picture in which it may fairly be considered that the genius of Michael de Munkacsy reached its high-water mark.

MUSIC.

THE CHEAP CONCERT MOVEMENT.

As was anticipated when the cheap Sunday orchestral and choral performances created a demand for inexpensive concerts, the absurdly high prices charged by London managers are rapidly coming down. No one is quicker to recognise the signs of the times than Mr. Robert Newman, and accordingly, for the series of Queen's Hall Symphony Concerts which started last Saturday, he provided 2,000 seats at charges varying from 1s. to 3s. He had his reward, for he filled every cheap seat, although a considerable number of the higher-priced places were vacant. Some of the other serial concerts must follow suit, unless they can put forward a "star" conductor or other special attraction. Mr. Schulz-Curtius with Mottl (and perhaps also with Richard Strauss and Weingartner, although this, of course, has to be proved by the experience of time), and Mr. Vert with Richter, are doubtless safe enough at the old prices; while the Philharmonic Society manage to keep up the public interest by securing the services, either gratuitously or at a much lower figure than any other concert managers can obtain them, of some star composer or executant at each performance. But the Lamoureux Concerts, like those directed by Mr. Wood, have wisely come down in price, and others must follow, unless, like the Henschel, the Colonne, the Nikisch, and other enterprises, they prefer to disappear altogether. People who can hear Mr. Wood's orchestra of ninety players in a first-rate symphony programme at Queen's Hall on Sunday afternoons at from sixpence to three shillings, cannot be expected to pay more than double those prices to hear the self-same band (increased by thirteen players) also under Mr. Wood, on week days. The bandsmen may regret it, for their fees must inevitably be lowered; although as it was they who began the game by accepting half fees for Sunday performances they have little title to complain. Managers need not regret it, for in compensation for the drop in prices their audiences will be much larger; while, from the public point of view the change is all for the best, as tending further to popularise music and to place its highest examples within the reach of the multitude.

London is the only city in Europe where these nonsensical prices are still attempted. For years managers treated Londoners as fools. The late Sir Charles Halle charged 12s. 6d. for stalls for his London concerts, while his self-same orchestra, with better programmes, gave similar concerts in Manchester for 7s. 6d. M. Lamoureux asked twice the price in London for the concerts with his Parisian band that he charged in Paris itself. Except on rare occasions, 5s. is the highest price asked in Berlin for orchestral concerts, while the best seats for most pianoforte recitals are fixed at 3s. Yet, when the same pianist comes here, he blandly asks half-a-guinea, attributing a half-empty hall to the fact that the British are not a musical nation. Even now, however, with the wisdom of the serpent, some of these recital-givers are willing enough to take lower prices more or less surreptitiously, and to sell for half-a-crown apiece to schoolmistresses tickets which, I fear, often figure in school bills at the full half-guinea. The Crystal Palace was the pioneer of the cheap orchestral concert movement, and if it were not so badly served by the railway companies it might still keep the lead. The best seats at the Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts cost by subscription only about three shillings each; but when the journey involves hanging about draughty railway-stations, and (the distance is, I believe, about six miles as the crow flies) a detention in a railway-carriage for something like forty minutes each way, not even the conducting of Mr. Manns can always charm a full audience from town on a winter's afternoon. The Alexandra Palace is to reopen at Easter, but here, again, will have to be faced the railway difficulty, which in the seventies rendered nugatory the best efforts of Sir Edward Lee, Mr. Alfred Emden, and the late Weist Hill. Town concert managers are, however, better placed, and their retention of prohibitive concert prices is an absurdity.

The high prices are fast driving oratorio altogether out of the West End of London. For this, no doubt, the rapacity of vocalists is partly responsible. In the palmy days of oratorio the average fees of leading vocalists at the Sacred Harmonic Society were eight guineas, and only great stars like Sims Reeves and Sainton Dolby got fifteen, which was the top price. These facts I can personally prove by several of the receipt-books of the society now in my possession. Nowadays we hear of prominent vocalists asking a hundred guineas a night and more. Yet oratorio at fair prices is possible in the country. At Manchester next Saturday, for example, I see the Philharmonic Society announce a performance of Handel's "Samson," with a band and chorus of 300, the chief vocalists being Mme. Ella Russell, Mme. Marian McKenzie, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. Santley, and the highest price of the best reserved seats being four shillings. If this be possible in Manchester, the public would like to know how comes it that it is impossible in London.

It is, I believe, a fact that the Pinero-Carr-Sullivan opera is much more, and the Sullivan Leeds cantata much less, forward than most people imagine. Indeed, if I am rightly informed, there is the best of all possible reasons for the secrecy which has hitherto been observed concerning the subject chosen for the Leeds Festival. On the other hand, the Savoy opera must either be produced at or about Easter, in order to give it a fair chance of a run before the hot June causes the inevitable slump in theatrical receipts; or it must be reserved for the autumn, when it, of course, would run through the winter. Meanwhile, I hear "The Grand Duchess" is doing very well, the more especially as amply-justified reports of the blameless character of the performance have attracted strait-laced people to whom Offenbach was formerly only a name.

The Greatest of all Pianofortes. — The Steinway Pianofortes. New York and London.

M. Carré of the Vaudeville has been appointed Carvalho's successor as director of the Paris Opéra Comique. On the very day he took possession he found, doubtless to his astonishment, that the prima donna rehearsing Gluck's "Orphée" was an English vocalist, Miss Marie Brema, who, at her début last Monday, was the first of our countrywomen within living memory to sing a chief part at this subsidised house.

Many of his old pupils and friends will be sorry to learn of the death in London last week of Ettore Fiori, for nearly a quarter of a century one of the leading professors of singing at the Royal Academy of Music. Fiori was not of the newer school, who are continually bombarding the newspapers with letters and paragraphs in the hope of seeing their names in print. But in his time he, nevertheless did a great deal of useful, if unostentatious, work.

Among the letters I have received concerning the "Woes of Organists" is a long one from an "F.R.C.O." of wide experience. He declares that, with few exceptions, the only musical position in which a man of any refinement can be happy is that of master on the staff of one of our public schools. Such a man does not, it is true, make money, but he finds himself in congenial surroundings. My correspondent has just lost his berth, his old school being unable any longer to afford the luxury of a special master on this subject. Rather, therefore, than "face the music" as a parish organist, he has accepted a post in the Colonies. He adds:—

> I could give many reasons which ought to make any thoughtful parent hesitate before bringing up his son to meet such a hopeless future: e.g., the patronising manner of the clergy, sometimes scarcely to be distinguished from insolence, their unbusinesslike and crooked ways; the treatment of composers by publishers, who get possession of their works and pay little or nothing for them; the certainty that, unless you push, push, push, run down your competitors, exalt yourself, wear your hair long, and are ready to play any monkey tricks that catch the public of the baser sort, you are not in the running. All these things, and many more, make the organist's life one in which no man of really sensitive character has any chance of happiness, to say nothing of success.

Dr. Monk, of Truro, has, by the way, issued a learned and very interesting account of the present "status" of the cathedral organist and of whence his position was derived. It depends very much whether his cathedral is on the "Old" or the "New" Foundation. It seems that the statutes in force in the Old Foundation cathedrals date back nearly 600 years, and they, of course, have no mention of the organist, for in those days there was no organ to play, and the music, which was mainly vocal, was directed by a monk. Accordingly in the "Old" Foundation the organist really has no status at all. These cathedrals, according to Dr. Monk's learned communication to Musical News, are York, St. Paul's, Lichfield, Lincoln, Hereford, Wells, Salisbury, Exeter, Chichester, and the four cathedrals in Wales. All the other cathedrals are on the "New" Foundation, and were thus established by Henry VIII. They were previously either monastic churches, such as Gloucester, Peterborough, &c., or were cathedrals originally served by canons or monks, such as Canterbury. In the days of Henry VIII. the organ was an instrument worthy of respect, and organists were duly provided for on the "New" Foundation. Accordingly, it would seem that, in regard to the "Old" Foundation cathedrals, the Dean and Chapter have practically a free hand; whereas in cathedrals of the "New" Foundation they have no legal right to appoint an organist at three months' notice, or in any other way than on the Foundation. As, however, in several cases, the organist himself recently has consented to a three months' notice (or, in other wise, has sold his birthright), he has placed himself morally, if not legally, out of court.

In reference to my remarks last week concerning the conditions upon which the Church Army seek to engage an organist, Mr. C. Powis Whittaker writes to me as follows:—

> As the retiring organist of St. Mary-at-Hill, I trust you will allow me to state that I do not hold the post on the terms now advertised, and am not the half-clerk, half-organist, half-bedroom sharer, and, may I add, whole slave, that is evidently required.

The Bach Choir this year propose to devote themselves principally to the performance of Requiems. Dr. Stanford's Requiem will be the first put in hand, and will be produced at the concert on March 8. In the following month Brahms' Requiem will be performed by the Bach Choir. There are, however, indications that this rage for "Requiems" is on the wane. The public have never taken to them, and, after all, composers who wish their works to be heard have to reckon with a popular prejudice, that a "Requiem" is not necessarily an exhilarating after-dinner entertainment.

The delightful story which came to the daily papers through various "own correspondents" from Berlin in regard to the discovery of a setting of Goethe's "Erl King" by Beethoven, turns out to be a mare's nest. Sir George Grove points out that the sketch—for the music is but a sketch, and has been finished by Herr Becker—has been known to Beethoven students for at least the past quarter of a century. Indeed, it was reproduced in the first volume of Nottebohm's "Beethoveniana" issued as far back as 1872. Sir George Grove very properly adds that Beethoven's sketches were frequently so much altered by himself that they but imperfectly conveyed what the piece might arrive at before he had done with it. So that, however clever Herr Becker's treatment of the materials may be, it is probably a very different thing from what Beethoven himself would have made it before giving it to the world.

The new Erard Hall is likely to become a favourite place for pianoforte recitals and smaller concerts. Mr. Daniel Mayer has already secured a licence for it on condition that certain alterations rightly insisted upon by the County Council are made. These alterations are now in progress, and they include an entirely new staircase and entrance to the hall. It is supposed that the building will be ready for occupation early in March, or, at any rate, before the new season commences.

Mr. G. B. Allen, whose death at Brisbane has just been announced, had, according to his own account (which perhaps Mr. D'Oyly Carte may not altogether endorse), a good deal to do with the original idea of the Gilbert and Sullivan operas. Allen, who had travelled with a light opera company through Australia with his pupil, Miss Alice May, was wont to aver that it was he who placed before Mr. D'Oyly Carte the idea to induce Sullivan and Gilbert to write "The Sorcerer." It is against this theory that Gilbert, Sullivan, and Carte were associated in "Trial by Jury," produced at the Royalty some years previously. However, G. B. Allen was the first conductor of the Gilbert and Sullivan operas in the old opera comique days, and it was he who directed the musical rehearsals and performances of "The Sorcerer," "H.M.S. Pinafore," and the "Pirates of Penzance." In "The Sorcerer" too Miss Alice May was the original Aline. Afterwards, Allen left the country to tour in America and elsewhere, and he then dropped out of the D'Oyly Carte business. He was born in 1822, and was originally a choir boy at Westminster Abbey. When only a lad of twelve, it is said, he was so musically smart that he was able to take the place of Clara Novello; reading at sight at a concert some music which, owing to indisposition, she was unable to undertake. Allen spent some years in Ireland, and he claimed to be the originator of the idea of the building of Ulster Hall, Belfast. He wrote a vast quantity of church and stage music, and about 300 songs. But he will chiefly be recollected from his early connection with Gilbert and Sullivan.

"The Sorcerer," by the way, was originally produced by the Comedy Opera Syndicate, the leading spirits of which were the late Mr. Frank Chappell, of Metzler's, and Mr. E. H. Bayley, formerly a Liberal M.P. Mr. Carte was salaried manager for a year. After the first year he severed his connection with the syndicate, took the lease of the Opera Comique, and went into partnership with Gilbert and Sullivan, each taking a third, and the authors, I fancy, likewise taking certain fees. Each author for some years drew over £20,000 a year from the enterprise. Mr. Bayley temporarily removed "Pinafore" to the Imperial Theatre (the Opera Comique version still running), and on the night of the first performance at the Imperial, Augustus Harris, then a struggling youngster, came into the stage box and, to the immense amusement of every one present, announced he had that day signed the lease of Drury Lane.

KINAHAN'S LL WHISKY.—"The Cream of Old Irish Whiskies." Kinahan's LL Whisky. Gold Medal Paris Exhibition, 1878. Kinahan's Glenisle Whisky. The Finest Scotch Whisky sold.

Somebody has been going through the statistics from the Musical Directory. He discovers that there are something like 16,000 professors of music in this country, whose names are mentioned in the directory, while, no doubt (as musicians are proverbially careless in such matters), there must be a good many more, whose addresses are unrecorded. We have in London alone something like 5,500 teachers and professors, besides 2,000 orchestral instrumentalists, including 700 violinists and 70 orchestral drum players. We may not be a musical nation. But in the number of our drummers it seems that we lead the world.

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—We have had a week's darkness in town, and though we do not grudge brightness to others, it is rather tantalising to hear from friends at Southsea, Brighton, and elsewhere, of the brilliant sunshine they are enjoying. We are great lovers of sunshine, as you know, and we feel almost as if we were being defrauded of our lawful share. Bee and I went to Turnham Green the other morning to inquire after the character of a servant, and it was quite a curious experience to gradually emerge from the fog that enveloped London and find ourselves at last in the prime of a sweet spring morning with birds singing, trees waving, white clouds chasing each other over the blue sky, and green things beginning to sprout in the gardens of the houses we passed. It made us actually long to live in the country, much as we love our interesting and absorbing London.

I had to go out on Wednesday morning and suddenly it became so black that literally I could not see a yard in front of me. I ran up against a woman, and, apologising, was answered by a voice of most doleful misery, "Oh, ain't it dreadful?" There was no fog, only darkness. It was a strange experience.

We went to a wedding on one of the worst days and had to grope for the bride when we arrived at the house to offer our congratulations. Something had happened to the electric light, and the darkness of the prettily decorated rooms was pitiful. The poor bride in her whiteness had a dismal, almost tawdry look, as her friends found her in the gloom and gathered round her. She almost wept, and was probably only restrained from doing so by the reflection that tears are now considered dowdy at a wedding.

By the way, dear, she followed the prevailing fashion and wore as many turquoises as she found herself possessed of during the ceremony. For luck, you know! You must not forget this important matter at your own wedding, the time for which is now drawing so near.

I wish you had been with us at a morning performance of "The Babes in the Wood," at Drury Lane. The sight of the happy children and the sound of their pretty laughter are good specifics against low spirits, and for any one who inclines to take a morbid view of things, I can imagine no better prescription than a visit to the pantomime. The intense appreciation the children showed of Dan Leno's fun almost equalled their joy in the clown. The panorama of the wood in which the babes were lost is a beautiful bit of sylvan illusion, and the youthful audience was much impressed by the giants and the elves and gnomes who dwelt therein. The elders enjoyed the forest scenery more, and the wonderful orchid scene. It was amusing to hear the youngsters' comments in the vestibule as they were rushed through by careful parents, anxious to get them housed and fed. "What a great big girl babe," said one small child. "But wasn't she pretty?" said another, adding, "What a sweet pink frock it wore!" The pronoun fitted Mr. Herbert Campbell so ill that we found it a good joke.

You ask if trains are coming in for walking dresses No! It is unfortunately true that trains of a moderate character are being introduced for house dresses, but it is still the smart thing to have the walking skirts lifted well off the ground. Flounces are to be the great feature of coming fashions, as you may already have heard. Three are to be the orthodox number. For instance, a purple cloth is made with this triple arrangement, the flounces being graduated in width. They are lined with a new and curious shade of blue, which, though not pale in the least, has yet a touch of green in it. The little jacket is tight-fitting, and has revers to match the flounces, also lined with blue. They are bordered with fur, and the collar, you will be pleased to hear, is not extraordinarily high, but yet sufficiently protective. As this is a new Paris model, it almost seems as though the horrid storm collar were approaching its doom. One sees such dreadful burlesques of it on Sarah Jane and 'Arriet as to be convinced of a speedy end to the hideous thing.

The rage for chinchilla is still on the increase, and I am sure you will not regret choosing grey cloth and this sweet fur for your travelling costume. Every third gown one sees in smart assemblies is grey, and the fashion extends to notepaper. A rather dead and unresponsive shade is in great favour for this purpose, particularly for invitation size.

At the Princess's the other night we saw a most delicious and covetable evening cape. It was made of turquoise velvet with a yoke of dark peacock velvet encrusted with jet. The whole thing was lined with white satin and trimmed with sable. A very deep and full collar of old lace filled it in at the neck and flowed in a cascade down the front. There is a special art in arranging this lace. If it is allowed to be at all wild it is far from becoming. The dresses worn by the villainess in the play are lovely. I fancy they are Paquin's, and they enjoy an added grace from the beautiful figure of the wearer, who is very tall, slight, and well proportioned. One is in bright red crêpe-de-chine with waving lines of insertion let in and draped most admirably. It seems to have been cut out in a circle like the umbrella skirts of two or three seasons since, but instead of sticking out like them it falls in natural folds to the feet.

As it might be useful, sometimes, to know the right kind of frock to commit a murder in, it may interest you to hear that the villainess dons a bright green crêpe trimmed with a deep flounce to the knees of cream-tinted lace all a-glitter with jewels. There was quite a fashionable audience to see "How London Lives," and the woes of the heroine drew tears from many bright eyes.

We are going to have a lesson in Indian cookery on the 26th, at Debenham & Freebody's. The dishes to be taught by Mr. Veerasawmy, the Hindoo chef, are mulligatawny, curried prawns with rice à l'Indienne, a vegetable pasty, and three curried entrées. We shall feel so accomplished when we know how to prepare all these good things, that you will probably find us somewhat conceited when you visit us on your way home after your wedding tour.

By the way, dear, you are rather out of the fashion in marrying a man a few years older than yourself. During the last twelve months it has been the vogue for the bridegroom to be several years younger than the bride. It is curious how these things come in cycles. Every one has been noticing it of late.

What strange reasons people have for falling in love with each other! The very latest on record is that of FASHIONS UP TO DATE.—An elegant and svelte figure is produced by the easy and perfect-fitting anatomical corset shaped by the experts, Mesdames SYKES, JOSEPHINE, & Co., The Celebrated Anatomical Corsetières, 280, Regent-st., Oxford-circus, London. W.

Lady Ernestine Bruce, who, being unable to become a master sailor herself, married a young sailor who could. You will have read all about it in the papers. I am nearly certain the Lady Clifford, widow of Sir Spencer Clifford, once Black Rod, managed to get a certificate as master mariner.

I want to tell you about a lovely evening dress I saw a few days ago. It was a small poem in its way. The under-skirt was white satin, over which fell a veil of pleated grey tulle, through which the white gleamed softly. The bodice was made simply enough in folds of grey over white satin, and caught in at the waist by a band of white satin embroidered in silver and steel. Across the front of the low corsage was a band of old Venetian point rising high in the centre, and with the design lightly outlined with silver. The sleeves were short, and consisted of waves of the tulle over satin edged with silver fringe and embroidered with silver and steel. A single row of pearls was worn with this lovely dress.

I hear that white silk dresses trimmed with black lace are to be very much the fashion next season. It would be well to pick up some black lace cheap during the cheap sales to utilise in this way. Three flounces on a white skirt, and the bodice draped with the lace, would be rather nice. Do you not think so? But a heavy pattern is a mistake. It should be chosen sufficiently light to let the silk be seen through it.

Do you love furniture? I do, though intermittently. Sometimes I buy numerous articles in that line, to the great impairment of my allowance, and, after having delighted in my purchases for a few weeks, the glory fades, and they are as nought to me. I even think that I wish I had my money back again, to buy a smart gown, or something charming in hats. Furniture, however, is in the ascendant at the present moment, as Richard and I are making some alterations in the rooms, and throwing two into one to make the drawing-room larger. We visited Hampton's this morning, and all my latent admiration of chairs and tables broke out afresh at the sight of the pretty things they are selling off just now. It is the salvage stock from the great City fire, and there are bargains to be had, as you may guess. Japanese carpets at half price are tempting enough, to say nothing of Indian, Persian, Turkey, and Deccan rugs and carpets. Their salvage stock of screens is a large one, and includes some very fine lacquer, with pearl and ivory hand-carved birds and flowers in relief. These are scarcely damaged. The pottery alone is enough to empty one purse in twenty minutes. Some of it is very rare, and all of it very cheap. Fancy, too, a Sheraton side-board for seven guineas and a half, and beautifully carved Tudor side-tables at a few shillings less. A whole panorama of temptation assails the purchaser in these Galleries, which, by the way, are to be enlarged as soon as the sale is over. There are lacquer cabinets, tables of every kind and description, secretaires, book-cases, grandfathers' clocks, spinning-wheels, dining-room and drawing-room chairs, besides bedroom furniture of the most attractive order, Dutch and Welsh dressers, and all sorts of delightful things for presents. Much of this stock belonged to the Old English Furniture Company, and every article is marked with the original price, as well as the sale price. That is always so very satisfactory, I think, for no matter how firm is one's faith in human nature, confidence in one's own eyesight is greater still. Old Sheffield plate is always a good investment, for its value increases with age, and Hampton & Son have a large collection at prices marked down for the sale. Other tempting things are silks, damasks, and table-linen, all in good condition, and at greatly reduced prices. You should really send for a catalogue.

We have been reading some of the notices of the "Life of Mr. Joseph Arch," and have been much amused by an extract in which he describes his wife: "She was a good, clean wife and a good mother," he says and goes on to remark that she did not share his social aspirations. "With her," he observes, "it was 'as it was in the beginning and is and shall be for ever and ever, Amen.'" Good soul, she evidently did her duty, but for a man with aspirations that is a small thing.

Norah is in a dreadful state of mind because the Giant's Causeway is now declared to be private property and is to be fenced in, the public having henceforward to pay for every step of the way they take to see this grand and unique sight. After all these years, one would have supposed that a right of way would have been established.

What should we do in this dull, bleak, dispiriting weather without our restaurants? It is so pleasant to get into a pretty gown and enjoy the sight of one's fellow-creatures assembled for the sociable purpose of dining together. And some of the people are so interesting too. At the Savoy the other night we were surrounded by Americans. Mrs. Bradley Martin was hostess at one table, among her guests being Lady Sarah Wilson and Mrs. Arthur Paget, while at another table were Lord and Lady Terence Blackwood with Mr. and Mrs. George Keppel and Lord Stavordale. We also saw Lord and Lady Francis Hope, Miss Fleetwood Wilson, and Madame Von André. Miss Van Wart had a party the same evening.

We have had a girl of fifteen staying with us, an old schoolfellow of Clare's. As she has not yet reached years of indiscretion, I feel a delightful immunity from responsibility. How different it is with girls of eighteen or more—romantic, unpractical, dreamy, or else half-tamed tom-boys, turbulently reminiscent of their school-room days, and most superficially demure in company. One is almost afraid to undertake the chaperoning of them.

Cyril went into an Italian restaurant the other day, and in the list of dishes discovered a new word—"pankache." Rather a libellous inversion of the title of the harmless, necessary pancake.

I send you a new entrée served at a grand dinner last week, pretty to look at, and equally good to eat. It was called Croquettes à l'Imperatrice:—

Boil some rice in water with salt and a little butter. When it is soft put it in small oiled moulds about the size of a coffee cup, and let it get cold. Then turn it out of the moulds, brush it well over with yolk of egg, and fry it in oil till it is a bright golden yellow. Scoop out the middle of each, and fill each in with the following mixture, which must be prepared beforehand, and hot and ready: Take the white of a cooked chicken, pound it fine, add salt and pepper, mushrooms chopped very small, lemon juice, a little flour and white stock, warm all well together, and fill the moulds of rice. With it put a slice of tongue cut to shape as cover to each mould, and a little jelly on the top of each. Serve them quickly.

Here is also a new cold dish for a lunch or wedding breakfast; it was immensely appreciated the other day, and the recipe eagerly demanded:—

Take a mould with a large hollow centre, or else a plain mould, and put a round tin box in the middle; oil the mould slightly. Now roll about a dozen thin slices of cooked York ham in funnel shape, put them round the middle of the mould against the centre, the pointed end downwards, and pour round gradually some very good well-flavoured jelly, till it reaches the top of the mould. Place the mould on ice, and when the jelly is well set take out the box in middle, and fill in the hollow with a good salade russe and mayonnaise, coloured green with spinach juice. Keep it on ice till you are ready to serve it, then turn it out with care upon a silver dish. If the jelly is well made and clear, the ham and salad should show through, and look as nice as it is good.

You will like this terrine de foie gras:—

Take a good foie gras and put it to soak in milk for a few hours. Meanwhile prepare a good force-meat made with the white of chicken, or some veal, a little sausage meat, bread-crumbs, seasoning, and some minced truffles. Put in the terrine a layer of force-meat and some slices of truffles, then the foie gras whole, some salt, pepper, and nutmeg, some more slices of truffle, and another layer of force-meat; cover this with a very thin slice of fat bacon, not smoked. Put on the lid or cover of

NOW RUNNING daily, 9 till 5.—HAMPTON & SONS' (Ltd.) GREAT INAUGURAL SALE. Reductions in all departments varying from 25 to 75 per cent. Special stocks of Antique Furniture, Oriental Carpets and Screens, Silk Damasks and Brocades, all at clearance prices. See detailed catalogue sent free.—Pall Mall East, S.W.

"THE SUNNY SOUTH."—Messrs. REDFERN have designed some becoming Costumes for wear along the Riviera, and which are now on view in their Showroom. Very moderate in price. Inspection invited.—REDFERN, 26, Conduit-street, London, W.

the terrine, and cook all in a bain marie. An hour is sufficient for a small terrine.

If a paté is preferred, one only needs to put the same preparation in a raised crust and bake it—but not too long, or it will be dry.

Gibelotte de Lapin (wild rabbit stewed) :—

Here is a change from roast and boiled, and a very nice dish, too: Take a young rabbit and cut it in pieces. Put in the stew-pan some butter and bacon cut in dice. In two or three minutes, take out the bacon and put in the pieces of rabbit, and turn them till they are a good colour, sprinkle them with flower, and add half a pint of hot water or second stock, salt, pepper, a bunch of sweet herbs, 2 or 3 medium-sized onions, and a glass of white wine. Put back the bacon, and let all cook very gently for an hour or an hour and a half, the pan being well covered to prevent the steam escaping, but shake it from time to time to prevent anything sticking to the pan. Just before serving put in the liver for five minutes.

Fricandeau of veal with chestnuts or spinach :—

Take a nice piece of veal about 2 in. thick from the upper part of the leg, and with a fine larding needle lard it closely with strips of bacon. Put in the bottom of a braising-pan some slices of onion and carrot cut in rounds, a bunch of sweet herbs, and a little bacon; place the meat on this, the larded side uppermost, cover the pan, and put it on the stove for a short time; then add pepper, salt, and a little stock, cover it well, and braize it in the oven. When it is nearly cooked take off the cover, so that the top may take a good colour, and baste it constantly with the gravy in the pan. To serve it, put some spinach on the dish, place the fricandeau on it, and strain the gravy over it.

Lastly, here is a recipe for scallops of sweetbreads :—

Blanch and parboil some sweetbreads, cut them into small scallops. Then chop separately and finely ½ a pint of mushrooms, a little parsley, and 4 or 5 shallots, add a little fat bacon rasped, and a piece of fresh butter; season the scallops with pepper, salt, and a little mace; stew it all together over a slow fire; when done drain off the fat, place the scallops in small paper cases, which have been fried in olive oil, cover them with plenty of finely-chopped herbs, and strew over them fried bread crumbs; lay the paper cases for a moment into the oven, and before serving, pour into each a little rich gravy, and a little lemon juice.

Ever, dear, your loving cousin, MADGE.

CIGARES DE JOY
(JOY'S CIGARETTES)
Immediately Relieve
ASTHMA, WHEEZING, CHRONIC BRONCHITIS
Chemists & Stores, box of 35, 2/6, or Post Free from WILCOX & Co., 83, Mortimer Street, London, W.
TRIAL SAMPLE FREE.

WHY DRINK INFERIOR TEA?
UNITED KINGDOM TEA COMPANY'S TEAS
DIRECT FROM THE GROWERS.
1/-, 1/3, 1/4, 1/6, 1/7, 1/9, & 2/- per lb., DELIVERED CARRIAGE PAID.
Write for Samples, sent free, taste them, and judge for yourselves. Amazing superiority in Quality! Great Economy in prices.
Offices: 21, MINCING LANE, LONDON, E.C.

ACCIDENT ASSURANCE.
ACCIDENT AND DISEASE ASSURANCE.
EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ASSURANCE.
FIDELITY GUARANTEE.
RAILWAY PASSENGERS ASSURANCE CO.,
Established 1849. Claims Paid £3,850,000.
64, CORNHILL, LONDON. A. VIAN, Secretary.

For ACHES AND PAINS . . . . Rub in Elliman's.

HAMPTON & SONS
LIMITED.
GREAT SALE NOW RUNNING, 9 till 5 This Day.

HAMPTON & SONS, PALL MALL EAST, S.W.

EXAMPLES OF FINE ANTIQUE FURNITURE NOW BEING SOLD AT CLEARANCE PRICES.
See Illustrated Sale Catalogue, sent free.
The whole of the remainder of the O. E. F. Co.'s Stock of Antique Furniture has now been placed on Show. With these additions the Stock affords selections of complete sets for the uniform treatment of entire rooms in Sheraton, Chippendale, Queen Anne, Elizabethan, and other styles.

Great sale embraces, in addition to reductions in all Departments varying from 25 to 75 per cent., several important stocks at extraordinary reductions to clear. The entire Stock of the Old English Furniture Co., at a Reduction of 25 per Cent. off the O. E. F. Co.'s plainly market tickets, none of which have been removed. Also the entire Stock of Oriental Carpets and Screens from the Great City Fire at Salvage Prices.
Also a Spitalfields manufacturer's Stock of Rich
Silk Damasks, Brocades, and other Choice
Furnishing Fabrics, many of which are being cleared at Less than One-Fourth of the original prices.
Various other Stocks of Linens, China, Glass, and Ironmongery at clearance prices. For details of the reductions and of the extraordinary bargains in all departments,
See Special Sale Catalogue, Illustrated and Priced, Sent Free.
PALL MALL EAST, S.W.

A Feature of the Metropolis. SPIERS & POND's
CRITERION RESTAURANT, Piccadilly Circus, London, W.
EAST ROOM. Finest Cuisine, unsurpassed by the most renowned Parisian Restaurants. Luncheons, Dinners, and Suppers, à la carte and prix fixe. Viennese Band.
GRAND HALL. Musical Dinner 3/6 per head. Accompanied by the Imperial Austrian Band.
WEST ROOM. Academy Luncheon 2/6, Diner Parisien 5/-, during both of which the renowned Mandolin Quartette performs.
BUFFET & GRILL ROOM. Quick service à la carte and moderate prices. Joints in each room fresh from the Spit every half-hour.
AMERICAN BAR. Service of special American Dishes, Grills, &c.
Splendid Suites of Rooms for Military and other Dinners.

Whiskey and Health.

As is well known to the Medical Faculty the importance of age and purity in Whiskey cannot be over-estimated.

Of GEO. ROE'S Celebrated "GR" WHISKEY "The British Medical Journal" writes: "It has a soft and mellow taste, evidently produced by ageing, and altogether the 'GR' Whiskey is of excellent quality," and this statement has been endorsed by members of the Medical Profession.

This PURE POT-STILL WHISKEY may be had in Bottle, bearing the Distillers' guarantee of PURITY and AGE, SEVEN YEARS OLD, from all Wine and Spirit Merchants and Hotel Proprietors in the United Kingdom.

Price 3/6 per Bott.

In Cases of 2 Gallons (Carriage paid) 42s.

Anyone who has not already done so should write at once to the Company for a free tasting sample.

The Dublin Distillers' Co., Ltd.
Thomas Street Distillery,
Established 1757.
(GEORGE ROE & CO.) DUBLIN.

FOR INFANTS AND INVALIDS

MELLIN'S FOOD

When prepared is similar to Breast Milk.

SAMPLES POST FREE FROM
MELLIN'S FOOD WORKS, PECKHAM, S.E.

HOSPITALS & APPEALS.

LONDON FEVER HOSPITAL, Islington, N.
Over 80,000 sufferers from infectious fevers have been admitted into this Hospital since 1802, and probably ten times as many other persons have thereby been preserved from infection.
Patients pay about one-fourth of their cost, the other three-fourths falling upon the funds of the institution.
The contributions received in 1897 show a serious falling off compared with those of 1896.
ADDITIONAL HELP is URGENTLY NEEDED.
Governors' subscription, one guinea or more for more than one year; Life Governors' donation, ten or more guineas in one sum.
Governors' own domestic servants and certain employés of subscribing firms, clubs, and hotels, are treated free of all charge.
Help will be gratefully received by
Major W. CHRISTIE, Secretary, at the Hospital.
Bankers: Prescott & Co., 50, Cornhill, E.C.

GREAT NORTHERN CENTRAL HOSPITAL, Holloway.
UNENDOWED and VERY POOR.
PATIENTS ADMITTED FREE, sickness and poverty the only passports to relief.
£10,000 needed annually to support the work of relieving 1,400 in-patients, and 25 000 out-patients.
LEWIS H. GLENTON KERR, Secretary.

ROYAL EAR HOSPITAL (founded 1816), Frith-street, Soho.
Patron, HER MAJESTY. The present building being quite inadequate to meet the requirements of the Institution, the Committee earnestly APPEAL for FUNDS for Erecting New Premises. Contributions will be gratefully received by the Treasurer, or the Bankers, Lloyd's Temple Bar Branch.
D. MURRAY, Hon. Secretary.

THE EARLSWOOD ASYLUM FOR IDIOTS.
FUNDS URGENTLY NEEDED to maintain the 394 elected Patients now in the Institution.
A debt of £4,630 has been incurred to meet current expenses.
Nearly 130 afflicted cases seeking admission.
Cases received on payments regulated by the Board.
ALDERMAN SIR J. C. DIMSDALE, Treasurer.
JAMES DOWNING, Secretary.
Offices, 36, King William-street, London Bridge, E.C.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN, in all parts, receiving RESIDENT PATIENTS sent gratis, with full particulars. Schools also recommended.—Medical, &c., Association, Ltd., 8, Lancaster-place, Strand, W.C. Tel. Add., "Triform, London." Telephone No. 1,854 (Gerrard).

1/- BY POST, 1s. 2½d. 1/-
Reprint of 6th Series (Violet).
QUEER STORIES FROM "TRUTH."
PUBLISHING OFFICE:
10, BOLT COURT, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

£10,000.

TEN THOUSAND POUNDS is the penalty payable by any of the rubber manufacturers who may supply us with materials of inferior quality for the manufacture of

DUNLOP TYRES

This tremendous penalty enables us to safeguard the public against unsatisfactory tyres. DUNLOPS are not merely made to SELL, but to RIDE; and when we have sold a tyre we follow it all over the World with our Guarantee, and interpret that Guarantee in the most liberal spirit. And it must not be forgotten that our Guarantee is worth

20s. in the £.

The DUNLOP PNEUMATIC TYRE COMPANY, Ltd.
160 to 166, CLERKENWELL ROAD, E.C., LONDON;
Works: ALMA STREET, COVENTRY.
Branches: Birmingham, Wolverhampton,
Nottingham, Manchester, Glasgow, Dublin.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

MR. ARCHIBALD FORBES'S NEW BOOK.
Demy 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, 12s.

THE LIFE OF NAPOLEON III.

By ARCHIBALD FORBES. With Photogravure Frontispiece and 36 Full-page Illustrations.

"The task of writing a popular biography of this kind could not have fallen into more capable hands than those of Mr. Archibald Forbes. Partisanship is a fault that certainly will not be charged against the author of this volume."—Daily News.

"A fluently written and easily read account."—Manchester Guardian.

"When he leads us up to the threshold of the sixties Mr. Forbes is quite himself—quite the forcible, descriptive writer whom we all admire. . . . Mr. Forbes is singularly accurate in all his details."—Daily Chronicle.

MRS. CROKER'S NEW NOVEL.
Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

MISS BALMAINE'S PAST.

By B. M. CROKER, Author of "Diana Barrington," "Beyond the Pale," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

TALES IN PROSE AND VERSE.

By DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY. With a Frontispiece by Arthur Hopkins.

CHEAPER EDITION. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

IN THE MIDST OF LIFE.

Tales of Soldiers and Civilians. By AMBROSE BIERCE.

"Mr. Bierce portrays the most appalling scenes with a deliberation and force and precision that are rarely seen. The realism of Walt Whitman's 'Specimen Days' is pale compared with that of 'In the Midst of Life.' It is a book that one reads breathlessly and shudderingly. . . . A remarkable literary feat."—Scottish Leader.

On May 27th. CHEAPER EDITION. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

The MACLISE PORTRAIT-GALLERY OF ILLUSTRIOUS LITERARY CHARACTERS—

85 Portraits by DANIEL MACLISE. With Memoirs, Biographical, Critical, Bibliographical, and Anecdotal—by WILLIAM BATES, B.A.

CHEAPER ISSUE, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THACKERAYANA:

NOTES AND ANECDOTES. With Coloured Frontispiece and Hundreds of Sketches by WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY, from his School Books, &c.

THREE NEW SIX-SHILLING BOOKS.

MORE TRAMPS ABROAD.

By MARK TWAIN.

"Mr. Albert Chevalier used to sing a song in which occurs a line, 'Laugh! I thought I should have died!' and that line might fairly be quoted in reply to any question as to whether Mark Twain's latest book was funny. . . . All who appreciate humour or can enjoy laughter should make haste to procure 'More Tramps Abroad.' A more effective remedy for the blues has not been offered in England for many a day."—Publishers' Circular.

THIS LITTLE WORLD.

By DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY.

"Mr. Murray has never done anything better than this fine story."—Birmingham Post.

"Eminently bright, pleasant, and amusing."—Glasgow Herald.

BY THE RISE OF THE RIVER.

By AUSTIN CLARE.

"They are as true to nature as the heather-crested fells and granite boulders of the Cumbrian border from which they hail. Humour and pathos and tragedy jostle each other in this group of Tynedale tales."—Bookseller.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's-lane, W.C.

New Novel by RICHARD MARSH.

Cloth, Price 6s. With Illustrations. FOURTH EDITION.

THE BEETLE:

A Mystery!

The Speaker says:—"A story of the most terrific kind is duly recorded in this extremely powerful book. The skill with which its fantastic horrors are presented to us is undeniable."

The Daily Graphic says:—"'The Beetle' is the kind of book which you put down only for the purpose of turning up the gas and making sure that no person or thing is standing behind your chair—and it is a book which no one will put down until finished except for this reason."

Answers says:—"Mr. Marsh's famous novel is one of the most enthrallingly interesting narratives of the past few years. I strongly advise all my readers to order the book at once."

The Literary World says:—"An ingenious, weird, and thrilling story, narrated with a clearness of style and a fulness of incident which hold the reader's attention from first to last."

LONDON: SKEFFINGTON & SON, 163, PICCADILLY, W.
Publishers to Her Majesty the Queen and to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & CO.'S New Books.

CAPTAIN MAHAN'S NEW WORK, AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE INTEREST OF THE UNITED STATES IN SEA POWER, PRESENT AND FUTURE.

By CAPTAIN A. T. MAHAN. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 10s. 6d. net.

The Times says:—"This new work is in reality and in substance the mature fruit of his prolonged studies in that domain of history which he has made so pre-eminently his own."

TWO IMPORTANT ART WORKS.

PICTURES AND DRAWINGS SELECTED FROM THE WORKS OF EDWARD ARMITAGE, R.A.

Issued under the authority of Mrs. ARMITAGE. With a Short Descriptive Text by Dr. JEAN PAUL RICHTER.

Folio, half-morocco, Eight Guineas net; portfolio, £8 net.

Now Ready, Vol. I., bound in cloth, Six Guineas net; leather, Six and a Half Guineas net.

THE LIFE OF OUR LORD JESUS CHRIST.

Illustrated by over 500 Pictures, 380 Water-colour Drawings, and 150 Pen-and-Ink Sketches. By JAMES TISSOT.

The ENGLISH EDITION, dedicated by special permission to the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Two Vols. of about 300 pp. each, large imperial 4to. The Publishers are also issuing the work in twelve parts, appearing at monthly intervals. The first Six Parts can now be obtained. Subscriptions are only taken for the complete work.

The Times says of Part I.:—"When completed this will be the most sumptuous New Testament in existence."

At all Booksellers.

DOD'S PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, AND KNIGHTAGE OF THE UNITED KINGDOM FOR 1893.

Fifty-eighth year. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 10s. 6d.

The Times says:—"The great merits of Dod's excellent 'Peerage, Baronetage, and Knightage' are its cheapness, its handy size, and its easiness of reference. In the combination of these three qualities it is unequalled."

THE PIONEERS OF THE KLONDYKE: being an Account of Two Years' Police Service on the Yukon. Narrated by M. H. E. HAYNE, of the North-West Mounted Police, and recorded by H. WEST TAYLOR. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"The most accurate and authentic account of the many published on that fabulous region."—Pall Mall Gazette.

THE INVASION OF EGYPT, in A.D. 1249, by

LOUIS IX. of FRANCE, and A HISTORY OF THE CONTEMPORARY SULTANS OF EGYPT. By the Rev. E. J. DAVIS, M.A., Chaplain of St. Mark's Church, Alexandria. 8vo, 6s.

OSMANLI PROVERBS AND QUAINT SAYINGS.

By the Rev. E. J. DAVIS, M.A. 4,300 Sentences in Turkish, printed in Roman Characters, with English Translations, Explanations, and a Guide to the Pronunciation. The Turkish Original is also given as an Appendix. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, & COMPANY, Limited.

Chosen for Holiday Reading at Harrow and Winchester.

FOURTH EDITION READY THIS DAY.

With 16 Portraits and 11 Plans, crown 8vo, 6s.

DEEDS THAT WON THE EMPIRE.

By the Rev. W. H. FITCHETT ("Vedette").

From the Spectator.—"Not since Macaulay ceased to write has English literature produced a writer capable of infusing such life and vigour into historical scenes. . . . The book cannot but take the reader by storm wherever it finds him."

From the Westminster Gazette.—"The account of these famous incidents in British history is written with a knowledge, a verve, and a restraint which are worthy of the highest praise. There is nothing Jingo about the book; its effect can be nothing but good."

From the Bookman.—"There is no bluster, no brag, no nauseous cant about a chosen people; but there is a ringing enthusiasm for endurance, for dashing gallantry, for daring and difficult feats, which generous-hearted boys and men will respond to quickly. There is not a flabby paragraph from beginning to end."

London: SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 15, Waterloo-place, S.W.

Just published, with Portrait and Maps, demy 8vo, 14s.

THE LIFE OF

SIR JOHN HAWLEY GLOVER,

R.N., G.C.M.G. By LADY GLOVER. Edited by the Right Hon. Sir RICHARD TEMPLE, Bart., G.C.S.I., D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S.

From the Times.—"No one can read his life, as written with excellent taste and modesty by his widow, without feeling that he was a singularly fine type of the men who represent the Imperial mission of their country at their best. . . . Such a life well deserves to be written for example, encouragement, and warning, and Lady Glover, in writing it, has well caught the true spirit of its teaching."

From the Pall Mall Gazette.—"Sir John Glover was a born leader of men, and it is well that the lives of such leaders should be recorded as an example for the next generation of public servants. His widow has written the story of his life with great discrimination."

London: SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 15, Waterloo-place, S.W.

NOW READY. Price 7s. 6d.

THE STORY OF GLADSTONE'S LIFE,

BY

JUSTIN McCARTHY, M.P.,

Author of "A History of Our Own Times," "Life of Sir Robert Peel," &c.

In One Vol. Extra Crown 8vo, Cloth, Gilt Top, Price 7s. 6d. Containing 45 Illustrations, mostly full page Portraits, representing Mr. Gladstone at different periods.

A. & C. BLACK, Soho-square, London.

THE BEST SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

THE BETH BOOK.
By SARAH GRAND.

PUNCH: "One of Sarah Grand's most fascinating creations. The story is absorbing."

THE BETH BOOK.
THE SKETCH: "The book is a complete success, and stands far ahead of the novels of recent date."

THE BETH BOOK.
THE DAILY MAIL: "A fine piece of work."

THE BETH BOOK.
THE DAILY TELEGRAPH: "An ideal work."

THE TRIUMPH OF DEATH.
By GABRIELE D'ANNUNZIO.

THE FOURTH NAPOLEON.
By CHARLES BENHAM.

THE NIGGER OF THE "NARCISSUS." A Tale of the Sea. By JOSEPH CONRAD.

The Daily Telegraph.—"There are few characters among the crew which do not stand out with vivid and lifelike presentment. We know them all. Mr. Conrad has for the first time given to the world the English seaman as he is."

THE GADFLY. By E. L. VOYNICH.

The St. James's Gazette.—"A very strikingly original romance, which will hold the attention of all who read it, and establish the author's reputation at once for first-rate dramatic ability. Exciting, sinister, even terrifying, we must avow it to be a work of real genius."

THE CHRISTIAN. By HALL CAINE.

The Sketch.—"It quivers and palpitates with passion, for even Mr. Caine's bitterest detractors cannot deny that he is the possessor of that rarest of all gifts—genius."

H. G. WELLS' NEW SCIENTIFIC ROMANCE,

THE WAR OF THE WORLDS,
will be published on FRIDAY, JANUARY 21st, in one volume, price 6s.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford-street, W.C.

HARPER & BROTHERS'
NEW PUBLICATIONS.

RICHARD HARDING DAVIS'S NEW BOOK.

A YEAR FROM A CORRESPONDENT'S NOTEBOOK. By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS. Author of "Gallegher," "Soldiers of Fortune," &c. With about Forty full-page Illustrations by R. Caton Woodville and others. 8vo, cloth, ornamental, 6s. [Immediately.

FRANK R. STOCKTON'S, NEW NOVEL.

THE GREAT STONE OF SARDIS. By FRANK R. STOCKTON. Illustrated by Peter Newell. Post 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"Far more entertaining than the average novel."—Morning Post.

SPANISH JOHN. An Historical Romance. By WILLIAM MCLENNAN. Illustrated by Myrbach. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s. [Immediately.

LIN McLEAN. By OWEN WISTER, Author of "Red Men and White," &c. Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth, ornamental. 6s.

"The book is as good as a breeze."—The Academy.

THE SON OF THE CZAR (PETER THE GREAT) By JAMES M. GRAHAM. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"This story is one that may be read with unbroken interest, and the reader will be well rewarded."—Scotsman.

THE KENTUCKIANS. A Novel. By JOHN FOX, Junior. Illustrated by W. T. Smedley. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s.

"It is interesting to note that fine novel, 'The Kentuckians,' is the most popular book in the States at present."—The Academy.

A VILLAIN OF PARTS. By B. PAUL NEUMAN. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"We would joyfully read a story like 'A Villain of Parts' once a week for the term of our natural lives."—Chronicle.

"A more intensely exciting adventure book I have not read for years." Truth.

HARPER & BROTHERS: London and New York.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW BOOKS.

ADVENTURE IN THE FAR EAST.
THE CRISIS IN CHINA.

FROM TONKIN TO INDIA. By Prince HENRI OF ORLEANS. Translated by Hamley Bent, M.A. With over a Hundred Illustrations and a Map. Crown quarto, gilt top, 25s.

The crisis in China lends importance to the travels of Prince Henri in 1895 from China to the valley of the Bramaputra, which covered a distance of 2,100 miles, of which 1,600 was through absolutely unexplored country.

"A welcome contribution to our knowledge. The narrative is full and interesting, and the appendices give the work a substantial character."—Times.

"The story is instructive and fascinating, and will certainly make one of the books of 1898. The book attracts by its delightful print and fine illustrations. A nearly model book of travel."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"China is the country of the hour. All eyes are turned towards her, and Messrs. Methuen have opportunely selected the moment to launch Prince Henri's work."—Liverpool Daily Post.

"The illustrations are admirable, and quite beyond praise."—Glasgow Herald.

"The Prince's travels are of real importance. . . . His services to geography have been considerable. The volume is beautifully illustrated."—Athenæum.

"An outstanding book of the season."—Birmingham Post.

"A narrative of a remarkable journey."—Literature.

THE NIGER SOURCES. By Colonel J. TROTTER, R.A. With a Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s.

A book which at the present time should be of considerable interest, being an account of a Commission appointed for Frontier Delimitation.

EXPLORATION AND HUNTING IN CENTRAL AFRICA. By Major A. ST. H. GIBBONS, F.R.G.S. With 8 full-page Illustrations by C. Whymper, 25 Photographs, and Map. Demy 8vo, 15s.

An account of Travel, Adventure, and Big Game Shooting among the Marotse, and the Contiguous Tribes, with a Description of their Customs, Characteristics, and History.

THE LIFE OF ERNEST RENAN. By Madame DARMESTETER. With Portrait, Second Edition nearly ready, crown 8vo, 6s.

"A polished gem of biography, superior in its kind to any attempt that has been made of recent years in England. Madame Darmesteter has indeed written for English readers 'The Life of Ernest Renan.'"—Athenæum.

THE CHURCHMAN'S LIBRARY.

THE BEGINNINGS OF ENGLISH CHRISTIANITY. By W. E. COLLINS, M.A., Professor of Ecclesiastical History at King's College, London. With Map. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

WORKHOUSES AND PAUPERISM. By LOUISA TWINING. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. [Social Question Series.

PASSAGES FOR UNSEEN TRANSLATION. By E. C. MARCHANT, M.A., Fellow of Peterhouse, Cambridge, and A. M. COOKE, M.A., late Scholar of Wadham College, Oxford, Assistant Masters at St. Paul's School. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d

FICTION.

TRAITS AND CONFIDENCES. By the Hon. EMILY LAWLESS Author of "Hurrish," "Maelcho," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

LOCHINVAR. By S. R. CROCKETT. Illustrated, and with a coloured Map. Large crown 8vo, 6s. [Second Edition.

"Full of stir and movement."—Daily Telegraph.

"A stirring romance of tremendous adventure."—Graphic.

"The story is one of well sustained interest, full of movement and incident, and told in a spirited style."—Globe.

BYEWAYS. By ROBERT S. HICHENS, Author of "Flames," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A batch of tales which have distinction as well as fascination, and contain by far the best work that Mr. Hichens has yet given us."—Daily Mail.

"The work is undeniably that of a man of striking imagination and no less striking powers of expression."—Daily News.

A PASSIONATE PILGRIM. By PERCY WHITE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Work which it is not hyperbole to describe as of rare excellence."—Pall Mall Gazette.

METHUEN & CO., 36, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

THE HOUSEWIFE:

A thoroughly Practical, Up-to-date, Illustrated Sixpenny Monthly, concerning Everything in and about the Home. Oldest and best of its class. Only ladies' Magazine sympathetically reporting the New Woman Movement.

"WOMEN'S WORK AND WAGES,"

The "Housewife Annual" for 1898, an extra, price 6d., is also to be had of all Booksellers and at Smith's Bookstalls.

ON THE STŒCHIOLOGICAL CURE OF

CONSUMPTION,

ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, AND LUNG COMPLAINTS.

By JOHN FRANCIS CHURCHILL, M.D.

One Shilling, Post Free.

T. BURLEIGH, LATE DAVID STOTT, 370, OXFORD STREET.

Messrs. HURST & BLACKETT beg to announce that the demand for Mr. MACKENZIE BELL'S MEMOIR OF CHRISTINA ROSSETTI has been so considerable that the FIRST EDITION is exhausted. A SECOND EDITION is in the press, and will be ready early next week, in 1 vol. demy 8vo, with Portraits and Facsimiles, extra cloth, price 12s.

HURST & BLACKETT, Ltd., 13, Great Marlborough-street.

NOW READY.

THE ONLY LIFE OF THE PRINCE

10/6

H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES

An ACCOUNT of his CAREER, including his BIRTH, EDUCATION, TRAVELS, MARRIAGE, and HOME LIFE; and PHILANTHROPIC, SOCIAL, and POLITICAL WORK.

With 100 Portraits and other Illustrations.

In Specially Designed Cover, CLOTH GILT, GILT EDGES.

GRANT RICHARDS, 9, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, W.C.

"TRUTH"

CAN BE OBTAINED AT

THE GALIGNANI LIBRARY,

224, RUE DE RIVOLI, PARIS.

EIGHT NOVELS AT THE LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

THE PRIDE OF JENNICO.	BY EGERTON CASTLE
WHERE THE REEDS WAVE.	BY ANNE ELLIOTT
A RASH VERDICT.	BY LESLIE KEITH
ON THE KNEES OF THE GODS.	BY COL. HARCOURT
A FIERY ORDEAL.	BY TASMA
CONSEQUENCES.	BY EGERTON CASTLE
ACTÈ.	BY HUGH WESTBURY
LIFE'S WAY.	BY SHUYLER SHELTON

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington-street.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW BOOKS.

Now Ready, at all Libraries and Booksellers.

THE BUILDING OF THE EMPIRE: The Story of England's Growth from Elizabeth to Victoria. By ALFRED THOMAS STORY, Author of "The Life of John Linnell," &c. With Portraits of Queens Elizabeth and Victoria in Photogravure, and upwards of 100 Portraits and Illustrations. 2 vols. large crown 8vo, 14s.

THE JOURNALS OF WALTER WHITE, Assistant-Secretary to the Royal Society. With a Preface by his brother, WILLIAM WHITE, and a Photogravure Portrait. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Saturday Review says:—"The little volume makes good reading. Mr. White came in contact with celebrities and notabilities innumerable, and has something unpleasant and pleasant to say of most of them."

The Pall Mall Gazette says:—"Records of conversations at Carlyle's, at Tennyson's, and elsewhere, which it is a pity to have kept hidden so long."

WHAT IS LIFE? Or, Where are we? What are we? Whence did we come? And whither do we go? By FREDERICK HOVENDEN, F.L.S., F.G.S., F.R.M.S. With many Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 6s.

MODERN ARCHITECTURE: A Book for Architects and the Public. By H. HEATHCOTE STATHAM, F.R.I.B.A., Editor of The Builder, and Author of "Architecture for General Readers," &c. With numerous Illustrations of Contemporary Buildings. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

The Daily News says:—"This is an eminently readable and entertaining book."

MR. COOPER'S NEW SPORTING NOVEL.

THE MARCHIONESS AGAINST THE COUNTY. By E. H. COOPER, Author of "Mr. Blake of Newmarket." Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Athenæum says:—"The book is well written, never uninteresting, and at times even brilliant. . . . It never fails to attract, its moral is quite unexceptional, and it contains some very happy characterisations."

CHAPMAN & HALL, Ltd., LONDON.

GARDENING FOR AMATEURS, Practically Treated, and with many Illustrations, will be found in THE GARDEN SUPPLEMENT. Given Free with The Bazaar, Exchange and Mart Newspaper of Monday next, 24th inst.

PHOTOGRAPHY, Practically Treated, by the Best Authorities, and with Magnificent Illustrations, which from their Beauty and Charming Character will delight everyone, Photographer or not, will be found in THE PHOTOGRAPHERS' SUPPLEMENT. Given Free with The Bazaar, Exchange and Mart Newspaper of Wednesday next, the 26th inst.

THE BAZAAR, EXCHANGE AND MART Newpaper, with the Supplement complete, may be had at all Newagents and Bookstalls, price 2d., or for 3d. in stamps from the Office: 170, Strand, London, W.C.

STERILITY IN WOMEN: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. An Illustrated treatise based on the special practise and observation of the last 15 years. Price 3s. 6d.; post free, 3s. 8d.

London: HENRY RENSHAW, 356, Strand.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, RUSSIAN, & SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE IN ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS NOW OFFERED AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 PAGES) SENT GRATIS AND POST FREE TO ANY ADDRESS.

The List contains Popular Works in Travel, Sport, History, Biography, Science, and Fiction. Also New and Surplus Copies of French, German, Italian, and Spanish Books.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, LIMITED,

30—34, NEW OXFORD ST.; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA ST., E.C. LONDON; AND AT BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

AMUSEMENTS.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.
Sole Lessee, Mr. Frederick Harrison.
Managers, Mr. Frederick Harrison and Mr. Cyril Maude.
TO-NIGHT and EVERY EVENING, at 8.30,
THE LITTLE MINISTER, by J. M. Barrie.
Miss WINIFRED EMERY and Mr. CYRIL MAUDE.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY, at 2.30.

QUEEN'S HALL.
SUNDAY AFTERNOON CONCERTS.
EVERY SUNDAY, at 3.30.
Conductor, Mr. Henry J. Wood.
The Queen's Hall Grand Orchestra.
Admission free. Reserved seats, 2s., 3s., 1s., and 6d.

The "WM. JAMES" COLLECTION
OF
Old English, Sevres, Dresden, and Oriental Porcelain,
Famille Rose and Famille Verte (Purchased direct from Executor),
On EXHIBITION and SALE at
HARDING'S ART GALLERY,
18, St. James's-square, S.W.

OLYMPIA.
BARNUM AND BAILEY.
GREATEST SHOW ON EARTH.
For a Limited Season only.
Most Gigantic Show ever Devised.
Overflowing with the World's Attractions.
3 Circus companies in 3 rings.
2 Olympian stages, 1 huge race-track.
2 Complete menageries, 3 herds of elephants.
Museum of living freaks and curiosities.
20 Funniest clowns on earth.
70 Horses performing in one ring.
400 Horses, 2 droves of camels, hosts of queer animals.
20 Races, 50 trained animals.
1,001 Marvellous sights and wonderful objects.
2,000 tons of pure moral amusement.
The whole forming a most bewildering, dazzling, brilliant, instructive exhibition, far beyond anything ever dreamed of.
TWO GRAND EXHIBITIONS DAILY, at 2.0 and 8.0 p.m.
Doors open at 12.30 and 6.30 p.m.
Early Gates open (Hammersmith-road) at 12.0 noon and 6 p.m. for 3s. seats and upwards. Early entrance fee 6d. extra.
Owing to the stupendously large show, and the general magnitude of the Exhibitions, necessitating great preparations, the Menageries, Freak, and Horse Fair Departments can only be open from 12.0 to 4.0 p.m., and from 6.0 to 10.0 p.m. No Promenade Tickets sold. Every ticket entitling holder to a reserved numbered seat, and admitting to all advertised departments without extra charge.
Prices.—Admission: Amphitheatre, 1s. and 2s.; Arena seats, 2s., 3s., and 4s.; Balcony seats, 3s.; Stalls, 5s., 7s. 6d.; Private Boxes, 5 to 6 seats, £3. 3s.; Single box seats, 10s. 6d. Special price for Royal Box when not engaged. At Two o'clock Exhibition only. Children between 4 and 10 years of age half-price to all except 1s. and 2s. seats. Box-office open from 9.0 a.m. to 9.30 p.m. 1s. and 2s. seats on sale only after doors open. All other seats may be booked in advance at box-office and at usual libraries.

CRYSTAL PALACE.
The one absolute novelty this Christmas is to be seen at the CRYSTAL PALACE!
GREAT RIVER SCENE
in ENGLISH STAG HUNT,
at
WULFF'S GREAT CIRCUS.
Hounds, Horses, and Riders, plunge into and swim the river!
Rounds of applause and roars of laughter.
No such scene ever before beheld in any show.
TWICE DAILY, at 3 and 7.30.
Children half-price to numbered seats, both afternoon and evening. Free admission to Palace after 6.30 p.m. to holders of Circus Seat Tickets, which are on sale at Low Level and Central Entrances. Numbered Seats, 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., and 5s., may be booked in advance at Central Entrance and usual London Ticket Agents. 3,000 sixpenny and 2,000 shilling seats.

NEW NIAGARA. SKATING.
Morning, 9.30 to 1; Evening, 8 to 11, 3/-
Afternoon, 3 to 6.30, 5/-
Non-Skaters (Afternoon), 2/6.
SEASON and HALF-SEASON TICKETS ISSUED.

BRIGHTON ICE RINK. SKATING.
Morning, 9.30 to 1 Evening, 8 to 11, 2/6
Afternoon, 3 to 6.30, 4/- Non-Skaters, in the Afternoon, 2/-
Monthly Tickets, £2 10s.
SEASON and HALF-SEASON TICKETS issued.

TIVOLI. Strand, London.—The Greatest Combination of Talent in London.—Open EVERY EVENING, at 7.30, and SATURDAY MATINÉE, at 2.30, with a STAR PROGRAMME, embracing every Artiste of note.—Manager, Mr. VERNON DOWSETT.

LONDON PAVILION.—ENORMOUS PROGRAMME.—Charles Godfrey, Fannie Leslie, Chirgwin, Vesta Victoria, Mark Melford's Company, T. E. Dunville, Marie Collins, Alec Hurley, and others.—Prices from 1s. to £3. 3s. Doors open at 7.30.

PALACE, Shaftesbury-avenue.—The HANDSOMEST THEATRE in EUROPE. The finest Variety Entertainment in London. Full Licence. Prices from 6d. Doors open 8.—Manager, Mr. CHARLES MORTON.

THEATRE TICKETS.—Boxes, Stalls, Balcony, and Upper Circle Seats in the best positions can be had at any office of the DISTRICT MESSENGERS' COMPANY.—Letters and telegrams, 193, Piccadilly.—Seats for every theatre. If you ever want a MESSENGER FOR ANY PURPOSE, to go any distance, at home or abroad, ask for a "DISTRICT MESSENGER." Offices in all parts of London, open Day and Night. Electric call boxes, to summon messengers, are in every first-class club, hotel, and house.

AMUSEMENTS.

DRURY LANE THEATRE ROYAL.—Managing Director, ARTHUR COLLINS. THE CHILDREN'S PANTOMIME, THE BABES IN THE WOOD. Twice daily at 1.30 and 7.30. For full particulars, see daily papers. Box Office open all day.

LYCEUM.—PETER THE GREAT, by Laurence Irving.
EVERY EVENING, at 8 punctually.
HENRY IRVING.
Miss ELLEN TERRY.
MATINEES Wednesdays, February 2 and 9, at 2. Box office (Mr. J. Hurst) 10 to 5, and 7.30 to 10. Seats booked by letter or telegram.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.
Proprietor and Manager, Mr. HERBERT BEERBOHM TREE.
On SATURDAY NEXT, JANUARY 22, will be produced, Shakespeare's
JULIUS CÆSAR.
The Scenery and Costumes will be produced under the supervision of Mr. Alma Tadema, R.A.
Box-office open 10 to 6. Seats booked from 2s.

ADELPHI.—A. & S. GATTI, Sole Proprietors and Managers. EVERY EVENING, at 8, William Gillette's successful Drama in Four Acts, entitled, SECRET SERVICE. Mr. Herbert Waring, Mr. J. D. Beveridge, Mr. Creagh Henry, &c., &c.; Miss May Whitty, Miss Bella Bateman, Miss Georgie Esmond.

GAIETY THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, GEORGE EDWARDES.
EVERY EVENING, at 8 (doors open 7.40),
THE CIRCUS GIRL
(2nd year).
Box-office open daily from 10 till 6.
MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY, at 2,
Doors open 1.40.

PRINCESS'S.—Mr. ALBERT GILMER, Sole Manager. ENORMOUS SUCCESS OF THE GRAND CHRISTMAS PRODUCTION. EVERY EVENING, at 8 o'clock, will be presented an entirely New and Original Melodrama, in Five Acts, entitled
HOW LONDON LIVES,
By Martyn Field and Arthur Shirley,
For which Mr. CHARLES WARNER is specially engaged,
Miss Kate Tyndall, Miss Geraldine Olliffe, Mr. Oscar Adye, Mr. Charles Garry, &c.
Doors open at 7.20. Box-office open 10 to 6.
Telephone No. 5,227, Gerrard.

SAVOY THEATRE.—Every Evening, at 8.20, and Every Saturday Afternoon, at 2.30, THE GRAND DUCHESS OF GEROLSTEIN At 7.40, OLD SARAH. Box-office 9 a.m. to 11 p.m.—R. D'OYLY CARTE, Manager.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.
Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER, Sole Lessee and Manager.
TO-NIGHT and EVERY EVENING, at 8 punctually (LAST WEEKS),
THE TREE OF KNOWLEDGE.
A New and Original Play in Five Acts, by R. C. Carton.
MATINEES EVERY SATURDAY, at 2. Box-office 10 to 10.

DALY'S THEATRE.—Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTIN DALY.—EVERY EVENING, and SATURDAY MATINEE. Mr. George Edwardes's Company in THE GEISHA. The book by Owen Hall Lyrics by Harry Greenbank. Music by Sydney Jones.

COMEDY THEATRE, Panton-street, Haymarket.
EVERY EVENING, at 9,
ONE SUMMER'S DAY, by H. V. Esmond.
Mr. Charles Hawtrey, Messrs. H. Kemble, E. Hendrie, Cosmo Stuart, Kenneth Douglas, Lyston Lyle, Master Bottomley; Miss Eva Moore, Miss Lydia Rachael, Miss Beatrice Ferrar, Mrs. Charles Calvert, Miss Constance Collier.
At 7.50, A SHEEP IN WOLF'S CLOTHING. Mrs. Bernard Beere, Mr. Henry Kemble, and Mr. Henry Neville. Doors open 7.40.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY, at 3. Box-office 10 to 10.

VAUDEVILLE. A. & S. GATTI,
Sole Lessees and Managers.
EVENINGS, at 9,
WEDNESDAYS, at 3 and 9,
A. & S. Gatti and Charles Frohman will present the Farcical Comedy,
NEVER AGAIN,
8.15, THE CAPE MAIL, by Clement Scott.
Box-office open 10 to 10.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.
Managers, WILLIAMSON and MUSGROVE.
SATURDAY, JANUARY 22,
Will be presented a New and Original Drama by CECIL RALEIGH and SEYMOUR HICKS, entitled
SPORTING LIFE,
Mr. Leonard Boyne and Company.

CRITERION THEATRE.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.—EVERY EVENING, at 8.15, THE LIARS, by Henry Arthur Jones. Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM, Miss MARY MOORE, and Company. MATINEE WEDNESDAY, Jan. 19, and EVERY SATURDAY.

ALHAMBRA.—Every Evening, New Grand Ballet, BEAUTY AND THE BEAST. Exceptional VARIETY Programme. Doors open 7.30. ALFRED MOUL, General Manager.

EMPIRE THEATRE.—EVERY EVENING, UNDER ONE FLAG and TREASURE ISLAND. Grand VARIETIES. Doors open at 7.45.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION, Baker-street Station.—A True and Realistic Tableau, HERR ANDRÉE and his Two Companions starting in Balloon on their journey to the North Pole. Now on view in Hall of Tableaux. Admission 1s. Children under Twelve, 6d. Extra rooms, 6d.

"TRUTH" HOTEL LIST.

BONCHURCH HOTEL, Bonchurch, Isle of Wight, one mile from Ventnor Station.
A comfortable, quiet, and most beautifully-situated Hotel. Pretty garden. Good sea view.
H. RIBBANDS, Proprietor.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HIGHCLIFFE HOTEL. Unrivalled position, West Cliff, full south. Splendid sea view. Table d'hôte (separate tables). Supplies from Alderney Dairy Farm. Telephone 27.—J. KILNER, Proprietor.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HOTEL MONT DORE.—South aspect, 150 rooms, electric light throughout, passenger lift, first-class cuisine, winter garden and lounge, covered tennis court. Turkish, sea-water, and medicated Baths. The Hotel is within two minutes' walk of the Golf Links.—For tariff, address W. KNEESE, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—GRAND HOTEL.
Centre of Sea Front. Electric Light throughout. Lift to all floors. Bicycle room. INCLUSIVE TERMS IF DESIRED from 10s. 6d. to 15s. per day. For particulars apply to A. D. HOOK, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old-established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms. Passenger lift to all the floors.
GEO. HECKFORD, Manager.

CARBIS BAY HOTEL, Cornwall. The very spot to obtain rest and quietude. Overlooking the finest bay in England. Mild yet bracing climate. Within easy distance of London by G. W. R. Splendid Golf Links. "A more beautiful spot for residence could hardly be imagined."—Truth.

FOLKESTONE.—The LEAS HOTEL.—Situated in private grounds. Adjoining fashionable promenade. Sea views. Refurnished throughout. Passenger lift. Certified sanitation. Excellent cuisine. Moderate tariff. Good golf links and tennis court.

FOLKESTONE.—BATES' HOTEL, West Cliff Gardens, and LONGFORD PRIVATE HOTEL, The Lees. Oldest established and most select Family Hotels in Folkestone. Reduced terms during Winter and Spring months. Pension (new Coffee-room) at Bates' Hotel.—G. L. HART, Proprietor. Sanitation Certified.

GRAND CANARY.—The Newest and Best Hotel is The METROPOLE. Facing the sea. Delightful position.
Terms most moderate.
Agents, ELDER, DEMPSTER & CO., 14, Castle-street, Liverpool, and 4, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.

JERSEY.—GRAND HOTEL.—Beautifully situated, facing the sea, full south, and sheltered from the north-easterly winds, with all modern comforts and liberal management. Reduced winter terms from October 15th.
D. DE LEIDI, Manager.

MALVERN—The IMPERIAL HOTEL occupies the best position, and receives visitors en pension. The golf-links (18 holes) are one of the best in England. Capital stabling for hunters. Droitwich Brine, Turkish and large Swimming Bath in separate buildings.—For tariff, apply to the Proprietor, F. MOERSCHELL.

SALCOMBE (Devon).—BOLT HEAD HOTEL.—This first-class Family Hotel commands magnificent views of English Channel. Delightful cliff walks. Grand coast scenery. Admirable winter health resort. Climate mildest in England. Carriages meet trains when requested. Stabling Billiards. Special terms for winter months and for families.—Apply, Manager.

SANDGATE.—ROYAL KENT HOTEL, a favourite resort of Ruskin. An ideal summer and winter residence, delightfully situated in its own grounds, facing the sea. Redecorated and refurnished. New Coffee-room, Smoking-room, and Conservatory have recently been added. Fifteen minutes from Folkestone. Omnibus meets all trains Sandgate Station.—J. E. TANARE, Prop.

TORQUAY.—IMPERIAL HOTEL.—Under entirely New Management. New sanitary arrangements throughout. It is the largest and best-situated Hotel in Torquay, and the best winter residence on the South Coast. Visitors received en pension or à la carte. Terms moderate.
F. FISCHER, Manager.

BURLINGTON HOTEL,
Cork-street, W., near Burlington Arcade.
BUCKINGHAM PALACE HOTEL, S.W., opposite Buckingham Palace, and close to Victoria Station. Special Boarding Terms.
Suites of rooms facing Buckingham Palace Gardens from 12s. a day.
} LONDON.

BURLINGTON HOTEL, BOSCOMBE, BOURNEMOUTH, facing the sea. Protected from north and east. Extensive pleasure grounds. A beautiful Winter Garden just added; also a Bicycle Room. Fine passenger lift. East Bournemouth Station.

BURLINGTON HOTELS, LIMITED, Proprietors.
Three hotels noted for excellence and economical charges.
Tariff, containing full particulars, free on application to the Managers.

INNS OF COURT HOTEL, Holborn, London.—A first-class Family Hotel, with 200 bedrooms, &c. All modern conveniences and moderate terms. Electric lights, lifts, &c. The Central Hall, as a lounge for writing &c., is the finest and the Dining-room the pleasantest in London. Public meeting rooms, &c. Visitors may dine at the Table d'hôte or in the new Restaurant. Tariff gratis.

ILFRACOMBE.

A Charming WINTER-RESORT, climate mild and equable.

The ILFRACOMBE HOTEL,

First-class Return Tickets issued from London (Waterloo), L. & S. W. R., from November to March, including seven days' bed, board, and attendance, at the Ilfracombe Hotel, £5. 5s. each, available for one month. Ask for Hotel tickets, available by all trains.
H. R. GROVER, Manager.

HASTINGS. Due South, Facing Sea.

QUEEN'S HOTEL,

LARGEST AND BEST APPOINTED.
Sunny, and most sheltered position in Hastings and St. Leonards.
ELECTRIC LIGHT. PASSENGER ELEVATOR.
Moderate Tariff. Hotel Flys attend the trains.
WILLIAM GLADE, Manager.

A FINE HOTEL] DOVER [IN DOVER BAY

Accommodates 400 guests. Is superbly appointed, with all the comforts of a well-arranged mansion, at moderate cost. Perfect cuisine. The Dover Golf Links for use of Hotel Burlington visitors. The finest coast hotel in England. Brochure and Tariff free.

Facing the Pleasure Pier and in centre of Dover Bay.

HOTEL BURLINGTON

"INVIGORATING" FOLKESTONE

This well-known Hotel, occupying a sheltered position close to the sea, adjacent to the Boulogne Steamboat and Promenade Piers and the beautiful Undercliffe private road, is celebrated for its home-like comforts, cuisine, and wines, and is lighted throughout by electricity. Spacious Winter Garden, affording a delightful lounge amidst subtropical and other plants. Extensive tennis lawns. Own private dairy, farm, and gardens, insuring a fresh supply of milk, butter, eggs, vegetables, &c. Private laundry. Hotel omnibus meets all principal trains at Folkestone Central.

PAVILION HOTEL FOLKESTONE

FOLKESTONE HARBOUR STATION.

THE INTERNATIONAL PALACE HOTELS.

CAIRO ..... Shepheard's.
CAIRO ..... Ghezireh Palace.
NICE ..... Riviera Palace.
LISBON ..... Avenida Palace.

London Office, 14, Cockspur-street, S.W.

CANARY ISLANDS.—SANTA CATALINA HOTEL, Las Palmas. In midst of beautiful gardens, facing sea. Sanitary arrangements perfect. English physician and nurse. English church. Golf, tennis, cycling.—The Canary Islands Coy., Limited, 1, Laurence Pountney-hill, E.C.

FOR KLONDIKE,

Passengers should book to Vancouver City, terminus of the CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY. The arrival platform is the departure wharf of all Klondike steamers. Complete outfits can be purchased in Vancouver City cheaper than in the United States. Purchasers save not only in first cost, but escape all Customs duties. Remember Klondike is in Canada. All outfits purchased elsewhere pay an average duty of 30 per cent. Steamers leave Vancouver City regularly direct for the Klondike.—Apply, CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY OFFICES, 67 and 68, King William-street, London Bridge, E.C.; 30, Cockspur-street, Trafalgar-square, W.C.
Vancouver Board of Trade,
W. GODFREY, President.

NEW ZEALAND, AUSTRALIA, HONOLULU, FIJI.

CANADIAN-AUSTRALIAN LINE STEAMERS, fastest and finest from American Continent to Australasia, LEAVE VANCOUVER Monthly. For berths, inclusive through tickets, viâ Montreal or New York, and world-famed scenery of Canadian Pacific Railway, apply, C. P. R. Co., 67 and 68, King William-st., London Bridge; 30, Cockspur-st., Trafalgar-square; or C.A. Line (J. HUDDART & CO., Managers), 150, Leadenhall-st., E.C.

YACHTING EXCURSION, viâ Magellan Straits (Summer Season).—VANCOUVER, KLONDIKE, &c.
THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY,
having purchased the ROYAL MAIL STEAMERS "TARTAR" and "ATHENIAN," late of the Union Line Cape service, intend dispatching them from Southampton (for Klondike service) about 1st February next, to Vancouver, B.C., viâ Straits of Magellan, during summer months in Southern latitudes. Ports of call will be Rio de Janiera and Callao, and possibly Teneriffe. The steamers are fitted for first and second class passengers only, are electric lighted, carry a surgeon, and are luxuriously fitted throughout with saloons, library, bath-rooms, &c. They should reach Vancouver about end of March, allowing Klondike passengers ample time to obtain outfits and proceed by same steamers from Vancouver to Wrangel, when Stikine River navigation opens. Liberal baggage allowance.

Prices to Vancouver, 1st class £30, 2nd class £20. Round trip (exclusive of meals and sleeper on train), returning from Vancouver through world-famed mountain, prairie, and lake scenery of Canadian Pacific Railway and Niagara Falls, allowing choice of any steamer from trans-Atlantic ports, price £65. Round the World, returning from Vancouver viâ Japan, China, Colombo, and Suez, £120. Round the World, returning viâ Hawaiian Islands, Fiji, New Zealand, New South Wales, Colombo, and Suez, £125. Break of journey allowed at all Canadian Pacific Railway stations and all steamship ports beyond Vancouver. For berths apply quickly to Company's offices, 67 and 68, King William-street, E.C., 30, Cockspur-street, S.W., 7, James-street, Liverpool, 67, St. Vincent-street, Glasgow, or any of Thos Cook & Son's offices.

WINTER IN THE WEST INDIES.

SPECIAL TOURS. SIXTY-FIVE DAYS for £65, by magnificent vessels of the

ROYAL MAIL STEAM PACKET COMPANY.

For particulars apply 18, Moorgate-street, or 29, Cockspur-street (West End), London.

BENSON'S 'SPECIAL' MAKE 'LADY'S' KEYLESS LEVER

Silver Cases, £5 — 18-ct. Gold Cases, £10

Three-quarter Plate LEVER Movement, Jewelled throughout, Keyless action, with Seconds Dial. In Hunting, Half-Hunting, or Crystal Glass Cases, Monogram free.

18-ct. Gold, £10. Silver, £5.

Sent Free and Safe at my risk to all parts.

Selections of Watches and Jewellery sent on approval.

Illustrated Book of Watches, Engagement Rings, Brooches, Bracelets, &c., post-free.

J. W. BENSON,
Steam Factory, LTD.
62 & 64, LUDGATE HILL,
28, Royal Exchange, E.C., and
25, Old Bond Street, LONDON, W.

"The Old Favourite."

MAX GREGER'S

CARLOWITZ

SAFEST, SOUNDEST

Dinner Wine.

PURE HUNGARIAN BURGUNDY.

From 15/- per doz.

Of all Wine Merchants and Grocers.

See that every cork bears the brand "Max Greger." Without it the wine is not genuine.

FOR ACCURACY

H. SAMUEL'S KEYLESS WATCHES.

Prices show a considerable reduction as compared with the heavy London charges

Free by post to any address.

Illustrated Book of 168 Pages, comprising Watches, Diamonds, Jewellery, Clocks, Cutlery, Electro-Plate, &c., forwarded free on application.

LADY'S KEYLESS WATCH, fine jewelled movement, carefully adjusted. Handsome art-tinted dials or plain, as preferred. Also supplied two sizes smaller than drawn is desired. Gold, £3 Silver, 27/6

GENTLEMAN'S KEYLESS WATCH, fine jewelled movement carefully adjusted, hard enamel dial. Gold or steel hands, crystal glass front. Gold, £5 5s. Silver, 32/6

NEW GOLD INITIAL BROOCH. Any letter supplied. H. Samuel's price, 5/-

When writing please mark the envelope "accurate"

H. SAMUEL, LEVER WATCH FACTORY, MARKET ST., MANCHESTER.

JAPAN, CHINA, AROUND THE WORLD.

CANADIAN PACIFIC ROUTE, viâ Vancouver. Largest, fastest, only twin-screw steamers on Pacific.

For berths or descriptive pamphlets, apply PASSENGER DEPARTMENT, CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY, 67 and 68, King William-street, London Bridge, or 30, Cockspur-street, Trafalgar square.

FARADAY & SON's

Electric Light Fittings

3, BERNERS ST., LONDON, W.

Quaint Designs from Old Models

SOUND WORKMANSHIP

"A POCKET TREASURE."

MADE IN 3 SIZES AT 10/6, 16/6, & 25/- each. POST FREE

FLOWS REGULARLY CONSTANTLY SMOOTHLY EASILY

Head Office:—93, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON, E.C.

AN IDEAL LIGHT

For Tables, Rooms, Conservatories, &c.,
Is obtained by using (GREEN'S PATENT)

ARCTIC LAMPS

FOR CANDLES

Indispensable for all Decorative Lighting.
Safe, Artistic, and Economical.
Specially recommended for use in Country Houses & Shooting Boxes
The "Gondola" Table Decoration.

No. 155.—White China Gondola for ferns or flowers, complete with Arctic Lamp and Silk shade. Price 15/- each. Postage 6d. extra.
Send for Illustrated Catalogue of Novelties for Table and Room Decoration, Free by Post.

Price of the Arctic Lamps only :—6in. for Small Candlesticks, Brass Mounts, 4s. 6d., Plated, 5s. 3d. each. 8in. for Small Candlesticks, Brass Mounts, 5s., Plated, 5s. 9d. each. Specially prepared Candles for burning in above 1s. 4d. & 2s. per box of 12. SOLD EVERYWHERE.

They can be seen in use, with all accessories, at the Showrooms of

THE ARCTIC LIGHT CO., 179, Regent St. London, W.

Nearly Opposite Liberty's. Wholesale Offices: 49, Hatton Garden, E.C.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.
Clarke's "Pyramid" & "Fairy" Light Co., Ltd., Cricklewood, London, N.W.

BEST & SAFEST DENTIFRICE

SOLD BY ALL CHEMISTS AND PERFUMERS IN ELEGANT CRYSTAL TOILET CASKET PRICE 2/6.
ALSO IN PATENT METALLIC BOX PRICE 1/-

PRESERVE YOUR TEETH
BY USING THE
OS TOOTH BLOCK
Established 20 years
OVER 3000 TESTIMONIALS

CARTER 6A NEW CAVENDISH ST. PORTLAND PLACE, LONDON.

ONLY ADDRESS OF ORIGINAL CARTER
LITERARY MACHINE.

For holding book, lamp, meals, &c., in any position over an easy chair, bed, or sofa.
Deliciously luxurious. A most useful gift. Prices from 17/6

INVALID FURNITURE.
ADJUSTABLE COUCHES and BEDS from £1. 10/-

Bed Lift £3. 10/-
Reclining Boards, 25/-
Walking Machines
Portable W.C.'s.
Electric Bells, Urinals, &c.
Air & Water Beds.
Bed Rests 7/6
Leg Rests 10/-
Crutches 10/6
Bed Baths 12/6
Commodes, £1. 5/-

Carrying Chairs from £1.

Self-Propelling Chairs from £2

Breakfast in Bed! Tables from 30/-

BATH CHAIRS FROM £1. 5/-

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUES POST FREE.

JOHN CARTER, 6a, NEW CAVENDISH ST. Portland-pl. London. W.

"TRITICINE"

FOR INFANTS.

The Public Benefactor.

HOVIS BREAD

DISTRIBUTES HEALTH.

No loaf genuine unless stamped HOVIS.

All good class Bakers make and sell Hovis.

Hovis Flour and Biscuits can be obtained from all leading Bakers and Grocers, or 6d. and 1s. samples will be sent on receipt of stamps by—

S. FITTON & SON, Hovis Mills, Macclesfield.

VINOLIA TOILET REQUISITES.

4d PREMIER VINOLIA SOAP
(For Family Use)

For Delicate, Sensitive, Irritable Skins.

The CHEMIST AND DRUGGIST reports
"An ideal soap, delightfully perfumed."

1/- per box of 3 Tablets.

6d FLORAL VINOLIA SOAP
(For Private Use).

Keeps the Skin as soft as Velvet.

The MEDICAL NEWS reports:—
"Beautifully emollient and softening to the skin."

1/6 per Box of 3 Tablets.

10d TOILET VINOLIA SOAP
(OTTO)

Scented with Choice Otto of Rose Perfume.

Beautifies the Complexion.

The GENTLEWOMAN reports:
"Strongly recommended to keep the skin smooth and free from roughness."

2/6 per Box of 3 Tablets.

3½d UNSCENTED VINOLIA SOAP.

Keeps the Complexion clear.

The EDINBURGH MEDICAL JOURNAL reports:
"Unscented Vinolia Soap cleanses the skin thoroughly and pleasantly, and at the same time leaves it soft, cool, and smooth."

10½d, per Box of 3 Tablets.

6d BLONDEAU TOILET SOAPS (Favourite Brand).

You may now obtain Vinolia Soap perfumed with any scent you prefer.
Jequilla Soap, Marequil Soap, Heliotrope Soap, Musk Lavender Soap, Maréchal Niel Soap, Opoponax Soap, White Rose Soap, Baby Soap, Violet Soap, Lys de France Soap, Shampoo Soap, Oriental Soap, Lettuce Soap, White Rose & Cucumber Soap, Jasmin Soap, Cold Cream Soap, Cucumber and Glycerine Soap.
1/6 per Box of 3 Tablets.

1/1½ VINOLIA CREAM.

For Itching, Face Spots, Chaps, Chilblains.

The LANCET reports:
"An emollient cream for the skin in eczema, rash, eruptions, &c."

1/1½, 1/9, 3/6, and 6/- per Box.

1/- VINOLIA POWDER

For Redness, Roughness, Toilet Nursery, &c.

The LADY'S PICTORIAL reports:
"Superseding the old-fashioned toilet powders which are apt to cause acne spots on the face by blocking up the pores of the skin."

In White, Pink, and Cream Tints.
1/-, 1/9, 3/6, and 6/- per Box.

6d VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP.

(STICKS AND FLAT CAKES)

Causes no Blotches.

STICKS: Premier 6d., Toilet 1/-, 1/6, 2/6. Vestal, 2/-.

FLAT CAKES: Premier 1/-, Toilet 2/-, Vestal 2/6.

Vinolia Shaving Cream, For using without Brush and Water, 9d.

6d LYPSYL.

A Coralline Emollient for Dry, Rough, Cracked, or Pallid Lips.
In Rose-Red and White Tints. 6d and 1/- a Tube.

1/- VINOLIA LAVENDER WATER.

Natural and Very Lasting.

Contains the finest Essential Oils, Concentrated, therefore the Most Economical.

In 1-oz., 2-oz., 4-oz., & 8-oz. Bottles.
6d., 1/-, 2/-, and 3/6.

2d BLONDEAU TOILET SOAPS.

(BRITANNIA BRAND).

Guaranteed Neutral and Pure.

1/- per Box of 6 Tablets

(Assorted Colours and Perfumes).

6d PREMIER VINOLIA DENTIFRICE

Aromatic, Tonic, Refreshing, Preservative.
Keeps the Teeth Ivory White.
Premier, in Round Box and Glass Bottle, 6d.
English—2/6.
American—1/6.
VINOLIA TOOTH PASTE.
Delicately Perfumed 6d

6d BLONDEAU CARBOLIC TOOTH POWDER.

Contains no Grit or Mineral Acids.

In Round Metal Box, 6d. & 1/-.

6d BLONDEAU PERFUMES

Concentrated, Delicate, Pure

*Vinolia Bouquet, *Marequil, *Jequilla, *Losaria, Wood Violet, White Heliotrope, Ess. Bouquet, Frangipanni, Jockey Club, Maréchal Niel, Millefleur, White Rose, Jasmin, Musk Rose, Honeysuckle, New Mown Hay, Lily of the Valley, Rondeletia, Hyacinth, Ylang Ylang, Stephanotis, Opoponax, Patchouli, Musk, Ambergris, Amaryllis, White Lilac, Narcissus, Chypre, Violette de Parme, Mignonette, Clematis, Wallflower, Violet, *Rhine Violets, Peau d'Espagne.

6d., 1/-, 2/-, 3/-, and 5/- per bottle.
* These perfumes are not supplied in the 6d. quality.

1/- Vinolia Hair Wash

Freshens and Revivifies the Hair.

In two kinds, Dry and Moist, 1/- per bottle.

In 3 odours: Portugal, Rose, and Violet.

1/- VINOLIA EAU DE COLOGNE.

Fragrant. Refreshing.

As fine as can possibly be made.

The "Court Circular" reports:
"Vinolia Eau de Cologne we consider is absolutely unequalled for strength, purity, and delicacy of aroma."

6d., 1/-, 2/-, 3/3, and 5/6.

3d per 2oz. Packet VINOLIA VIOLET POWDER.

Sanitary. Antiseptic. Soothing.
Specially prepared for Toilet and Nursery use

In 2-oz. Packets, 3d. In ¼-lb. Packet or Tin, 6d.

BLONDEAU ET CIE., MALDEN CRESCENT, LONDON, N.W.

SPIERS & POND's STORES

QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.

Opposite St. Paul's Station (L. C. & D. Ry.).

CUTLERY DEPARTMENT.

SPORTSMAN'S KNIFE.

Best Sheffield Steel, Platinoid Handle, with Cartridge Extractor, Cigar Cutter, Button Hook, Large Blade with Chain,

Complete 6/9.

Special Illustrated Cutlery and Plate Catalogue, also Price Book No. 50, (1,000 pages), Illustrated, Free on Application.

SPIERS & POND's STORES
QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.
Opposite St. Paul's Station (L. C. & D. Ry.)

These Cigarettes are the Choicest in the Market, and will be appreciated by connoisseurs. Sample Box of 25, Post Free, 2s.

THE VASSO

HIGH-CLASS TURKISH CIGARETTES.

Of the Manufacturers,
LITSICA, MARX & Co.
21, Piccadilly, 84, Strand,
Or at Head Depot-174, HIGH HOLBORN, W.C.
Price List on Application

£20 TOBACCONISTS COMMENCING. Illd. guide (259 pgs.), 3d., 'How to open respectably £20 to £2,000." Tobacconists' Outfitting Co., Euston-rd., Ldn. Hairdressers fitted.—H. MYERS.

A REMARKABLE PIPE! Why? Because

The "MASTA" Pipe

Absolutely carries out what is claimed for it—viz., Simplicity of Construction, Perfect Freedom from Nicotine, No Choking, Cool, Dry, Sweet, Clean, & Healthful Smoking.

Prices from 1/6, 2/6, 3/6. Your Tobacconist will supply it. If any delay, write The "Masta" Patent Pipe Co., 153, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

What Smokers say:—The Rev. G. E. LYTHGOE, Vicar of St. Paul's, Tipton, Oct. 14th, 1897, writes—"Of all the pipes in my pipe-rack, I give the preference, to the 'Masta.' I am more than pleased with it."

L. CARNIER.

LIQUEURS OF THE GRANDE CHARTREUSE.

These delicious Liqueurs, which have come so much into public favour on account of their wonderful properties of aiding Digestion and preventing Dyspepsia, can now be had of all the principal Wine and Spirit Merchants, and all good Hotels and Restaurants throughout the Kingdom.
Sole Consignee: W. DOYLE, 35, Crutched Friars, London, E.C.

WOMEN'S LONDON GARDENING ASSOCIATION,
COURT FLORISTS,
62 and 64,
Lower Sloane-st., S.W.

ORIGINAL TABLE DECORATIONS.

Home-made JAMS, JELLIES, FRUIT-PICKLES, CONFECTIONERY, &c.

Bouquets, Sprays, Wreaths, and Floral Decorations of all kinds.

SERVANTS! SERVANTS!! SERVANTS!!!

FOR

THOROUGHLY RELIABLE SERVANTS

With personal characters for London or country, also foreign servants. Apply to the BELGRAVE LADIES' AGENCY.
SOLE OFFICES,
83, EBURY-STREET.

Also job servants with references taken up before recommendation can be had on the shortest notice.

SPECIAL NOTICE TO ARCHITECTS.

AN IMPORTANT INVENTION.

The HOMACOUSTIC APPARATUS (Cutmore's System).

A REVOLUTION IN SPEAKING TUBES.

Patented throughout the World. The Telephone superseded for Short Distances. The Homacoustic System is being universally adopted, and is a Leading Feature in all New Buildings.

THOUSANDS ARE IN USE.

The following are a few of the large establishments where the Homacoustic Speaking Tubes are in use:—

W. & A. GILBEY, Pantheon, Oxford-street.
JAMES WILLING, Junr., 125, Strand.
GAZE & SONS, Tourists' Bureau, Strand.
B. A. MOORE, "Cheshire Cheese," Fleet-st.
"TRUTH" Offices, Westminster.
SPIERS & POND, Limited, Head Offices.
ROBERTS & LEETE, 19 to 25, Bermondsey-street, S.E.
R. WAYGOOD & CO., Falmouth-road, S.E.
E. P. SAUNDERS & SON, 81 to 83, Cannon-street.
ALLIANCE ASSURANCE CO., Bartholomew-lane, E.C.
LONDON ASSURANCE, Royal Exchange.
OETZMANN & CO., 67 to 79, Hampstead-road, N.W.
LLOYD'S BANK, Limited, 189 Fleet-street.
— LITHGOE, Esq., 39a, Wimpole-street Oxford-street
CAPITAL AND COUNTIES BANK, Threadneedle-street, E.C.
STRAITS INSURANCE, Change-alley, Cornhill.
KELLY & CO., London Directory, Holborn.
LONDON AND BIRMINGHAM AND SOUTH WALES BANK, Graeechurch-street, E.C.

TESTIMONIALS.

Atlas Assurance Company, Fire and Life, 92, Cheapside, London, E.C.

Dear Sir,—I have pleasure in stating that I have had one of your Homacoustic Speaking Tube Commutators and Instruments in my room, communicating with seven departments in this office, and that I find the same to work admirably. It is a vast improvement on the old method of a separate mouthpiece for each tube, and it is an invention which I think needs only to be known to command very wide adoption.—I am, dear sir, yours faithfully,

SAML. J. PIPKIN Secretary

The Central London Throat and Ear Hospital,
Gray's Inn-road, W.C.,
December 14, 1897.

I have much pleasure in testifying to the excellence of the principle of the Homacoustic Speaking Tube Instruments, as well as to the perfect workmanship of the tubes fitted at this Hospital.

Quite independently of sanitary reasons it is decidedly more agreeable to have a Speaking Tube by which all blowing and breathing into the face are avoided. There is no difficulty whatever in its employment.

LENNOX BROWNE, F.R.C.S.E.,
Senior Surgeon to the Hospital.

Beware of Fraudulent Imitations. Infringers will be prosecuted. Send for Explanatory Pamphlet and Price List Free by Post.

THE HOMACOUSTIC COMPANY, Head Offices and Showroom, 6, Bruton-street, New Bond-street, W.

OLLVAAN DIAMONDS

Solid Gold and Silver Brooch, set with 14 Ollvaan Diamonds, with Pearl Centre, 16s. post free.

(Rgd.) are all mounted in SOLID GOLD and SILVER, but that is not the point. The point is that these stones are in themselves the Only Rivals of real Diamonds, of which they are an exact representation.

Book of Illustrations post free for the asking. Address:

OLLVAAN, Rgd., 227, Regent St.

Shall We Send You a Cat

ALOGUE OF GREENHOUSES from 30s.? BLOCK POULTRY AND RUSTIC HOUSES, IRON BUILDINGS, CHICKEN HOUSE RUNS AND COOPS, TIMBER, IRON, GLASS, AND SUNDRIES.

CLEARANCE SALE NOW ON

at extraordinary Low Prices to clear. Send to-day, as when once cleared, cannot be replaced at anything like the price.

W. COOPER,

Horticultural Provider, 755, Old Kent Rd. London, S.E.

WATER ABSOLUTELY FREE FROM DISEASE GERMS, BY USING THE

BERKEFELD FILTER

FOR THE PRIVATE HOUSE OFFICE, FACTORY, HOTELS RESTAURANTS, CLUBS, &c. &c.

Can be Easily and Cheaply Fixed to the Service-Pipe of any HOUSE having ordinary pressure.

Supplied to H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES, DUKE OF WESTMINSTER, K.G., and others too numerous to mention; THE HOUSE OF LORDS, and THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Glass and Earthenware Table Filters, price from 8s. 9d. each.

In use in all the Principal Hotels. Simple in Construction. Most easily cleaned.

PRICE FOR FILTER AS ABOVE, 42s.

SMALLER SIZE, 25s.

For other prices see price-lists.

Offices and Show-Rooms:

The BERKEFELD FILTER Co. Ltd.

121, Oxford St., London, W.

NOTE.—Joseph Lunt, B.Sc., F.C.S., British Institute of Preventive Medicine, in his report on the Berkefeld Filter, says, "Exhaustive experiments showed that with London tap-water strongly infected artificially WITH THE TYPHOID BACILLUS, not a single typhoid bacillus was detected IN THE FILTERED WATER for a period of 26 days."

No Country House Should Be Without One.

A Lasting Pleasure to All.

The POLYPHON Musical Box is the greatest novelty of the age. It plays to perfection airs from the Operas, or renders most brilliantly any selections of music which a purchaser may desire.

All Dealers, or write for No. 50 Catalogue, sent gratis and post free.

NICOLE FRÈRES, Ltd.

21, Ely-place, London, E.C.

	The Infanta.	The Kleberg.	The Gordon.	The Eugene.
With Six Discs	32/-	51/-	85/-	170/-
Extra Discs	5d.	8d.	1/4	2/6

For higher-priced Instruments see Catalogue.

DIAMONDS. — DIAMONDS from the JURA MOUNTAINS.

THE JURA DIAMONDS are very fine WHITE DIAMONDS of great purity, of all sizes, and undistinguishable from Cape and Brazilian Diamonds of the finest quality. The JURA DIAMONDS can be worn at all times both by day and night. The JURA DIAMONDS are mounted in the best style and in the same manner as the most expensive jewels. The JURA DIAMONDS possess the limpidity and scintillating brilliancy of the true diamond. The PRICE of the JURA DIAMONDS is infinitesimal and within reach of every one. DIAMOND Brooches, Rings, Ear-rings, Pins, Hat Pins, Combs, Diadems, Tiaras, Bracelets.

"ORIENT PEARLS," in colour, shape, and weight, are the same as real pearls. PEARL and DIAMOND ORNAMENTS in gold and other settings. The Designs are beautiful and artistic. Goods sent on approval. Illustrated Catalogues and Price List post free.—CORRÈZE DIAMOND SYNDICATE, LTD., Portland House, Basinghall-street, London, E.C.

HILDITCH'S ANNUAL SILK SALE

Great Reductions.

Patterns forwarded.

NOW ON.

11 & 12, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON.

The Best CHAINLESS Cycle!

1898 THE BANTAM 1898

New Regd. 'Alpha' Frame.

List, Testimonials, and "Notes on the Bantam," free; also particulars of Bantamette, Crypto Safety, Gardner Back-Pedalling Brake, Collier 2-Speed Gear, Crypto Carrier-Cab, &c.

CRYPTO WORKS CO., LTD.,

29, CLERKENWELL ROAD, LONDON, E.C.

SOUTHALL'S PATENT BOOTS.

NO SEAMS OR LACES.

with their disadvantages.

PUT ON IN A MOMENT.

FASTEN QUICKLY AND FIRMLY.

STRAP SUPPORTS THE ANKLE.

Comfort and elegance secured, combined with durability and economy in wear.

Made in all qualities, and for all purpose

ONCE TRIED ALWAYS WORN.

HUNDREDS OF TESTIMONIALS.

SEND for Catalogue, with designs, prices, and self-measurement forms, direct to the Makers

SOUTHALL & CO.

Dept. O, 187, Kirkstall Road, LEEDS.

(Please name this paper.)

The TRENT CYCLE COMPANY, Ltd.,

Long Eaton,

Near Nottingham.

THREE GOLD MEDALS.

Exquisite Models. Perfect Fit. Guaranteed Wear

THE Y & N PATENT DIAGONAL SEAM CORSET

Will not split in the Seams nor tear in the Fabric. Made in White, Black, and all the fashionable colours and Shades in Italian Cloth, Satin, and Coutil, 4/11, 5/11, 6/11, 7/11 per pair and upwards.

CAUTION.—Every genuine Y & N Corset is stamped.

Sold by Drapers and Ladies' Outfitters in the United Kingdom and Colonies

POST 6/- FREE.

a Elegant Case Satin-lined complete.

A PERFECT PEN.

Simple in construction. Lasts a life-time. Cannot get out of order. Quite equal to the Pens usually sold at Half-a-Guinea.

PRICE LISTS FREE.

FINE, MEDIUM, OR BROAD NIB CAN BE SUPPLIED.

ANY INK CAN BE USED.

A. M BONNER MANUFACTURING CO.

(Dept. 19), 8, Long Lane, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ADVANTAGES TO PRIVATE INSURERS.

THE IMPERIAL INSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED. FIRE. Est. 1803, 1, Old Broad-st., E.C., & 22, Pall Mall, S.W. Subd. Capital, £1,200,000. Paid-up £300,000. Total funds, over £1,500,000.—E. COZENS SMITH, Gen. Man.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.—Holborn Bars, London.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF LIFE ASSURANCE AND ANNUITY BUSINESS TRANSACTED.
REVERSIONS PURCHASED.

Invested Funds, £30,000,000.

The last Annual Report can be obtained on application to the Secretary.

H. HALFORD and COMPANY,
70 and 71, Palmerston Buildings, Old Broad Street, London.
ESTABLISHED 1869.

Business in Stocks and Shares at close prices.
Dealings reported by wire if required.
Prompt Settlements.
Thousands of Testimonials from Clients.
Americans and Canadians a Speciality. Also Westralians and Kaffirs.
Lists of Closing Prices gratis.
Telegrams: "Monitor, London."

NO CONNECTION WITH ANY OTHER FIRM.

BIRKBECK BANK (Estab. 1851), Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane, London. Two and a-half per cent. interest allowed on deposits, repayable on demand. Two per cent. on current accounts, on the minimum monthly balances when not below £100.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK with particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

NOTICE.

No Member of the Stock Exchange is allowed to advertise for business purposes, or to issue circulars to persons other than his own principals.

Persons who advertise as Brokers or Share Dealers are not Members of the Stock Exchange, or under the control of the Committee.

A List of Members of the Stock Exchange who are Stock and Share Brokers may be seen at the Bartholomew-lane Entrance to the Bank of England, or obtained on application to

EDWARD SATTERTHWAITE,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.

Committee Room, The Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

Hunyadi János

BEST AND SAFEST NATURAL APERIENT.

25 Years Success in the United Kingdom.

Recommended and Prescribed by Medical Men Everywhere.

"HUNYADI JÁNOS has established itself in favour with leading physicians and therapeutists of every country, whose testimonies bear witness to its action as a speedy, sure, and gentle Aperient for ordinary use; it is remarkably and exceptionally uniform in its composition, and free from defects incidental to many other Hungarian Bitter Waters."
—British Medical Journal, Aug 30th 1884.

PROFESSOR VIRCHOW, the celebrated Berlin Physician, says that "HUNYADI JÁNOS" has always given him prompt and satisfactory results, and he considers it to be "one of the most valuable of the Curative Agents at our disposal."

CAUTION.—Every Bottle bears the Signature of the Proprietor, ANDREAS SAXLEHNER.

LIVERPOOL CORPORATION STOCK.

Interest at £2 10s. per cent. per annum, payable Half-Yearly at the Bank of England, on 1st January and 1st July.
ISSUE of £1,500,000 £2 10s. per cent. STOCK, being part of a proposed Issue of £2,500,000.

Minimum price of Issue £98 per cent. The First Dividend, being a full Six Months' Interest, will be payable 1st July, 1898. Trustees are authorised by the Trustee Act, 1893, to invest in this Stock, unless expressly forbidden by the instrument creating the Trust.

The Governor and Company of the Bank of England give notice that by arrangements made with the Corporation of Liverpool, under the provisions of the Liverpool Corporation Loans Act, 1894, as amended by the Liverpool Corporation Loans Act, 1897, and in pursuance of resolutions of the Town Council of Liverpool, they are authorised to receive on Friday, the 21st January, 1898, tenders for £1,500,000 of Liverpool Corporation Stock, bearing interest at £2 10s. per centum per annum, payable half-yearly at the Bank of England, or any of their country Branches.

The Stock will be redeemable at par, at the option of the Corporation, on and after the 1st January, 1923.

The proceeds of the present issue of Stock will be applied as follows:—

Tramways	£650,000
Electric Lighting	450,000
To extinguish the liability of the Corporation with regard to the Corporation Churches	95,000
Grant to Northern Hospital	15,000
Waterworks	125,000
General Sanitary Purposes	90,000
Police Buildings	20,000
Fire Police Purposes	20,000
Parks Purposes	15,000
Baths	20,000

The Stock will be secured upon the whole of the Rates and Revenues of the Corporation, and will rank equally with all Stock issued by the Corporation under the Liverpool Loans Act, 1880, and the Liverpool Corporation Loans Act, 1894, and with all other Securities of the Corporation created after the passing of the said Act of 1894.

The total debt of the Corporation, for all purposes except Water Works, on the 1st January, 1898, was £4,369,265. 1s. 1d., represented by £2,698,253 13s. 5d. Liverpool Corporation [£3½ per cent. Stock, and £1,671,011. 7s. 8d. by Mortgages and Temporary Loans. Of these Mortgages, or Temporary Loans, £400,000 on account of the purchase of the Electric Supply Undertaking and £600,000 for the purchase of the Tramways Undertaking will be paid off out of the proceeds of the issue of the Stock.

For further particulars as to the position of the Corporation, see detailed prospectus, which may be obtained on application at the Bank of England, or any of its Branches; of Messrs. Mullens, Marshall & Co., Stockbrokers, 4, Lombard-street, London, E.C.; or of the City Treasurer, Municipal Buildings, Liverpool.

The Books of the Stock will be kept at the Bank of England in London, but arrangements have been entered into whereby assignments and transfers may be made at the Liverpool Branch of the Bank. Holders of the Stock will have the option of taking out Stock Certificates to bearer, transferable by delivery, with coupons attached, at the same rate of charge as in the case of Government Stock.

Transfers and Stock Certificates to bearer are free of Stamp duty.

Dividends will be paid half-yearly at the Bank of England (Dividend Warrants being transmitted by post if desired) on the 1st January and 1st July.

A full six months' interest, calculated on the nominal amount of Stock, will be payable on the 1st July, 1898.

Tenders, which must be for multiples of £100, may be for the whole or part of the Stock. Each Tender must state what amount of money will be given for every £100 of Stock. The minimum price, below which no Tender will be accepted, has been fixed at £98 for every £100 of Stock. Tenders must be at prices which are multiples of sixpence.

Tenders must be delivered at the Chief Cashier's Office, Bank of England, before Two o'clock on Friday, the 21st January, 1898. Tenders at different prices must be on separate forms. The amount of Stock applied for must be written on the outside of the tender.

In the event of the receipt of tenders for a larger amount of Stock than that proposed to be issued, at or above the minimum price, the tenders at the lowest price accepted will be subject to a pro rata diminution.

A deposit of £5 per cent. on the amount of Stock tendered for must be paid at the same Office at the time of the delivery of the tender, and the deposit must not be enclosed in the tender. Where no allotment is made, the deposit will be returned; and in case of partial allotment, the balance of the deposit will be applied towards the first instalment.

The dates at which the further payments on account of the Loan will be required are as follows:—

On Friday, the 4th February, 1898, { so much of the amount tendered for each hundred pounds of Stock as, when added to the deposit, will leave Sixty Pounds (Sterling) to be paid;

On Friday, the 11th March, 1898, £30 per cent.;

On Friday, the 29th April, 1898, £30 per cent.;

but the instalments may be paid in full on or after the 4th February, 1898, under discount at the rate of £1 per cent. per annum. In case of default in the payment of any instalment at its proper date, the deposits and instalments previously paid will be liable to forfeiture.

Scrip Certificates to Bearer will be issued in exchange for the provisional receipts. The Stock will be inscribed in the Bank's Books on or after the 29th April, 1898, but Scrip paid in full, in anticipation, may be inscribed forthwith.

No tender will be received unless upon the printed form, which can be obtained at the Chief Cashier's Office, Bank of England; at the Bank's Branch in Liverpool; of Messrs. Mullens, Marshall, & Co., Stock Brokers, 4, Lombard-street, London, E.C.; or of the City Treasurer, Municipal Buildings, Liverpool.

Bank of England, January 15th, 1898.

FLORILINE

FOR THE TEETH AND BREATH.

Is the BEST LIQUID DENTIFRICE in the WORLD.

PREVENTS THE DECAY OF THE TEETH.

Renders the Teeth Pearly White.

IS PERFECTLY HARMLESS AND DELICIOUS TO THE TASTE.

Is Partly Composed of Honey, and Extracts from Sweet Herbs and Plants.

Of all Chemists and Perfumers throughout the World.

2s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE TOOTH POWDER,
Only put in Glass Jars, Price 1s.

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER

Prevents the Hair from Falling off.

Restores Grey or White Hair to its ORIGINAL COLOUR.

Being delicately perfumed, it leaves no Unpleasant Odour.

IS NOT A DYE.

Should be in every House where a HAIR RENEWER is needed.

ASK YOUR CHEMIST OR HAIRDRESSER FOR

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER.

Price 3s. 6d. per bottle.

THE Sons of Gwalia, LIMITED.

Incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1893.

CAPITAL - - - £300,000,

In 300,000 Shares of £1 each.

DIRECTORS.
Cyril Wanklyn.
Arthur Johnstone-Douglas.
R. C. Ogilvie.
James Dawson.
Another Director will be nominated by the London and Western Australian Exploration Company, Limited.

BANKERS.
Smith, Payne & Smiths.

SOLICITORS.
Carpenter & Thompson.

BROKER.
L. Aarons, Gresham House and Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

AUDITORS.
Monkhouse, Stoneham, & Co.

SECRETARY AND OFFICES.
T. W. Wellsted, Broad-street House, New Broad-street, London, E.C.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring and developing the Gold Mining Leases known collectively as the "Sons of Gwalia," and situated near Mount Leonora, in the Mount Malcolm district of the North Coolgardie Goldfield, Western Australia.

The properties were discovered by Welsh prospectors in the summer of 1896, since which date a large amount of development has been carried out, and a 10-stamp mill has been erected.

Messrs. Bewick, Moreing, & Co., reporting for the London & Western Australian Exploration Company, Limited, on the 30th November, 1897, conclude their report as follows:—

"RESUMÉ AND CONCLUSIONS.

"The property comprises 168 acres, of which only one lease of 24 acres has been prospected This lease contains two known auriferous deposits.

"The principal of these two deposits may be described as a zone of low grade ore exploited from 6 ft. to 30 ft. in width, and 650 ft. in length. In this zone there are five chutes of high grade ore. The length of two of these chutes is proved, the three others are but partly proved. There are two or three chutes discovered but yet unprospected. There is 11,750 tons of ore blocked out in these chutes, which averages 2 ozs. 16 dwts. per ton.

"Surrounding these high grade chutes are ores of low grade, yet profitable Three chutes have been prospected so as to allow estimates of tonnage. Three are unprospected but of great promise. There can be estimated 3,950 tons of ore averaging 10 dwts. to 15 dwts. per ton.

"There is a parallel vein, in which there is now blocked out 3,200 tons of ore averaging 12 dwts. per ton.

"There has been milled from the Mine 3,161 tons of ore, which has an assay value of 2 ozs. 13 dwts. per ton.

"The average value by milling both high grade and low grade ores together is 2 ozs. 2 dwts. per ton.

"There should be secured an extraction of at least 92 per cent., or 1 oz. 18 dwts. per ton. From 200 to 250 tons of ore can be extracted daily, and from its easily workable nature can be milled by 50 stamps.

"The working costs under the favourable facilities existing should not exceed 32s. per ton, and there is now blocked out and in sight a profit of £98,000.

"Assuming the value and tonnage to continue 100 ft. below the 100 ft. level, as above it, there would be in sight a profit of £230,000 above the 200 ft. level.

"Should the present ore chutes continue their value in depth, from them can be gained a monthly profit of from £30,000 to £40,000. If additional bodies of low grade ores are proved, then the average grade will be lowered, and monthly profits may be reduced to £20,000—£25,000, unless milling capacity be increased to deal with larger quantities of ore.

"The ore has been proved below water level in the main shaft and maintains its value. There is every geologic evidence that it will maintain its value and quantity in depth.

"The general nature of the deposit gives hope of proving great quantities of additional ore, 1st. In further proving the extent of partially-proved ore chutes. 2nd. In chutes discovered and yet unprospected. 3rd. Of finding still other chutes.

"There are great quantities of ore of too low grade to work at present, which will, in the future, become profitable.

"The property possesses great potentialities."

It is intended to proceed with the erection of a new Mill, with 50 heads of stamps and a cyanide plant of the most modern and improved type, as advised by the Engineers.

The Company will be provided with a working capital of £50,000.

The purchase price has been fixed by the Vendors, the London and Western Australian Exploration Company, Limited—who are the promoters of the Company, and are re-selling at a profit—at £250,000, payable in fully-paid Shares.

The following Agreements have been entered into.

An Agreement dated the 17th November, 1897, between the London and Westralian Mines and Finance Agency, Limited, the British Westralian Mines and Share Corporation, Limited, and the Union Financial Syndicate, Limited, of the one part, and the London and Western Australian Exploration Company, Limited, of the other part, for the purchase by the latter Company of the above-mentioned properties.

An Agreement dated the 5th January, 1898, between the London and Western Australian Exploration Company, Limited, of the one part, and Herbert James Russell as Trustee for and on behalf of this Company of the other part, for re-sale to this Company of the above properties at a profit to the London and Western Australian Exploration Company, Limited.

London, January 11th, 1898.

NOTE.—As the whole of the working capital of the Company has been subscribed, and the Vendors are taking the whole of the purchase consideration in shares, this Prospectus is advertised for public information only and not for the purpose of inviting subscriptions.

The Subscription List will open in London on Tuesday, 18th January, 1898, and close on or before Wednesday, 19th January, 1898, at Four o'clock p.m.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY.

ISSUE of $10,000,000 LOUISVILLE DIVISION and TERMINAL First Mortgage 3½ per Cent. Gold Bonds, due 1st July, 1953.

Principal and interest payable in New York in United States Gold Coin of, or equal to, the present standard of weight and fineness.

Interest payable half-yearly on 1st January and 1st July, the next Coupon for Six months' interest being payable on 1st July, 1898.

These Bonds form part of a present authorised issue of $20,000,000, with power to increase, under the restrictions provided in the Mortgage, by $5,000,000 for future acquisitions, &c. (such acquisitions, &c., to become subject to the present Mortgage), and are secured upon the Louisville Division of the Illinois Central Railroad and Terminal property, as more particularly described in the letter from Mr. Stuyvesant Fish, President of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, dated 4th October, 1897, a copy of which accompanies the Prospectus.

The Mortgage or Trust Deed securing the total issue is dated 15th September, 1897, and is between the Illinois Central Railroad Company, the Chicago, St. Louis, and New Orleans Railroad Company, and the United States Trust Co., of New York, as Trustee.

Issue of $5,000,000 St. Louis Division and Terminal First Mortgage 3½ per Cent. Gold Bonds, due 1st July, 1951.

Principal and Interest payable in New York in United States Gold Coin of, or equal to, the present standard of weight and fineness.

Interest payable half-yearly on 1st January and 1st July, the next Coupon for Six months' interest being payable on 1st July, 1898.

These Bonds form part of a total issue of $15,000,000, and are secured upon the St. Louis Division of the Illinois Central Railroad and Terminal property, as more particularly described in the letter from Mr. Stuyvesant Fish, President of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, dated 4th October, 1897, a copy of which accompanies the Prospectus.

The Mortgages or Trust Deeds securing the total Issue are dated January 1st, 1896, and are between the Illinois Central Railroad Company, the St. Louis, Alton, and Terre-Haute Railroad Company, the Belleville and Southern Illinois Railroad Company, and the United States Trust Company, of New York, as Trustee. The Bonds are further secured by a Supplemental Mortgage executed under date of September 15th, 1897, between the Illinois Central Railroad Company, the St. Louis, Alton, & Terre-Haute Railroad Company, and the United States Trust Company, of New York, as Trustee.

The Bank of Montreal is authorised to receive subscriptions for the above-described Bonds of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, bearing interest from 1st January, 1898.

The price of issue in London is 98⅜ per cent., equal to £196. 15s. per Bond of $1,000, payable as follows:

5	per cent., or	£10 per $1,000 Bond	on	application.
20	do.	£40	do.	on allotment.
35	do.	£70	do.	on 18th February, 1898.
38⅜	do.	£76 15s.	do.	on 18th March, 1898.
98⅜	do.	£196 15s.

Payment in full may be made under discount at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum.

In default of payment of any instalment, the amount previously paid will be subject to forfeiture. If no allotment is made, the deposit will be returned without deduction, and if a partial allotment is made, the surplus deposit will be applied towards the amount payable on allotment.

Upon the basis of the present value of the Dollar in London, the Subscription price of 98⅜ is equal to 95 per cent. for Sterling Bonds, after deduction of accrued interest, so that, allowing for repayment at par at maturity, the Bonds yield to the Investor £3. 14s. 4d. per cent. per annum; or, not considering the profit of redemption at par, they yield £3. 13s. 8d. per cent. per annum.

The Bonds are in denominations of $1,000 and $500, and are payable "to Bearer," but for the convenience of Investors they may be converted into registered Bonds at the office of the Illinois Central Railroad Company in New York.

The Bonds constitute a direct obligation of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, and are not liable to be drawn or compulsorily redeemed prior to their maturity in 1951 and 1953 respectively.

Under date of January 11th, 1898, the following Statement of Earnings has been furnished by Mr. Stuyvesant Fish, President of the Illinois Central Railroad Company:—

"Compared with the corresponding months of the last fiscal year the net earnings from traffic (after deducting operating expenses and taxes) for the first six months of the present fiscal year (i.e., from July 1st to December 31st 1897), show the following results:—

"Illinois Central Railroad—Increase $1,186,664, being at the rate of 34·70 per cent. against an increase of average number of miles operated of 19·55 per cent.

"St. Louis Division—Increase $49,929, being at the rate of 19·30 per cent.

"Louisville Division—Gross earnings increase $153,954, being at the rate of 11·50 per cent. The net earnings of that Division for the above period were $461,743, but a comparison with those of the last fiscal year is impracticable, for the reasons stated in my letter of October 4th, 1897.

"In the above figures, the earnings for the month of December are estimated."

Further particulars of the financial position of the Illinois Central Railroad Company and other details, including the provisions for retirement of old Bonds and purchase of the Cecilia Branch, will be found in the letter from the President of the Company already referred to, in which it is also stated that the properties composing the St. Louis Division, as well as those composing the Louisville Division, each form a complete system in themselves, controlling an old-established traffic, and that these lines have for many years yielded net returns averaging more than sufficient to pay the interest on the total issues of $15,000,000 St. Louis Division Bonds, and $20,000,000 Louisville Division Bonds.

The Subscription will be opened simultaneously—in NEW YORK, by Messrs. Kuhn, Loeb, & Co., and Messrs. Vermilye & Co.; in AMSTERDAM, by the Amsterdamsche Bank, and the Succursale of the Banque de Paris et des Pays Bas; in GENEVA, } by the Succursales of the Banque de Paris et des Pays-in BRUSSELS, } Bas;
in BERLIN, by the Direction Der Disconto-Gesellschaft;
in HAMBURG, by Messrs. M. M. Warburg & Co., and the Nord-Deutsche Bank.

The Subscription in London will be opened on Tuesday, the 18th January, 1898, and closed on or before Wednesday, the 19th January, 1898, at 4 o'clock p.m.

Applications must be made on the form accompanying the Prospectus, and lodged with the Bank of Montreal, 22, Abchurch-lane, London, E.C., together with a deposit of £10 per $1,000 Bond.

The allotment of the Loan will be made as early as possible after the Subscription is closed. Allotments will be made as nearly as practicable in the proportion of one-third in St. Louis Division Bonds, and two-thirds in Louisville Division Bonds, unless applications expressly state that a different proportion, or bonds of either kind only, are desired.

Application will be made in due course for a quotation for the Bonds on the New York, London, and Continental Stock Exchanges.

Copies of the Mortgages or Trust Deeds can be inspected by intending Subscribers at the offices of Messrs. Bompas, Bischoff, Dodgson, Coxe, & Bompas, 4, Great Winchester-street, London, E.C.

Prospectuses, including copies of President Fish's letter, and Application Forms, may be obtained at the Bank of Montreal, 22, Abchurch-lane, London, E.C.; or from Messrs. Marks, Bulteel, Mills, & Co., Stock Brokers, 31, Threadneedle-street, London, E.C.

London, January 14th, 1898.

LONDON AND COUNTY ADVANCE AND DISCOUNT COMPANY, Limited.—Cash advanced from £10 to £500, without preliminary fees or deductions for interest, for short or long periods, repayable by easy instalments, at moderate rates, upon approved security. Bills Discounted. Forms free. Offices, 57 and 58, Chancery-lane, W.C.—JOHN STONE, Secretary

—THE— CENTRAL SUPPLY CO., LIM.

(Incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1893, whereby the liability of the Shareholders is strictly limited to the amount of their Shares.)

CAPITAL — — — £200,000.

Divided into 100,000 Six per Cent. Cumulative Preference Shares of £1 each	£100,000
100,000 Ordinary Shares of £1 each	100,000
	£200,000

The Preference Shares rank in priority to the Ordinary Shares as to both Capital and Dividend. 35,000 Preference and 50,000 Ordinary Shares will be reserved for future issue, for the acquisition of additional businesses, &c.

PRESENT ISSUE—65,000 Six per Cent. Cumulative Preference Shares of £1 each	£65,000
50,000 Ordinary Shares of £1 each	50,000
	£115,000

Payable 2s. 6d. per Share on Application, 7s. 6d. on Allotment, and the balance of 10s. per Share on the 7th day of February, 1898.

DIRECTORS.

Hamilton A. Hancock, Director of the Ceylon and Oriental Estates Company, Limited, Chairman.
Lieut.-Col. R. P. Hare, Director of the Bodega Company, Limited.
Arthur H. Easten, J.P., Durrant, Sevenoaks, Kent, and Patrington, Yorkshire.
Maurice Ansell, Director of the Belgravia Hotels Company, Limited.
The O'Clery, Director of "Holophane," Limited.
*G. Hildebrandt (Managing Director), Provision Merchant, 39, Seething-lane, E.C. *Will join the Board after Allotment.

BANKERS.—The London and Midland Bank, Ltd., 52, Cornhill, London, E.C., and Branches.

BROKER.—Ernest A. Richardson, 13, Copthall-court, E.C., and Stock Exchange

SOLICITORS.—Hollams, Sons, Coward, & Hawksley, 30, Mincing-lane, E.C.

AUDITORS.—Oscar Berry & Carr, Chartered Accountants, Monument House, E.C.

SECRETARY AND OFFICES (PRO TEM.).—Richard W. Bentley, 16, Great Winchester-street, London, E.C.

The Subscription List opened on Monday, January 17th, 1898, and will close on or before Friday, January 21st, for both Town and Country.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed for the purpose of acquiring and carrying on under one management from a central depot, the businesses of Provision Merchants, General Storekeepers, and Contractors, and as a commencement, acquiring and working the following Establishments in well-known populous and thriving districts of London:—23 and 25 Lavender Hill, S.W., provisions and poulterers; 43 and 45, Freemason-road, Canning Town, provisions; 24, Freemason-road, Canning Town, butchers; 144, 146, 148, and 150, Long-lane, Southwark, S.E., provisions; 12, Little Earl-street, Shaftesbury-avenue, provisions; 35, Green-street, Upton Park, E., butchers; 5, Green-street, Upton Park, E., butchers; 51 and 53, Watney-street, E., provisions and butchers; 59, Church-street, Portman Market, provisions; 304, Oxford-street, E., provisions; 224, High-road, Leyton, provisions; 223 and 225, North End-road, Fulham, provisions; 192, North End-road, Fulham, provisions; 27, Burdett-road, Mile End, grocers and provisions; 197, Burdett-road, E., grocers and provisions; 132, Myddleton-road, Bowes Park, N., grocers and provisions; 365, Wandsworth-road, S.W., provisions; 181, Green-street, Bethnal Green, butchers; 19, Broadway, London Fields, butchers; 51, Green-street, Upton Park, butchers; 227, Gipsy-lane, Upton Park, butcher; 283, Barking-road, West Ham, butchers; 46, Plough-road, Battersea, provisions; 54, Brunswick-road, Poplar, E., provisions; 330, York-road, Wandsworth, provisions; 294A, York-road, Wandsworth, provisions; 1, Maury-road, Stoke Newington, provisions; 21, Broadway, London Fields, provisions; 290, Roman-road, Old Ford, provisions; 206, High-road, Leyton, provisions.

The Proprietors of these businesses will be bound down not to carry on or assist in carrying on a similiar trade within a radius of two miles of their respective places of business to be taken over by the Company.

The soundness and profitable character of the businesses appear from the following certificates of Messrs. Oscar Berry & Carr, Chartered Accountants, which shows that the average aggregate sales of the whole of the businesses amounted to £251,996 19s. 11d. per annum, producing an annual net profit of £17,105 2s. 8d.

"Monument House,
"Monument-square, London, E.C.
"5th January, 1898.

"To the Directors of the Central Supply Company, Limited.

"Gentlemen,—We have examined the books and accounts produced to us by the Proprietors of the businesses, as per Schedule herewith, proposed to be acquired by your Company, and find therefrom that the average aggregate sales of the whole of the businesses amounted to £251,996. 19s. 11d. per annum, producing an average annual net profit of £17,105. 2s. 8d., which is after providing for bad debts, but before writing off any amount for amortization of leases, interest on capital, and proprietors' drawings. We consider that £1,000 a year should be set aside for repairs and renewals. We have dealt with the accounts ranging from 1894 to the early part of 1897, many for three complete years. We are of opinion that considerable saving should be made in the buying when the businesses are amalgamated, and the profits should be increased accordingly.

"We are, gentlemen, yours faithfully,
"OSCAR BERRY & CARR."

The schedule corresponds with the foregoing list of businesses to be acquired.

The profits above-mentioned (even assuming there is no increase) distributed over the present issue of the Company's Capital give the following results:—

The annual profits as certified		£17,105 2 8
To pay dividend of 6 per cent. on 65,000 Preference Shares will require	£3,900
To pay dividend of 8 per cent. on 50,000 Ordinary Shares will require	4,000
		7,900 0 0
Leaving an annual margin of		£9,205 2 8

to pay expenses of management, repairs, amortization of leases, the creation of a reserve fund, and for payment of further dividend on the Ordinary Shares, &c.

The above statement is based upon the certified profits made, and without taking into account the advantages to be derived from carrying on the businesses under one control, and of their being supplied from one central depot.

The Company will have the advantage of being able to purchase their supplies in such quantities as should induce competition from the largest dealers in various trades.

£25,000 will remain out of the proceeds of the present issue for the purchase of the Stock-in-Trade and book-debts, and for providing Working Capital, which will enable the Company to purchase for cash, and thus secure the maximum trade discounts. The Vendors to the Company guarantee that the amount to be paid for book-debts shall not exceed £1,500, and that such debts shall be duly paid.

The properties to be acquired by the Company consist of 30 retail shops, of which 19 are held on leases or agreements for leases having from nine to 32 years unexpired; the remainder have varying unexpired terms of tenancy. It is not anticipated there will be any difficulty in renewing the tenancies.

The above properties and the businesses have been reported upon by Messrs. Edridge & Jackson, Trade Valuers, and the following is a copy of their report:—

"Moscow House, 4, Eastcheap, E.C.
"6th January, 1898.

"To the Directors of the Central Supply Company, Limited.

"Gentlemen,—We have surveyed the premises as set forth in schedule hereto and proposed to be acquired by your Company, in which are carried on the businesses of Provision Dealers, Butchers, Poulterers, and Storekeepers, and we have inspected the fixtures, fittings, machinery, plant, utensils, horses, vans, carts, harness, and other effects belonging thereto. Our valuation thereof as a going concern, including goodwill, but exclusive of stock-in-trade, is £113,757. 11s. 10d. We found the premises in good tenantable repair, and the several retail shops, which are well fitted, occupy very eligible positions for the purposes of the trades conducted therein. The majority of the businesses are known to us as old-established and progressive concerns.

"We are, gentlemen,
"Yours truly,
"EDRIDGE & JACKSON."

The schedule referred to corresponds with the foregoing list of businesses to be acquired.

The services have been retained for a period of five years, as Managing Director, of Mr. G. Hildebrandt, whose knowledge of the wholesale markets and experience in management will be of great value to the Company.

It is believed that arrangements can be made with several of the original proprietors of the businesses to remain in the service of the Company.

Mr. G. Hildebrandt and the City Stores Syndicate, Limited, have contracted to purchase the respective properties and businesses, and have agreed to resell the same to the Company, and have fixed the price to be paid by the Company at £90,000, payable partly in cash and partly in fully paid shares. This price includes trade fixtures, fittings, machinery, horses, carts, and other accessories to the businesses, except stock-in-trade and book-debts, which will be taken over by the Company at a valuation in the usual way, but, as respects book-debts, subject to the above-mentioned guarantee. The Vendors to the Company will pay all expenses of forming and establishing the Company up to allotment, and of and incidental to the investigation of titles and vesting the properties in the Company, and guarantee to the Company subscriptions for Shares to the extent of £25,000 to provide cash for the purchase of the stock-in-trade and book-debts, and for Working Capital as above-mentioned.

Power is reserved to exclude, should it be deemed expedient, one or more of the businesses proposed to be acquired, and thereupon to re-adjust the purchase money to be paid to the Vendors.

For contracts see full Prospectus.

Application will be made in due course for quotation of the Preference and Ordinary Shares on the London Stock Exchange.

The contracts, the Certificate of Messrs. Oscar Berry & Carr, the Valuation of Messrs. Edridge and Jackson, and the Memorandum and Articles of Association, can be inspected at the Offices of the Company's Solicitors.

Applications for Preference and Ordinary Shares should be made on the accompanying forms and forwarded to the Bankers, together with a remittance for the amount of the deposit.

If the whole amount applied for be not allotted, the surplus paid on deposit will be appropriated towards payment of the sum due on allotment. Where no allotment is made the deposit will be returned in full.

Full Prospectuses and Forms of Application can be obtained at the Offices of the Company, and from the Bankers and Broker.

London, January 14th, 1898.

This Form of Application may be used for Preference or Ordinary Shares.
Applicants must fill in words Preference or Ordinary.

Form of Application for Six per Cent. Cumulative Preference Shares.

THE CENTRAL SUPPLY COMPANY, LIMITED,

To the Directors of the Central Supply Company, Limited.

Gentlemen,—Having paid to your bankers the sum of £....., being a deposit of Two Shillings and Sixpence per Share on Application for ..... Shares of £1 each in the above-named Company, I request you to allot me that number of Shares, and I agree to accept and pay for the same, or any less number, upon the terms and conditions of the Prospectus, dated the 14th day of January, 1898, subject to the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the Company, and I authorise you to place my name on the register of members in respect of the Shares so allotted to me, and I agree to pay the further instalments upon such allotted Shares as required in the terms of the said Prospectus, and I agree with the Company, as Trustee for the Directors and other persons liable, to waive any further compliance with Section 38 of the Companies' Act, 1867, than is contained in the said Prospectus.

Name in full .....
Address in full .....
.....
Profession or Occupation .....
Ordinary Signature .....
Date ..... 1898.

DAWSON CITY TRADING.

THE PROPERTIES ALREADY ACQUIRED BY THE COMPANY IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

The First Ordinary General (Statutory) Meeting of the Members of the Dawson City (Klondyke) and Dominion Trading Corporation, Limited, was held yesterday, at the Westminster Palace Hotel, S.W., Mr. J. M. Catton presiding.

The Secretary (Mr. Charles A. Goffin) having read the notice convening the meeting,

The Chairman said: As you are aware, the statutory meeting of every public limited liability company has to be called within four months of registration. We were incorporated on October 23, and your board has called you together in something like two months and a half. One of the reasons for this is that your chairman sails for British Columbia within the next nine days to confer on the spot with Mr. Boscowitz, our energetic and influential managing director on the other side, concerning the important interests you now hold, and will hold, in that country. Although the company has been only two months and a half in existence, your board has, I am sure you will be pleased to learn, done good work. One large placer property in which we are interested is confidently expected, at a very moderate estimate, to realise a very large sum. We hope to get returns from this property in about June next. I am not going to indicate at this early stage the location of this property, I do not think it would be in your interests that I should do so. We have many rivals, and the marked jealousy with which our progress is watched is sufficient evidence to you of the strong position we hold, backed as we are by such a strong advisory board in British Columbia, consisting of such honoured and well-known and popular representatives as the Premier of British Columbia (the Hon. J. H. Turner), the President of the Council (Mr. C. E. Pooley, Q.C.), and Mr. Joseph Boscowitz. The last-named gentleman has for thirty-five years past successfully carried on an immense business in British Columbia, which business he has now handed over to his two sons, in order that he may be able to devote his time and energies to your interests. I think that is a very important fact, because a man is not likely to give up a very lucrative business unless he thinks it will be to his advantage to take over another business. In the hands of Mr. Turner, Mr. Pooley, and Mr. Boscowitz you may rest assured that your interests, which in conjunction with the Klondike and Columbian Goldfields, Limited—with which highly-successful and influential Company we are cordially co-operating—will be of a vast magnitude. You will remember that, according to the prospectus of this Company—and it will also be gathered from the title—that we do not confine our operations to British Columbia, but that we include the whole of the Dominion of Canada. In this respect I should like to tell you that we hold a very important interest in the New Golden Twins, a mining property in the rising district of the Rainy River—a district which experts who have recently returned from that country will tell you is literally teeming with gold. I believe some of you are shareholders in the New Golden Twins, and you are fortunate—although I fear everybody who has shares in twins do not always consider themselves so. (Laughter.) Of this property the managing director (Mr. Harold Wiley) a gentleman who is well known throughout Canada as one of the most successful pioneers of gold mining in Ontario, says it is a most valuable one. It must be so; I will tell you why. All interested in mining ventures have heard of the Alaska Treadwell Mine. Now, the ore from this mine runs from $2.75 to $2.95 per ton, and they are paying very large dividends. When I say that the ore of the New Golden Twins assays over $5 to the ton you will easily realise in what a valuable property your directors have secured an interest. Outsiders have already begun to realise this: for in the daily financial papers you will notice that the shares are now at ⅛ premium.

You have heard what I have had to say myself, and I have also informed you what the managing director of the property thinks of it. I will now give you what an independent expert says about it. He states:—"You have a vein on the property—I know from actual experience, for I have walked over it—that appears almost like a pavement for nearly 1,000 ft., and which is all the way from 5 ft. to 50 ft. wide; so that you have any quantity of ore in sight, and it is only a question of values. Now, the values there from your report to-day have really been demonstrated" (you remember I just now said they were over $5 to the ton), "showing that you have a good paying property, which will pay, as they say in the West, 'from the grass roots.' I may say that this property you control was one of the initial properties taken up in that particular district, and was selected by one of the best explorers—a man of very wide experience, who passed over numbers of others before he finally brought this to the notice of the people who took it up for him. He is a man whose judgment I do not think could be doubted." I do not think you could improve on that. Another company with a much wider scope and operating in the same district in which we are interested to the extent of holding a third of the deferred shares, which take half the profits after 20 per cent. has been paid to the ordinary shareholders, is the Rainy River and Ontario Exploration Company, Limited, which was successfully launched about six weeks ago. The advisory board of that company is a strong and influential one, consisting of the Mayor of Port Arthur (Mr. Marks), Mr. James O'Connor (the President of the Board of Trade at Port Arthur), and Judge Fitzgerald. I think that is a very strong board to have behind us. We expect very great things from this company. It is practically the first pioneer exploration company in this wonderfully rich district of Rainy River and Lake of the Woods. Men who know and whose experience lends weight to their knowledge, say that it will prove one of the richest goldfields yet discovered. Only time will prove this; but we have the satisfaction of being big shareholders in an influential and well-directed Company first in the field. I hope you are still bearing in mind that the actual business accomplished, to which I have briefly referred, has been done in under two months and a half. We have not, I hope you will agree, missed our opportunities. In addition to this, we have, of course, had under consideration multitudinous propositions for trading business, and it is principally on this class of business that your chairman is at once proceeding to British Columbia. The nature of these operations it would not be politic in your interests to disclose at this meeting. That we shall reap large profits from this class of business I have no doubt whatever. I may tell you, however, that it will be principally a ready-money class of business, consisting of both large profits and quick returns.

There is another important matter before I conclude, and that is a personal matter concerning the constitution of this board. You will remember that on the appearance of the prospectus of this company the Times, the most influential and most widely-read paper in the world, referred to the company as having objects quite legitimate and to the prospectus as a straightforward document. It is very rare that the Times refers to the prospectus of any company in this way. The more important section of the Press also spoke fairly of it. Other journals of minor importance referred to it rather disparagingly. There is a feeling of jealousy, and whether these journals made unpleasant remarks inspired by rival companies, or because they did not get the advertisements, I do not know; but the fact remains that no company operating in the same sphere as ourselves possesses such an influential, high, official, and practical board of directors as the Dawson City (Klondike) and Dominion Trading Corporation, Limited. The Premier of British Columbia (the Hon. J. H. Turner), the President of the Council (Mr. C. E. Pooley, Q.C.), and Mr. Joseph Boscowitz are still with us and working in cordial co-operation; and in this connection, to show you how much and how highly Mr. Turner and Mr. Pooley think of this company, and the successful results we are likely to reap from it, I may say that, in consequence of a certain British Columbian paper following the ill-formed lead of certain journals in this country, they have, I believe preferred a charge of alleged criminal libel against the editor of an important Victorian paper, and this gentleman, I am informed, has consequently been committed for trial. This, I think, will prove a wholesome warning to certain journals in this country whose editors are sometimes apt to let their pens run away with them. I think Mr. Turner and Mr. Pooley are entitled to every praise for having taken the steps which they have. Going one step further, I come to the fact that one of the directors advertised on the prospectus of this Company, and holding a high official position in the House of Lords, was obliged to resign. I refer to General Sir Michael Biddulph, G.C.B., an officer of whom it is impossible to speak too eulogistically. Sir Michael accepted the directorship of this Company on October 22, and on November 2 he formally notified to the board his resignation in the following letter:—"2, Whitehall-court, November 2, 1897. To the Board of Directors of the Dawson City (Klondike) and Dominion Trading Corporation, Limited. Gentlemen, I desire now to notify to you in due form that I have taken the step of withdrawing from the Board of Directors of your Company, and I do so with regret, as I find my position and occupations do not permit me to assist you as I would wish to do. Believe me, yours truly, M. A. Biddulph." General Biddulph also wrote a letter on the same date to his colleagues on the board, and in the course of his remarks he said:—"I have, at Mr. Catton's desire, sent in my formal resignation to the board of directors. I am obliged to you, and to him, for being so good as to welcome me on the board, and sorry if I have given you any trouble. However, I think that my name has not been without advantage to your company, and no harm has been done by my resignation. I wish you all success, and I think there is a good opening." I think these letters settle once and for all the many grossly unfounded statements which appeared at the time of the issue of the prospectus of this Company. These statements were naturally treated with the silent contempt they deserved. We preferred to reserve any explanation that we might see fit to make until this meeting at which you shareholders would be present. I think you are the first who should be taken into our confidence. That concludes all I have to say at this statutory meeting of the Company. (Applause.)

Mr. Chester Haughton proposed a vote of thanks to the Chairman and directors.

Mr. H. D. Evans, in seconding the motion, said he considered the Chairman's statement with regard to the two and a half months' working of the company was satisfactory. He thought that with the co-operation of the advisory board on the other side the company ought to do well, more especially as it was a trading company, operating in a new district.

The motion was unanimously adopted.

The Chairman briefly acknowledged the compliment, and expressed the hope that when the directors met the shareholders at the next meeting they would be able to present a satisfactory report and to declare a satisfactory dividend.

The proceedings then terminated.

PLAYER'S Beautifully Cool, Sweet Smoking.

The Original and the Best. NAVY CUT

PLAYER'S NAVY CUT TOBACCO is sold only in 1-oz Packets, and 2, 4, and 8-oz. and 1-lb. Tins, which keep the Tobacco in Fine Smoking Condition. Ask for "PLAYER'S" at all Tobacco Sellers, Stores, &c., and don't be put off with any other. The genuine bears the Trade Mark, "NOTTINGHAM CASTLE," on every Packet and Tin.

PLAYER'S NAVY CUT CIGARETTES are now obtainable in Packets containing 6 and 12, and in Tins of 24, 50, and 100. The "MAGNUMS"—large size—are sold in Card Cases containing 8, and in Tins of 16, 50, and 100.

A MASTER KEY of this SIZE

Can be made to open any number of Locks. Many Ladies and Gentlemen have the whole of their locks so arranged that a MASTER KEY, so small as to be worn in a finger-ring or locket, will open every lock they possess—from their Dressing Bags, Trunks, Jewel Cases, Despatch Boxes, &c., to the Front Door, Wine Cellar, Park Gates, &c. Just think of the Convenience! The locks are made in suites, each suite with its own key, so that the ladies' maid or valet can open the luggage, the butler the wine cellar, and so on, but the suite keys are of no use for any but their own series.

BRAMAH JEWEL SAFES,

BURGLAR AND FIRE RESISTING, SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR BED AND DRESSING ROOMS.

Specialities in fitted Suite Cases and Dressing Bags, Jewel Cases, Despatch and Deed Boxes, Bramah Street Door Latches, with small keys, Bramah Padlocks for Bicycles, with Leather-covered Chains, &c. &c.

New Illustrated Catalogues Post Free.

For Prices and Particulars apply to

NEEDS & CO. Late

Bramah & Co.

Sole Manufacturers of the real Bramah Locks.

100, NEW BOND STREET,

LONDON, W.

A Master Key Signet Ring (Open).

BARNARD, BISHOP, & BARNARDS

(Late of Queen Victoria-street, E.C.) LIMITED.

ORIGINAL MANUFACTURERS OF

THE CELEBRATED SLOW-COMBUSTION STOVES, or COUNTRY PARSONS' FIRE-GRATES.

REGISTERED DESIGN.

Invite a Visit to their New West-End Showrooms at

23, PRINCES-STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.

(A FEW DOORS FROM OXFORD CIRCUS).

Where a most recherche selection of their newest designs in Stoves, Carved Wood and other Mantles, Tile Slabs, and Hearths, &c., &c., will be seen. Catalogues free. Competent representatives sent to any part of London or Suburbs to take instructions and particulars.

Manufactory: NORFOLK IRON WORKS, NORWICH.

SINGER

MODÈLE DE LUXE

(Registered Trade Mark)

CYCLES

IMPORTANT NOVELTIES FOR 1898.

1898 Lists Free.

SINGER CYCLE CO. LTD. COVENTRY

LONDON: 17, HOLBORN VIADUCT.

IF YOU COUGH USE . .

CERAUDEL'S PASTILLES.

Let your lungs be filled with the vapour of Norwegian Pine Tar, which they give off whilst dissolving in the mouth. The efficacy of Pine Tar in all affections of the Throat and Lungs is well known; the best mode of applying it is by inhalation, and the mouth makes the best inhaler.

ALL CHEMISTS SELL THEM.

OUR PUZZLES.

RULES.

1. The sum of £2. 2s. will be given every week for the best EPIGRAM, CONUNDRUM, LIPOGRAM, BOUTS-RIMÉS, or whatever the announced subject of the competition for the week may be.

2. The Puzzle Editor reserves the right, however, of dividing the above sum between two or more competitors, or of withholding the prize, should exceptional circumstances render such a course desirable.

3. The decision and award of the Puzzle Editor must be considered final and irrevocable, and, for obvious reasons, no appeal from his critical judgments can be entertained.

4. In every instance the prize will be given in money, subject to no condition whatever, except the publication of the winner's real name and address in this journal.

5. Competitors will be allowed eleven days for the composition and despatch of their efforts; but all such communications must, at the latest, be received at the TRUTH OFFICE by the first post on the morning of the second Monday succeeding the publication of the subject for competition.

6. Not more than one Prize will be given a Quarter to the same competitor.

7. ALL NEW CONTRIBUTORS ARE REQUIRED TO FORWARD WITH THEIR FIRST ANSWERS THEIR REAL NAMES AND ADDRESSES FOR REGISTRATION; such names and addresses will not be published except in the case of Prize-winners.

8. The nom-de-plume chosen by competitors should not exceed 12, and must under no circumstances consist of more than 14, letters.

9. COMPETITORS MUST ON NO ACCOUNT CHANGE THEIR NOMS-DE-PLUME THEY HAVE ONCE ASSUMED.

10. On the announcement of the Prize-winner's nom-de-plume, the successful competitor must write and make formal application for the Prize, stating the address to which the cheque must be sent. Any competitor failing to do so within three months of winning the Prize will forfeit all claim to the same.

11. No communications can be received on post-cards, by telegraph, or by hand. They must all be sent by the time named above. All post letters addressed—

PUZZLE EDITOR OF "TRUTH," CARTERET-STREET, QUEEN ANNE'S-GATE, S.W.

"TRUTH" TOY AND DOLL SHOW.—SPECIAL NOTICE.

Now that the Prize List has been published, it is hoped that those ladies and gentlemen whose names are included in it will make application for their prizes at their earliest convenience. The failure of one or two ladies to do this may tend to delay the allotment of prizes of those coming after them in the List, and the Editor of TRUTH is anxious to complete the distribution of the prizes as soon as possible.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 977.

It has been decided to award the Prize in this competition to PENDARLEY for the following:—

AMUSING SAYING OF A CHILD.

Mother (who has just been telling the story of Balaam to small daughter): "So you see, Tottie, Balaam was a very naughty man, wasn't he?" Tottie (just returned from a month at the seaside): "Yes, mother, I should think Dod would never give him another donkey-ride."

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 986.

The name of the Prize-winner in this competition will be announced when competition No. 989 is decided.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 987.

The Prize in this competition has been divided between PAT-A-CAKE and AVIS for the following suggestions of Round Games suitable for Christmas Parties:—

MUSICAL SUGGESTIONS.

The following game was suggested by the accidental circumstance of my other wondering what train of thought had led him to whistle a particular one. He found it was suggested by the sight of a picture on the wall. We developed the idea as follows:—Divide the company into two camps, of which the leader on each side must have just sufficient knowledge of music to supply names and tunes of a few well-known musical compositions. Select an umpire in case of disputes. Camp No. 2 leaves the room. No. 1 chooses an object to be fairly visible to all, whose name can be suggested by the words or title of a musical air. Enter No. 2. The tune is hummed, or whistled, or played on any musical instrument by No. 1. The first guesser who "spots" the tune names it aloud, and his party roam round till they find the object selected. Whoever first guesses right is counted "out," and joins the spectators. The No. 2 retires again, and the process is repeated till all the side is "out," when No. 1 camp takes the guessing. If no one can name the tune, they may ask it of the umpire. This can be played by persons of all ages. It is not a game," yet contains movement, and can be enlivened by use of a jew's-harp, any whistle, or combs as musical instruments. It allows of ingenious cunning, and is "original." The following tunes, with their corresponding objects, illustrate my meaning:—"Rule Britannia," picture of the yacht of that name. "Onward Christian Soldiers," a toy soldier. "The Marseillaise," a French poodle. "God Save the Queen," a coin head upwards. "My Pretty Jane," a lady of that name. "I Know a Bank," a cheque book. "Harmonious Blacksmith," a horse-shoe.—Pat-a-Cake.

MUSICAL PROVERBS.

A perfectly-delightful form of "Musical Proverbs" can be played thus, and is, I believe, new to most circles. Two persons are in "the know," one seated at the piano, the other outside the room. The company choose a proverb, which they communicate to the pianist, and the banished one is recalled. Without sign or look she walks away from the piano, and the player strikes a few well-chosen chords. The other pauses a second, and then repeats whatever proverb the company may have chosen. There are always plenty present who are "sure they can do it," and are eager to try, or it could be scarcely called a "round game." The key is—Pianist chooses the most prominent word in the proverb—such as "cat," "stones," "houses," &c., and spells this out by a number of chords. For instance, "eat," three firm chords for "c," small pause, one fine one for "a;" for "t" we should need so many that we divide the alphabet in two at the letter "l," which is given by two sharp chords like a rat-tat, then single chords for each after. So that for "t" we should start with our rat-tat chord and give eight single chords after. It is very easy to pick up, and I have never found it fail to delight. The chords should be as varied as possible. I always start each letter-group in a fresh key, which brings out the most amusing comments, such as "of course, it's quite simple, I see, a mere change of key." Absolute silence is necessary for the guesser, and these lively ones have to be suppressed, but are given "fair play" afterwards. Should the guesser fail at first word, pianist says mysteriously, "Give you another form?" and proceeds to spell out next chief word. I fear my description is not brief, but please, Mr. Editor, excuse it, and let your readers have the chance of trying this pretty game.—Avis.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 991.

The usual Prize of Two Guineas is offered this week to the competitor who is most successful in supplying

A LIST OF CORRECT ANSWERS TO THE FIRST FIFTY OF THE ORIGINAL CONUNDRUMS PRINTED ON THIS AND THE FOLLOWING PAGE.

Marks will be awarded for replies that fairly answer the given riddles even though they may not be the ones sent in by the authors of the conundrums. The senders of conundrums are not debarred from taking part in this competition, but it must be understood that no marks will be allowed them for the answers to their own riddles. All answers must reach me by the morning of Monday, January 31, at the latest.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 The real name, with the address, of TABLEAU, winner of Prize No. 984, is Miss Pitman, Loddiswell, R.S.O., South Devon.

 The real name, with the address, of ALMAVIVA, winner of Prize No. 985, is Joseph Harry Fry, Esq., 64, Craven Park, Willesden, N.W.

L. G.—Many thanks for your P.O.O. for five shillings, which has been placed to the credit of the TRUTH Toy Fund.

ALDBARN.—I am much obliged to you for your excellent suggestion.

BLOSSOM.—Many thanks for your letter. I am sorry that you made a mistake about the "Epitaph" competition.

J. MCGRIGOR ALLAN.—I am much obliged to you for the lines you have so kindly sent me.

THE PUZZLE EDITOR.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 988.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

ORIGINAL CONUNDRUMS.

Why did Ranjitsinhji, in continuing his celebrated innings after a surgical operation, do no more than might be expected?

Why did Mme. Toussaint, wife of the black Haiti reformer, rejoice in the appropriate surname (Ouverture) adopted by her husband?

What is the difference between a silkworm and a parricide?

Why must a tenor take care of his health in order to preserve his high notes?

Why are Christmas turkeys like pages of Italian?—Ludwig B.

The lovely Letitia, strolling through the park with her cousin Thomas, saw, poised in the air above, one of the few birds of prey left to us here in England. Desirous of calling the young man's attention to it, she pointed her taper finger upward, and exclaimed, "Indian hatchet!" What did the lovely Letitia mean?—Harebell.

7. What is which no one should have, yet no bicyclist should be without?—G. E. W.

8. Why are the Great Powers like a domestic servant?—A. E. B.

9. Why is a man eating a beef-steak in a village like a landed proprietor?—J. McGrigor Allan.

10. What favourite melodrama are the Chinese trying to get up?—Cochran Field.

11. Why do knaves resemble Paris houses?—Atol.

12. Why must Hall Caine be considered vain of his powers?

13. Why should thunder attract little or no attention?

14. Why should silent young ladies be interesting to athletes?—Georgina.

15. Why was the Kaiser and Prince Henry episode quite commonplace?

16. Why are the Guardians who wished to continue the practice of bathing a dozen "casuals" without change of water like flannel?

17. What sartorial anomaly is witnessed on September 1?—Robert Martin.

18. How can the Englishman at the present time best vindicate his popular title?—A. P.

19. What four letters will give the quality requisite for advancement in the world?—M. E. B.

20. What three letters will prove an obstruction to advancing in life?—M. E. B.

21. When is a journey round the Inner Circle of the Underground like a famous specialist on throat and chest diseases?—M. E. B.

22. Why was there a forecast of disaster in the Kaiser's address to Prince Henry?—Marplot.

23. Why was the attitude of the prosecuting counsel and witnesses in the recent case against the directors of the Junior Army and Navy Stores remarkable?—Marplot.

24. In what way has Sir T. J. Lipton shown himself an enemy to national prosperity?—Marplot.

25. Why is hydrophobia an imaginary complaint?—Marplot.

26. Why should the movement of the Powers in Asia be hated by sailors and welcomed by unemployed potters?

27. Why has Sunderland smaller chance of winning the League Championship than any other club?

28. Why are the French very careful and peaceful in Parliament?

29. Why is the late William Terriss like the holly?

30. Why should a trip southward from Portsmouth cure and delight haughty people?—Felixicus.

31. What is the value of a half share of the prize in this competition?—Aldbarn.

32. On what railway in England can you feel safe to travel?

33. Which of our cathedrals is of universal interest just now?—Felsberg.

34. What is the difference between Heligoland and the engineering trouble?—Mac.

35. Why is Barnum's Show like Heaven?

36. When is a boy like two quadrupeds?—Elk.

37. What's the difference between the Emperor of Germany and pirates in action?

38. When does the act itself of an offender invoke the arm of the law?

39. What is the speediest means of smashing China?—Baritone.

40. Is it true that your friend Mr. Hill objects to his son entering that office in the East End of London?—Coloniensis.

41. Why is Russia to be excused in pushing forward the trans-Siberian railway?

42. Why does the war in the north-west of India remind one of Mr. W. T. Stead?

43. What is the remedy for self-depreciation?—Esperanza.

44. What sort of a man would a competitor in this puzzle like to be?

45. Why does a lover who wishes to gain the affections of a lady resemble her when she repels his suit?

46. Which of the little wars we are now waging is likely to be the most deadly?—Excelsior.

47. Who ought to have been the first balloonist?—Oteris.

48. Why was Pythagoras the first hatter?—Moonshine.

49. What is the difference between a gunsmith and a pinch of snuff?—Moonshine.

50. Why is the bull the real king of beasts?—Touchstone.

51. Why is a man with the gout like a cork?—Pigtail.

52. An old riddle asks what fruits do we know grew in Eden, the answer to which is an apple, a pear (pair), and a medlar (meddler). But what is the fruit we know was not in Eden?

53. Why need no lady be surprised that her figure is so good?

54. Who is the best known weather prophetess?—Singeon.

55. Why is Leigh Sampson heir to the British Throne?—Giglamps.

56. Why are cut flowers like ardent spirits?

57. What is the surest passport to Heaven?—J. Beynon.

58. Why is the German Emperor like a curio hunter?

59. Why would a return to mankind's primitive state resemble the letter S.—Chess Vale.

60. Why is there but little to choose between the behaviour of Russia and of England in the China Seas?—Ooloo.

61. Miss Jennie Macphierson is thirty-seven years of age; why is she like Eve in the Garden of Eden?

62. When is a horse extravagant?

63. When should a donkey go to church?—Svonok.

64. Why is an ambulance like a well-known Latin proverb?

65. Why can a man who is very fond of the national beverage never be said to be really well?

66. What name of a country would a man object to be called?—Irma Lee.

67. I sold a good thing to help a good cause,
But I sinned in so doing, and so did the buyer;
Yet no cause will last unless it stick fast
To this thing that will perish by fire.
J. M.

68. Why is the devil the worst and most dangerous character ever was, or ever will be?—Juno.

69. What is the difference between a well-known dramatic critic and North Britain?—East Anglia.

70. When a maid-of-all-work gets married, why is it a distinct rise in the social scale?

71. On which relative of your hostess is it etiquette to turn your back?—Sissie.

72. Why is the engineers' strike like a box of safety matches?

73. Why does Germany represent British servantgaldom?

74. Why is New Year's Eve like the first number of a famous novel?

75. Why is the P. of W. Hospital Fund like the G.P.O.?

76. Why is the Maidstone epidemic like refugees from the Fatherland?

77. Why is the TRUTH Toy Show like a popular pantomime?—Sol.

78. If a donkey were to wish its mother to address it, what town in Scotland would it name?—Barbato.

79. Why is Chaucer like the modern turf "tipster"?—Xnihps.

80. When does a man become a quadruped?

81. Where can we find men without guile?—Risk.

82. Why is the Eastern Question like a bird with a broken wing?

83. Why should you always repay a single present?

84. When is a ship not a ship?

85. When is a sailor not a sailor?

86. When is a light not a light?

87. When is a tooth not a tooth?—Crock.

88. Why should all unmarried ladies go East?—Comet-Aster.

89. When is the conferring of honours like sleeping in a haunted room?—Phyllis.

90. Why is a verbose orator like a penniless toper?

91. Why is a herring like Napoleon?

92. When is a punster liable to penal servitude?

93. When is it illegal for a woman to marry a clergyman?

94. Why are we in danger of a flood, and how do we increase the danger?—Hireling.

95. What did Io die of?

96. In the question of the Far East, what nation should England favour?

97. In the same question, what nation should she not encourage?

98. Which is, in the present day, the most warlike nation, and why?—Ooloo.

99. If the builders of seats for the Jubilee wanted the best material to ensure safety, where would be the best place to find it?

100. Why is a German gentleman asking his English servant for a garden requisite like a tourist doing Rome without a guide?

101. Why were the experiences of the Generals commanding on the Indian frontier during the fighting like some of the political party in South Africa about the time of the Jameson raid?

102. What is the difference between the Chinese form of worship and the Government's loan to China?—Table Bay.

103. Why is the shout of a policeman stopping a cab like matrimony?

104. Why ought a pew-opener to get rich?

105. When is a Stilton cheese like a dollar?

106. When do ladies' locks become metallic?—Thersites.

107. What is the difference between a salad and a ship?—Azile.

108. What peculiar phenomena opposed to natural science does an artillery regiment in action present?—Verax.

109. What is it that we oft possess,
The more it is given grows less and less;
Yet, on the other hand, it will
When nothing given grow greater still?
Azile.

110. Why are journalists like chickens?

111. How many wives may a man have according to the Prayer Book and the English law?

112. Why should a nobleman in wedlock marry a young heiress named Annie?

113. Why was Balaam's ass like an illiterate local preacher?

114. What was Joan of Arc made of?

115. I'm found in nearly every house,
And daily wants supply;
And though I'm hidden out of sight,
I'm scanned with anxious eye.

Two simple words will give my name,
Yet, strange as it may seem,
I'm multiplied ten thousand times,
When nought is placed between.
Pellea.

116. A verb of eight letters poor debtors abhor.
Behead me, I'm making one great effort more.
Behead me again, most melodious I sound.
Behead me once more, on the railway I'm found.
Behead me again, I fertility give
To lands where, without me, no creature could live.
Once more beheaded, in bonnie Dundee
I'm a word of possession, belonging to me.
Behead me again, it results, my position
Is that of a constantly-used preposition.
At my seventh beheading, the mystery wanes,
For now but a single initial remains,
Once a power in Europe to charm or affright;
A symbol in France of her glory and might.
Harebell.

 Some of the preceding specimens are not, strictly speaking, Conundrums at all; but as there is sufficient space, I have had them printed notwithstanding.—The P.E.

A THIN PAPER EDITION OF "TRUTH"

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,

AND CAN BE OBTAINED ON ORDER OF ALL NEWSAGENTS.

PATENT FAST DYED KHAKI MATERIALS.

Absolutely Fast to Washing.
Stand any amount of wear.

Most useful for all kinds of wear
by Ladies, Gentlemen, and Children.

WOOL.

SERGES.
FLANNELS.
CORDS.
LEG BANDAGES.

COTTON.

DRILLS.
SERGE.
CORDS.

Price List and Patterns Free on application to

E. SPINNER & CO., MANCHESTER AND BOMBAY, Sole Agents.

Genuine Old Welch Dressers

(Inlaid and Carved Oak), from £6. 10s.

ILLUSTRATED PRICED CATALOGUES POST FREE.
ALL GOODS CARRIAGE PAID TO ANY STATION IN GREAT BRITAIN.

HEWETSONS,

OTTENHAM COURT ROAD, London, W.

CAN BE TESTED FREE.

DR. TIBBLES' VI-COCOA

Address (a postcard will do):
Dr. TIBBLES' VI-COCOA, Limited,
60, 61, & 62, Bunhill Row,
London, E.C.

OUR

Fashionable

"CLUB NOTE" has attained an unrivalled reputation as the BEST PAPER and the BEST VALUE in the market. It is a thick, creamy, smooth

Note paper

delightful to write upon. Supplied (only by us) beautifully headed with address in Gold or any Colour. 100 Sheets and 100 Envelopes for 2/6 post-free.

SPECIAL OFFER (for a limited period only). — One Ream and 500 Envelopes for 8/6 carriage paid, headed with address,

Free of Charge!

Samples of this and other remarkable values on application to
SHARP, WALKER, & CO., 259, High Holborn, W.C.

LIPTON'S TEAS

DIRECT FROM THE GARDENS

NOTE THE PRICES.

FINEST THE WORLD CAN PRODUCE

Per 1/7 lb.

NO HIGHER PRICE.

RICH, PURE, AND FRAGRANT,

r 1/- and 1/4 Lb.

ns of people are daily drinking and ng these delicious Teas, fresh from reet-scented Island of Ceylon. Lipton owner of some of the most famous s in Ceylon, which cover thousands of eres of the best tea-growing land.

on Offices and Shipping Warehouses:
e Street, and Maddema Mills,
Cinnamon Gardens, Colombo.

Visitors to this beautiful Island are cordially invited to call and see over Lipton's Tea and Coffee Warehouses, Maddema Mills, Cinnamon Gardens, Colombo. Those desirous of going up country are also welcome to visit Lipton's Tea, Coffee, and Cocoa Estates, situate high in the hills, where some of the finest Tea can be seen growing at an altitude of about 7,000 feet above sea level.

BUY FROM THE GROWER.

TEA MERCHANT BY SPECIAL APPOINTMENT TO HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

THE LARGEST SALE IN THE WORLD.

£50,513 11 5

represents Duty on over 1,300 Tons of Tea, and is the amount of

THE WORLD'S RECORD DUTY CHEQUE

For TEA, Paid to Her Majesty's Customs, London, By LIPTON,
FOR HIS WEEK'S CLEARANCE.
This speaks for itself, and represents considerably more than half the entire quantity of Tea used per week in the whole of Great Britain.

Indian Offices and Shipping Warehouses:
HARE STREET, CALCUTTA.

IPTON, TEA, COFFEE, AND COCOA PLANTER, CEYLON.
BRANCHES AND AGENCIES THROUGHOUT THE WORLD.
Chief Offices: CITY ROAD, LONDON, E.C.

"THE QUEEN

HAS A CUP OF SCHWEITZER'S COCOATINA BROUGHT TO HER AT 7.30 a.m., AND TWO HOURS LATER USES THE SAME BEVERAGE AT THE BREAKFAST TABLE."—Society.

By Order of the Czar.

"Send immediately to Office of Marshal Imperial Court, Petersburg Winter Palace, twenty half-pound tins Schweitzer's COCOATINA.

COLONEL ANITSCHKOFF."

(Telegram from St. Petersburg.)

FIRST SPECTACLES.—When these are required the advice of a very skilful optician should be taken, as, unless the spectacles used in the first instance are exactly suited to the eyes, mischief is soon done which cannot afterwards be remedied.

BROWNING'S SYSTEM OF SUITING THE SIGHT

IS ALWAYS SUCCESSFUL.

Mr. JOHN BROWNING, President of The British Optical Association, and Author of "Our Eyes," now in its 17th Edition, price 1s., 63, STRAND, LONDON, W.C. May be consulted personally free of charge.

RUBINAT.

BEST

RUBINAT.

APERIENT.

Source Dr. Llorach.

SPANISH APERIENT MINERAL WATER. Dr. WEX, Official Chemist to the town of Hamburg, places Rubinat before the most vaunted of the German purgative waters. Is invaluable in all gout and intestinal complaints.

Has none of the drastic and ofttimes irritating effects of other waters, which chiefly depend for their action upon magnesian salts of which they are largely composed.

E. GALLAIS & CO., 90, Piccadilly, London, W.

E. GALLAIS & CO. Wine Merchants, 90, PICCADILLY.

St. Galmier Mousseux

EAU DE TABLE, SANS RIVALE.

This Celebrated Table Water is doubly charged with its own natural gas. Devoid of any saline taste. Mixes better than any other with wine or spirits.

Ask for it at all Buffets and Restaurants.

St. Galmier Mousseux

EPPS'S COCOAINE.

COCOA-NIB EXTRACT.

(TEA-LIKE.)

The choicest roasted nibs (broken-up beans) of the natural Cocoa on being subjected to powerful hydraulic pressure, give forth their excess of oil, leaving for use a finely-flavoured powder—"Cocoaine," a product which, when prepared with boiling water, has the consistence of tea, of which it is now, with many beneficially taking the place. Its active principle being a gentle nerve stimulant, supplies the needed energy without unduly exciting the system.

Sold only in Tins.

BOVRIL

Contains all the nourishment of

PRIME OX BEEF

and is unequalled

IN THE KITCHEN

OR

IN THE SICK ROOM

A WONDERFUL MEDICINE

BEECHAM'S PILLS

Have been before the Public for more than fifty years, and have now the greatest sale of any Proprietary article. This has been achieved without the publication of testimonials, the convincing fact is, that

BEECHAM'S PILLS RECOMMEND THEMSELVES.

WORTH A GUINEA A BOX

FOR ALL

Bilious & Nervous Disorders

SUCH AS

Sick Headache, Constipation, Weak Stomach, Impaired Digestion, Disordered Liver and Female Ailments.

Annual Sale, SIX MILLION BOXES.

Sold everywhere in boxes 9½d., 13½d. and 2/9 each.

Printed for the Proprietor by LOVE & WYMAN, Limited, Great Queen-st. W.C. and published at 10, Bolt-ct. Fleet-st. E.C. in the Parish of St. Dunstan's-in-the-West, in the City of London. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to ARNOLD H. BOSKER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-st. Queen Anne's-gate, S.W.

TRUTH

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 1100. Vol. XLIII. Thursday, January 27, 1898. Price Sixpence.

NOTICE.

An Index to the Forty Second Volume of Truth will be forwarded, post-free, to any address on application to the Publishing Office, Bolt-court, Fleet-street, E.C. The half-yearly Volume can be obtained at the same address, price 25s.

The terms of Subscription to Truth, which are payable in advance, are as follows:—To any address in the United Kingdom, for 3 months, 7s.; 6 months, 14s.; and for 12 months, 28s. The Thin Paper Edition is forwarded to countries within the Postal Union for 3 months for 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; and 12 months, 30s. 8d. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to the Manager, Truth, "Truth Building," Carteret-street, S.W.

ENTRE NOUS.

I HAVE one more pleasing announcement to make with respect to the recent Truth Toy and Doll Show. All the printing connected therewith was done by Messrs. Love & Wyman, and I have received a letter from that firm informing me that it is not their intention to make any charge for it. This enables me to carry the sum of £13 7s. 6d., thus remitted by Messrs. Love & Wyman, to the credit of the Truth Toy Fund, and I thank my printers for their very generous gift. I have also received the following sums in aid of the Toy Fund deficit, and, while thanking the donors, I venture to express the hope that I shall yet be favoured with many further contributions towards the extinction of the heavy deficit which the accounts still show:—

J. Laird, £1 1s.; Florence Walcot, £1; A Reader of Truth for Many Years, £2 2s.; L. F. B., £1; Gylippus, £1; Miss Holden, £2 2s.; The Daddy Man, £3 3s.; C. J. Williamson and a Friend, £1; Nurse, 10s.; H. T., £5; surplus new sixpences returned from St. Giles', Camberwell, 5s.

The Queen is to hold the Council for the Speech at Osborne on Saturday, February 5; and on Monday, full-dress Parliamentary dinners will be given by Lord Salisbury, Mr. Balfour, and the Duke of Devonshire, and the Duchess of Devonshire will have a large reception at Devonshire House.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught, who have been staying at Osborne on a visit to the Queen, left Buckingham Palace on Sunday for the Riviera, and they are to remain on the Continent for about five weeks. The Duke and Duchess will go to Germany at Easter to attend a couple of Royal weddings which are then coming off—Princess Feodore of Saxe-Meiningen and Prince Henry XXX. of Reuss, and Princess Dorothea of Saxe Coburg-Gotha and the Duke of Augustenburg.

As I have before suggested, Lord Lathom has withdrawn his resignation of the office of Lord Chamberlain only on condition that he is dispensed from attending any Court functions during the approaching season. A difficult question has arisen at Court as to who is to do the Lord Chamberlain's duty at Levees and Drawing Rooms, particularly in the reading out of the names, and the matter is now being considered by the Queen and the Prince of Wales. It is expected that Lord Pembroke will be requested to undertake this work, and anything which would clash inconveniently with his own duties as Lord Steward will be done by Mr. Fellowes, the Vice-Chamberlain, whose post promises, for one season at least, not to be a sinecure.

During the month of February the Dowager Lady Ampthill, the Duchess of Roxburghe, and Lady Lytton are to be the Ladies of the Bedchamber in waiting on the Queen at Osborne and at Windsor Castle; while Lords Lawrence, Kintore, and Bridport will be the Lords-in-Waiting on duty; Captain Drummond, Colonel Browne, Sir Edmund Commerell the Grooms-in-Waiting; and Sir Henry Byng and Major Legge, V.C., will be the Equerries-in-Waiting. If there is a Drawing Room at Buckingham Palace during the last week of February, Mr. J. S. Egerton and Mr. Ivor J. L. Hay are to be the Pages of Honour on duty in the Throne Room. Colonel Larking, Sir Spencer Ponsonby-Fane, Colonel Eliot, Mr. Raglan Somerset, and Mr. Innes-Ker are to be the Gentlemen Ushers-in-Waiting during February.

The Secretaryship of the Board of Green Cloth, which is the best permanent appointment under the Lord Steward, being worth £1,200 a year, with some perquisites and allowances, will be placed at the Queen's disposal next month by the retirement of Mr. March, after more than sixty years' service in the Household.

The late Lady Russell survived her husband more than twenty years, and since Lord Russell retired from public life in 1866 she had lived at Richmond in complete retirement. Lady Russell, who was a daughter of Lord Minto and the second wife of "Lord John," was a very clever woman, with a most attractive manner, and she took a keen and intelligent interest in political affairs. Lady Russell, having been a mild Whig during the greater part of her life, had become a decided Radical and a zealous Home Ruler during the last twelve years. She had a great position in Society when Lord John was Prime Minister, and afterwards when he was Foreign Secretary under Lord Palmerston; but she always preferred a quiet life, and was much happier when in the country with her children than when taking a prominent part in Court functions.

Lady Russell had many serious troubles and bereavements during the latter part of her life, and it was well known that when Lord John was a Minister of State he and his wife were in a constant worry about their pecuniary affairs. His elder brother, the Duke of Bedford, was a leviathan of wealth and with no family, but, although very fond and proud of Lord John, he could not bring himself to make an adequate settlement on him. Mr. Greville, who was the intimate friend of both brothers, has given an account of the uncomfortable arrangement which existed when Lord John was in office:—

> He is poor and has a large family. While he is in office he is obliged to incur expenses by giving dinners and parties, and this additional expense is defrayed by the Duke, but in a very unsatisfactory way. Lord John sends him a sort of estimate or account of his extra expenses, and the Duke pays the money. It is not surprising that Lord John dislikes such assistance as this; and although he never complains, he is probably mortified and provoked that his brother does not once for all give him a sum of money or a large annuity.

Pembroke Lodge, Richmond Park, which is one of the most attractive of the suburban Crown residences, reverts to the Queen by the death of Lady Russell. Pembroke Lodge was granted by William IV., in 1831, to his son-in-law Lord Erroll, after whose death in 1847 the Queen gave the place to Lord John Russell, who was then Prime Minister. When Lord Russell died in 1878, her Majesty granted the Lodge to his widow for her life. It is expected that the place will now be given either to Princess Louise or the Dowager Lady Churchill, who recently refused the Queen's offer of the Royal Lodge in Windsor Park, a very pleasant Crown residence, which has just been granted by her Majesty to Lord Bridport.

In addition to the batch of jobs effected in connection with the bogus abolition of Divisional Commissioners in Ireland, the County Inspector of Kerry is to be added to the Dublin Castle establishment at £300 a year extra pay, and with two district inspectors as assistants, each at £150 extra. "Added to the establishment" is the correct phrase, as the step involves the addition of a County Inspector for the vacated county at a cost of £800 a year or more. Agrarian crime is now dormant in Ireland, and a great deal has been heard of Mr. Gerald Balfour's wholesale reduction of the Constabulary in consequence. If, however, reductions on one hand are to be made on the other the pretext for increasing the salaries of Castle officials who are favourites of Sir Andrew Reed, and for creating a huge Crime Department in Dublin Castle when there is no crime to deal with, one more proof is given that even if the Irish were to manage their own affairs as badly as their worst enemies prophesy, they would do far better than their present rulers.

To the astonishment and indignation of everybody interested in amateur dramatic performances in Dublin, the patentees of the three city theatres have issued a notice threatening immediate action under the statute 20 Geo. III. (Ireland), cap. 57, against all persons engaging in illegal theatrical performances. This Act gives the managers of the patent theatres of Dublin a monopoly of the right to hold any kind of dramatic entertainments; but they are displaying extreme foolishness in attempting to enforce such an absurd and musty piece of legislation against amateur players. In London most of the leading managers and actors patronise and encourage amateur dramatic clubs on the ground that they stimulate interest in the professional stage. The Dublin managers would show a wiser regard for their own interests if they followed this example instead of arbitrarily prohibiting all performances outside their theatres. They do not, I presume, wish the public to infer that professional performances in Dublin are not good enough to bear the rivalry of amateur entertainments.

The muzzling order for Devonshire was revoked last week in accordance with the promise which, by a curious coincidence, was given by Mr. Long a few days before the election at Plymouth. A lady tells me that a committee is at work collecting the discarded muzzles and sending them to Mrs. Long's house at Exmouth with a request that they may be forwarded to her son, Mr. W. H. Long. It seems rather a feeble sort of practical joke and hardly shows a fitting appreciation of the favour bestowed on the dogs of Devonshire. There are other counties and districts in which the order is still enforced with just as little cause as it was in Devonshire—indeed, as I have repeatedly pointed out, the management of the whole business by the Board of Agriculture has become a thorough-paced absurdity. The regulation is imposed in some places, and revoked in others, in the most erratic and unreasonable manner, and the best thing Mr. Long can do is to at once abolish it altogether in accordance with the promise he has recently given.

I am told by people who have had experience of Malta that anything that has ever been said in TRUTH or elsewhere respecting the ill-treatment of animals in Italy applies equally to that island; and it is added that in Malta as well as in Southern Italy the fault lies largely with the attitude of the Roman Catholic priesthood. If any Roman Catholic enthusiasts on the subject of cruelty to animals should ever act on my hint, and approach the Pope on this question, it might be as well for them to include Malta in their representations. At the same

---

For the TRUTH HOTEL LIST, see page 236 in the present issue.
For HOSPITALS and APPEALS, see page 237.
For AMUSEMENTS, see page 235.
For OUR PUZZLES, see page 215.

time, Malta is a British possession: we can make more or less what laws we please there, and it is our fault if we do not enforce them. As long, therefore, as we tolerate in public gross cruelty to animals in that island, we are hardly in a position to throw stones at either the natives or the Government of the mainland.

"'TWAS ON THE BEACH AT BRIGHTON."

Mr. Eric Mackay lost recently on the sea-frontage at Brighton a memorandum-book containing portions of manuscript poems—stray notes and jottings and suggestions of lyrics—which he was preparing for publication in the spring.—Westminster Gazette.

No wonder the Muses are sighing;
No wonder Apollo is mute;
No wonder Euterpe is trying
All vainly to tootle her flute;
No wonder Parnassus so greatly
And grimly in shadow should lie—
They lament for that note-book lost lately
By Eric Mackay.

No wonder the waves were heard moaning
As soon as that note-book was dropped;
No wonder the Pier began groaning;
No wonder the wind should have chopped;
Aye, no wonder the sea-lion's baby
Gave forth such a terrible cry;
It betokened its sympathy, maybe,
For Eric Mackay.

Just think, if you can, for a minute,
Of the note-book we have to deplore!
Just think of the thoughts jotted in it,
The suggestions for lyrics galore!
Just think of the gold yet unminted,
Which we in the spring were to buy;
Those poems so soon to be printed
By Eric Mackay!

Yet e'en as you think, we adjure you,
Do not too dejectedly mope;
You have no need to mourn, we assure you,
As those do who mourn without hope.
There is not even need to look solemn,
For you upon this may rely,
That the spring still will bring you a "vollum"
By Eric Mackay.

Yes, although he at Brighton has lost it
(The note-book we mentioned before),
Though the waves may have possibly toss'd it,
Ere this, in a pulp on the shore,
Such a contretemps will not—we know it!—
The output at all modi-fy
Of so gushily gushing a poet
As Eric Mackay!

In a letter which Mr. D. P. Sellar has sent round to the Press about his much-abused "Old Masters" he makes much of the fact that one of the pictures (No. 186), now at the Grafton Galleries, which was "most favourably referred to by the masters of art criticism," was bought by him of Mr. Martin Colnaghi last summer for £14! "The critics," according to Mr. Sellar, agreed in ascribing this "magnificent" work to Velasquez, and he proceeds to ask, with considerable assurance, whether they or Mr. Martin Colnaghi have been at fault in the matter? Now I think I can answer this question for him with the greatest ease. It is the critics—not including my own, let me say—who have been deceived, and not Mr. Martin Colnaghi, for I take it as absolutely certain that this latter "great art authority" would never have sold a "magnificent work of the great Spanish master" Velasquez, for £14.

And this suggests another point: If Mr. Sellar's "magnificent Velasquez" is only valued at the above sum by an admitted expert, what figure would represent the average worth of those of his "Old Masters" for which "the masters of art criticism" have not a good word to say? I should imagine that about fourteen-pence would represent their value. Yes, in spite of Mr. Sellar's letter, I am afraid that in purchasing his now notorious collection, he made a very bad bargain. In fact, as a would-be facetious correspondent of mine points out, he was both Sellar and buyer, and, apparently, contrived to get himself hopelessly sold!

An incidental result of the growth of London is that the Metropolis is outgrowing "Kelly's Post Office Directory." For several years past that admirable volume has been growing more and more unwieldy in its size, and it is clear that the point must soon be reached when either the mass of information contained in it must be curtailed or the volume must be divided. In this year's issue, which is completer and fuller than ever, the publishers announce that a large new area is included, and the result is a substantial increase in the bulk, as as well as the usefulness of the volume. It is notified that those who wish can have the book in two parts. The time may come when it will have to be even yet further divided.

It seems, however, a common complaint with books of reference, as it is with the human beings referred to in them, to grow fatter as they get on in years. The "peerages, and "baronetages," though one differs from another in magnitude, all increase in girth and weight every year, and this year the increase is conspicuous. It is no doubt due to the Jubilee. "Whitaker's Titled Persons"—though a mere baby in age—has already got the same complaint, obviously for the same reason, and even "Thom's Official Directory" is growing. It is, of course, not an unhealthy sign, so far as the books are concerned; on the contrary, it shows that the compilers have crammed them with the latest information. But if peers, baronets, knights, and titled persons continue to increase at the present rate, it is clear that the time will come when not only the comprehensive "Burke," but even the handy "Lodge" and the unassuming "Dod" will have to come out in parts. Why my two favourite and most familiar books of reference, "Whitaker's Almanac" and "Hazell's Annual," should also be "swelling wisibly," I do not know; but I attribute it to the advance of knowledge and the unceasing efforts of the compilers to omit nothing in the shape of information that can possibly be useful. By the way, while on the subject of books of reference, Mr. Edmund Routledge has entered this field with a "Book of the Year," containing in a handy form a full chronicle of 1898 day by day, which ought to be found very useful in its own particular line.

"HÔTEL BURLINGTON," AT SUNNY BOSCOMBE. (200 rooms). Every luxury. Delightful grounds. Magnificent golf links. Sea-water baths. Moderate charges.—Bournemouth East Station.

The following complaint from a correspondent seems worthy of the attention of the Messrs. Harmsworth :—

In your issue of the 13th instant you refer to the competition in Answers which created so much disappointment. But Answers is not the only Harmsworth publication which disappoints a confiding public. For instance, Home Chat offered a Novels Competition, with an aggregate of £20 in prizes, which concluded last November. After a lapse of some five weeks, an announcement appeared in that paper stating that as 2,160 odd correct answers had been received, and as competitors would only receive 2d., fresh conditions would be imposed. The result is still in the womb of the future, and fresh competitions are in full swing. . . .

Of course, editors offer prizes for the purpose of selling their newspapers, and this is perfectly legitimate up to a point, but it may be easily carried beyond that point. Suppose I offer a prize of £10 to any one who can tell me the first three letters in the alphabet. Ten thousand people hear of the offer and send in their "solutions" to the puzzle. I wait a week or two for the purpose of adjudicating upon the results, and then announce that as all the 10,000 answers received are correct, and a division of the money would give less than a farthing to each prize-winner, it is impossible to distribute the money, and a further competition will be held to determine the winner. I then invite the competitors to name the second three letters in the alphabet, and the same result follows. I then have a third competition, or I announce that I have awarded the prize to the only competitor who wrote with green ink, or give it on any other basis that seems good to me. I may by these means induce about 10,000 people to buy TRUTH every week for a couple of months on the look-out for the result of the competition. But have I earned the money fairly? Far be it from me to dogmatise, but I really think that my bona fides would be open to question.

How can proprietors of a respectable journal stoop to this sort of thing? An advertisement headed "A Magnificent Offer," has been appearing in Pearson's Weekly, the substance of the offer being contained in the following passages :—

We have made arrangements whereby we are going to do a wonderful thing. We are going to offer exquisitely coloured miniatures (hand-painted) of any family photographs our readers like to send us. . . .

With the enterprise born of repeated success, Pearson's Weekly has taken time by the forelock and makes an extraordinary offer to the whole of its readers for a limited time only. We will paint a beautiful little miniature (about 2¼ in. by 1⅞ in.) in exquisite colouring, and completely framed in a dainty gold-plated oval frame. . . .

You will get an unheard-of bargain by availing yourself of this offer. All you have to do is to send your photograph (which will be returned), together with a description of the colour of eyes, hair, complexion, and dress, and the coupon found below, with 7s. 6d. The miniatures may be also had in chased gold ornamental frames, the total cost being 10s. 6d.

Samples of the "hand-painted miniatures" supplied to those who have accepted this magnificent offer have been sent to me. They are not miniatures at all, but photographs, reduced in size from the pattern photograph sent, and slightly tinted. The advertisement clearly leads the reader to expect an ordinary miniature, for, in addition to the express promise to "paint a beautiful little miniature," it speaks of miniatures having come into fashion again, refers to the work of various "renowned miniature painters," and points out that hitherto the price of such pictures has been so excessive that only the rich could afford to indulge in the luxury. The inference obviously is that Mr. Pearson has made arrangements to supply such pictures at 7s. 6d. apiece. Instead of that, he offers an article which is not a miniature, and for which no one who knew what he was about would pay more than two or three shillings. There is only one word for this trick, and it is one which, under the circumstances, I prefer not to use.

I take the following from an interesting letter, sent apropos of recent remarks in TRUTH on the disqualification of schoolmistresses on account of age :—

Secondary education will never be in a satisfactory condition until a proper value is put upon experience and skill in teaching, instead of making, as is at present the case, athletic progress the main feature in obtaining a good mastership at a public school. The headmasters may talk as they please about the importance they attach to "training," but it is absurd to expect any one to believe their statements, having regard to the way appointments are made at public schools. Secondary education is a profession in which the conditions obtaining in other trades and professions are absolutely reversed. A man, on entering it after leaving the University, will probably be able to earn a better income for three or four years than the budding solicitor, doctor, or engineer, &c. He will without much difficulty obtain a post of £100 a year, together with board and residence. Unfortunately, this pay does not increase; on the contrary, after about five years he will find that the experience he has gained is a drawback instead of an advantage, until, by the time he reaches the age of thirty, he is counted old.

From the way in which headmasters treat applications from men of thirty and upwards, it might be imagined that they themselves promptly retire at forty or thereabouts, but one does not find many of them doing so.

A wise man will only take up teaching just for a year or two, while making up his mind what profession he will ultimately adopt.

All this, of course, is perfectly true. In the case of the assistant teacher I suppose it is unavoidable that young men should be at a premium. The reason for it is not merely their athletic superiority, but their fresher acquaintance with the latest ideas and fads of examiners. The man who has just passed an examination is far better qualified to help another man through than the man who passed five or ten years back. As long as competitive examination is the one test of educational attainments, I do not see how this can be helped. And it is the same with women teachers as with men. But in every school there should be room for teachers of mature experience, and head mistresses and masters, whether of elementary or secondary schools, must need that kind of experience which only comes with age.

Lord James of Hereford has at last filled up the vicarage of Methley, Yorkshire, which is one of the most valuable livings in the gift of the Duchy of Lancaster, and in all respects a highly desirable piece of preferment. The net income is over £900 a year, with an excellent residence. Lord James has presented the Rev. H. A Hall, incumbent of the Episcopal Church at Perth, who is a most accomplished scholar, and a very eloquent and impressive preacher. The living of Methley, was held for fifty years by the last vicar, Mr. Philip Savile, a brother of Lord Mexborough. The church at Methley is much visited, as it contains some very old stained glass of great interest, and the splendid family monuments of the Watertons and the Saviles, who have successively been Lords of the Manor for six hundred years.

Dean Stanley felicitously described Dean Liddell as "an upright and downright man." The Dean's scholarship, though often sneered at, is recognised by all educated men, and the famous Greek Lexicon,, which bears his name in conjunction with that of Dean Scott, will be a permanent memorial of these two distinguished ecclesiastics, and will remain a standard work so long as classical learning is cultivated in Europe. Dean Liddell was a divine of Moderate Church principles, and he took no part in the theological tempest which raged at Oxford when he was tutor and Canon of Christ Church. He was then absorbed in his college duties and in work connected with the Lexicon, which originally appeared in 1843.

Dean Liddell was a most popular and successful college tutor, and in 1846 Dean Gaisford induced him to accept the Headmastership of Westminster School, where he doubled the number of pupils in nine years. Liddell did good work on the famous Oxford University Commission of 1854, for he was a decided reformer, both in academic affairs and in politics. He was Dean of Christ Church for thirty-seven years, and his government of "the House" was firm and sagacious, while he carried out several valuable reforms. He was a strict disciplinarian, and the caustic remarks with which he courteously crushed pert or priggish undergraduates would fill a volume. In this department he was decidedly more witty and more effective than Jowett. Dr. Liddell had lived at Ascot in retirement since he resigned the Deanery of Christ Church. He was a handsome, stately man, with great dignity both in appearance and manner. The superlative excellence of Liddell's table talk is well-known. He was a staunch supporter of Mr. Gladstone at Oxford.

During the last twenty years of Liddell's rule at Christ Church the record of "the House" in the Schools was very far from being so brilliant as in former days. There were causes to account for this which reflected no discredit on the Head, but probably there was something also in Mark Pattison's explanation—that Christ Church was peculiarly "corroded by the canker of ecclesiasticism, which excludes all intelligent interests." Christ Church was distinguished for the social rank of most of the students, while the tuition was inefficient, and (except for Dean Liddell, "who belongs to the past age") Pattison maintained that an exceptional intellectual calibre on the part of the authorities was "conspicuously wanting." The Dean will be remembered at Oxford by his admirable restoration of the cathedral, and the great improvement in the services which he brought about.

Dean Liddell was the sole survivor of the Prince Consort's ecclesiastical household. He was a very great favourite with the Prince, who appointed him to be his domestic Chaplain. After the Prince Consort's death the Queen appointed Dean Liddell to be "Chaplain Extraordinary" to her Majesty, as his position at Oxford was too high for him to accept the office of Chaplain-in-Ordinary. Some years ago, Dr. Hornby, Provost of Eton, and Dr. Warre, Headmaster of Eton, were also made Chaplains Extraordinary, there being neither emolument nor duties attached to this office.

I have much pleasure in publishing the following letter, and I am sorry to have given currency to any erroneous suggestion on the point the Bishop refers to:—

St. Botolph, Bishopsgate, E.C.
January 24, 1898.

DEAR SIR,—As I am quite sure, from long experience, that TRUTH does not wish to disseminate falsehood, may I ask you in ordinary fairness to insert this in your next issue? The Rev. W. Earle, the Irish clergyman mentioned in your last as having received preferment from the Archbishop, is not a relation, connection, or acquaintance of the Bishop of Marlborough; nor has he, I am informed, received preferment from the Archbishop.—I am, your obedient servant, ALFRED MARLBOROUGH.

A truly edifying account of the administration of ecclesiastical law as it is carried on in the Court of Arches was given in the Times of Monday. The case was originally tried in the Consistory Court at Lichfield, where, owing to the deafness of the judge, counsel had to address their arguments to him through an ear-trumpet. When the matter came up on appeal in the Court of Arches, Lord Penzance evidently thought that the hearing of arguments, even through an ear-trumpet, was entirely unnecessary. He did not attend the Court himself, but was represented by the Rev. Dr. May (Surrogate), who, without giving counsel on either side an opportunity to say a word, produced and read his Lordship's written judgment dismissing the appeal. The appellants' counsel warmly protested against the whole proceedings as a farce and a sham, and nobody with the most elementary notion of justice will consider this language a bit too strong. It is a gross scandal that any judge should continue to hold an office the duties of which he is no longer able to perform.

The Westminster Gazette announced on Friday the appointment of the Rev. Edgar Sheppard to "the vacant Canonry at Bristol." There has not been a vacant Canonry at Bristol for several years, and it is a stall at Gloucester to which the Sub-Dean of the Chapel Royal has been appointed by the Lord Chancellor. The Westminster Gazette indulges in some idiotic nonsense about Mr. Sheppard being "the idol of Society," and so forth. The Sub-Dean has to a considerable extent lost the favour which he at one time enjoyed at Court, and probably this is the reason that he has accepted a Gloucester Canonry, which is not a valuable piece of preferment. Some years ago Mr. Sheppard was very anxious to obtain some vacant apartments in St. James's Palace, but the Queen decisively refused to let him have them. He was held in high esteem by the late Lord Crewe, who once offered him a rich living in Cheshire, which, as it turns out, he would have done better to accept; but he then probably thought that his office as Sub-Dean would bring him to either Westminster Abbey or St. George's Chapel. Mr. Sheppard is an excellent preacher, and an admirable reader.

In the Times last week the Bishop of Stepney published an appeal for funds to restore the parish Church of Bow—or, to put it more accurately, to preserve it from destruction. From this it appears that within a mile or two of the City a parish church, dating back from the twelfth century, serving at present a population of 7,000 souls, and historically and architecturally a most interesting building, has had to be closed within the last year or two, and is now literally tumbling down. Most people, whatever their religious views, will agree that this is a scandalous state of things. But the most remarkable fact in connection with it is that a mile or two off in the City of London there are dozens of churches, each with only a handful of parishioners attached to it, with a handsome revenue, and a staff of more or less idle officials connected with it. The best way to save Bow Church would be to disestablish and sell up another of the useless City churches.

The following striking series of advertisements appeared the other day in the Kentish Express. If it pleases the Rector of Old Romney to spend his superfluous cash in this way for the benefit of the local Press, it might seem ungracious for any editor to find fault with him. As, however, his eccentricities are highly calculated to bring the Church into ridicule and contempt, it may possibly occur to the Archbishop that the Rector himself is the party most in need of a "Warning":—

WARNING.—All Owners of Chickens are hereby warned to keep them from Straying into the Garden or on to any part of the Premises of the Rectory in Old Romney.

WARNING.—Notice is hereby given, that large and powerful Vermin Traps will be set forthwith in the Rectory Grounds at Old Romney, and all owners of dogs, cats, poultry, and other stock are hereby warned to keep it from coming thereon, lest it should be killed or receive permanent injury.—W. ANDERSON, Rector, January 12th.

OLD ROMNEY.

THE Borrowing of Tools, &c., &c., having become a troublesome inconvenience to the Rector, Notice is Hereby Given that no Tool, Saw, Machine, Ladder, or Implement of any kind will under any circumstances be lent by him to any one except to the tenants of his glebe land on their personal application and for their own personal use. And this Notice applies also to the loan of Surgical or Medical Instruments or Appliances, many of which have been returned in a dirty and unusable condition, or broken all to pieces.—W. ANDERSON, Rector.

OLD ROMNEY.

WARNING.—All Persons owning Dogs are Hereby warned to keep them from straying on the Rectory garden or premises. And all Persons passing the Rectory in company of a Dog are hereby warned to keep the dog from going in to the said garden or premises. Visitors are requested not to bring a dog with them. And all tradesmen coming for orders, or executing the same, are forbidden to bring a dog in with them. All Drovers and Lookers bringing or removing Sheep from the Rectory fields are requested to keep their dogs under strict control.—W. ANDERSON, Rector.

Some of the country clergy have not yet reconciled themselves to the change in the law which gave the Parish Councils a voice in the administration of the parochial charities. The Awre Parish Council appointed two trustees to act jointly with the Vicar of Awre and the Vicar of Blakeney in the distribution of certain charities; but these reverend gentlemen wholly ignored their colleagues until the distribution was completed and the time came for signing the cheques. As they had not had anything to do with the disbursement of the charity, the representatives of the Council decided that they would not have anything to do with the signing of the cheques, and, consequently, the two clerics and the tradesmen who served them in the matter have been placed in a somewhat awkward predicament. No doubt this little difficulty about the cheques will teach the parsons a useful lesson, and make them careful in future not to forget the existence of their fellow-trustees.

We now have it on Lord Wolseley's "honour as a gentleman" that two Army Corps, fully equipped, and forming, in all respects, the finest force that ever left our shores, will be ready at a moment's notice and waiting on the quays before the ships could be found to take them abroad. This announcement is calculated to make the heart of every Jingo leap for joy. Not being of the Jingo persuasion, however, I can only hope that the ships never will be found which are to embark this superlative force, for it is perfectly certain that when it has once left our shores we shall not have a single properly equipped and trustworthy battalion left behind to defend us. There is an ugly family likeness between Lord Wolseley's latest utterance and the historical remark of Marshal LeBœuf about the last gaiter-button.

On the other hand, accepting Lord Wolseley's honour as a gentleman, this statement seems to me to take all the wind out of the agitation for an increase of the Army. Why on earth we want to add 15,000 men to the Line, while we have the finest Army that England ever saw, ready to go anywhere and do anything at a moment's notice, is a puzzle which every taxpayer may well desire to see solved before he again puts his hand into his pocket.

The present military difficulty, as defined by Lord Wolseley, is that of filling a quart pot out of a pint pot. What we have to do, however, is not to pour the whole contents of a pint pot into a quart pot, but to supply out of the one vessel the leakage in the other. Provided you continue to fill up the pint pot at the same time, there is no difficulty whatever in this operation. According to Lord Wolseley, the pint pot is full, and both the liquor and the vessel are of the best possible quality. As long as we can maintain this state of things, the quart pot is in no danger of being emptied.

The War Office is perpetually endeavouring to sit on two stools in regard to this question. If the Home Army is in perfect condition, and ready to launch two admirably equipped army corps at the head of any enemy as soon as he shows himself, the mere disparity in numbers between the troops abroad and the troops at home is of no consequence whatever. On the other hand, if the Home Army consists, as the critics of the War Office assert, of skeleton battalions of raw and imperfectly equipped troops, merely increasing the total strength is not a sufficient remedy for the evil. In the latter case the organisation has broken down, and a radical reform of the whole Army system is imperatively called for. What Lord Wolseley and the War Office want is simply to get more men and avoid reform. What the taxpayers want, and what their representatives in Parliament should see that they get, is security against the repetition of the administrative muddle which has brought about the present difficulty.

BEXHILL-ON-SEA.—The Mentone of England.—THE SACKVILLE HOTEL, an ideal winter and spring residence. Special inclusive terms till Easter. For tariff, &c., apply to Manager.

Are we to take it that Lord Wolseley must always have a quart pot at home to fill the quart pot abroad? If so, every fresh demand for troops abroad must be followed by an increase in the Army at home. A more preposterous doctrine than this I never heard. Under the present conditions of the Empire we necessarily want more troops abroad than at home, and the chances seem to be that the surplus abroad will increase rather than diminish. We have therefore got to find a means of filling the quart pot out of the pint pot, and if Lord Wolseley cannot do it, somebody else must be found who can.

The latest device of the War Office for beating up recruits is a lantern lecture on the "Advantages of the Army," helped out with music. An officer who is at present on tour with a show of this character made some statements at Saltash last week which must have astonished the natives, if they knew anything of the facts. For instance, after pointing out the advantages which a soldier has over a working man in regularity of employment, short hours of labour, and other respects, the lecturer vouched personally for the statement that "there was not the slightest difficulty in getting work for men on leaving the Army." This would seem to be good enough, but before concluding, the gallant officer capped it by informing his audience that during the coming session Parliament intends to increase the pay, and "give to every man a guarantee of employment at the end of his service either in the Post Office, police, or some other calling." If the Public Prosecutor interferes to protect simpletons against bucket-shop keepers, fraudulent company promoters, and other birds of prey, ought he to allow the War Office to go on like this? Is it worse to get money by false pretences than to get men?

There is another little point in this Saltash discourse worth noting. The lecturer, who belongs to the regiment, stated that "out of 1,854 men in the 1st and 2nd Battalions and depot of the Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, the total number of Cornishmen was only 302; most of the recruits came from London, Birmingham, and Bristol." That, if I remember the facts correctly, is where a large proportion of the Highlanders in the Scotch regiments also come from, except when they come from Manchester and Dublin. Such is the "territorial system," which has done so much for the Army. It is such a wonderful contrivance, that we may well make some sacrifices to keep it up.

At Gibraltar, on New Year's-eve, a number of the rank and file of the Royal Artillery—whose strong religious convictions are well known—were seized with a desire to attend the Watch Night Service at the Cathedral. The Cathedral being two miles distant from the barracks, they found it necessary to put in passes till 3 a.m. The Commanding Officer—evidently a man with but little sympathy for the devout church-goer—granted the passes, but only on the condition than an N.C.O. marched the party to church and back. This indicated such a pitiful distrust of the bona-fides of the British soldier, that, rather than submit to such an insult, every man resolved to stay in barracks and perform his Watch Night devotions in private. It so happened, however, that there was a terrific storm that night, which made it impossible for any one to think of going out of barracks. No opportunity, consequently, arose for the contemplated demonstration against the C. O.; and he is very likely congratulating himself down to the present moment on having done rather a smart thing. I venture to congratulate him, too.

From Lord Lansdowne's reply to the medical deputation which interviewed him last week, it would seem that there really is a prospect of the Army Medical Department being taken in hand in the course of the promised military reforms. Lord Lansdowne himself seems to be in favour of the formation of a Medical Corps, and he professes no love for the existing medical titles. He asked whether, if these points were disposed of satisfactorily, the professional boycott of the Army Medical Service would be withdrawn, and the deputation seems to have thought that it would. I can only say that there is not a doctor in the Service who hopes more devoutly that this may be a prelude to the removal of the medical grievances on these two points than I do myself.

Great difficulty is experienced, I understand, by men who have passed their course for employment as master tailor in finding such employment in India. There are at least five of these men now in India who passed years ago, and remain still unemployed. When they make applications for transfer, in the hope of finding an opening elsewhere, they are usually refused, and one of them—a man who had extended his service for the express purpose of qualifying as a tailor—tells me that a recent application which he made only got him a very severe wigging from his adjutant, and an order not to attempt such a thing again. This is not merely a personal grievance on the part of the men. They have been instructed at the public expense, and the money so spent is wasted.

Again, while qualified soldier-tailors are waiting for employment, in all parts of India natives are to be found doing their work, and in not a few cases it will be found that these natives charge higher prices than Service tailors would do. How comes this? The other day I heard of a case in which a native tailor working for a regiment had a long bill against a certain officer of the same corps. The bill had run for several years, but had never been sent in. In the meantime, the native was taking it out of the men by charging them exorbitant prices, and all grumbling and protest failed to procure his removal. It is easy to see for whose benefit the soldiers are being swindled in a case like this.

The GRAND HOTEL, Monte Carlo, the most fashionable hotel & restaurant on the Riviera. Perfect English sanitation. Now under English management.—Managing Directors, Messrs. NOEL & PATTARD.

H. L. SAVORY & CO.'S CIGARETTES.—By Special Warrants of Appointments, to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, H.R.H. the Duke of Saxe Coburg-Gotha, H.S.H. the Duke of Teck, and the House of Lords and Commons. To be obtained of all the leading Houses in the Trade.—Sole address, 59, Piccadilly, London, W.

Very properly, an Army order was recently issued granting an allowance for extra wear and tear of clothing to all men who took part in manœuvres at Aldershot, in the South-Eastern District, and at the Curragh, during last season. But why was not this order extended to the N.C.O.s and men from various battalions in the Cork District who formed the permanent camp party at Kilworth Camp during the same season? These men had very hard work, the weather was thoroughly bad the whole time they were at Kilworth, and I am told that by July all their clothing was done for. Their work was quite as important as sham fighting, and ought to be treated on the same footing.

The supply of "Tommy's" grievances is rather short this week—a matter for satisfaction to all parties. I am pillorying below, however, two little matters which further strengthen the complaints respecting the unequal distribution of duty among the N.C.O.s at some of the Depots, more particularly as between the Permanent Staff men and the "Depot" N.C.O.s. There is so much growling on this point that the matter seems worthy of attention at headquarters:—

Fort Carlisle, Cork Harbour.—An artilleryman stationed here the other day inflicted a nasty cut on his foot by treading on a piece of glass. On going to the surgery he was informed by the orderly that there was neither sticking-plaster nor bandage in the place, and that it could only be obtained in the course of about three hours by wiring to the doctor. The man had accordingly to take a car and drive off in search of a dressing. This seems to be a further illustration of the slip-shod manner in which the medical arrangements at this station are carried out.

Depot Leinster Regiment, Birr.—The distribution of duties among the N.C.O.s here seems open to somewhat the same remark as was recently made in regard to Galway. In the orderly room, in addition to the orderly room sergeant, there are one sergeant and two lance-sergeants; a colour-sergeant is employed as caterer in the officers' mess, and a full corporal as waiter; two lance-corporals are doing duty as officers' servants, and a colour-sergeant has been employed for the past six years as orderly room clerk in the orderly room of the 3rd Battalion, being exempted from his proper duty of paying a company during the annual training. Several of these appointments appear to be quite irregular, and they certainly throw an unfair share of ordinary duty on to the remaining N.C.O.s.

Depot, Manchester Regiment, Ashton-under-Lyne.—Here is another similar grievance on the part of the permanent staff. Out of sixteen colour-sergeants on the permanent staff, eleven are at present available for duty. Of these four are in the Quartermaster's stores on Militia work; two are on canteen duty; two on gate duty; two on guard (one on and one off); and one is Depot orderly sergeant. The two colour-sergeants on gate duty are not wanted there, as there is nothing for them to do which the sentry could not do as well in their absence, and the work of the canteen does not require two colour-sergeants. On the other hand, there are at least thirty more N.C.O.s in the Depot who do no duty of the above kinds.

Recruiting should be vastly stimulated by the inquest held last week on Abraham Russell, an army veteran of the Crimea and the Indian Mutiny, holding decorations for these campaigns. It came out in the course of the proceedings that Russell had lost one eye in the Service, and was discharged with a pension of 5d. a day. It has been pretty conclusively proved by experience that a pension of 5s. a week is insufficient to keep a man out of the workhouse, and the only purpose which such a pension seems to serve is to relieve the ratepayers of the greater part of the cost of maintaining the pensioner. If that is true of 5s., what a mockery it is to discharge a man with a pension of less than 3s.!

Among the doubtful blessings which British rule has conferred upon Cyprus is a Mr. Justice Parker, the President of the District Court of Limasol. This stalwart representative of the majesty of the law recently fined a soldier in the Cameron Highlanders £10, with the alternative of two months' imprisonment, for taking a drop more than was good for him on Christmas Day. While inebriated the man had come into collision with the police, as not unfrequently happens; but there was nothing whatever in the case which warranted the imposition of such a draconic penalty. Luckily, the officer who had watched the case on behalf of the man obtained three days' grace for the payment of the fine, and, in the interval, Sir Walter Sendall, who was just leaving the island, visited the camp and, on a representation being made to him concerning the case, he reduced the fine to 10s.—a very proper penalty. It would be interesting to know whether Mr. Justice Parker is a fanatic on temperance questions, or what it was that prompted such an extraordinary aberration.

In September last the story was told in TRUTH of the gross ill-treatment of a man on board one of H.M.'s ships by a Lieutenant, who, in consequence of the facts coming out—notwithstanding strenuous efforts to hush them up—was subsequently severely reprimanded and dismissed his ship. Last week's Gazette notified the appointment of the officer in question to a new ship. His punishment, therefore, over and above his reprimand, only amounted to some four months' unemployment. It was remarked in TRUTH at the time that many a seaman had been flogged, imprisoned, and finally dismissed the Service for a less serious offence. This remark is only accentuated by the subsequent history of the case.

A gentleman tells me that at the Customs House at Charing Cross Station a day or two back he saw a lamp-cleaner, with a piece of black oily waste in his hands, called in to turn over the contents of passengers' boxes, while a Customs officer was looking on and directing him. Some of this luggage belonged to ladies, and, in addition to the contents of their trunks being overhauled by a workman whose hands were black with dirt, many delicate articles were thrown out upon a bench all wet and black with water dripping from the roof. My informant says that he saw one lady with tears in her eyes at the damage thus inflicted upon her belongings. What is the explanation of this? Cannot the Customs Board afford a sufficient staff to perform this detestable inquisitorial duty? And is it not the business of a Customs House officer in charge to do this work himself, instead of calling in the assistance of a grimy porter from the platform?

THE FAMED "ADELPHI" TURTLE forwarded from the Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool, to all parts of the country. Per quart jar, 18s.; per pint jar, 9s. 6d., carriage paid.

For Truth, and all other Newspapers, Magazines, and Periodicals, send your Subscriptions to WM. DAWSON & SONS, Ltd., Cannon House, Bream's-bldngs., London. (Estab. 1809.) Catalogue gratis.

For years and years past—I believe ever since the income tax was first introduced—every demand note requiring a householder to pay the income tax on his landlord's rent has contained a notification that the landlord is bound, under penalty, to allow the amount off the next payment of rent. This notification has now disappeared, at any rate from the demand notes just issued in the London district. Why is this? For the protection of the taxpayer the information was most necessary. There are hundreds of householders, working men, widows, and others, with little business knowledge, who know nothing of the meaning of "Schedule A," and on receiving a demand from the tax-collector under this head, would have not the slightest knowledge that it was not a tax upon them, but upon their landlords. Is this another little trick of the present Tory régime for benefiting the distressed landlord at the expense of the general taxpayer? Whether that or not, the alteration in the form calls for notice and correction.

It may save such fruitless journeys to Somerset House as that described in last week's TRUTH, to mention that a copy certificate of a birth, marriage, or death can be obtained by application in writing to the Superintendent-Registrar of the district in which the event took place, accompanied by a remittance of 3s. 9d. fee, and 1d. postage. I am indebted for this hint to a District Registrar, who remarks that an application for any purpose to Somerset House should not be made by any one who has not at command an unlimited supply of time, patience, and good temper. He is right.

Several City firms having business with Ireland have written in confirmation of the recent remarks in TRUTH upon the early hour at which the registration of letters for the night Irish mail closes in London. It appears that the maximum late fee of one shilling is actually exacted upon letters posted an hour and a quarter before the departure of the mail. Practically the public have gained no advantage whatever from the alteration in recent years in the time of departure of the train from Euston. One of my correspondents contrasts the arrangements between London and Ireland with those between London and Scotland, there being in the latter case a special late registration, without fee, for letters intended for the second delivery the following day. Another injustice to Ireland.

What is the position of the Post Office in regard to the transmission of Irish lottery tickets and circulars through the post? Surely it is time that this question was cleared up. When challenged on the subject of the Hamburg lotteries, the Postmaster-General's representative replied that the Post Office could not investigate the contents of sealed letters. The Roman Catholic Church, however, and the various religious agencies which run the lottery business in Ireland, habitually send their prospectuses and tickets in open envelopes at the halfpenny rate. I have a packet of this description before me now—a book of tickets and a leaflet, sent out by the Sisters of Mercy, Newry, "for the benefit of Our Mother of Mercy's Home." The Post Office must know all about these things. The open envelope is required by the regulations in order that the nature of the contents may be inspected; and the Post Office inspects them systematically enough, as every one will soon know who sends at the halfpenny rate a document not thus transmissible, or receives one so sent. It follows that the Postmaster-General is knowingly engaged in the publication of prospectuses of lotteries, contrary to the statute.

A resident in Brighton complains of the increasing unpunctuality of the first morning letter delivery, which used to take place at 8 a.m. to 8.15 a.m., but has gradually got to 8.30 and from that to 9.0. Another matter of complaint is the delay in the delivery of letters from Scotland, which are occasionally delivered at 1.50, but more frequently drop in at any time between that and 4.30. As letters for Scotland have to be posted in Brighton by 3 p.m., this means that letters from Scotland often arrive too late to be answered the same day. Seeing that any traveller leaving Edinburgh at 9.30 p.m. can be at his home in Brighton by 11.30 the next morning, there cannot be the slightest reason why letters should not be delivered before 2 o'clock.

Here is a little piece of evidence which throws valuable light upon the failure of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's promise of a universal daily postal delivery. In a certain district in the North of England there are about half-a-dozen houses within a mile of the post-office, where letters are not delivered, two of them being under ten minutes' walk from the office. The letters are delivered by a son of the sub-postmaster. Some months back this man was asked whether he would deliver letters to certain of the houses without extra payment. As the present delivery occupies him on the average for two hours daily, for which he receives the handsome remuneration of 7d., he declined to do so. In this he was undoubtedly quite right, seeing that provision had been made in the Budget to meet the extra expense of an extended delivery, and that the Post Office is a Department earning profits measured in millions per annum. Accordingly, the houses in question are still excluded from the delivery of letters; and, in addition to these houses, there are half-a-dozen others, within two or three miles of the same post-office, where letters never have been delivered, and where the Post Office seems to have made no attempt whatever during the last twelve months to furnish a delivery.

From what I have heard during the last two or three weeks it seems highly probable that there are many rural districts in precisely the same position as the above.

And what do these facts show? That, after Parliament has provided the money for the purpose of giving every house in the United Kingdom a daily delivery of letters, the Post Office first endeavours to get the job done for nothing, by throwing the extra work upon its already sweated staff without extra remuneration, and when the staff declines to do the work without extra pay, the matter is simply dropped, and the outlying householders left precisely as they were before. Hitherto the stock excuse for all Post Office shortcomings has been the parsimony of the Treasury. The Chancellor of the Exchequer has played Jorkins to the Postmaster-General's Spenlow. Judging by the above case, it looks as if the position were exactly parallel to that of the two partners in Dickens's book. In this instance, at any rate, Hicks-Beach-Jorkins appears as a mild-mannered and obliging gentleman, while the real obstructive is Norfolk-Spenlow.

A firm of stationers at Hawick are aggrieved at the refusal of the Post Office to make good the damage done to two expensive photographs which were lately despatched by different mails from Scotland to London. Each photograph was carefully packed in millboard, and enclosed, in addition, in a box, so that considerable violence must have been employed to smash the packages in the post. But it is only natural that St. Martin's-le-Grand should decline to pay compensation for such breakages. It is, you see, a time-honoured custom with the postal employees to bring down their mailed fists most heavily on articles which from the packing seem least likely to stand rough handling. Is it reasonable, therefore, to expect the Department to deprive its servants of this cherished privilege by putting itself on a level with ordinary carriers, and making itself liable to compensation for damaging its customers' goods? No; other reforms may be granted, but not this.

Very little has been heard of the pauper alien question since the present Government came into office, though from the Premier downwards they used it for all it was worth as an electioneering cry in 1895. The question is, however, one which really ought to be dealt with, and I hope some of the Tory M.P.'s who were wont to be so keenly interested in it, will give their attention to the following cases, particulars of which have been sent to me from West Hartlepool. The first is that of a Swedish woman, married to a Swedish seaman, who resided for a few years in West Hartlepool. Becoming insane, she was treated for a time in the Durham County Asylum, and when she was discharged the Swedish pastor exerted himself on her behalf, with the result that she was sent home to her friends in Sweden. There she subsequently became a pauper, whereupon the authorities promptly returned her to this country, and she is now once more in the Durham County Asylum. The husband has disappeared, and the woman is apparently destined to remain a permanent charge upon the ratepayers of West Hartlepool. About the time that this case occurred, an Englishwoman who had lived for twenty years in Hamburg became insane. She was given a short period of treatment in a German Asylum, and then shipped to West Hartlepool, the Board of Guardians there being requested, through the Home Office, to "receive her on arrival, and make arrangements for her admission to the proper institution."

Quite recently a Spanish sailor was left at West Hartlepool in a destitute condition and received into the workhouse. The Spanish Consul refused to do anything for the man, as he had no "papers," and it was only at last through the assistance of a local shipowner that he was sent to Middlesbrough and shipped on a Spanish steamer for Bilbao. Without this assistance from the shipowner the man might have remained a charge upon the rates for an indefinite period, for the poor law authorities have no power to incur the expense of removing alien paupers to their own country. Surely, it is high time they were entrusted with so necessary and desirable a power. Why should we burden ourselves with the maintenance of alien paupers or lunatics? Foreign Governments take good care not to do anything so foolish.

The inhabitants of Llysfaen, a parish in the Conway Union, are in the unhappy position of having had to pay rates to the amount of 6s. 4d. in the £, with the certainty of more to come, for a new water supply, in which they have no other share whatever. This is bad enough, but the position is rendered the more tantalising by the fact that the parish is in deadly need of the new supply which it does not get. The only present source of supply is rain water, collected from the roofs of the houses and stored in casks—usually old paraffin barrels—and there has been an annual visitation of zymotic disease to show the danger of this arrangement. Last autumn a virulent epidemic of scarlet fever occurred, and within the last few weeks the disease has re-appeared in the parish. The sanitary officer has attributed these outbreaks to the present system of water supply; but still the Rural District Council do nothing, the excuse being that under the scheme carried out for the rest of the district water cannot be supplied by gravitation to the upper part of Llysfaen. That is no reason why it should not be supplied to the lower portion of the village, or why some other arrangement, if only a safer method of storage, should not be devised for the upper part. Rather than do anything, however, these Councillors appear quite prepared to see Llysfaen wiped out of existence by fever.

The Upton-on-Severn Guardians are to be congratulated upon the promptitude and vigour with which they expressed their opinion upon a recent deplorable poor law scandal. A woman in labour was admitted to the tramp ward at Malvern, and the medical officer, Dr. Baines, was called in to see her. He found that she was in a critical condition, but it was, nevertheless, decided to remove her in a cab, the doctor accompanying her, to the workhouse at Upton, eight miles away; and the result of this idiotic proceeding was that the poor creature gave birth to a child during the journey. The reason given for the removal was that there was no other place but the general room for the accommodation of the patient at the tramp ward, and that the officers at the local hospital and the police station refused to take her in. It never seems to have occurred to the medical officer or the master of the tramp ward that any arrangement would have been better than the removal of the woman in such a state; and both officers thoroughly deserve the censure which the Guardians passed upon them for conduct truly described as "devoid of common sense, decency, and humanity."

Mistakes will happen in the best managed institutions, but it is a pity so many are allowed to occur in connection with the burial of paupers. There is nothing upon which the relatives and friends of the pauper are so sensitive. A young man complained to Mr. Plowden at Marylebone last week that his grandmother had been buried as a pauper from the St. Pancras Workhouse Infirmary, although he had himself made arrangements for her funeral. This was a mistake on the part of the officials that ought to have been avoided; and the grandson's protest against the pauper funeral in such circumstances is one which will be widely endorsed. But when the young man carried his objection to the length of requesting that the body should be taken up and buried again, so that he could follow it to the grave, the magistrate did well to gently rebuke him. The fact, however, that the applicant had got into his head the extraordinary idea that the disinterment of her remains was necessary to enable him to show his respect for his dead grandmother, proves the intensity of the feeling amongst the poor against a pauper funeral.

A short time back the Farnham Guardians made the mistake of appointing as medical officer of the Frimley district a practitioner who was not a resident there. This caused a good deal of dissatisfaction, and the objections that were raised to the appointment appear to have been justified. It is true that in order to comply with the requirements of the Local Government Board the medical officer has taken a small house at Frimley; but that is not his regular residence, and moreover, he has no dispensary there, the consequence being that patients at Frimley have to send a distance of four, and in some cases six, miles for their medicine. Such a state of things ought not to be permitted. The medical officer should be a resident in the district in fact as well as in form.

There is unquestionably plenty of room for the street improvement scheme in Westminster which a syndicate, including Sir John Lubbock, Messrs. Faithfull Begg, R. J. Price, and W. F. D. Smith, M.P.s, are seeking powers from Parliament to carry out. The area extending from the Victoria Tower Gardens, Great College-street, and Little Smith-street to Lambeth Bridge and Horseferry-road contains much old, hideous, and insanitary house property which would be better swept away. The proposal of the syndicate is to acquire the whole of the property on this area, and to rebuild and rearrange the streets, among other improvements continuing the Victoria Embankment along the river as far as Lambeth Bridge, and making Millbank and Abingdon-streets a fine avenue the width of Regent-street. One of the most important questions which will arise is, of course, the rehousing of the working classes who will be displaced by the scheme; but for this the Bill appears to make due provision.

The Merchant Service Guild draws attention, very rightly, to the case of Mr. Jenkins, chief officer of the s.s. Aral, who was committed for trial for manslaughter a few months back by a coroner's jury in Cornwall. The case well deserves public notice. The inquest was held on a man who lost his life through the collision between the Aral and the schooner Pearl. The jury found that there was some fault on the part of the steamer, which the coroner construed as a verdict of manslaughter against the captain and the first officer, and committed them both for trial. A charge of manslaughter was subsequently preferred before the magistrates, but dismissed. The prisoners, who had been in gaol some days, were then bailed out, to await trial on the coroner's warrant, but in the meantime the captain died, and a nolle prosequi was entered by the Attorney-General in regard to Jenkins. Application has since been made to the Treasury for compensation to Jenkins for his imprisonment, and the expense he has been put to, but, of course, without result.

The importance of this case lies in the lesson it offers as to the danger of entrusting an unrestricted power to commit for trial to coroners' courts as at present constituted. The verdict in this case, as construed by the coroner, was obviously in defiance of the facts, and inspired by gross ignorance. Even had there been evidence of negligence, which there was not, as the subsequent decision of the magistrates sufficiently established, it was not denied by anybody that the captain of the Aral was on deck, and in command of his ship at the time of the collision. No responsibility, legal or moral, could therefore possibly rest upon the mate. As a sample of the intelligence which the coroner and jury brought to bear upon the inquest at St. Agnes, the Merchant Service Guild gives the following extract from the evidence:—

> The Court: Where did you first see the Pearl's red light?
> Mr. Jenkins: Half a point on the starboard bow.
> The Court: Half a point, what is that? I don't understand.
> Mr. Jenkins: Half a point of the compass—Five and a half degrees.
> The Court: We know nothing about degrees; you must give a better explanation.
> Mr. Jenkins: I can't explain it better, unless you learn the compass.
> A Juryman: How many yards was it, Mister?

That a court and jury of yokels of this calibre should have an unrestricted power to put any innocent man to the expense and anxiety of a prosecution for manslaughter (or worse) is a scandal. There are, doubtless, times where a coroner's inquest serves a useful purpose; but if, as in Jenkins's case, a charge is subsequently preferred in a police-court and dismissed, any coroner's warrant previously issued ought thereupon to become void—at any rate, until coroners' courts have been reformed, or until both coroners and their jurymen have attained to a higher standard of education and intelligence than prevails in the neighbourhood of St. Agnes.

The town of Bromyard has just furnished another illustration of the skimble-skamble methods of coroners and their juries. The body of a female pauper, who had been missing for several weeks, was discovered in a sewage tank at the workhouse. The girl had been in trouble, and it was at once concluded that it was a case of suicide, the theory being that the deceased had opened the trap-door of the tank, squeezed herself through the small opening (2 ft. 5 in. by 2 ft.), sat down in the sewage with her limbs under her, and then closed the door above. This did not seem a very credible theory, but the coroner accepted it before a word of the evidence had been taken, and strongly recommended it to the consideration of the jury, with the result that, instead of the open verdict which prudence should have suggested, in the absence of any definite evidence as to how the girl's death occurred, a verdict of suicide whilst of unsound mind was returned. Within a few days of this hasty pronouncement, circumstances were discovered which made it more than doubtful whether the girl was not the victim of foul play, and the Guardians have now asked the Home Office to investigate the affair. It undoubtedly requires further investigation.

Apropos of the much-discussed Spriggs case, I have been furnished with an example of the misguided methods of the county constabulary in working up a similar prosecution last summer in Wiltshire. A girl of fourteen was seriously assaulted by a cyclist on a road at Corsham. The girl only spoke of one cyclist; the police, hearing of two who had gone on in company to Torquay, made up their minds that one of these must be the guilty party. Both were arrested and conveyed to Chippenham. Next day one was discharged, and the other, a young fellow of twenty-two, was taken before the magistrates and forthwith committed for trial, bail being refused. Fortunately for the prisoner, he was not penniless and friendless, and an order was obtained from the High Court for his liberation on bail, and Sir Edward Clarke and Mr. C. W. Matthews were retained for his defence at Wilts Assizes. The result of the trial was that the jury stopped the case and returned a verdict of not guilty, without waiting for the completion of the evidence for the defence.

If the trial did not end in the gross miscarriage of justice which would have been involved in the conviction of the accused, this was certainly not for want of zealous efforts on the part of the police to bring about such a consummation. It is not necessary to go into the details of what Mr. Justice Day described as a very scandalous piece of business; but one illustration of the ways of the police may be mentioned. A crucial point was the identification of the prisoner by the prosecutrix. She had said that her assailant was a cyclist. The prisoner and his friend (a youth of markedly different personal appearance), both attired in cycling suits, were placed with eight or ten workmen, in their ordinary clothes, and the girl was asked to pick out her assailant! Even then it was not till after ten minutes' hesitation that she fixed upon the prisoner, the only person among the lot who corresponded in any way to the description she had given. The jury condemned this farcical process of identification, and the judge stigmatised the conduct of the police as reckless, incompetent, and discreditable, and the proceedings against the prisoner as cruel, wanton, and grievous. His Lordship disallowed the costs of the prosecution, and expressed a very strong opinion that the conduct of the police ought to be further investigated. The Wilts Standing Joint Committee, however, declined to hear any evidence against the police. They simply listened to the explanations of the officers concerned, and then passed a resolution stating that they disagreed with Mr. Justice Day.

Not only did the prisoner suffer a cruel, wanton, and grievous wrong, but his father was put to an expense of upwards of £1,000 in establishing his innocence. Although it is undoubtedly a monstrous thing that anybody should be compelled to bear this burden in defending himself from such a prosecution as Mr. Justice Day denounced, it is scarcely necessary to say that no compensation is obtainable. The most shocking thing, however, is to think of what might have happened if the accused had chanced to be a poor man, unable to incur the cost of sifting the evidence for the prosecution, collecting evidence in his own behalf, and securing the services of eminent counsel for his defence. It is quite certain that he would have been shut up in gaol until the trial took place, and it is quite possible, moreover, that he would then have been convicted and condemned to a long term of penal servitude—especially if he had had the misfortune to come before Mr. Justice Grantham.

Attention has just been directed in the Guernsey Evening Press to the fact that at the first hearing of criminal charges in the island it is the custom for prisoners to be sent out of the Court whilst the evidence against them is given and recorded. My contemporary denounces this practice and expresses surprise at its existence. I agree with this denunciation, but I do not share his surprise. Nothing could surprise me in connection with the administration of justice in the Channel Islands. The whole system is full of anomalies, and rotten to the core.

Subscriptions greatly needed by THE ROYAL SOCIETY FOR PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.—6,929 convictions this year; 7,320 last year. Address complaints of cruelty, contributions, letters, &c., to SECRETARY, 105, Jermyn-st., London.

CHARING CROSS HOSPITAL, W.C., entirely dependent on voluntary support, urgently requires help. Liabilities, £11,000. No investments.

My Legal Pillory this week contains some sentences under the Game Laws at Leyland which make one wonder how much longer the country will—to quote Mr. Chamberlain—"tolerate the continuance of this anomalous—I will even say of this barbarous—legislation, which is intended to protect the sports of the well-to-do." I do not know whether Mr. Chamberlain still holds to the opinion he thus expressed in one of the last speeches of his Radical days. Mine is what it has always been. No doubt it will be said that these poachers at Leyland were old offenders. Old offenders or not, however, it is an atrocious state of things that they should be punished with nine and twelve months' imprisonment—to offer the men the alternative of getting off six months of the term by finding sureties is, of course, a mere mockery—upon such a charge. Merciless as these Leyland Shallows are in a case affecting the sacred cause of game-preservation, it will be seen that they can be lenient to the point of absurdity when they come to deal with a brutal wife-beater. The remaining cases in the list afford similar contrasts between the sentences for offences of violence and cruelty on the one hand, and for poaching, larceny, and petty theft on the other:—

Leyland Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. John Whittaker and Norris Bretherton. Thomas Jackson, charged with committing an aggravated assault upon his wife. The assault was of a serious character, complainant receiving an incised wound an inch and a half long upon her face. Defendant had repeatedly ill-used her. The Bench granted a separation order, and fined defendant 20s. and costs.

Leyland Petty Sessions. Before the same magistrates. Francis Mulvey, Edward Clarkson, and Aaron Lee, charged with poaching. There were previous convictions against all the prisoners. Mulvey and Lee, six months each, Clarkson three months, and a further six months each in default of finding sureties for their good behaviour.

Burnley County Police-court. Before Messrs. J. Bacon, J. Kay, J. W. Thompson, and W. Monk. Gibson Greenwood, poultry dealer, convicted of cruelty by starving a dog to death. He had been previously warned respecting the condition of the animal. Fined £1 and costs.

Wolverhampton County Police-court. Before Messrs. A. S. Hill, M.P., C. F. Clark, and G. B. Thornycroft. Thomas Palin, charged under the Poaching Prevention Act with being found in possession of poaching implements. Fined £2 and costs.

Halesowen Police-court. Before Messrs. J. G. Reay and W. Somers. Wm. Basterfield, charged with committing an aggravated assault upon his wife by striking her several times on the face and the head. He had assaulted her on many previous occasions, and was fined a few months ago. Fined £1 19s. 6d., including costs.

Lincoln Police-court. Edward Johnson, a child not yet nine years old, charged with stealing 2s. 3d. from a till. It was stated that there were eight convictions against him. Seven days' imprisonment, to be followed by five years in a reformatory.

Clay Cross Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. W. G. Turbutt, J. T. Harrison, and F. Kenning. Wm. J. Cauldwell, charged with assaulting Ernest Leeson. Defendant knocked complainant down and then kicked him about the body, injuring several of his ribs and badly bruising his back. Fined £3, including costs.

Highgate Police-court. Before Messrs. John Glover and C. J. Barfield. Elizabeth Hibbert and Caroline Woody, charged with sleeping out. One month each.

Maidstone Police-court. Charles Burgess, charged with stealing a pot of paint. Fourteen days.

Huddersfield County Police-court. Abraham Armitage and Robert Upton, charged with assaulting George Moseley, and Henry Fitton, charged with assaulting Moseley's wife. The two first-named defendants knocked Moseley down and kicked him, and Fitton knocked down the woman. Upton fined £2, Fitton £1, and Armitage 10s.

Warrington Police-court. Joseph Boyd and Nathan Pye, two youths, charged with sleeping out in the open air. One month each.

Exeter Police-court. Before Sir Dudley Duckworth-King and other magistrates. Herbert Cox, charged with killing a pheasant without a certificate. Fined £4 10s. and costs.

Bolness Police-court. James Duncan, butcher, charged with assaulting his wife by striking her several severe blows on the face with a red-hot poker, inflicting serious injuries. The magistrate commented strongly on the atrocious nature of the assault, and imposed a fine of £1.

Burton Police-court. Before Messrs. T. B. Lowe, A. J. Coxon, C. Harrison, T. Turner, and W. J. Drewry. Arthur Carter, jun., convicted of cruelty by starving a pony. The animal was found dying of starvation. Fined 40s. and costs.

Chorley Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. E. Jackson, R. L. Crosse, and J. Lawrence. Wm. Thompson, charged under the Poaching Prevention Act with being found in possession of three rabbits, when searched on a public road. Fined £2 and costs.

Alfreton Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. J. Oakes, J. Roberts, and Rev. E. G. Morris. Mary Parnham, a young girl, charged with stealing a sheet and a night-dress. One month.

Tetbury Petty Sessions. Before Colonel G. Sotheron-Estcourt, Messrs. Erskine Pollock, Q.C., and T. S. Crew. George Busby, labourer, charged with poaching. He was given a good character, and this was his first offence. Fined £3.

In alluding a short time ago to the remarkable proceedings in the bankruptcy of the firm of Steel & Wood, of Stoke-on-Trent, I expressed the opinion that one of the partners, Mr. Leonard B. Wood, had been very hardly used in having his discharge refused for six years and then suspended, last October, for another three years. A similar view of the case has now been adopted by a Divisional Court of the Queen's Bench, which last week, on appeal, overruled the decision of the County Court Judge at Stoke-on-Trent, and made the discharge of the debtor absolute. The suspension of his discharge appears to have been ordered on account of an offence, which, far from having been proved against him, was really disproved. Apart from the treatment of this partner, the history of the bankruptcy is noteworthy, if not unique. The creditors received first an offer of 10s. in the £ in instalments of half-a-crown each, the third and fourth being guaranteed; and, secondly, an offer of £3,750 in cash. Both these offers were rejected, and the estate was administered by a trustee, with the instructive result that it realised only £642, and paid a dividend of only a penny in the £. The offers were rejected because it was hoped to get something better; but in bankruptcy a bird in the hand is generally worth any number of birds in the bush.

Last week an order was made by the County Court Judge at Worthing committing Joseph May, the preliminary fee-swindler, to prison for 40 days for the non payment of the sum of £7 16s., for which one of his victims obtained judgment against him last November. Since the trial of the action May—whose name will be familiar to my readers—has continued to pose as a capitalist on the look-out for an investment, but requiring first of all the payment of £5 or so for the cost of the inquiries he wishes to make before he lends any money. It is to be hoped that any further attempt at fraud by this impudent rascal will be met by a criminal prosecution, which ought, indeed, to have been instituted long ago.

I have had two or three letters nominating the Leominster County Bench for a place in my Legal Pillory on account of a recent case in which two boys, one fourteen and the other eleven years of age, were convicted of cruelty by kicking a cat to death. The father of these young barbarians stated that he had given them a seve thrashing, which was the most suitable punishment they could receive; and, in consideration of this fact, the Bench let them off with a reprimand and an order to come up for judgment if called upon. Whether my correspondents would have liked to see these lads sent to gaol I do not know; but my own view of the matter is that the magistrates arrived at a very sensible decision.

At Mullingar Quarter Sessions last week a little judicial whitewash was applied, in a somewhat unusual manner, to Mr. Fitzherbert Delamer, the J.P. who, as I lately recorded, was fined £20 and costs for supplying a shop-keeper with margarine in boxes which were not labelled in accordance with the Margarine Act. The shop-keeper, who was also convicted of selling the stuff (which she alleged she bought from Mr. Delamer as butter), appealed to the Quarter Sessions, and her fine was reduced from £10 to £5. Although Mr. Delamer did not exercise his right of appeal, and his case was not before the court, Judge Curran, for some inscrutable reason, went out of his way to comment upon it, expressing the opinion that this J.P. had only acted foolishly, and in ignorance of the law, and adding that he was sorry not to have an opportunity of reducing his fine. This was intended to be a friendly view of Mr. Delamer's case; but I would again suggest to the Lord Chancellor that a gentleman capable of such folly and such ignorance of the law in a matter concerning his own business is scarcely a proper person to entrust with magisterial powers.

A curious incident was mentioned the other day in TRUTH, in the shape of the use of the official notepaper of the Scarborough County Court by a debt collector in writing to ask for payment of an account. On the face of it, this was a serious irregularity, and it is satisfactory to know that the Registrar of the County Court fully appreciates this, and has dealt with it promptly. It seems that the writer of the letter is employed by the bailiff of the Court as a possession man, and, having to go over to Filey in this capacity, he was entrusted by the bailiff with a sheet of the County Court note-paper for the purpose of communicating with the office. The man was paid out at once, and consequently had no occasion to use the paper, which he then subsequently applied to his own purposes in the manner that has been described. On learning what had been done, the Registrar took steps to prevent its recurrence, and no doubt they will have the desired effect. It occurs to me, however, that to allow a man who is employed by the bailiff on the business of the Court to carry on a private practice as a debt collector is a course which much readily lend itself to abuse.

In sending on a circular from the Clerical and Medical Bank, alias Shuckburgh, a correspondent tells me that he tried to induce a local journal to publish a warning against this notorious usurer, but that the editor excused himself from doing so on the ground that, though Shuckburgh might not care to tackle TRUTH, he would quickly be down upon a country paper with an action for libel. Very likely Shuckburgh would bluster and threaten, but I do not think the most timorous journalist need fear any more serious consequences from cautioning his readers against such an unmitigated rascal. If they have not the courage to do this, country editors might, at any rate, have the decency to exclude from their columns the mendacious advertisements of Shuckburgh and other usurers of the same class.

James Frederick Townend is another vampire who runs his usury shops in Leeds, Manchester, Bristol, Liverpool, and London under the sounding title of a "Bank." In Leeds it is the Provincial Credit Bank, in Manchester the City and County Bank, and so on. Last week Townend was sued in the Manchester County Court for damages for wrongfully and fraudulently abusing the processes of the Court, and levying an execution upon the goods of a farmer who had the misfortune to fall into his clutches. Judge Parry gave a verdict for £50 and costs against the usurer, and denounced his conduct towards the unfortunate farmer as "wicked and fraudulent," and "a system of blackmailing and fraud." In other words, this man Townend is not only an extortioner, but a blackmailer and a swindler into the bargain. Now that he has received this judicial certificate of character, newspapers with any respect for their own reputation will surely cease to advertise his so-called "Banks."

In view of the approaching reappointment of the Select Committee on Money-lending—I take it for granted that the parsimonious objections of the Treasury to the cost of collecting evidence will not be allowed to interfere with the completion of this most useful and important inquiry—it may be interesting to call attention to the laws of the United States on the subject of usury. The fact of the very existence, to say nothing of the stringency, of these laws will come as a surprise to a good many people in this country, where for nearly sixty years past a free rein has been given to the most rapacious extortioners. It appears, from particulars with which a correspondent has favoured me, that there are only twelve States of the Union in which usury is not prohibited by statute. In each of the remaining States, districts, and territories, the law places a limit upon the rate of interest that can be charged, and renders any usurer exceeding this limit liable to a penalty.

The limit ranges from six per cent. in some States—among them New York—to ten and twelve per cent. in others, and in one solitary case (Idaho) it is as high as eighteen per cent. There are similar variations in the severity of the penalties. In some States forfeiture of the interest is the only penalty; in others, New York being one, it is forfeiture of principal and interest. The usurer

"TRUTH" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all Countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.'s should be made payable to the MANAGER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-street, S.W.

in South Dakota not only forfeits the interest, but may also be indicted for a misdemeanour. In Delaware, if the interest is more than six per cent., the contract is vitiated, and any one may sue the usurer for an amount equal to the sum loaned.

Thankful indeed ought our professional money-lenders—the Jays, the Jacksons, Sanguinettis, Gordons, Kirkwoods, Shuckburghs, and the rest of them—to be for the lucky fate that has cast their lines in this country instead of in the United States. Here they are at liberty to take, and the machinery of the law assists them to take, just as much interest as can be squeezed out of their victims—and that is never, or hardly ever, less than sixty per cent., but often very much more. There—assuming that the law is effective—such blood-suckers would soon be bled to death themselves. It has generally been argued that a legal limitation of the rate of interest tends in the long run to aggravate the evil it is intended to mitigate, and there is not much likelihood that any measure for restraining Shylockism in this country will take that particular form. Still it would be well worth the while of the House of Commons Committee to obtain evidence as to the actual working of the usury laws in the United States.

There is, of course, one class of cases in which the law does come to the assistance of the victim of usury. A case of the kind came before Mr. Justice Mathew last week, when Joel Ford, a money-lender whose name must be well known to my readers, sued Captain R. P. D. S. Chichester, son of Lord and Lady Spencer Chichester, to recover £200 on a promissory note. Ford had lent the defendant £125 on a promissory note for the repayment of £200 in two instalments of £100 each, the first in three months, and the second in six months from the date of the advance, so that the interest worked out at an enormous rate per cent. per annum. The defendant, a young man of twenty-three, claimed relief from this exorbitant interest on the ground that the money-lender knew that he was an expectant heir. This relief was granted, Mr. Justice Mathew holding that the case came within the authorities, and giving the money-lender judgment for the £125 he had advanced, with interest at 5 per cent. only, and without costs. It will appear to most people that the relief extended by the law to this defendant might with equal justice and reason be given to many other deluded borrowers who are not expectant heirs.

I see that Monsieur Emile Solomiac, of Bordeaux, has broken out again, and is once more offering in all directions four cases of "Grand Cru La Générale, année 1888," with the same story about the death of his stepfather and the quarrel with his brother-in-law, which was told in TRUTH a few weeks back. His stationery (still in deep mourning) is now headed with an engraved address, and an imposing picture of a building which I take to be the Château Solomiac. It is to be feared from this that the game is paying, and that a good deal of the "Grand Cru La Générale" must be finding its way into this country. I trust that we shall not see a serious rise in the death rate.

In response to the inquiry in last week's TRUTH for the address of the Dairy Produce Direct Company, late of Leadenhall-street, I have had a communication from a Mr. G. Dixon, who wishes it to be known that he is the company, and that he is to be found at 20, Stavordale-road, Highbury, London, N. Mr. Dixon thinks that I have been misinformed as to any Irish customers having unsatisfied claims against the company, and intimates that if anybody thinks he has, he had better take the usual steps to enforce his claim. I can only say that the information furnished to me certainly shows that sundry parties consider themselves to have claims; as to their validity I can offer no opinion. As it is not likely that any one would write to London for the company's address unless he wanted it, I presume that any question between the company and its alleged creditors will now be speedily settled one way or another. Mr. Dixon also explains at some length that he on his side has claims against Irishmen with whom he has had dealings. Well, he has his remedy too. Fiat justitia.

Leaving Mr. Dixon and his company out of the question, it would seem that agricultural producers would do well to ascertain who they are dealing with before consigning goods to London. From another part of Ireland, Kerry this time, a story is sent me of a consignment of butter forwarded, in response to a promising order, to a firm styling itself "The International Produce and Packing Agency." Payment was made by a cheque drawn upon a bank in the South of France, which bank, on the cheque being presented, was found to have no existence. On subsequently calling at the London address of the "Agency," the creditor found the offices at the top of a house, and in charge of a foreigner with a limited knowledge of English, who could give no information beyond the fact that the proprietor was in Paris. The account is still owing.

Latest about Sturman. A tradesman in a small country town, having, as he himself admits, no pretension of any kind to a connection with science, literature, or art, recently wrote to Sturman inquiring on what terms he could become a Fellow of that worthy's precious "Society." Here is the answer, on the "Society's" paper:—

The Incorporated Society of Science, Letters, and Art, of London, Limited.

160, Holland-road,
Kensington, London, W.
January 11, 1898.

DEAR SIR,—If you will kindly fill in the form enclosed, we will see to your election at the next meeting.—Yours very truly,
E. A. STURMAN, M.A., LL.D.

——, Esq.

All that has to be filled in is the candidate's signature, a

MAJOR HOWE & Co.—Fashionable BOOTS and SHOES.—16, Coventry-st., W. (also 60, Strand), and City, London. "Note Addresses." (Repairs.)

PRINCES' RESTAURANT, PICCADILLY.—The fashionable resort. Finest wines and cuisine only. Table d'hôte luncheon 4s. 6d. Dinners à la carte, Suppers 5s. Mang. Directr., G. FOURAULT, from Benoist.

"declaration" of desire for admission, and willingness to abide by the rules, and the amount of the subscription (five guineas). And those are the terms on which any idiot or nonentity in the country can call himself for life a Fellow of the Society of Science, Letters, and Art, of London.

Numerous readers have lately asked my opinion upon Ernest Goode's latest advertisement. It hardly seems worth while to discuss in print every fresh manifestation of this worthy's impudence, but the latest of them is certainly a phenomenal achievement. It seems that Goode is now offering, at 4s. 6d. the half-dozen, forks made of a mysterious metal which he calls Euro-Silver; and in order to stimulate the demand he offers cheques for unspecified amounts to every purchaser of the forks who succeeds in deciphering certain words spelt backwards. The novelty of the thing is that it is left to every competitor to say what amount he would like to have a cheque for, and Goode will do his best to meet the views so expressed. He does not, indeed, pledge himself to send a cheque for the full amount asked for, but he says he is prepared to spend £5,000, if necessary, and he calls attention to the fact that he has a capital and reserve fund of £97,000. As that is the nominal capital of his company, his suggestion is that he is prepared, if necessary, to sell up the whole concern in order to satisfy the prize winners. Either he has failed to fulfil these expectations, or the prize winners have been extremely moderate in their demands, for all the cheques that have come under my notice up to the present time are drawn for the modest sum of sixpence. In other words, anybody spending 4s. 6d. on Goode's forks may get sixpence returned as a prize.

This is a beautiful idea, for it looks as if anybody who bought enough of Goode's forks could speedily amass a fortune, and I must say that when a man plays up to the public with this audacity one cannot help feeling a little admiration for his powers. The truth of the matter is, of course, that Ernest Goode is a champion cheap-jack. Instead of standing on a tub beside a barrow, he takes commodious premises in the West End. Instead of shouting his patter at a crowd of yokels in the market-place, he addresses the empty-headed in the same style by newspaper advertisements. He is the first instance, so far as I know, of a cheap-jack having brought himself out as a limited company. He finds, I suppose, that there is a class of people who would not look at an article when it is offered to them at 4s., but who will jump at it when offered at 4s. 6d., if they are told they will have sixpence given them in hard cash on each transaction; and really as long as people are fools enough to be gammoned in this way it seems quarrelling with the laws of nature to say no one ought to gammon them.

Mr. Chamberlain laments that the Frontier War in India, in addition to other drawbacks to its popularity, is being waged in territory which is worth nothing from a commercial point of view. For platform purposes, no doubt, that is a painful fact. That the war is unjust, inglorious, and impolitic would matter little if you could tell an audience of Lancashire Tories that it was undertaken for the purpose of stealing something worth having. As even this consolation is denied, Mr. Chamberlain would do well to seek comfort from his favourite hero, Mr. Rhodes. Perhaps the Afridi country, when conquered and annexed, might serve to float a few mining companies. Perhaps coal may some day be found there to work the mining machinery. Perhaps the Afridis may take more kindly than the Matabele to working the mines. Or finally, if all else fails, perhaps you may be able to construct a telegraph wire to somewhere through the country. Mr. Rhodes must have a wire from Cape Town to Cairo at any cost, even at the cost of occupying Rhodesia. Why doesn't Mr. Chamberlain have an opposition wire from Calcutta to Constantinople?

Here is a letter, well worthy of notice, sent to me by a well-known Indian gentleman in London apropos of what has been said as to the suppression of information concerning the frontier operations. The writer's observations are absolutely true, and it is of great importance that the British public should remember what he says, when forming, or endeavouring to form, a judgment upon Indian affairs. On all questions arising in that quarter of the Empire it rarely happens that we have more than one side of the case before us:—

> The real difficulty in our getting at the truth about Indian affairs is that there are two parties in India as elsewhere, but only one of them can make itself heard. Suppose that some of the great questions which so often divide British opinion, were discussed only by one of the two great political parties,—should we ever have learnt the whole truth?
>
> With regard to Indian affairs, the British public hears only one side of the question, and does not get the whole truth. The actors on the stage in India are also the speakers; you never see them as others see them. The Anglo-Indian papers without exception represent the official view. The Times and other English papers put forward the official view. The views of the people are unrepresented.
>
> Do you think it possible, under the circumstances, to know the truth about Indian affairs? Did we learn all the blunders of the Poona plague operations from the process of white-washing adopted by Lord George Hamilton in the House of Commons? Shall we even know of the real and unbroken loyalty of the Indian population during the last forty years from the false and scurrilous cry of "sedition" and "disaffection" raised against them by interested Anglo-Indians, or from the law for gagging the Press which Lord Elgin has introduced in Council, and is about to pass? The correspondents of English papers belong to the official Anglo-Indian party, they give you only one version; the other version is never before the British public.
>
> James Mill, the philosopher and historian of India, was not far wrong in saying that residence in India was a disqualification for writing a sober and true history of the country. But Mill's history is not popular. The elegant writer who has for years past painted the excellence of British administration in the Times is now about to publish a "History of British India"! The Anglo-Indian Lion will be well painted this time—by himself!

"TRUTH" will be sent weekly to any address in the United Kingdom for 7s. for 3 months; 14s. for 6 months; or 28s. for 12 months. The subscription for all Countries included in the Postal Union is, 3 months, 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; 12 months, £1 10s. 8d. All subscriptions are payable in advance, and cheques and P.O.O.'s should be made payable to the MANAGER, "Truth" Buildings, Carteret-street, S.W.

EVERY SAHARA (TURKISH) CIGARETTE bears the name and trade-mark of the sole manufacturers, W. D. & H. O. WILLS, Limited, as a guarantee of the exceptional quality of the Tobacco.

Assuming, as one is for the present justified in doing, the authenticity of the interview with Mr. Rhodes, published in the Chronicle last Thursday, the greater part of everything that I have said in regard to Rhodesia is now verified out of the mouth of Mr. Rhodes himself. The country is, in Mr. Rhodes' opinion, worthless for agricultural purposes, and he is anxious to have it known over there that the Company do not want agricultural emigrants. What, then, is the country good for? Mr. Rhodes insinuates, but does not state with any precision, that there is gold which can be mined. Before these mines can be worked with any profit, however, it is necessary, in his opinion, that coal—good coal—shall be discovered, and that the natives shall be "got" to work in the mines. The latter condition has been frustrated by the inconsiderate proceedings of Sir Richard Martin and the "faddists" in England, that is to say by the opposition of the British public to forced labour and the revival of slavery under the British flag.

What, then, is the outlook for the mines? It is now our years since the overthrow of Lobengula and the ccupation of the country by Mr. Rhodes and his olleagues. No gold has yet been worked in the country, nd no satisfactory evidence has yet been forthcoming hat gold exists in payable quantities. We are now told n the highest authority that no gold can be worked xcept under two conditions, neither of which is at all kely to be fulfilled at present. For other purposes than old mining the country is declared worthless—precisely hat I have been reiterating in TRUTH for three or four ears past. It is amusing to note that, besides coal and ative labour, Rhodesia has, in Mr. Rhodes' view, yet nother want, namely, "men with capital." No doubt. take it that it is the men with capital who are to ovide the gold.

His interviewer very naturally asked Mr. Rhodes if all e money and blood spent on the acquisition of the untry were to be regarded as wasted. The reply was , because if we had not acquired the territory, some her Power would have done so. The obvious retort uld seem to be that, if any other Power was such a l as to waste its resources in acquiring a piece of ritory which is of no earthly value, we should rather ourage it to do so than waste our own resources in estalling the attempt. Never has the more insane se of Jingoism been more frankly expressed.

The following story is sent by a Service correspondent current in military circles at the Cape. Immediately r the conclusion of Mr. Rhodes' famous "Indaba" in Matoppos, an officer of the party ran off to the sig- ing officer and got him to heliograph to Buluwayo a sage to his broker there to wire home and buy artereds." Others of the party subsequently did the e thing, and the signalling officer was pestered for some afterwards for answers to the message. Strange to e, it was later on discovered by these enterprising gentlemen that all private telegrams from Buluwayo had been kept back on this occasion until others from more influential quarters had been got through. This story may belong to the ben trovato order, but it is due to the officer who contributes it to state that he actually gives the names of the parties concerned.

During the last two years the Jingo Press of London has been proclaiming war by turns on the Boers, the United States, Germany, France, and the whole world. During the last week it has varied the performance by declaring war on nobody in particular, or anybody you please. Out of curiosity, I purchased, a few evenings since, one of these papers, which was bidding for pennies with such announcements as "Grave Crisis in the East," "War in Sight," "England and Japan United," "The Country Unanimous." I studied my pennyworth carefully, but between whom the war which was in sight was to be declared, against whom Japan and England had united themselves, or about what the country was unanimous—unless it was on the necessity of fighting at once anybody that we could pick a quarrel with—I failed altogether to discover. The Jingo scribes understand this fustian to be what they call "patriotism." It seems to me that in their hands John Bull cuts about as dignified and imposing a figure as Mr. Winkle taking off his coat, and announcing that he was "going to begin."

If the country does not speedily tire of all this sickening folly, I shall despair of the common sense of my countrymen. What in the name of goodness have we got to quarrel about in China? Russia is striving to get an access to the Pacific which will not be ice-bound in winter. It is a reasonable desire, and will not hurt us. Russia is not our commercial rival, and is not likely to be. Germany has obtained a pied-à-terre in China. On the part of a great commercial Power this also is not unreasonable. It may not suit us, but it is considerably less than we have got, and we have no right to object. Considering the position which we have so long occupied, and still occupy, in China, this snarling and blustering at the first appearance of a stranger on the scene is more offensive and contemptible than the conduct of the dog in the manger.

Sir Michael Hicks-Beach raised a cheer from the Jingo gallery by declaring that we intend to keep the treaty ports open, even at the cost of war. A mighty brave boast, but not very much to the point, unless somebody has proposed to close these ports—of which no evidence has been forthcoming at present. According to the latest information, Germany contemplates making a free and open port of her own new acquisition. Yet on the strength of this clap trap about keeping the ports open our Jingoes have been swaggering, and counting our strength, and exulting over the speedy extirpation of all the forces of all other nations, should they venture to provoke our just wrath. Apparently these bellicose penmen imagine that if we declare war on Russia, France, or Germany, or all three combined, they will oblige us by fighting it out in the China seas, and kindly refrain from attacking us except where we are certain of victory. Finally, to show up the idiocy of all this bluster, the Times comes out with an apparently inspired notification that "in certain quarters the strong expressions used by Sir Michael Hicks-Beach have been strangely misinterpreted." When that statesman said that we would do this or that "at the cost of war," he did not, it seems, for a moment contemplate that the necessity of doing it was imminent. He only meant, as far as I can make out, that if other people use mailed fists we shall have to use mailed fists too. Having heard a cock crow on a neighbouring dunghill, he thought it necessary that the majestic voice of Britain should be heard also. This is a most satisfactory explanation, and must be highly gratifying to every true patriot.

If you want to entirely Furnish your House or select any article of Furniture or Carpet, &c., send for HEWETSONS' Illustrated Priced Catalogue.—HEWETSONS, Tottenham Court-road, London.

PAYING FOR THE PARLIAMENTARY WHISTLE.

The chord struck by a Midland Member has found an echo in the heart of many an M.P. Quite a number have joined in a chorus of complaint as to the way in which they are bled by their constituencies.—Weekly Paper.

'Tis the voice of those Members, we hear them complain;
"A hundred requests for subscriptions again!
A hundred more letters our temper to vex
With unblushing demands for immediate cheques;
A hundred fresh reasons more cash to disburse
From what is already a much lightened purse;
A hundred new pleas to distribute our gold
'Mongst the poor and the rich and the young and the old.

"All in vain we protest that it's sordid and mean
To make us a sort of subscription machine;
All in vain our Committees we ask to discuss
Why the letters 'M.P.' should spell ruin for us;
All in vain for a little relief we beseech,
We as well might address our remarks to a leech;
Our constituents, 'spite what we've written and said,
Still think that we only exist to be bled!

"And, oh! how they bleed us! Instructed by use,
There is nothing on which they can't found an excuse;
The birth of twin-babies, the death of a cow,
Are equally fitting as pretexts they vow.
If they build a new church or a chapel enlarge,
They persistently do it in part at our charge,
And the Cycle Club dinner and Sunday School tea,
Are mainly provided by our £ s. d.

"If soup should be wanted, or blankets, or coal,
'Tis on us they rely for financing the dole:
If money is needed for Hospital wards
Our names the subscription list always records;
If they dine or they dance, as they frequently do,
Our supporters their pleas for assistance renew:
And they can't knock a ball with a boot or a bat
Unless they first come round to us with the hat.

"We object to be bled in this merciless way;
Too dearly, we find, for our whistles we pay.
These raids on our pockets, increased every week,
Compel us at last very plainly to speak.

Nor can it surprise you we're anxious to end
These attacks which must soon to our bankruptcy tend.
We refuse such extortion to longer allow,
We're resolved to be free—but the question is, How?"

* * * * *

It is not surprising these Members are sore,
But they have little reason their fate to deplore.
They are bled for subscriptions, they plaintively say,
They are dunn'd for donations and gifts every day;
They are treated as money-bags not as M.P.s.,
They're regarded as sponges it's easy to squeeze—
Well, what if they are? 'Tis in vain they object,
For what else can the bulk of them fairly expect?

For why were they chosen, of all upon earth?
For their culture? Their brains? Their political worth?
Had they shown any signs of sagacity great,
Or of gifts that might tend to the good of the State?
Had they breeding, or birth, or historical names?
Or any well-founded and apposite claims?
Not at all, they the voters availed to bewitch
For one reason alone—they were known to be rich!

So of course they are squeezed, and of course they are bled,
They were chosen ad hoc—there's no more to be said.
They've no personal charms and their talents are nil,
They possess not a trace of rhetorical skill;
They are strangers, p'rhaps hailing from alien shores,
They, too often, are snobs, and they always are bores;
So of course they are dunned in the place that they stood for,
And what else, in the name of what's just, are they good for?

So far, then, so good! but we're happy to think
That constituents soon from such members will shrink.
We are happy to feel that the time is at hand
When the Money-bag will not for Parliament stand,
Or, if he should do so, will never cajole
Sordid voters enough to succeed at the poll,
But will sink to the bottom, unwept, uncondoled,
Dragged down by the weight of his much-vaunted gold!

The Maximum of Effect at the Minimum of Cost.—An Object Lesson in Decorating and Furnishing can be obtained by inspecting Messrs. WARING'S Suites of furnished rooms at 175-181, Oxford-st. W.

SCRUTATOR.

THE FRONTIER FIASCO.

REFERENCE has been made from time to time in the English Press to the severe criticism of the Frontier operations that has been appearing lately in the Indian papers—notably the Pioneer. Attempts have been made by Ministerial organs to pooh-pooh these utterances, but in so doing the writers merely foul their own nest, for almost every Anglo-Indian paper is more or less in the position of a Ministerial organ. An Opposition Press, as we understand it at home, does not exist in India—except, of course, in the vernacular. Not only is hostile criticism of Government action rare, but it has been a well-founded reproach to Anglo-Indian journalists that they often carry their subserviency to the point of sacrificing public and private interests to their desire to stand well with the ruling clique. Severe criticism, therefore, whether of the authorities at Simla, or those in charge of operations in the field, is as significant and impressive as it is rare, and it is of the utmost importance that the public at home, which has been very badly served in this instance by its own Press, should mark and digest what is being publicly said, and repeated without contradiction, all over India.

During the last fortnight I have been receiving by almost every mail clippings and quotations from the Indian papers. To reproduce or summarise them all would be impossible, for they deal with a vast mass of details arising out of the conduct of the operations during several weeks. But I will give a few extracts, which will sufficiently show the general drift of opinion. On December 28 the Pioneer printed a four-column letter from its correspondent with the force, describing the march of the 2nd Division (the 3rd and 4th Brigades) from Bagh to Barkai. The story reads throughout like that of the more critical episodes in the passage of the Alps by Hannibal's army, but with this difference, that the British force was virtually retreating in a demoralised condition from a victorious enemy, and that the losses and sufferings of the troops were largely due to a defective plan of campaign and the blunders of those in command. Commenting upon the narrative, the Pioneer says :—

Reading the description of the progress of the 3rd Brigade from the morning of the 10th, when the movement down the Bara Valley began, the sentiment we experience is one of mingled astonishment and devout thankfulness—astonishment that such confusion should have been possible, and thankfulness that the enemy were not impelled to make a better use of their opportunities. . . . . It is pleasant to know that the troops fought admirably, as usual, and that on the part of our officers there were, as usual also, conspicuous instances of splendid courage and devotion to duty; but if the muddle of the 10th and 11th is to be regarded as inevitable, then we must assume that in certain circumstances the resources of generalship are exhausted.

The Times of India, which had published a similar narrative of the march from its own correspondent, made the following comments upon it :—

Anything more pitiful than the accounts, guarded though they are, of correspondents at the front regarding the return march of the Tirah Force to Bara it would be difficult to imagine Of a truth mountain warfare is not to be learnt in the playing fields of Egypt! The published narratives are daily being supplemented by letters from private individuals, and these one and all condemn in the strongest terms the entire absence of even the rough outline of such arrangements as the troops expect from a General and his Staff. Thus in the first march from Bagh to Dwatoi it took one division three days to cover the distance, which is only seven miles, and this without any opposition from the enemy, from whom Colonel Warburton had happily bought (sic) immunity. No order of march was issued, no arrangements whatever made to expedite the passage of the baggage train, and not a single Staff Officer could be seen or found along the route. The same happy-go-lucky methods were pursued on the following days, and it is no exaggeration to say, as the Afridis are now exulting y exclaiming, that the force was hunted into Peshawur with a loss of 166 men by a few hundred determined skirmishers. The behaviour of the troops is, on all hands, allowed to have been admirable, but, undoubtedly, serious inquiry should be made into the causes which have led to so disappointing a climax as has now been reached.

The Civil and Military Gazette (Lahore) published the following remarks in its issue of December 29 :—

We hear that in Rawalpindi and other places to which officers of the Tirah Force have come back on leave, the reflections on the incompetence of certain Commanding Officers of brigades or divisions and of Staff Officers is very outspoken. Unfortunately, there is a general belief that Simla will stand by its own, and that not only will no censure be given, but that the forthcoming orders will butter men who do not by any means deserve it, rather the reverse. The fighting army has lost confidence in Headquarters. This is sad but true.

On December 30 the Pioneer published a lengthy rejoinder to some off hand remarks upon its earlier criticism, which had appeared in the London Standard. In that occasion it thus summarised its previous indictment :—

Our statements, put briefly, amounted to this: that the instances in which the troops had been well handled were few and far between, while the occasions on which there had been serious blundering were only too numerous; that proper precautions had not been taken to guard against attacks by superior numbers of the enemy upon convoys and rearguards; that scores of men had been left where hundreds should have stayed, and that companies had been told off to do the work of battalions; and that a few hundred British soldiers and Sepoys had again and again to fight desperately to save their skins, while within two or three miles of them were thousands of their comrades doing absolutely nothing, though the noise of continuous firing was in their ears. Further, we said that General Officers had failed to see that they had an active and enterprising enemy opposed to them. . . . .

In justification of these charges about a column of facts were given. After reference to the action in the Mahmund Valley on September 16, the inexplicable operations at the Dargai Heights (severely criticised by Sir William Lockhart himself in the despatch which has just been made public), and the desperate fight in which the Northamptons were involved on November 9, the writer continues :—

The block of transport on the Chagru Kotal, which was the result of the (Dargai) heights being left open to the enemy, had serious consequences for the time being, as many animals perished, and their attendants suffered terribly. No General Officer or responsible Staff Officer on the spot grasped the position; had they done so, and acted with decision, the transport would have been turned back, the baggage parked at Shenowrie, and the chaotic state of affairs on the road over the kotal would have been avoided. Again, on the concentration of the troops at Korappa, it was not until some thirty-five casualties had occurred on one day from the firing into foraging parties and into camp at night, that orders were issued for the neighbouring heights to be picqueted. When this was done the casualties practically stopped, at least those due to sniping into camp. As regards attacks upon convoys, we need only instance one; that which took place near the Arhanga Pass, owing to some one in authority not having seen that the convoy would most certainly be unable to reach its destination before nightfall. On this occasion some 12,000 or 13,000 rounds of Lee-Metford ammunition were lost—a rare windfall for the enemy, who have been flush of cartridges ever since, and have used them with great effect.

Coming now to rearguard actions, the affair of November 16, when the troops were returning from Waran, is a case of a few hundred men fighting desperately while their comrades were only a few miles away. The weak companies of the 15th and 36th Sikhs and a handful of the Dorsetshires, 200 all told, fought like heroes; their officers behaved with the finest gallantry and a relieving force was sent out the next morning. . . . . Could this be said to be a rearguard action in which proper precautions had been taken to guard against attack by superior numbers? . . . .

And so on, and so on.

The Times recently discovered a highly convincing answer to all this criticism. It was that the spirit of the Little Englander is manifesting itself in India. Never, indeed, has a better example been given of the utter imbecility of this ad captandum phrase. As here used, it implies that any one who attempts to indicate the true cause of reverses to our arms which cannot be denied is a "Little Englander." By its own confession, the Times itself, when it despatched Sir W. H. Russell to the Crimea and published his letters, was among the first of the Little England school. It would even seem that Sir William Lockhart himself is the latest recruit of the Little Englanders, for his observations on some of his subordinates in the despatch dealing with the Dargai business entirely coincide with the criticisms of the Indian Press. It is an insult to the intelligence of the reader to put forward such twaddle as this "Little Englander" argument in answer to unpalatable facts and awkward criticism. The Anglo-Indian Press is notoriously Chauvinistic; the editors of papers like the Pioneer, the Times of India, and the Civil and Military Gazette, have as much of the Little Englander about them as the editor of the Globe. What is more, the very correspondents who supply the Indian papers with the facts on which they comment are officers serving with the Army in the field; and it will not be doubted by any one who reads the articles on the operations in the Pioneer that they are inspired if not written, by competent military observers. Not only do these last facts dispose of the stupid "Little Englander" theory, but they will suggest to every one who "knows the ropes" that the facts which have appeared in the Indian papers in all probability understate the truth. An officer acting as a war correspondent is known as such to those in authority over him, and it is not to be supposed that he will represent facts in a light too unfavourable to his superiors. The probability, indeed, is quite the reverse of that. The same observations apply to every Army man who is known to be in any way connected with the staff of a newspaper.

The fact is that the Indian Press is in this matter only following the general current of opinion in Anglo-Indian circles, and in military circles most of all. On this point I can speak with some authority, for Army men are in the habit of communicating their views to TRUTH with a gratifying absence of reserve, and many a strong expression of opinion on the management of the frontier campaign have I been favoured with during the last month or two from men who well know what they are talking about. The Pioneer, in one of its articles, claims that it is only voicing the general opinion of the force in the field. The Civil and Military Gazette, in a passage which I have quoted, professes to give the views expressed by officers returning from the front. To show that these journals are justified in this, let me now quote some of the strongest remarks that I have come across anywhere. They are addressed to TRUTH by an officer who is a mere onlooker, and from his position can have no motive for unfair criticism:—

I have not been on the frontier expeditions, but I am in a position here, where so many officers from the front are so constantly passing through, to hear a good deal of what has happened. All accounts agree in saying that the only one of the generals now employed on the frontier who has shown the least capacity for leadership is General ——. General —— did well, but he has not been employed in the Tirah expedition. General —— and General —— are described as being utterly incompetent, the latter especially so, while it is a well-known fact that General —— completely lost his head in the —— expedition, and that, if it had not been for the good leadership of his subordinate officers, his force would have been cut up. The truth concerning the latter operations has not been told in the published despatches, and the utter incompetence of General —— has been glozed over by the Commander-in-Chief. Nothing is said about the bad behaviour of the troops; how the 35th Sikhs under Captain —— fled in panic, leaving their officers unsupported, or how the West Kent Regiment also ran away, leaving their officer to be cut up and horribly mutilated. The truth in all these expeditions is entirely suppressed. The Generals implicated naturally suppress it, while the newspaper correspondence is largely written by officers who would render themselves liable to the direst penalties if they told what really did happen. All correspondence, too, has to pass a severe censorship, and nothing which would tend to show even a glimmer of light on what is really passing is allowed to be sent.

But the Government of India cannot prevent officers talking when they return from the front, and it is in this way that we are gradually learning much which has been kept from us hitherto. And assuredly never was there unfolded a more pitiful tale of incompetence on every side. The Tirah expedition has been a lamentable failure in every way. It has cost an enormous amount of money, hundreds of lives have been lost, our prestige throughout the East, which it was designed to uphold, has sunk to a lower point on account of it than had ever been reached before, and the enemy is still unsubdued and triumphant. In the words of the Times of India, our enormous force of four brigades of troops has been hunted out of Tirah, with a loss of 166 killed and wounded, by a few hundred determined skirmishers. The movement down the Bara Valley was, in fact, more in the nature of a pitiful and disorganised flight than a military march. I enclose some extracts from the Pioneer newspaper in support of this assertion. When an officer such as the correspondent of this paper can bring himself to describe things as he has we may be sure that in reality things were a hundred times worse.

What is the cause of this lamentable failure? This is a question which should be faced, and, if a satisfactory reply is not forthcoming, it is to be hoped that questions will be asked about it in Parliament. According to all officers on the spot with whom I have conversed, it was due to the manner in which the whole of the generals and staff selected for the expedition were appointed, not on account of any merit, but solely because they were members of Sir George White's Simla gang. The retiring Commander-in-Chief is finishing up his Indian career in a veritable blaze of jobbery, and never did he display his characteristics more than in his appointments to the Tirah staff. It is well known that when Sir William Lockhart arrived out here and found every command and every staff appointment already appropriated by some of Sir George White's incompetent Simla friends, actors and buffoons for the most part, he was very disgusted indeed, and did not hide the fact. Sir George White, then, is primarily responsible for the whole fiasco. How such an officer can be selected for employment in a highly responsible post at the War Office we out here are at a loss to understand. In Indian opinion he has proved himself . . . . [What follows is so strong that I really have not the courage to reproduce it.—ED. TRUTH.]

Every one here is glad to see that you have taken up the case of the actions of October 18 and 20 before Dargai, and we hope that you will hammer away at it until an official explanation is forthcoming of the extraordinary way in which the business was managed. If you would go into the matters which I have referred to in this letter, I have no doubt that plenty of further letters on the subject would be forthcoming from people better qualified than I to speak with authority. At present I can assure you that the universal feeling throughout all India is utter disgust with the military authorities.

This is strong language. Is it or is it not justified? Primâ facie it is. As it stands at the present moment, the campaign has been the most disastrous military undertaking on which we have embarked since the Walcheren Expedition. The Indian Government has mobilized one of the largest armies that have been called out since the Crimean war, and after three or four months' incessant fighting what has that army done? Nothing. During all those months scarcely a week has passed without bringing—controlled though all the means of communication are by the military authorities—the news of some petty but ignominious reverse, or some desperate encounter in which our troops have with difficulty extricated themselves from a position of serious peril. The loss of life has been appalling, especially among the officers, and the troops have been decimated by sickness. For the most part—incidents like those referred to in the letter quoted above may occur in any army fighting a losing battle—regimental officers and men appear to have acquitted themselves admirably; there have been splendid instances of heroism on the part of individuals and corps. What, then, is the fault? It can only be that the campaign was badly planned, and that the troops have been badly handled. For this reason I assert that primâ facie the scathing condemnation passed above on the Commander-in-Chief in India, the Staff, and on certain Brigadiers, whom there is no necessity to name at present, is fully justified by the facts.

If so, what next? Three questions of the utmost moment present themselves. First, is the campaign to be renewed in the spring on the old lines, and in the same hands which have failed so signally? To allow this, would seem to be to court worse disaster, for the best of troops will not fight with any heart or spirit when they believe themselves to be badly led; and, well founded or not, that is the belief prevailing throughout the Army on the Frontier now. Secondly, Sir George White, fresh from this deplorable failure, is coming home to take up one of the chief appointments on the Headquarters Staff. After all we have heard of late about the condition of the Army, is this to the interest of the Service or the country? At any rate, is the appointment to take effect without protest, or reconsideration in the light of recent events?

Finally, what conclusion are we to draw from the Frontier fiasco as to the efficiency of our Indian military organisation? In all recent discussion of our military resources, the efficiency of the Indian Army has been taken for granted. Whatever the shortcomings of our Home forces, India has been supposed to possess a magnificent fighting machine. Whatever the incompetence and muddleheadedness of Whitehall, we have been taught that the enlightened bureaucracy which has its seat at Simla was a match in vigorous efficiency for anything to be found at Berlin or St. Petersburg. The proof of the pudding is in the eating. For four months Simla has been doing its best, with an Army of 70,000 men on the Frontier, to subdue a few thousand unorganised hill-men, and the result is—what we all know. Could anything be more disquieting? That none of these questions should yet have been raised in England is, perhaps, the most astonishing feature in the whole business. It is time that the Press and the public awoke to the truth about the campaign on the Frontier, and the lessons that have to be learned from it; and it should be the first business of Parliament, when it meets, to elicit, by whatever means are most effective, full information as to the cause of the fiasco, and the next steps contemplated by those at the head of affairs.

ITALY IN 1898.

The Liberal newspapers in Italy are convinced that Dreyfus is innocent, and they have so worked upon public opinion, that Italian legislators and students are sending messages to Zola informing him that (next to Dreyfus) he is the noblest of the human race. From the perusal of these journals I learn with interest that Dreyfus has been found guilty of treason as a preliminary step to restoring to the Pope his lost territories, for in the French Army two-thirds of the officers are affiliated to the Jesuits. Why the condemnation of this guileless Hebrew should be likely to aid the Pope to recover his temporal throne they do not explain, nor do they adduce any proofs for their belief in the man's innocence. I doubt, indeed, whether any of these scribes have read anything connected with the matter, beyond Zola's letter to the French President. Ample funds have admittedly been expended by the friends of Dreyfus in their campaign, and I should imagine that a good deal of this money has found its way to Italy. Logic is not precisely the strong point of Italians. They regard the Pope as their most dangerous foe, and, consequently, the Italian campaign on behalf of Dreyfus is based upon making out that all who decline to believe in his innocence are the allies of the Pope.

Italian Liberals, instead of dogmatising upon a matter about which they know nothing, and inditing homilies on French injustice to a Frenchman, would do well to keep their breath to cool their own porridge. Italy is in a serious condition. Nowadays, money is the strength of a nation; without it, a country can never be either powerful either politically or commercially. When Italy was unified, she should have developed her internal resources, without meddling with anything outside her frontiers. But she aspired to a voice in the Councils of Europe. Angry with France, because the latter had laid hands on Tunis, she yielded to the insidious advances of Bismarck, joined the Triple Alliance, and as a member of that Alliance has ever since had an Army about one-third in numerical strength above her means or her requirements. France has reciprocated by alterations in her Customs duties, which have almost closed her markets to Italy. Thus, whilst Italy's expenditure has increased, her taxable revenues have decreased. Then came the African folly. As other nations were securing territories in that dark continent, Italy must needs have territories there. This still further taxed her revenues. At present every one, speaking roundly, has to pay about 60 per cent. of his income in taxation, direct and indirect. This absolutely cripples industry. Foreign capital flees the country, and of capital at home there is hardly any. Either the taxation must be reduced, or the goose that lays the golden eggs will become sterile.

Owing to this crushing weight of taxation the Clerical Party in Italy is gaining strength, and so is the Socialist Party. The former takes no part in elections, for the Papal orders forbid all true friends of the Church even to vote. What the strength of this party is cannot be well estimated. It is believed, however, that it numbers rather more than one-third of the population. Amongst the artizans, Socialism is rife, and it has gained considerable ground in the last few years. At elections not one-third of those on the register vote, and it is this apathy that is a more dangerous sign than anything else. To a certain extent these abstentions are due to a want of all political education, but they are also due to the distrust of representative government which is entertained by many. The large majority of Italians are proud of being a united nation. But they are dissatisfied with their Government, without well knowing what they would have in its stead. This, indeed, is not surprising. If a poor man in England had to pay above one half of his wage in taxes he would not be satisfied; still less if he believed that Ministers and Representatives were not so clean-handed in money matters as might be desired. In the Legislative Chamber there are a number of groups. A Ministry can only retain its majority there by satisfying a sufficient number of these groups, between which there is very little difference of principle. As, in the long run, this is difficult, every Ministry is short-lived; and the position of every Ministry is rendered still more difficult by the King insisting upon the maintenance of the Army at its present strength. Personally, without being unpopular, he is not popular; but in the absence of any statesman able to impress the country with his individuality, he, from the mere fact of being King, remains master of the situation.

We are under the impression that the Italians would join us in the event of any European war in which we might be involved. Never was there a greater illusion. In case of any European war the Italians would remain neutral. They would be glad to see France defeated in the Mediterranean, but they would not incur the risk of a French Army advancing into their country by joining in the fray. Italy has to learn that a great country is not built up in a day, and that to build it up progress must be slow and sure. No sooner was Italy unified than all thought the rest must follow, and they were in a state of wild elation. They have now discovered their mistake and they are depressed. Italians are not wanting in intelligence, but they are without the humbler and more useful attribute of common sense. The only portions of their country where this exists are in Lombardy and in Liguria. There alone are good men of business, as we understand business, to be found. The most hopeful thing in the situation is that both artisans and peasants are hard-working, thrifty, and temperate. The country now, however, is only kept going by the money brought into it by tourists, and by that sent home by emigrants to their relations, or brought home by the emigrants themselves on their return. Italians have not only a good deal to learn, but a good deal to unlearn.

Rome has been spoilt by the endeavour to graft on it improvements of the French boulevard type. Not long ago there was actually a proposal to throw over the Forum an "elegant" iron suspension bridge! The building speculation that caused such ruin a few years ago has resulted in a vast number of huge new houses being built, which, as they cannot find tenants, are already falling into decay. There are not nearly so many foreign families resident there as there used to be, nor do such families remain there, as formerly, a whole winter. Most of those who do this are Americans, who import a daughter with money for the Roman Prince market. Many of the Roman Princesses are now Americans, but as Princes are very plentiful, the market is still an open one. The visitors are mostly tourists on their way to and from Egypt. It is only at Easter that foreigners in any numbers are to be found there, when they come in order to witness the religious ceremonies. Enough has been written on Roman ruins and churches, and monuments. What modern civilisation has done, has been to endow the Eternal City with about the best hotel in Europe, and for this visitors have to thank the proprietors of the London Savoy Hotel. In Naples there are no strangers, and I am told that most of the aristocratic Neapolitan families who can afford it betake themselves to Rome for the winter. In Florence the building craze has raged. Sanitation may have benefited by the new streets that have replaced the old world slums, but this has been at the cost of much that gave to the town its picturesque character. Florence is probably the only town in Italy where there is a large English and American colony. Living is cheap, and this attracts some. Others come to educate their children, others because they like the easy-going, lazy life. An English family might go further and fare worse.

THE RANGOON ARTILLERY SCANDAL.

The following is an outline of the case of Sergeant (late Sergeant-Major) Sullivan, R.A., referred to in last week's TRUTH. In November last Quartermaster-Sergeant Smith, of Sullivan's company, was charged with being drunk in the afternoon at the barracks at Rangoon. Sergeant-Major Sullivan himself placed Smith under arrest, and had his opinion on the prisoner's condition verified by several N.C.O.s. Smith was court-martialled on the charge, and was acquitted, in the face of what seems to have been almost overwhelming evidence. Subsequently Sullivan preferred, in regular form, a complaint against Major Molesworth, the Commanding Officer of the company. The complaint was, in fact, a very serious indictment of the Commanding Officer, imputing to him in so many words that he had tampered with the course of justice in Smith's court-martial, that he was negligent and incompetent in the performance of his duties, and that he relied upon Smith for their proper performance. This "complaint" went to the General Officer Commanding at Rangoon, and upon the strength of it Sullivan was in his turned charged with conduct prejudicial to good order and military discipline. He was tried by court-martial, found guilty, and sentenced to be reduced to the ranks. On confirmation, the sentence was altered to reduction to the rank of sergeant.

The civilian Press in Burma has commented very severely on this case, and public opinion on the spot appears to be strongly in Sullivan's favour. He certainly did not mince words in his complaint of the Commanding Officer, and he certainly was not discreet in impeaching Major Molesworth's discharge of his duties. It may be open to question whether the right of making a complaint against a superior officer includes the right to present a general indictment against him in regard to the discharge of his duties, apart altogether from any personal grievance of the party who makes the complaint. But even if Sullivan was indiscreet in the terms he used, or technically wrong in using the right of complaint in the way he did, there remains the much more important question for the public, as the employer both of Major Molesworth and the sergeant-major, whether Sullivan's allegations were well founded. At the trial, Sullivan, as we should say in civilian procedure, pleaded a justification. He brought forward a great deal of evidence to show that his allegations against the C.O. were true in substance and in fact, these allegations referring not only to the trial of Smith, but to the general management of the affairs of the company. It can hardly be said that this evidence was satisfactorily rebutted; and the line taken by the prosecution, and by the Court, seems rather to have been that it was immaterial, and that whether the C.O. had or had not done what was imputed to him, Sullivan was equally guilty of insubordinate conduct. But what I should like to know, and what the public will want to know, is whether any steps are to be taken to try Sullivan's charges on their merits. He may have been wrong to make them, but they are not disposed of by merely punishing him for a technical irregularity.

It may be added that this view of the matter is fortified by the lenient view which the General seems to have taken of the gravity of the case after the finding of the Court. If Sullivan's allegations against the C.O. were unfounded, he was guilty of making the most grossly false charges against a superior officer, presumably from malicious or interested motives, and in that case he is manifestly unfit to occupy any position of authority. Such was clearly not the General's view of the case, or he would not have restored the offender to the rank of sergeant after he had been reduced to the ranks by the sentence of the Court. Mere reduction to the rank of sergeant is not an adequate punishment for the offence of which the Court found the man guilty, and could only be prompted by the opinion that there were extenuating circumstances in the case. What were these extenuating circumstances? As far as Sullivan is concerned the question may not be of much consequence. He has over twenty years' service, and will be taking his discharge in a few weeks, and though he may suffer in pension, it is too much to hope that any further steps that may be taken will improve his position. But apart altogether from the equity of the proceedings against him, the interests of the company and of the Service generally, not to mention the interest of the public, require that when such charges have been made and publicly brought before a court of justice, and commented upon freely in the Press, the military authorities should take note of them. There ought to be a further and full inquiry into all the facts and allegations that have been brought forward in the course of Sullivan's trial.

MORE HINTS TO RAILWAY MANAGERS.

As my recent articles on railway management were written after inviting correspondence on the subject, and after a very liberal response on the part of the public to that invitation, I cannot undertake to follow them up by dealing with a further batch of letters on the same question. This must be my answer to various readers who have written to me during the last two or three weeks. There are one or two grievances, however, either overlooked or very briefly noticed in the articles, which seem to deserve fuller attention, and two of them are dealt with in the following letter, which I select for that reason :—

Apropos of your criticism on railway management, let me give the following experience of a journey from Bournemouth a week or two ago. I travelled up by the last train on a Sunday night, having with me a companion in somewhat delicate health. On arrival at Bournemouth East I inquired if I could have a foot-warmer, and was told that they would be placed in the carriages at Bournemouth West, whence the train started. On the train coming up I found all the carriages occupied, and naturally the first-comers had taken possession of the foot-warmers, and we were compelled to do without, although the night was foggy and chilly.

On arrival at Waterloo about 10.15 p.m., the passengers nearest the door obtained the services of the only porter who presented himself, and I had to remove my hand luggage from the carriage myself. By the time I had got my things out, the only two four-wheeled cabs in the station were engaged, and after walking with my luggage to the bottom of the tunnel by which the cabs approach the platform, I found that there were no more cabs to be had in that direction. Returning to the platform I endeavoured to find a porter to remove my heavy luggage from the van, but the few men available were busily occupied, and passengers were already in the luggage van removing their luggage themselves. I followed their example, unearthed my boxes, and assisted a fellow-passenger to lift his trunk out of the van on condition that he would do the same for me, which he did. By this time every cab had driven off, and numerous passengers and luggage were left helpless on the platform. Being unable to obtain assistance, I walked down into York-road, and then up and down the Waterloo-road The few cabs which passed were secured before I could engage them by porters who were also skirmishing up and down the road in search of them, and I walked about in the mud and fog for fully twenty minutes before I succeeded in finding a c[illegible] Having returned with it to the station, I had to assist the cabman in placing my luggage upon the vehicle, and we ultimately drove away at five minutes to eleven—forty minutes after the arrival of the train. I may add that, from inquiries of one of the station policemen in the course of my wanderings, I learnt that a cab famine on Sunday nights was no unusual occurrence.

I think you will agree that these facts reflect great discredit upon the station authorities, for it cannot be an unusual thing for the last train from Bournemouth, Southampton, Winchester, and other stations to come in on a Sunday night with a considerable load of passengers and luggage, especially during the week or two after Christmas.

This is certainly a matter which the South-Western management ought to look into. Of course, Sunday travellers must occasionally expect some little inconvenience. But there ought always to be a sufficient staff of porters on duty at the main London termini to unload trains when they arrive, and to place the luggage on cabs. The insufficiency of porters at such stations was noticed in my recent articles, and it is a grievance not confined to Sundays, or to any particular station. Considering that the porters are, at any rate at the London termini, to a great extent in the direct pay of the public, it really seems an unreasonable thing that the Company should not engage a sufficient staff for the work.

The cab difficulty is a new one to me, but since receiving the above letter I have heard of other cases where it has been impossible to obtain cabs at London stations late in the evening. As things are, of course, the Companies are not directly responsible for this. The cab service is conducted on a voluntary basis, and it is not to be expected that cabmen will pay to enter a railway station immediately before closing time on the mere chance of picking up a fare by the last train. The Companies might, however, do something to encourage the attendance of cabmen late in the evening by admitting them free after a certain hour. Have any of them, I wonder, ever considered the question of starting a cab service of their own? If it is worth while to provide omnibuses, why not cabs, or, to bring the suggestion up to date, why not motor cars? The latter have the advantage that the motor is not "eating its head off" when idle; and if the Company always kept two or three in the stable at times when cabs are scarce, and taught a few of the station staff to drive them on an emergency, no traveller need in future be in any difficulty about finding a vehicle when he reaches London. Meanwhile, there is room, as has often been pointed out, for much improvement in the present arrangements for forwarding passengers' luggage to its destination independently of the owners.

Then there is the question of foot-warmers, which becomes more or less acute every winter in proportion to the state of the thermometer. In the whole sphere of railway management there is not a more striking example than this of the hide-bound conservatism which governs British ideas whenever the stimulus of £. s. d. is absent. To warm a railway train from the engine furnace is as simple and obvious a process as ever mechanician undertook. In one way or another the thing has been done for years upon years past in America and upon the Continent. Just five years ago experiments were made upon the North British and Caledonian Railways with a system (Dr. Bell's) which combines both a ventilating and a warming apparatus, fresh air being taken in by the motion of the train, and warmed by a steam-pipe from the engine, and then diffused under the feet of the passengers. The experiments were perfectly successful, and the system is not only admirable from a hygienic point of view, but has the great merit that it raises no additional danger in the case of accident to the train. But merely because cold weather in England rarely lasts long enough to create a strong demand for improved methods, and because the

ONE HUNDRED PIECES FOR £1. 1s.—Send a postcard to the Pearson Pottery Co., Hanley, Staffs., for particulars of the most wonderful package of crockery the world has ever seen. Sold all the world over.

Companies cannot increase their dividends by reforming their arrangements, we in this country have had to put up for sixty years with a system of warming carriages which dates from the era of stage coaches, and is as primitive as the hot brick with which country people warm their beds.

Besides being clumsy, ineffective, and unwholesome, the railway foot-warmer, under present conditions, is open to the further objection that it can only be obtained here and there, and is then made, with the approval or connivance of the Company, an instrument for blackmailing the passenger. A week or two back I published the complaint of a traveller on the Great Western line, who could get no foot-warmer. The letter printed above shows the results on one of our best-managed lines in a case where the foot-warmers are (in theory) supplied gratis at the starting point of the train. I have another letter before me illustrating the grievance from the point of view of a Brighton passenger. He remarks that the rule on the southern lines appears to be that foot-warmers (one or more), are supplied voluntarily in the first-class, that they can be had by insisting upon it in the second-class, but that they can only be had by paying in the third. This statement of the case is unduly favourable to the railways, as many first and second class passengers would probably testify. Nor is the grievance in any way confined to the southern lines. A later correspondent gives me an edifying experience which he had lately on the North-Eastern at Newcastle. The day being cold he asked the guard for a foot-warmer. But he was a third-class passenger, and desired to smoke, and the guard's answer was that no foot-warmers were placed in third-class smoking-carriages. On his ejaculating, "Why?" the guard replied that the Company considered that the pipes and cigars of the smokers warm the carriages sufficiently. The explanation, whether offered seriously or not, is quite as good as any other that could be given, for on removing to a non-smoking carriage my correspondent was supplied with a foot-warmer, though not without delay and grumbling. Why first and second class smokers should not be served with the same sauce as third-class does not appear; but, apparently, the North-Eastern directors consider that third-class tobacco possesses more heating properties than the article consumed in the higher classes. The whole system ought to be reformed. It is as much the duty of the Companies to warm their carriages in winter as it is to light them at night. They have no business to levy extra fees for doing it, and they ought to do it, not by means of clumsy, antiquated, and ineffectual appliances, but by the best means which modern invention has provided for the purpose.

A word on another point. It was remarked in my last article that the staffs of the Companies have a claim to consideration as well as the public before the distribution of the present high railway dividends, and special reference was made to the clerks both at passenger stations and goods depots. I have since heard, through a gentleman at Cambridge, that for three or four months past the clerks in the goods office at Wisbech have been working incessantly, twelve and thirteen hours a day (less an hour for dinner and a few minutes for tea) for six days in the week, and eight hours on Sundays—that is to say, over seventy hours per week. Until a week or two back no extra pay was given for the Sunday work; then, in deference to a strong remonstrance from the men, they received one day's pay for eleven hours' Sunday work. This is a disgrace to the Great Eastern directors, and, unless they wash their hands of it by an energetic protest, to the shareholders also, who are receiving increased dividends from the labour thus wrung from their wretched employees. My informant, who is in no way connected with the Company, suggests that possibly the directors and managers in London are ignorant of the facts. But that excuse will not serve after to-day. Moreover, inquiry would probably show that the detestable system prevails of offering inducements to local managers and heads of establishments to reduce expenses in the departments under them, and wherever this is the case, those at the head of affairs must be held responsible for all the sweating and slave-driving which that system naturally creates. The Great Eastern directors, I see, are trying the experiment of a continuous service of trains by night and day. It will be a boon to a large section of the public, and has naturally been received with acclamation In view of the evidence from Wisbech, however, it will be interesting to know how far the staff of the line are to pay for this extra accommodation to the public. Of late years the Great Eastern management has improved by leaps and bounds, and the line is in many respects a pattern to its contemporaries. It is to be hoped that the management is sufficiently enlightened to refuse to join in the mischievous competition of railway managers to increase dividends and raise the price of their stock. An ample harvest has already been reaped by the Great Eastern shareholders from the development of the line in recent years. Within a couple of years or so the Company's stock has risen forty per cent., and stands now at a high premium; that is to say, profits are being earned and divided largely in excess of the return which purchasers of the stock in the open market are content with. The time has therefore arrived when the additional profits should go to the staff and the public, and not to the shareholders.

THE THEATRES.

"JULIUS CÆSAR."

The reason why "Julius Cæsar" has been so neglected by managers of late years is obvious. To begin with, there are too many good parts, which demand actors well trained and experienced. Next, the female interest is so weak that it can hardly be said to exist at all; and, lastly, there is a prejudice on the stage against plays of such a distinctly classical period. The Roman warrior has never been able to assert himself much on the English boards. He has been graciously accepted every now and again, that is all. Of course "Julius Cæsar" was played at Sadler's Wells, under the management of good old Samuel Phelps, but Charles Kean fought shy of it, and so up till now has Sir Henry Irving. The most remarkable performance of the tragedy in recent years was that of the Saxe-Meiningen troupe, headed by that splendid actor and orator Herr Barnay, to whom Lewis Waller as Brutus bears such a striking resemblance. This Saxe-Meiningen company created a great deal of sensation, and will be always remembered, not so much, perhaps, for the individual acting, as for the perfection of the stage management, the acting, of the crowds, and the staccato shouts. The Haymarket crowd was lively enough; it erred, if anything, by the excess of its liveliness. It is all very well to groan, and murmur, and show signs of joy or discontent, but it is overdoing the thing to shout, "No, 'e ain't a good man, Brutus is a bad lot, 'e went and murdered Cæsar, 'e did! Come on, let's go and kill 'im now!"—exclamations which were reported to have been heard from the stage on Saturday night. With the Meiningen crowd, things were altogether different from this. But in other accessories, Mr. Beerbohm Tree has risen above criticism. Thanks largely to the assistance of Mr. Alma Tadema, R.A., scenery and stage costumes are as nearly as possible perfect. From the grouping of the crowds in the streets; the wonderful picture in the senate-house of the suppliants in their crimson and white draperies kneeling at the feet of Julius Cæsar—so excellently played by Mr. Charles Fulton; from the imposing and picturesque figure of Mr. Beerbohm Tree as Mark Antony—(it is hardly fair to criticise this great actor, suffering as he was from severe cold and loss of voice)—standing on the broken effigy of Cæsar, bending and swaying the mighty multitude at his will, down to the beautiful vision of Mrs. Beerbohm Tree as the pretty, bare-legged page-boy Lucius, lying half buried in soft skins of white and black fur, singing a plaintive love song to Brutus in the ghostly light of the pale blue dawn, the play presented an unbroken series of faultless tableaux. Miss Evelyn Millard's fragile style is scarcely equal to the passionate pleading of Portia, and Mr. Tadema has draped her slender figure all in virgin white, as a contrast to the more voluptuous beauty of Miss Lily Hanbury. As in the case of the Meiningen Company, so doubtless it will be at Her Majesty's Theatre, the public will not go so much to see the play of "Julius Cæsar," or the clever acting it contains, as the stage management of the enormous masses of people. The scene between Cassius and Brutus in the last act is superbly played by Lewis Waller and Franklin McLeay. They are both good declamatory actors, and know their own strength. But, as I said before, irrespective of the fine acting of Mr. Charles Fulton—and I have never heard the words, "Et tu, Brute," spoken with more meaning or greater expression—and the impressive figure of Mr. Beerbohm Tree, there will be found an enormous attraction in Mr. Tadema's work, which, as regards the dresses, scenery, and artistic surrounding, is complete in every detail.

"TRELAWNY OF THE 'WELLS.'"

I candidly admit that "Trelawny of the 'Wells'" pleases me not. And why—oh, why?—has Mr. Pinero elected to clothe his intensely modern—I had almost said fashionable—and up-to-date story in the hideous costumes, crinolines, peg-top trousers, side-spring boots, pork-pie hats, and chenille nets of the early-sixties period? Why does he resort to this fantastic and bizarre attire? To my mind it lends no attraction to the play—quite the contrary. Miss Irene Vanbrugh, the Trelawny of the "Wells," has the most difficult task to perform of all concerned; and wonderfully well she comes through the trying ordeal. Fancy playing a sentimental, enthusiastic, love-sick girl in an enormous crinoline, which sways from side to side and handicaps the actress at every twist and turn! Surely the incident from which Mr. Pinero takes his plot of the young aristocrat falling in love with the "leading lady" of a theatrical company, becoming engaged to her, and trotting her around to his strait-laced and severe relations, must recall several similar events in real life of recent years, some of which found their way into the columns of the newspapers. Well, no matter. Irene loves freedom and Bohemia better than fine feathers and bondage, and she resents being fettered and cooped up in Vice-Chancellor Sir Dion Boucicault's house, where she is not even allowed to sneeze comfortably. The sight is, therefore, naturally too much for her when she discovers Pattie Browne, one of her theatrical comrades, who simply revels in the eccentricities of Avonia Bunn of the Bagnigge Wells theatre; Mr. Paul Arthur, one of the most delightful, charming, and artistic comedians I have seen for a long time, who furthermore possesses a beautiful penetrating voice, and a perfect elocutionary method; little E. M. Robson, and young Gerald du Maurier, a would-be Romeo, and inspired Orlando, who, alas! has to descend to the three-line part of a demon king in a pantomime—all huddled together for shelter from a thunderstorm in the dignified doorway of Sir William Gowers' house. The wild blood rushes madly through the gipsy veins of the lively Trelawny; she cannot control her emotions, and without further ado she wheedles the footman into admitting the whole party. A quarrel ensues, a salad is made of the furniture, the room is turned into a veritable pandemonium, when enter Sir William Gower in nightshirt very décolleté the wrong end, and Isabel Bateman in "chemise de nuit" and curl papers. This is too much for Irene, she can stand it no longer, the "nostalgie de la boue" overwhelms her, and amid sobs and general topsy-turviness, she bids adieu to her Arthur for ever, and returns to her attic, impecunious, heartbroken, but still wearing that detestable crinoline. The whole idea of the play is a desperately lame and exaggerated attempt to connect a period of atrociously ugly English dress with the early days of Tom Robertson.

"CHARLOTTE CORDAY."

Have you ever noticed how seldom a play with an historical basis, and having for its central figure a character, world-famous for all time, holds the stage for any considerable period? The characters of imagination are more beloved by the majority of playgoers than the heroines of history and truth. What are Joan of Arc, Marie Stuart, or Charlotte Corday compared with Juliet and Imogen? No life has more dramatic scenes in it than that of Joan of Arc, no story is more picturesque and heroic, and yet it has been dead to the English stage since—well, I think it has not been heard of since Mrs. Rousby was roasted every evening at the old Queen's Theatre in Long-acre. In fact, the people seem to prefer to take their history from books and their fiction from the stage. If it had not been so, Charlotte Corday would not have remained hidden behind the scenes so long. But she will turn up again and again whenever a pretty and interesting woman comes along to interpret her, and, as a rule, the interpretation is little more than dressing up for Charlotte as you would at a fancy dress ball. Be that as it may, the Charlotte Corday of Mrs. Brown Potter is a fine study of the character of the inspired murderess, the woman who —well, "who did." She may not absolutely realise all our ideas of Judith; she may, possibly, not convey that strength and firmness of will that possesses her to do the "bloody deed." But Mrs. Potter's performance is full of charm, of tenderness, and gentle womanliness. She murders Marat in an ecstasy of religious mania; it is the hand of God urging her to do this thing, and she goes as a saint and martyr to meet the punishment of her crime. The ludicrous side of this story must, however, always crop up, and notwithstanding the splendid acting of Mr. Kyrle Bellew as the villainous Marat, his demoniacal craze for butchery, the frenzy he works himself into at the picture of the Paris streets "running red" with his victims' blood, there is no getting away from the fact that this semi-drunken and soddened wretch has to receive his coup de grâce in a bath, and a very funny looking bath, too. There is only one way to get out of the difficulty, and that is for the murder to be done "off." I doubt, however, if the gods would stand this. As a matter of curiosity, every one will go and see the lovely Charlotte Corday at the Adelphi Theatre and the transformation of handsome Kyrle Bellew into the dirty, grimy, shuffling, brute Marat. The whole play is beautifully mounted, and the acting far above the average.

SPA WINTER SEASON.—Mild climate and only 12 hours from London. Casino open as usual with Concerts, &c. Excellent sport. For particulars address JULES CREHAY, Sec., Casino, Spa, Belgium.

"SPORTING LIFE."

Now that poor William Terriss has been taken from us, the youngest actor of experience and energy—and it is a long experience with conspicuous energy—is unquestionably Leonard Boyne. Age has dealt very kindly and tenderly towards him. Some of us can scarcely believe that when we see the well knit figure, the cheery countenance, and the desperate activity that Leonard Boyne is almost the senior melodramatic actor on the stage. He has had a wandering life, and on the whole the provinces have claimed more from him than London. But he was by the side of Ada Cavendish in her greatest triumphs, and the Wilson Barrett series of Princess's plays would never have been so popular in the country as they were, had it not been for Leonard Boyne, whose Claudian was a performance never to be forgotten. But each man, be he an actor or not, has his hobby, which invariably comes out in his art. Leonard Boyne must have been a sportsman from his cradle. He was Irish born and Irish bred, and could probably ride a pony soon after he was able to walk. There are some such Irishmen, and Leonard Boyne is one of them. Thus the so-called sporting drama owes a good deal to his influence and authority. In these days the public is very critical, but Leonard Boyne never allows his attitude in dress or demeanour to be called into question. He is in front of the footlights a perfect specimen of the English or Irish sportsman, and people like accuracy.

The present drama, recently produced in the suburbs, is a showy and effective one, well constructed, and full of telling situations. Had it by good luck been presented at a West End theatre, it would have been probably raved about as a masterpiece. But there is no doubt that it is a vastly better drama than any of those produced in London —not, of course, including "White Heather"—for a considerable time. Some had the courage to say so. The public thought so from the outset. No better acting of its kind than that of Leonard Boyne and Mrs. Cecil Raleigh is to be seen in popular plays of this pattern. At some theatres it is wiser not to be too realistic. I for one prefer imagination and picturesqueness.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

"LA VILLE MORTE."

GABRIEL ANNUNZIO'S "Dead City" ("La Ville Morte") is worthy of its name. It has literary qualities, and of no mean order. The author wears well a faux nez of the antique Greek poet whose chief theme was fatality. But it is only a faux nez. How could it be otherwise? Then the play wants cutting. It might with advantage be shortened by two acts. This modern decantation of an ancient spirit is not by any means an exhilarant. It may be an intoxicant, however. One is reminded, in listening to the players, of Tolstoy's last saying about modern art, "The art of expanding the infamous sensations one has had oneself."

Annunzio is a descriptive writer, or has been so thus far. His talent is no more dramatic than that of Byron. But he has not Byron's strength of wing, or astounding power of passing on his own impressions—infamous or innocent—to his readers.

The action—begging Byron's pardon for the comparison —is as slow as that of "Manfred." Certainly there are literary qualities of a high order, and some good points; but they do not keep the house from yawning. Nor is there much to amuse the eyes in the way of dresses. As to pageantry, there is none whatever. The plot is of the simplest, and Byronic, in the sense that a brother and sister fall in love with each other. An attempt is made, with good effect, to bring in the ancient Greek idea of fatality. There is a sprinkling of religious sentiment, but of the latitude of Naples—though I do not believe Annunzio to be a Neapolitan. Fatalism is in its place in the Dead City of the Atrides, and among the sepulchres of Agamemnon, Clytemnestra, and Cassandra. The play is rendered interesting chiefly by the details and general novelty of the situation. We have but five personages—not enough to fill five acts, and vary their interest. They are Anna (Sarah Bernhardt), the blind wife of a poet; Alexander, the poet himself (Bremont); the young archæologist, Leonardo (Duval); his sister Blanche Marie (Blanche Dufrene); and the nurse (Andrée Conti), as in a tragedy of Racine. Leonardo treads in the steps of Schliemann. He and the other personages live in a villa near the Dead City of Mycenæ. The gentlemen dress like cyclists; the ladies have no occasion to wear elegant clothes. Their garments have a savour of antiquity to bring them into harmony with the rest. Features of the play are the corpses of the Atrides, and those gold masks and breast-plates found by Schliemann that one sees in the Museum of Athens. The digging of their graves seems to have unloosed the evil spirit that had play in the family of the Atrides All the characters, who are more or less fever-stricken, feel this, and nobody more than the Nurse. One would not wonder at hearing of such amours as the "Metamorphoses" of Ovid deal with. But the author does not go further than haunting, incestuous passion, culminating in a murder for a noble motive. We have semi-confession of this passion, as in "Phédre."

Truly the Dead City is an evil habitation for the living. It kills them all. The author wants to convey the idea that body-snatching, even when the bodies are little more than dust and ashes, is sacreligious. The Erinnyes, who hunted down the Atrides, seem to protect their tombs. Their means of chastisement is to inspire wicked thoughts, as in the antique palace of Agamemnon and Clytemnestra. Every one shakes with ague. The poet and the archæologist burn with unholy passion for Blanche Marie, who cannot help falling in love with Leonardo. Anna, the blind wife of Alexander, rises above the uncanny influence of the place, and is generous and noble, and pathetically tragical. The eyes of her body are sightless, but her mind's eyes are clairvoyants. Or rather her heart is all eyes. She divines Alexander's love for Blanche Marie, and does not ask better than to die and leave them free to marry. But she counts without the Erinnyes, and her self-devotion cannot prevent the catastrophe. Leonardo makes a semi-confession to Alexander. Alexander betrays, in listening to it, his own feelings. The Schliemann junior cannot bear the idea of the pure, beauteous Blanche Marie being the object of an adulterous passion, to say nothing of his own state of feeling. To prevent her ever yielding to either, he drowns her in the fountain of Persea. Without offence to Heaven, the two rivals may henceforth adore her memory. United in the same cult, they bury her under myrtles. But the eyes of Anna's heart penetrate the secret, and she cries as the curtain drops, "I see; I see."

Annunzio wrote "The Dead City" for Sarah Bernhardt. She does what she can by points and by-play to entertain the audience. She gropes her way about as the blind do, and sees with the help of her fingers as well as with her heart. There is an effective scene in which she handles the shoulders of Marie Blanche, and unlooses her coils of classically-arranged auburn hair. "What a beauty you now must be!" she sighs.

The Princess Lieven has been disinterred by the publication in the Temps of some jottings of the Duchesse Decazes, née St. Aulaire. There can be no longer any doubt as to the nature of her liaison with the austere Guizot. That statesman finally gave up for her the Comtesse di Meulan, a relative of his second wife. It was not Guizot's fault if the Princess remained his amie. She had the example of the Lady Cecilia Underwood and the Duke of Sussex—an example accepted by the whole Bench of Bishops and the aristocracy of England. Guizot wanted Mme. de Lieven to marry him. But as he had a bourgeois name, she refused, unless he consented to her retaining her Russian title. As he thought it would be infra dig. to be the husband of "the Princess Lieven," he preferred to remain son ami. Marie Amélie, who in many respects was hypocritical, shut her eyes to the nature of the liaison. The Princess was nicknamed Réjouissance by a son of Louis Philippe—Aumale, I think. Réjouissance is the word for the bones the butcher throws in with the meat to make his side of the scale tilt over. She was thin enough to serve for anatomical studies without any previous preparation. But Guizot did not mind her being elderly or bony. His first wife was fourteen years his senior. He married her to get into Society. I dare say his vanity made him enjoy a liaison with a lady who was the Russian Ambassadress for years at the Court of Louis Philippe. Her vanity was not less great than his. She had a childish—or barbarous—passion for titles. But her ideas on the subject were those, say, of an English brewer's wife, or of an American heiress coming from Detroit or Yellowstone. She esteemed a Duc de Montebello or de Rivoli higher than a Comte de Jarnac. Untitled Frenchmen were only good to serve a turn. She was going once to Wiesbaden. Some Minister of Louis Philippe, of considerable talent, but with a roturier name, sent his son to escort her. The young man was more serviceable than a courier, and it is not certain that he failed on the journey to render her oblivious of Guizot. At the journey's end she said to him: "With the name you bear it would be impossible to give you currency among my friends here. I thank you for all your kindness and have the honour to salute you." Guizot's name took lustre from his being Prime Minister. He feared that if he did not stick to office the Princess Lieven would desert him. This is why the Guizot Ministry lasted eight years and needed a revolution to overthrow it. This was the secret of his servility to Louis Philippe. He lived in terror of the King calling in Thiers and of—as a consequence—the loss of his réjouissance.

He and the Princess, happen what might, saw each other twice a day when they were in Paris. Everything was arranged so that their tête-à-tête should not be interrupted. No other visitor would dare to remain with the Princess after Guizot entered. She had autocratic ideas of government, and inoculated him with them, to the great pleasure of Louis Philippe. The Revolution of 1848 was a severe shock to the ami and amie. In the stormy days of February she feared she might share Guizot's unpopularity, and went to hide at the Austrian Embassy—but only when she knew her ami was safe in England. She was more faithful than he could have hoped, and went to join him at Brighton, where they lived like a pair of turtle-doves a few doors from the old Prince and Princess Metternich, also exiles. As Mme. de Lieven wanted to return to Paris and play a part, she endeavoured to convert Guizot to Napoleonism, and succeeded. But the coup d'état obliged him to revert to the D'Orléans. He went with her to Schlangenbad, the waters of which made her hard skin velvety. There was no longer there the shadow of secrecy as to the close union of their lives. They went back together to Paris. Her heart, though she was sixty-eight, was as young as when she was eighteen, at any rate so far as Guizot was concerned. The Queen's visit to Napoleon and Eugénie at St. Cloud made her thoroughly Bonapartist. But Guizot had become too necessary to be cast off. And by whom could she replace him? The last letter she wrote, on her deathbed, was to him. It was short and sweet. "Thanks for twenty years of affection and happiness! Adieu! Adieu!" E finita la commedia.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

STUDY carefully, dear Lady Betty, the following short sketch, for it will show you why Belgravia has become bankrupt, and how criminals are manufactured in Mayfair. The career of A, with very little variation, has been the career of many a West End man.

A, a younger son of well-born parents, was placed in the City. His allowance was probably between two and three hundred a year. The first conclusion which he arrived at in the City was that to succeed he must affect the appearance of success. A, therefore, commenced to live at the rate of several thousands a year. He dressed extravagantly; he seldom walked, but generally drove; he was continually to be seen dining at the most expensive restaurants; all his companions were rich men, and he lived the life which they did. In a short time his friends, impressed by the display, told each other that A was doing very well indeed; that he was a peculiarly clever young man, and they all strove to please him. He increased in popularity by leaps and bounds. Meanwhile, A had only his two or three hundred a year, and a trifle more which he earned as commission money on the few transactions which he introduced to his firm. His friends, however, imagining that he was much more successful than he was, and believing him, therefore, to be especially clever, allowed him to advise them as to their speculations. Acting upon the information which he gave them, they risked many hundreds, even thousands, and A received from his firm small commissions on these transactions. But his outlay in keeping up the appearance of prosperity was much larger than his income, and, after a year or two of this kind of life, A found himself face to face with a financial crisis. At about the same period his friends began to perceive that the advice which he had given them had caused them to suffer heavy losses, and his popularity diminished. To ward off the threatened exposure of his affairs, he obtained money by means which were not altogether correct, and to cover these illegal proceedings, at a later period he had recourse to even more discreditable methods. He collapsed. The world then perceived that which it should have perceived from the first—to wit, that an impecunious, inexperienced West End young man seldom, if ever, makes a fortune in the City in a year or two—that City in which those who have been bred by money-makers for the purpose of money-making plod a whole lifetime before they amass even moderate wealth. The friends of A, who had been victimised, now turned and abused him ten times more loudly than they had praised him before. They called him a fool, a swindler, and a scoundrel. And he was all three of these, undoubtedly—but they were fools to have been deceived by his extravagant style of living, and they were little less than swindlers and scoundrels themselves, because they imagined that he was giving them confidential information concerning the manipulation of the market, so that they should be enabled to buy at the lowest price, sell at the highest, and be free of the stock when the company collapsed, while thousands of obscure people would be ruined. This sketch of the inglorious career of A is not a sketch of the career of any one man; during the past twenty years there have been hundreds who have acted as A did—and there are hundreds now who are accurately repeating the same performance. It is inexperienced, unintelligent, unscrupulous men of the type of A who have practically ruined the West End, have necessitated historical properties changing hands, have caused memorable collections to be dispersed, and have disgraced names about which clustered magnificent traditions.

To place a young man like A in the City now, with no capital, a meagre allowance, and no suitable training, is more reckless than it would be to say to him, "I shall allow you three hundred a year; go to your club, gamble there, and make your fortune." At least, at the club the majority of his companions will not be immeasurably more experienced gamblers than he would be in a month or two himself. As it is, the only capital which such a man as A takes to the City is his friends'—and the City "operators" only employ him in order that they may transfer the money which those friends have to their own pockets.

* * * * *

Some ten or twelve years ago, Fred Danvers, who was then a general favourite in the West End, became so involved in debt that he was unable to escape bankruptcy. He left London, and commenced life again in Australia. Having made a small fortune, he recently returned to England, and we met last week at the club. After expressing the pleasure it gave him to meet me again, Fred Danvers said:—

"Let us sit down, and tell me about my old friends. Where is FitzFoodle? Fitz was a capital fellow."

MYSELF: "Yes. . . . A very good fellow. . . . He cheated at cards and now lives in concealment on the Continent."

DANVERS: "Dear me! How very distressing! . . . . Well, what has become of Roland Chivers? (Heartily) I did like him."

MYSELF: "Poor Roland; he got into debt, his friends avoided him, and, being then nothing in the West End, he became 'something in the City,' where he was mixed up in a peculiarly scandalous fraud, was convicted, and is, I believe, still in gaol."

DANVERS: "Roland Chivers in gaol? . . . . You must be romancing. How terrible! . . . . Is little Fridoline Frisk married yet?"

MYSELF: "Yes, and divorced, also deserted. She lives, they tell me, unconventionally in Paris."

DANVERS: "That is astounding! . . . . What has become of Floriston who was so devoted to her?"

MYSELF: "Lord Floriston forged the name of a rich financier, and no one knows where he is now."

DANVERS: "Floriston a forger! . . . . This is altogether amazing! At least that highly-respectable old lady his mother has done nothing discreditable?"

MYSELF: "The Duchess, after the death of her husband, stole the family jewels and sold them for next to nothing to a dealer. There was some talk of prosecuting her, but, to avoid causing a scandal, the theft was overlooked."

DANVERS (evidently bewildered by the combination of misfortunes): "Tell me, old man . . . Pray pardon me for asking so brutal a question . . . but . . . Are there any of my old friends who are not criminals?"

MYSELF: "No. I do not think there are. They used to describe this as 'a hollow world.' It is now 'a Holloway world.' Most of the old people of Mayfair have gone to Holloway Gaol, and most of the new ones have come from it. Good-bye."

DANVERS: "Good-bye. I shall return to Australia at once. Sheep are better company than swindlers, and the Bush appears to me to be more respectable than Belgravia."

Believe me to be, very truly yours,

MARMADUKE.

SPORTING NOTES.

THERE are a great many cackling simpletons just now running about who are always "complaining to the moon" of the miserably small number of high-class four-year-olds and five-year-olds which of late seasons have been seen racing. These drivelling individuals appear to think that the specific for the lack of old horses on the turf is to establish valuable races which are to be open only to four-year-olds and upwards, an absurdity which reminds one of Milton's country gentleman who raised his park wall in order to keep the crows out of his demesne. The only result of throwing money away on rich stakes for four-year-olds and upwards will be that such events will become a practical walk-over for some animal. Persimmon would have swept the board last season, and there would certainly be nothing in training with a chance of beating Galtee More this year. The only method of keeping our horses longer on the turf would be to restrict two-year-old racing, and the moon will fall before there is any genuine movement in that direction. Any one might just as well attempt to square the circle as to try and keep the best horses on the turf as four-year-olds and five-year-olds unless there are root and branch reforms in the whole system. But the fact is that, except a few sighing visionaries and some addleheads who think it appears clever to sing this venerable song, there is nobody who cares a groat about the matter. The paramount and absorbing object of nine-tenths of the present owners is to get the largest possible amount of work out of their race-horses in the shortest possible time, and every season animals, which, if judiciously managed, might develop into performers of the very highest class, are ruthlessly run off their legs by their rapacious or feather-brained owners.

There are sixty-six entries for the Manchester Steeple-chase of £2,000, which is run in Easter week, and this event unquestionably benefits from the sensible arrange-ment which postpones the publication of the weights until after the race for the Grand National. Last year Mani-festo, the winner at Aintree, was well beaten at Man-chester, when Knight of Rhodes won after a splendid finish with Prince Albert. These three horses are again entered, and the list also includes Wild Man from Borneo (who appears to have gone hopelessly to the bad), The Soarer, Ford of Fyne, Sweet Charlotte, Rory O'Moore, Chair of Kildare, Greenhill, Biscuit, March Hare, and Barcalwhey. There are sixty entries for the Jubilee Hurdle Race of £1,000, including Amphidamas and Posterity (who finished fourth and second for this race last year), Rampion, Irish Wake, Keelson, Regret, Stop, Harold, Montauk, Court Ball, Lord Key, Wreath Or, Bowline, and Constantine. Sir B. Maple's horse ought to win a good hurdle race during the spring.

Some of the papers have been pointing out that in 1890 Porter sold that year's Derby winner out of the Kingsclere stable only a few weeks before the race was run, and they therefore appear to be of the opinion that, as a mistake was then made, it is quite on the cards that it may turn out that a similar blunder has been committed in disposing of Hawfinch to Mr. Bottomley. The fact is that Sainfoin was sold because there was a vastly superior horse in the stable in Rightaway (the sire of Hermiston), but he unluckily went lame. If Rightaway had kept well he would have won the Derby easily. They were a very bad lot of horses in 1890, and there has never been a worse Derby winner than Sainfoin, who was indebted for his victory to the fatuity of the Duke of Portland in having withdrawn St. Serf from the great race, in order that he might be kept fresh for the Epsom Grand Prize on the following day. If St. Serf had started for the Derby, he would certainly have won, and the Duke would then have carried off that race three years in succession. Surefoot was all the rage for that Derby, and the race was justifiably regarded as a certainty for him after the easy style in which he had won the Two Thousand, but he could not stay, and he had a most execrable temper. Hawfinch will be a troublesome horse to train if the ground gets hard, for, although fine topped enough, he has very doubtful legs. I have no doubt whatever but that both Batt and Hermiston are considerably superior to Hawfinch over any distance, and three months ago I mentioned the Duke of Westminster's fine colt as being a very likely animal to win the Derby. I believe that Batt has stamina, which is more than can be said for most of the other animals which are engaged at Epsom. So far as one can judge, next season's three-year-olds will be a very moderate lot, but, of course, there may be something good in the background, and there is certainly a great opening for any smart dark colt.

Mr. Daniel Cooper, who was said to have entirely retired from the turf, has nominated four yearlings for the Newmarket Stakes of 1900, and they are a grandly-bred lot, including a colt by Orme out of Float (who was such a good two-year-old, but who went all to pieces afterwards), and a filly by Isinglass out of Glare. Many people must remember the desperate race which Glare ran with Bul-lingdon at Goodwood in 1893, for the rich Prince of Wales' Sweepstakes, when the Duke of Westminster's colt won by a neck. Bullingdon was certainly the best three-year-old of 1894, and if he had been all right at Epsom, Ladas would never have won the Derby.

The Australian horse, Daimio, about whom there was so much laudatory jargoning a year ago, is a tip of "the sharps" for the Grand National. Daimio was then eulogised as the finest steeplechaser which the world had ever seen; but he has yet to justify the extravagant praises of his admirers. The gasconading about this horse was so prodi-gious that he was among the top weights in the handicap for the Grand National; but he will get into that race on very much easier terms this year. Daimio performed wretchedly at Windsor the other day, but he did manage to get the course.

The majority of owners certainly "move in mysterious ways." There are only twenty-six entries for the Doveridge Handicap of £1,000 at Derby, whereas forty-five horses have been engaged in the Chaddesden Handicap of £250, the forfeit being of the same amount. It is probably un-precedented to find thirteen different stables represented in a handicap with only twenty-six entries. The fact is that all these minor handicaps would do much better if they closed a month later, after the weights for the big events have been published.

No horse at Newmarket is progressing more favourably than Disraeli, who has grown into a very fine colt, and his action is perfect. He will be specially prepared for the Two Thousand, and the Derby is his next important engagement. Of course, we have yet to learn whether he can stay, but he certainly appears more likely to discover stamina than most of the other three-year-olds now in training at Newmarket. There has been some talk about Disraeli's stable companion, the dark Angus, a colt by St. Serf out of Scotch Agnes, but he is a lumbering sort of animal and very high on the leg, and he is not likely to be found dangerous for the classic stakes. Angus is more likely to win some race in which he will have the advantage of a maiden allowance if he stands a thorough preparation.

There is a wonderfully good entry for the Buckenham Post Stakes of £300 each, to run at Newmarket in October, 1900. There are seven subscribers, who have named a splendid lot of mares. The Prince of Wales has Merrie Lassie (dam of Grig), covered by St. Simon, Laodamia by Isinglass, and Meadow Chat by St. Frusquin. Lord Derby's lot includes Canterbury Pilgrim, covered by St. Serf, and Broad Corrie by Isinglass. The Duke of Devonshire has Applause II. (dam of Marvel), covered by Ladas, Snood by St. Frusquin, and Poem (dam of Minstrel) by St. Simon. Mr. A. James's lot includes Charm, covered by Isinglass, and the The Smew by Carbine. The Smew is the mare that was sold by the Duke of Portland as a two-year-old, and a few months later she electrified the beholders of the race for the Oaks by running La Flèche to a head, but the winner was then suffering from the effects of her race for the Derby two days previously. The Duke of Portland has the famous Memoir served by Carbine, Semolina by Kendal, and Mowerina (dam of Donovan) by St. Simon. The Duke of Westminster has Ruth (dam of Tarporley) and Quetta (dam of Grey Leg), both served by Orme, and Ornament (dam of Labrador) by Sheen.

Piety, who has not been seen out since he ran for the Northumberland Plate at Newcastle last June, is again in good work at Newmarket, and he appears to be now quite sound and well. Last year he finished second in the Chester Cup to Count Schomberg, who was giving him 20 lb. more than weight-for-age, and a few weeks later he just beat Keenan for the Manchester Cup, and was thought very lucky to have won. I expect that Piety will again "go for" the Chester Cup, and he is one of the exceedingly few horses in training that can be trusted to stay the course.

Mr. Leopold de Rothschild is not likely to be dangerous in the One Thousand or the Oaks unless Isabinda, the dark sister to St. Frusquin, turns out to be smart. A very high opinion was entertained of this filly last autumn, but she has lately been stopped in her work for some reason or other, and it is feared that she will prove a difficult animal to train. Ayah is a beautiful filly, but she will be more distinguished for speed than for stamina, and she is believed to be touched in her wind, as also is her stable companion Dony, about whose merits there was a deal of trumpeting after his clever victory in the Fulbourne Stakes at Newmarket last July, when he defeated St. Ia. One of the beaten lot in that race was Airosa, who has grown into a very fine filly, and if she can stay she is quite likely to prove a dangerous candidate for the One Thousand and Oaks. If she does well during the spring she will probably be started for the Craven Stakes, and she has a 5 lb. maiden allowance in that race.

The best looking two-year-old in Hayhoe's stable is M. Ephrussi's Ambrosia II., by Galopin out of Alicante, by Hermit, and she will probably make her début in the Coventry Stakes at Ascot. Ambrosia II. is a great slashing racing-like filly with fine action. Mr. de Rothschild's St. Gris, half-brother to St. Frusquin, by Donovan, is a remarkably nice colt, and if he trains on all right he ought to do well on the turf, but I should fancy that he will not be seen out until the latter part of the season.

One of the Duke of Westminster's entries for the Newmarket Stakes of 1900 is a colt named Missel Thrush, by Orme out of Throstle, winner of the St. Leger in 1894, when she defeated Ladas. Throstle is half-sister, by Petrarch, to Common and Goldfinch. It will be interesting to see how this colt turns out, for he ought to prove a veritable flyer if there is anything in the very best "running" blood.

The Australian horse, Carbine, about which there was such a terrific trumpeting, had eight mares barren, while the much-puffed-up Carnage had no fewer than eleven! Carbine, whose fee was 200 gs., had twenty-two foals, including colts out of Amiable and Distant Shore, and fillies out of Memoir, Semolina, The Smew, Donna Fortuna, and Charm.

The Prince of Wales's dark colt, Ormathwaite, has been backed for the Derby by some infatuated mooncalf at the perfectly ridiculous price of 100 to 6. It really seems inconceivable that any one suffered to go at large can be so utterly anserous as to accept such odds about an animal which has never run, and which has never been tried in any sort of way whatever, so that no human being can know anything as to his capacity for racing. I suspect that Ormathwaite will prove a difficult animal to train, and if he does win a race next season it will probably be some stake in which there are penalties and allowances, so that he will have a considerable advantage in the weights. If a horse like Ormathawaite had been backed at this period of the winter for the Derby twenty-five or thirty years ago, the price would have been 50 to 1 at the very least.

I understand that Mr. Rose intends to have Cyllene got ready for the Newmarket Stakes, which bids fair to be the most interesting three-year-old race of the season, the entry including Ninus, Hermiston, Dieudonné, Disraeli, Batt, Longtown, Jeddah, Galashiels, and King of Thebes. Cyllene will then undergo a special preparation for the Gold Cup at Ascot. It is, of course, impossible at the present time for any one to discuss his chance of winning the Ascot race, as we have yet to learn whether he has sufficient stamina to enable him to stay that very severe course, but he has grown into a really splendid colt, and he is perfectly sound and appears likely to stand any amount of work, for his legs are like iron. Cyllene's meeting in the Jockey Club Stakes with Velasquez at the First October Meeting will be one of the most exciting events of the year if they both do well in their summer engagements. Mr. Rose has two very promising three-year-olds in Loretto and The Convict, both having made a great improvement since the autumn, and they ought to win some good handicaps in the course of the season. Cortegar has wintered very well, and she is quite likely to prove a dangerous candidate for the City and Suburban.

Mr. Rucker is said to own a smart two-year-old in Little Champion, by Prince Hampton out of Honey Cup, who has done well in a gallop at Newmarket. She is very likely to win a race at Lincoln or at Liverpool, if she goes on all right during the next few weeks.

Mr. Rose's horse Chair of Kildare, who is engaged in the Grand National, has discovered himself to be a very fine jumper, and if he can stay the Aintree course he will be hard to beat if he is fairly handicapped. In any case he may be expected to win a good steeplechase in the course of the next three months.

A correspondent considers that I have been too sweeping in my criticisms on the management of professional Association football clubs. Let me point out at once that I have frequently said that there is no reason that because a man is a professional he should not be a thoroughly decent fellow and a good sportsman, although there is a belief amongst a certain class of people to the contrary. What I have also frequently said is that the servant is often better than his master. Now, in Association football the conduct of the authorities over the scratch team question, and their attitude to Mr. Jackson, to the Corinthians, and to amateurs generally, makes it a matter for extreme regret that those who conduct professional clubs should also rule the Association roost. My correspondent describes the management of the Derby County Football Club, and I will anticipate what he has to say by expressing a pious wish that all League clubs were conducted in the same manner. There would be less poaching, more cultivation of local talent, and, above all, the Football Association would be controlled in a very different way if the authorities were of the same class of men as those who manage the club referred to. My correspondent has been connected with the management since the club was started fourteen years ago. Two of the leading lights on the committee of management are old public school and University men who have been members of the M.C.C. for thirty years. The rest are leading townsmen. These spend time and money to carry on a game which does infinite good in providing recreation for the working classes, and the pleasure they give to others is their only reward. I can only say, O si sic omnes! That is the true way in which to look at professional football and the proper spirit in which it should be conducted. Gentlemen who conduct a game in this way would not regard amateurs as being necessarily incompetent nor would their players practically refuse to give any amateur who played with them a chance. The fact that the affairs of the Football Association are conducted in anything but that spirit forces one to believe that the writer is wrong in saying that most other clubs are managed by the same class of men, and in the same way. He says that their object is always to play Derbyshire men, and they have had as many as eight or nine in the League team. As for the men, they are mostly well-behaved, quiet, gentlemanly fellows, who are a credit alike to their town and country. An excellent testimonial, to which I may add that a well-known Corinthian has said that he preferred to meet

SAHARA CIGARETTES. Choicest Turkish Tobacco. Every cigarette
SAHARA CIGARETTES. bears the name of the sole manufacturers,
SAHARA CIGARETTES. W.D. & H.O. WILLS, Ltd.

them to any other professional team, because they gave a good honest game without any tricks, and were a really decent set of fellows. This was said a year or so ago. In conclusion, it only remains to congratulate the club on its victory over Aston Villa, and to wish it every success in the Cup ties.

One cannot look to the future of the amateur Association game with any degree of confidence. At the Universities, and more especially at Cambridge, its condition may best be described as rotten. There is no genuine interest taken in the College games as soon as the Cup tie is decided. There may be one or two good players, but those who are trying for their Blues realise that their Captain holds the University card in such light esteem that he and other Blues, if good enough, think nothing of rushing off to town to play for the Corinthians or some other team. The Granta, in a good article, comments on this state of affairs, and suggests a system of League matches. Well, if the game is worth a full Blue it is worth playing well. In cricket, in athletics, in Rugby football, and, above all, in rowing, the Universities can hold their own. But in Association they are practically no class. They would take a poor position in such a comparatively minor institution as the Southern League. Amateur clubs go in for a certain number of cups; why should the leading Metropolitan clubs not run a small league on their own account which the Universities could join? This seems a fearful suggestion to reduce the University match to the level of a League game. But Association footballers seem unable to play even for their Blues without a Cup or a League game. As a further instance of the decline of the Association game amongst amateurs, one need only refer to the beating by eight goals that the Clapton men gave the Old Etonians in the London Senior Cup, and it seems but yesterday that the Old Boys were in the final of the Association Cup itself. The Old Carthusians and Old Westminsters were successful, but Ealing, who earlier in the week had met Cambridge, were beaten by the Crouch End Vampires. This shows the strength of the teams that the University plays.

Turning to Rugby Union rules, it is satisfactory to find that Devonport Albion have come successfully out of the ordeal which they underwent in having to submit to a searching inquiry by the Rugby Union authorities. Their defence on their trial was much stronger than in the match with Cardiff, who crossed their line seven times.

The chief event in London was the match between Richmond and Blackheath, who were very unlucky, for Robinson could not play three-quarters, and Hicks was not quite good enough for the match. Then Livesay, the half, got damaged early in the game, and had to retire at half time. At the start Richmond pressed, but after a quarter of an hour Pilkington scored by a brilliant run for the Heathens. He had nothing to do in the University match, although he is one of the most dangerous three-quarters in the south. Richmond again attacked, but the Blackheath outsides, especially Royds, kept them well in check. After the interval the Surrey team again had the best of the game, and soon afterwards Crump scored. Subsequently there was plenty of forward work, and if the play was not brilliant, a very exciting display followed, but neither side could score, and the game ended in a draw. The Harlequins had the help of Wells against the Old Merchant Taylors, whom they beat after a close and interesting game. Lennox and Catford Bridge played a pointless draw. With decent halves the former might have won. But in this club, as in others which are not in the first flight, the half-back game seems little understood. The halves have no notion when to kick, and they either sling the ball away in an artless fashion or put down their heads and bolt into the opposing halves' arms under the impression that they are making an opening for themselves. In teams of lesser importance the knowledge of the game becomes more vague, and there is worse play seen under the four three-quarter system than when only three were played. The funny thing is that the players are quite satisfied with themselves. They make no effort to learn the game or to improve. They never seem to realise that they are beaten by superior play. It is always bad luck. Such teams, and there are many in the suburbs, will do well to watch England play Ireland.

Try they never so hardly Cambridge rowing men seem doomed to meet with disappointment and misfortune. Dudley Ward, the President, is forbidden to row by the doctors. A man may foil an examiner: he cannot pass a medical man. Verily the doctor is more powerful than the Don. Gold retires from Oxford for a bit, returns and passes his examination and strokes the crew. Dudley Ward stays up and his health forbids him to row. Well, it is better so now than half way through training. At the same time, everybody will sympathise with him and with Cambridge. It looks as though no old Blues will be rowing, but a friend says there is already a marked improvement in the men's work. They will, I believe, stay at Bourne End for a portion of their training. This will be a pleasant change for the men, and will benefit their rowing. It is hopeless to expect to get a crew together when the boat has to be turned at right angles every few yards. By the way, I hear that Paley is to be ousted from the Little-Go. Lehmann on "Rowing" (in the Isthmian Library) might be substituted with advantage. There is more to be made out of rowing than agriculture — a lost art that a financially-depressed University fosters. Some graduates might study the book with advantage.

It is only decent to draw a veil over the second beating of the English cricket team in Australia. We shall hope to see Howell, Noble, and McLeod bowling on English wickets soon. The Australian climate must have marvellous recuperative powers. Hirst is so injured that he stops bowling, and retires. Then he makes the top score. Ranji gets all diseases he decently can, and runs up big scores while he is having chunks chopped out of his throat. Gregory, Iredale, and Darling are one day delirious with sunstroke, and the next they are scoring merrily. There is no doubt but that the telegraph wire is the finest inventor of the age. As a composer of realistic fiction it beats Zola, and simply smothers Hall Caine. Still, MacLaren's account of Ranji's play shows how plucky he was.

MAMMON.

From MOSES MOSS to BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN,—The little word of warning that I addressed to you last week with reference to the somewhat inflated condition of certain stocks, in which a continuous advance has taken place for some time, has very promptly been followed by a relapse in these securities, which occurred the moment that the Stock Markets were affected by political alarms. A partial recovery has since ensued, but the occurrence is of some importance as enforcing the lesson which I sought to teach, that it is necessary under present conditions to go slowly, and to be satisfied with good profits when they are to be secured without expecting extremely high prices.

Politics and Markets.

During the last few days the Stock Markets have given signs of considerable nervousness in connection with the position in the Far East. The cablegrams from Pekin and elsewhere bearing on the matter are brief, and do not supply much material for judging of the seriousness of the Chinese question, but it is evident that Russia, supported by France, is intriguing in Pekin with a view to preventing the Chinese Government from availing itself of the proposed British loan, as some of the conditions made by this country, although in the interests of China, are repugnant to the Northern Colossus. It may, however, be hoped that, if this country shows continued firmness, the question may be amicably settled, perhaps by mutual concessions, and I certainly consider the alarmist rumours as regards the possibility of war as grossly exaggerated. This was also the view taken on the Stock Exchange, until Friday's cables announced the impending departure of the Japanese fleet for Chinese waters. But even the latter event does not by any means imply that Japan is bent upon a breach of peace, and the very fact that Consols still stand in the neighbourhood of 113, and that no downward movement has commenced in Russian bonds, is a guarantee that we cannot possibly be on the brink of war. A good deal of selling, consisting of realisations and of the opening of "Bear" commitments has, however, been indulged in; and should events in the Far East shape themselves more favourably, we may look for a smart rally. Home Rails have passed through several fluctuations, and have finally eased off, although the further dividend announcements and the Directors' reports issued have so far been encouraging. While the engineering lock out has not actually been put an end to, it is evident that the men will, now that the leaders advise it, return to work next week, and already a considerable impulse is being given to trade, especially in the North. In the American department reactions have been caused by false rumours concerning the state of affairs in Cuba, and by the Teller resolution in the U.S. Senate in favour of free coinage. According to latest advices, the insurgents in Cuba are coming to terms, and the importance of the Teller agitation has been exaggerated. The strength of the various Pacific stocks in the midst of "Bear" attacks has been the feature. The stocks of the Canadian roads suffered a sharp relapse at one time, from which they are slowly recovering, the various "Bull" cliques making strong efforts to prevent a break in quotations. The South American section has been dull, and realisations have caused a considerable set-back in Argentine Rails, a result which I foreshadowed a week ago. South African gold mining shares have declined under the lead of Rand Mines, in which large options fall due this settlement. As soon as these have been liquidated we may look for a rebound. In the meantime, the progress of the election for the Presidency of the Transvaal is exercising a weakening influence, but there is little doubt of a substantial recovery coming about eventually. Westralians have shown dulness, although the shares of the leading Companies have been well supported. The Industrial Market displays signs of coming liquidation, and I fully maintain the view which I expressed a week ago as regards the danger of the gamble which is in progress in that section.

HOME RAILS—MORE DIVIDENDS.

Had it not been for the political scare the Home Railway department would have probably shown considerable strength during the past week, as, apart from the Great Eastern dividend which disappointed the over-sanguine ones, the distributions announced were distinctly favourable, while there was nothing in the various Directors' reports which have been published to create uneasiness. On the other hand, it is now only a question of days as to when the engineering shops will be re-opened, and the bulk of the men be at work again, while there is also every prospect of a cessation of labour troubles for a long time to come. Already new orders are being accepted, and there is no doubt that quite a strong impulse will be given to trade by the resumption of work. Although many orders have been lost to this country through foreign competition, it may be hoped that by exceptional activity much of the lost ground will be recovered, and in this way traffic returns should be stimulated to a considerable extent, to commence, say, in February. In the meantime it is satisfactory to find that in the new year increases continue to be shown. Thus for the week ending January 16 the increase was £32,631, bringing up the gain for the fortnight to £73,303. Amongst these returns the Caledonian and North British show remarkably well, business in Scotland already reviving in anticipation of the coming end of the lock-out, but the North-Western is also well to the front with an increase of £5,912 for the week. The following is my usual comparison of dividends with the second half of 1897 :—

—	Date of Declaration of Dividend for second half of 1897.	Dividend at the rate of per cent per annum.	Amount carried forward.	Dividend for second half of 1897.	Amount carried forward.
	1897.		£.		£.
Great Central	Jan. 13	1½	2,400	1	2,200
London and Brighton	,, 13	8	22,280	8	26,000
South Eastern	,, 14	6¾	5,520	6⅝	4,000
Great Eastern	,, 14	4¾	50,918	5	51,000
Metropolitan	,, 20	3⅝	14,130	3¾	17,000
Do. Sur. Lands Stock	,, 20	2⅝	--	2¾	—
London and South Western	,, 21	8¼	24,805	—	—
London and Chatham First Prefs.	,, 22	4½	64,543	4½	72,295
Lan. & Yorkshire	,, 25	5¾	29,140	5¼	21,000
Metropolitan District Prefs.	,, 26	2¼	403	—	—
North Eastern	,, 28	7½	31,602	—	—
Great Northern	,, 29	5¼	8,096	—	—
Great Western	Feb. 4	7¼	42,884	—	—
London and North Western	,, 5	8	99,779	—	—
Midland	,, 5	7	40,036	—	—
Caledonian	Mar. 2	5	17,418	—	—
North British	,, 11	3	1,484	—	—

The Great Eastern dividend was at the rate of 5 per cent. against 4¾ per cent. last year, and as sanguine operators had looked for 5½ per cent., the announcement caused a set-back in the stock, the quotation now being 122¼. This is, in my opinion, quite high enough, as the yield on this basis is only £2 16s. 6d. per cent., while Dover "A," for instance, yield on the distribution for the year 1897 £3 8s. 6d. per cent. When the dividend of 3⅞ per cent. comes off, this stock should look cheap, the South-Eastern being quite as progressive as the Great Eastern. The South-Eastern Directors' report furnishes a complete explanation of the increase in working expenses. It appears that the facilities offered by the Company for trips to Boulogne, and the improvement in the Continental service generally, are largely responsible for the greater expenditure. Of course, the higher scale of wages has also something to do with the increase in expenses, while the traffic in the summer months was worked at an abnormal cost in consequence of the insufficiency of the existing lines, and the rate of expenditure will naturally be reduced on the completion of the works now in progress. By the way, I quoted last week an interesting comparison of Continental passenger traffic from the Railway News. My contemporary, however, now publishes a revised return, as, owing to a printer's error, some of the figures were given under the wrong heads. The following is the corrected table :—

Years.	Calais.	Ostend.	Boulogne.	Dieppe.
1888	248,758	55,991	106,202	75,513
1890	262,671	75,868	90,541	97,490
1891	258,255	83,481	91,501	104,529
1892	248,315	87,700	86,328	104,454
1893	228,231	96,519	84,911	111,681
1894	234,409	119,410	90,507	133,302
1895	260,311	114,883	100,847	153,320
1896	265,600	118,639	89,415	165,228
1897	267,816	123,991	111,648	164,190

The Great Central report also calls for special notice. It is true that there has been a loss in the carriage of coal and material through the protracted engineers' dispute, but the line should all the more be benefited now by the resumption of work. With reference to the progress of the extension to London, the report states that before the close of the half-year now current this extension will be sufficiently advanced to enable goods and mineral traffic to be conveyed over the whole system. Interest continues to centre in the new 1894 Ordinary stock, which is very firm at 44½, and which may be looked upon as an exceedingly promising lock-up, with the prospect of a large increase in capital value. The increase in the Great Eastern earnings ha

CHINA AND GLASS. — Messrs. GOODE, Artists and Designers, solicit an inspection of their collection in their recently-extended South Audley-street premises, now by far the largest and most important in Europe. Messrs. Goode guarantee the excellence of all their productions, and invite a comparison of their prices with those of any co-operative stores.

been offset by a large addition to the expenditure; but the Directors take a hopeful view of the continued growth of the suburban traffic, and of the better conditions of the agricultural interest. The Metropolitan dividend was fully up to expectations, being at the rate of 3¾ per cent., against 3¾ per cent. last year, and the stock is firm at 135½. The Chatham and Dover distribution is the same as for the second half of 1896, but the carry forward is considerably larger. The stocks of the Heavy lines have been steady, although the improvement which was established has not been fully maintained. The following remarks from a valued correspondent are of special interest as regards the North-Western. As my correspondent puts it, the position of the Ordinary stocks of some of the leading English railways is well worthy of attention, from the point of view of intrinsic security, and on strict comparison it will be found that some of the lines are much more solid than others. For example, out of every £100 distributed as dividends by the London and North-Western Railway, 49 per cent. goes to Preference charges, and 51 per cent. to the Ordinary shareholders, but the Great Western pays 67 per cent. for Preference charges, and only 33 per cent. to Ordinary shareholders. The Great Eastern figures are remarkable, 81 per cent. goes to the Preference, and only 19 per cent. to the Ordinary shareholders. My correspondent further thinks that there can be no question that the London and North-Western Railway stands far ahead of any of the other Heavy lines, and the security being greater it ought to command a relatively higher price than the others, which, at present, it does not. Again, that the splitting (or duplicating) of stocks adds materially to their market value cannot now be disputed, and when a stock has attained the price of £205 for each £100 stock (which means a stamp duty alone of 1 per cent. on transfer, besides heavy brokers' commission), surely it is time that such a stock should be rearranged, which would benefit everybody and hurt no one. The London and North-Western Railway being in such a strong position as to dividends, presents a most favourable opportunity for such an operation. The following is the table showing the comparison of the Preference and Ordinary capitalisation.

Every £100 (net) earned is divided thus:—

	To Preference Claims (Debs. and Prefs.)	To Ordinary Shareholders.
London & North-Western	49 per cent.	51 per cent.
Great Western	67 ,,	33 ,,
Great Northern	63 ,,	37 ,,
Great Eastern	81 ,,	19 ,,
Midland	54 ,,	46 ,,
North-Eastern	49 ,,	51 ,,

I fully agree with the view expressed by my correspondent that the directors of the London and North-Western Railway Company might with great advantage follow the lead of the Midland in splitting the stock, and it is quite time that they relinquished their ultra-conservative attitude. That an important improvement in quotations would be the result is undoubted, and there is moreover something in the contention that the railway servants seeing the price marked at £205 for each £100 stock, may nurse a grievance, to which, if it were changed to £100 Preferred Ordinary and £100 Deferred Ordinary, they would in time get used, and it would not, in a sense, provoke them. Great Northern Deferred has been put down to 60¼ on adverse dividend rumours, but even if the unfavourable estimates were to be borne out by the announcement, the yield of this stock at present price would probably be close upon 4 per cent. per annum, and the only disturbing feature is the coming competition of the Great Central. The Scotch stocks, after showing strength, have eased off again, but there is every prospect of a smart recovery as soon as the political atmosphere clears. Metropolitan Districts were at one time very strong at 31. There is very little floating stock, and an advance of a point or two would not be at all surprising.

LOOK TO YOUR DRAINS.—Have the Drainage and Water Supply of your residences Examined and Certificated by CARTER BROS., 65, Victoria-st., S.W. Consulting Sanitary Engineers Hotel Cecil, &c.

THE YANKEE MARKET—KLONDIKE STOCKS TO THE FRONT.

American Railroad stocks have fluctuated with the varying news concerning the Cuban question and the silver agitation in the United States, and only during the last few days does the situation in the Far East appear to have affected Wall-street. It is now, however, quite clear that the United States Congress will not interfere in Cuba, and the position is all the less disturbing as recent advices report a severe defeat of the insurgents and the surrender of some of their leaders. There remains the silver agitation, but although the resolution of Senator Teller was a mischievous one, there is every reason to anticipate that Congress will not, as a whole, agree to commit suicide financially, while there is even less chance of President McKinley endorsing it, he having given the strongest possible guarantees to uphold sound money. Further developments of affairs in the Far East must, of course, affect all the markets, but our American cousins are for once on the side of this country in the stand which it has taken in favour of the freedom of trade for all nations wishing to have dealings with China. Business has run very much in one groove in the American market in the past week, special attention being devoted to the Pacific roads and to all the systems which may benefit by the passenger movement to Klondike. Wall-street has, in fact, dubbed these the "Klondike group," and whatever may be the real merit of the sanguine anticipations entertained, there is no doubt that these will materially support this group of stocks during the next few months. Northern Pacific Prefs. at one time rose to 67, and the Common stock reached 28½. Although a moderate reaction has since occurred, it would not be surprising to see a renewed upward movement. Union Pacifics have also been generally strong, touching at one time 33¼. There has since been a slight relapse, which may at any time be recovered, and I have heard insiders say that we may expect this stock to advance to 40, ex. the new Prefs., which this stock will receive early in February in lieu of the assessment of $15. These Prefs. at one time during the week touched 59½, receding to 57¼, but it will be seen that the Pref. allotment works out to nearly $9. A strong demand has been experienced for Central Pacifics, which have been run up to 13¾, and look like going better. Another feature, has been the rise in Ontario to 17¼, on the announcement that Mr. Chauncey Depew has joined the directorate. Business in Milwaukee and Louisville has been comparatively restricted, but as the traffics continue satisfactory, the prospects are promising, especially as a considerable short interest is stated to have been accumulating in these stocks. Denvers were at one time also in strong demand, and it seems that the various stocks are being taken in hand consecutively. It would only require an absence of adverse rumours, and the settlement of the Chinese question, to galvanise the American market into strong activity, and in any improvement the above-mentioned stocks, together with the Preference stocks of the reorganised roads, will doubtless be well to the front. Canadian Pacifics at one time rose as high as 92¾, when a sharp setback knocked them down to 91. Similarly, Grand Trunks suffered an important decline, the First Prefs. dropping to 66¾, the Guaranteed to 77. There has since been a rally to 68 in the First Prefs. The clique who are interested in these stocks have undoubtedly made a great deal of money, and they will do their best to maintain quotations, or even to engineer a fresh advance; but I adhere to my opinion that the rise has been so rapid that a pause is due, and that on any further advance profits should be taken.

FOREIGNERS AND SOUTH AMERICANS.

Interbourse securities have been fairly steady, and as yet the Chinese question has not sent a spasm through the foreign Bourses, which is so far encouraging. On the more favourable news from Cuba, Spanish advanced, and would probably have marked a further recovery had it not been for the political anxieties. Turks were firmer at one time, but are again easing off, and notwithstanding the contradiction of the rumour that M. Lang had resigned his directorship of the Imperial Ottoman Bank, the heavy fall in these shares has not been recovered. A relapse of from one to two points is shown in Argentine Government bonds, the 1886 Loan being quoted 92¾, the Funding Loan 91¼, Buenos Ayres Water and Drainage bonds 75½. On the other hand, the Four per Cent. Argentine Railway Guarantee Rescission bonds are but slightly easier at 63¼. The Buenos Ayres gold premium has, however, dropped to 163¼, and after some further realisations it would not be surprising to see Argentines rally again. The setback in Argentine Rails, which I foreshadowed, promptly made its appearance the moment political fears developed, and even Buenos Ayres Great Southern are 2 points lower at 155, while Buenos Ayres and Rosario at 76 mark a decline of 2½ points, Central Argentine at 84½ being 2½ below the best. Cordoba Central First Prefs. have fallen 4 to 91, the Second Prefs. 2 to 49, and Cordoba Central (Central Northern Section) Income Debenture stock is 2½ lower at 59. I mentioned a week ago that in my opinion there was considerable risk of Argentine Rails getting top heavy, and that it would be salutary if the upward movement were checked until traffic returns were more in keeping with quotations. Recent traffics have somewhat disappointed operators, as the increases were not so important as had been hoped. But, after all, this may be due to some delay in the moving of the crops, and eventually we shall doubtless see a strong improvement. Uruguay bonds have been firm, and appear ready to respond to any general upward movement which may occur. Brazilians, however, have been dull, and although the circumstance that Brazil has sold three ironclads which were being built for her is being pointed to as liberating a considerable sum, one must also say that it has come to a pretty pass if a country has to countermand the purchase of ships owing to its financial necessities. Chilians have also been dull, but Mexican Sixes have been strong. Mexican Rails, on the other hand, have not, so far, continued on the upward tack, and Peruvian Corporation stocks have reacted.

THE KAFFIR CIRCUS—A FURTHER REACTION.

There has been an absence of support on the part of insiders in the Kaffir Circus during the last few days, and a further setback has just occurred, as, notably, in Rand Mines some important options expire this account, against which the dealers have been selling. The price dropped to 33⅛, recovering to 33¼, and it is anticipated that as soon as these transactions have been liquidated, the leading firm interested in these shares will give them a fresh twist-up. In the meantime the speculative shares have been adversely affected by this movement, Consolidated Goldfields being down to 4⅞, East Rands to 5$\frac{3}{16}$. Preoccupation with the Presidential election in the Transvaal also militates against an improvement in South African shares at present, but there never was any hope of Mr. Schalk Burger carrying the day, and the re-election of President Kruger will not, therefore, be a matter of surprise. There is an impression in usually well-informed quarters that when Oom Paul has been re-elected he will assume a more accommodating and sensible attitude towards the mining industry, and there is but little doubt that the state of the Transvaal finances will necessitate the launching of a loan for a considerable sum. That such a loan cannot be obtained in Europe, except on the condition that reasonable concessions are made to the mining industry, is a well-known fact, and thus the hopes of an improvement in the position in the Transvaal need not yet be abandoned. In the meantime, the mines are doing well, and every effort is being made to increase production and reduce expenditure —which is as it should be. It is difficult to exactly understand what effect the reductions in railway freights recently cabled from the Cape will have, but it would almost appear as if they would work out to about £350,000 per annum, which would, of course, be of very considerable importance to the mining industry in the Transvaal. The stock of the Barnato group have reacted with the leaders of the speculative section, and there has also been a relapse in the Robinson group, with the prominent exception of Langlaagte Star, which have hardened to 1¾ on favourable advices from the mine. Deep Level shares have been fairly well maintained, and the decline in Rand Mines is, from this point of view, unjustified. By the way, what has become of the proposal to split the latter shares? According to the circular recently issued by debenture-holders of the Simmer and Jack, the debentures can be redeemed at par plus accrued interest, as the Company has plenty of money in hand for this purpose and for all other purposes. If the debenture-holders do not agree to the terms, offered, the Company can pay off the debentures by giving six months' notice in 1900. Of the original issue of £500,000 nearly £200,000 have already been purchased in the open market, so that the amount outstanding is somewhat over £300,000. The position of the Company is therefore exceptionally favourable, and my original forecast of its prospects has been more than fulfilled. For it is now entirely free from debt, owns 600 mining claims, a 280-head mill, with all requisite machinery and buildings, and, by way of reserve, an interest in the Rand Victoria Mines equal to 190 claims, which is certain to become very valuable in a year or two. The latest reports from that somewhat despised property, the Nigel Deep, are distinctly encouraging, for the assays in the two shafts, where development is now progressing, show a marked improvement. In D Shaft the average of a number of assays taken east and west along the drives comes out at a trifle under 5 oz. over seven inches of reef, and in C Shaft at 3½ oz. over six inches. The Nigel reef is, of course, a narrow one, but if these results can be maintained the mine should pay well enough. Diamond shares have been dealt in to a limited extent only, and De Beers are quoted 29$\frac{11}{16}$, New Jagersfontein 8⅜.

GOLDEN WEST AUSTRALIA.

The feature of the West Australian market has been the continued strength of high-class and dividend-paying shares, as compared with non-dividend payers and doubtful concerns. Adelaide, moreover, has not been on the buying tack, and thus the favourites of that market have been under a cloud. I have repeatedly stated that Adelaide purchases are not to be relied upon as a permanent factor, and this is now conclusively shown. The news from the goldfields is, however, very satisfactory, and a number of encouraging crushings are again to hand, of which I give herewith the list :—

—	Tons of Ore Crushed.	Ounces of Gold.	Assay of Tailings per Ton.
Great Boulder Proprietary	1,340	3,233	—
Ivanhoe	790	1,426	—
Hannan's Brownhill ...	736	946	—
North Burgess	50	316	—
Consolidated Murchison	309	314	—
North Boulder	645	377	—
Princess Royal	140	105	—
Consolidated G. M.— Yellow Aster	69	112	—
Lake View South ...	1,500	331	31 grs.
W. A. Gold Concessions	28	36	—
Polar Star...	50	48¾	—
Belle Vue Proprietary ...	140	300	—
Premier	378	253	—
Lindsay's Consolidated ...	260	64	—
Westralia and East Extension	1306	856	4 dwt.
Menzies Consolidated ...	455	601	—

Lake View Consols at one time rose to 11, but have since receded to 10⅛. Some encouraging statements have, however, been made by Mr. Charles Kaufman to a representative of the British Australasian, which clearly show that the recent "Bear" rumours should be disregarded. Ivanhoe have been dull at 6$\frac{3}{16}$. The secretary announces that the share certificates of this Company are now ready in exchange for the allotment letters and bankers' receipts. London and Globe Finance shares have fallen to 2$\frac{5}{16}$, although this Company is now distributing a dividend of 10 per cent., and very large profits have been earned by it in addition to this dividend. I am also informed that a meeting of all the Directors of the subsidiary Companies of the London and Globe was held last week, when the decision was come to that the amalgamation scheme which had been formulated by Mr. Whitaker Wright should be accepted. An exploration Company is to be formed immediately, the prospectus of which is to be issued within a fortnight, while the Board of Directors will be both influential and experienced. The Companies affected are, of course, the Mainland Consols, Wealth of Nations, Golden Crown, Paddington Consols, Hannan's Golden Treasure, Hannan's Golden Group, and Wealth of Nations Extended. It is understood that the new undertaking will have a large working capital assured. Hannan's Brownhill have been a strong market, and the shares are quoted $7\frac{3}{4}$ x.d. The shares of the London and West Australian Exploration Company are temporarily lower at $1\frac{1}{8}$, but will no doubt recover again. In the meantime Sons of Gwalia shares remain steady at $2\frac{1}{16}$, and very satisfactory cablegrams have been received by the British Australasian concerning both the Hannan's Brownhill and the Sons of Gwalia. The average width of the lode at the latter mine is over 4 ft., and the value of the ore is estimated at $3\frac{1}{2}$ oz. per ton, the ore in sight being computed at 40,000 tons, while a rich shoot has been cut at a depth of 145 ft. assaying 10 oz. to the ton. The whole plant of the Hannan's Brownhill is to be completed in March, when the crushing capacity will be equal to 350 tons, and then it is expected that the output will exceed 15,000 oz. per month. Advices from the East Murchison United and the Consolidated Murchison are favourable. The latter has struck very rich ore, and expects it to continue on the No. 3 level Day Dawn West. From the Hannan's Proprietary Development Company a cablegram is to hand stating that they are cross-cutting the 500 ft. lode on the Pheasant Lease, and that this is opening up well, the average assay of ore being 2 oz. 7 dwts. per ton from the north face. In the West Australian Goldfields group very little change has to be reported. The shares in the parent Company are dull at $2\frac{1}{8}$, while Hampton Plains are quoted $1\frac{1}{16}$. The Market Trust group has been quiet, and the shares of the Trust Company are quoted $1\frac{1}{4}$, while Associated Gold Mines have declined to $3\frac{15}{16}$. By the way, it is interesting to learn that Mr. Horatio Bottomley, who presides over this group, has arranged with regard to the donation of £250,000 to the Hansard Union shareholders, to pay a round sum of £5,000 to the Income-tax Commissioners in discharge of their claim against him. This is rather a heavy tax on his generous action. Golden Horseshoes have been a very fidgety market, at one time rising to 9, and reacting to $8\frac{1}{2}$. Lake View South are easier at $1\frac{3}{8}$, and the various Kalgurli issues have been dull and lower. Belle Vue Proprietary have been a steady market at $\frac{7}{8}$, and the further small crushing which has come to hand is satisfactory as regards the yield, but the amount of ore crushed has not been so large owing to there not being any increase in the supply of water. Lady Shentons have been firm at $2\frac{1}{8}$, and the news from the mine continues to be of the most satisfactory character. Peak Hill Goldfields have been firmer at 3, and the special settlement appears to be proceeding satisfactorily. Brownhill Central have again been firm at $1\frac{1}{2}$. It cannot be said that Scottish Westralia is scoring with the Companies which it has floated. Few of these have any good results to show, and it now appears from the meeting of shareholders of the Hope's Hill Gold Mines —another of its offspring—that according to the report of a reliable expert the value of the reef is, where at present worked (contrary to former reports), worth only from 5 dwt. to 7 dwt. per ton, even the tailings going merely something like $2\frac{1}{2}$ dwt. to $2\frac{3}{4}$ dwt. to the ton. The occurrence again points the lesson that investors should put their money into proved West Australian mines only. The Emperor is another disappointing mine, although in this instance a considerable amount of gold, viz., 2,656 oz., was produced, while the Company was stated to have originally had a working capital of £25,000; but, curiously enough, the Directors now propose to liquidate the Company, practically abandoning the property. It is just as well that the shareholders should have appointed a committee of investigation, as this matter should be thoroughly sifted.

INDIAN, AUSTRALASIAN, AND BRITISH COLUMBIAN MINES.

It cannot be said that the Indian section has given rise to much business, but prices have upon the whole been well maintained. Mysore Gold, Ooregum Prefs., and Coromandel have improved; but some of the low-priced shares are easier, notably Mysore West and Mysore Wynaad. In Australian mines other than West Australian, Aladdin's Lamp have hardened to $1\frac{13}{16}$, but Mount Morgan are unaltered at $4\frac{5}{8}$, and Broken Hill Proprietary have risen to $2\frac{1}{8}$. Mount Lyell are lower at $13\frac{3}{4}$ xd., but some of the other Mount Lyell issues are better. Amongst New Zealand mines declines have preponderated. Waihi, Woodstock, Taitapu, Komata Reefs, and Kapanga are all lower, but Achilles have firmed up. Efforts are being made to galvanise the British Columbian department into life, and London and British Columbian Goldfields, Hall Mines, and Galena are nominally higher. Augustus Colin Aitken, a Director of the unfortunate Klondike Gold Mining and Trading Company, Limited, was again brought up at the Mansion House on the charge of applying to his own use and benefit certain sums, the property of the Company, and also with conspiring with Edgar Rodriguez Savigny, by false pretences, to obtain money from the public. According to the statement made by Mr. Bodkin, who prosecuted on behalf of the Public Prosecutor, about £7,600 was subscribed by the public, but the pass-book, showing £7,000, was false, for not only was there a worthless cheque for £3,300, but there was an entry of a cheque for £3,000 as being paid to Savigny, and the balance of the Company's money at Parr's Bank was only £720. Prisoner stated that the money had disappeared by reason of cheques drawn at the instance of Savigny. The case has again been remanded. British America Corporation shares, after receding to 2s. 9d. premium, are up again at 3s. premium. In Mexican mines Consolidated Goldfields of Mexico are quoted $1\frac{3}{8}$, Grand Central $1\frac{7}{8}$. In the general foreign section Fortuna, Frontino and Bolivia, and Linares are better, but St. John del Rey have declined.

THE SOUTH LONDON ELECTRIC SUPPLY CORPORATION, LIMITED.

The complaint set forth by a shareholder in the South London Electric Supply Corporation, Limited, in a circular which he has addressed to his brother shareholders, seems at the first blush to constitute a real grievance. When subscribing for shares in this Company this shareholder noticed that the prospectus stated specially that shareholders would have a preference on any further issue of capital, and as only 43,341 shares were subscribed for and allotted out of the 65,000 shares constituting the whole capital of the Company, he was not unnaturally surprised when application was made to the Stock Exchange for a special settlement of a further issue of 12,500 shares, that such should not have been offered to the shareholders, the more so as the shares had in the meantime risen to a substantial premium. In answer to his inquiry the Directors informed him that these shares were allotted to one man, who was a very large shareholder, under an agreement dated back as far as July, wherein he was given an option not only over the 12,500 shares, but also over the whole unissued capital of 21,659 in consideration of his having taken at par 1,270 shares at a time, when they were quoted at a considerable discount, to enable the directors to get a Stock Exchange quotation. According to this circular he was further informed verbally, by one of the directors, that the premium referred to was due to an inflated market, and was not a true test of their market value, a somewhat curious statement. The contention of the Directors seems also to be that these shares were not "a further issue," but a portion of the first issue. As the shares have risen to a considerable premium, the allottee of the 21,659 shares has evidently, with very small risk, made a large profit, and it remains to be seen whether the directors acted ultra vires, whether they should not, in the first instance, have obtained the consent of the shareholders, or whether in accordance with the promise held out in the prospectus, they should have offered the shares in the first instance to them. The Directors will do well to fully reply to this circular, setting forth whatever explanation they may have to give.

NEW ENTERPRISES AND ISSUES

The prospectuses of the following new enterprises and issues have been placed before the public during the week :—

The Mount Lyell Proprietary Mines, Limited.—This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring and working on an extended scale the copper properties lately owned by the Great Southern Mount Lyell Mining Syndicate (of Melbourne) in the Colony of Tasmania, covering an area of about 567 acres. The capital is fixed at £500,000, in shares of £1 each. The present issue is of 400,000 shares at par, of which £100,000 in shares or cash is for working capital, leaving 100,000 shares in reserve for additional working capital.

British Guiana Government Three per Cent. Stock.—The Crown Agents for the Colonies, on behalf of the Government of British Guiana, invite subscriptions to an issue of £150,000 Three per Cent. Inscribed stock, repayable in 1945. The interest is payable half yearly. The minimum price is fixed at £96. 10s. per £100.

MY LETTER BOX.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents :—

GOVERNMENT, &C., BONDS.

Rita.—I think it is quite worth your while to keep Brazilian bonds of 1889, which cost you par, for an improvement. B. A.—Although a good deal depends, with reference to Uruguay bonds, upon political events during the next month or two, a purchase of the Three and a Half per Cent. Loan looks very promising, as, if events shape themselves rightly, there will be a marked advance.

BANKS, TRUSTS, AND FINANCIAL.

Aveberry.—I should think that your best course would be, under this trust deed, to distribute the money over Colonial Government bonds, Bank of England stock, and Indian Railway stocks. M. R. P. A., Portman-square.—You cannot obtain absolute safety and a yield of 5 per cent., but you might make your selection of gilt-edged American Railway bonds from the tables published in TRUTH of December 30 to return 4 per cent. and upwards. Thanks for your contribution to Lady Jeune's Fund. Hougham, Grantham.—What you require has been forwarded in your envelope. Devonia.—A good deal of latitude is given to Companies to register their list of shareholders at Somerset House, where the first list is usually obtainable. To shareholders, however, who can establish their status, the Companies are compelled to give a copy of the list of shareholders at a reasonable charge. F. C. H.—If the man is worth powder and shot you should be able to recover the money, and what you require has been forwarded in your envelope. Kew Gardens.—The London and Midland Bank (1) is doing a progressive and prosperous business, and there is no reason to sell the shares. 2. Probably. 3. As you are an holder of Grand Trunk Guaranteed at higher prices, I think you would be justified in holding for a further rise, although you will have to face temporary reactions. 4. I am glad you have done well in buying Brighton "A" as an investment on my recommendation. S. H., Stafford.—I cannot reply by letter. Outside brokers only deal on the cover system, and as most of them have come to grief, this kind of business has petered out. You must be aware that such men as Gregory have not paid their creditors. With members of the Stock Exchange you can only deal on ordinary terms, and if you choose your operations well, and are successful, you would at least get your money, which would not be the case in dealing with outside stockbrokers. Leontodon.—I never had a favourable opinion of the prospects of the Cheque Bank, Limited.

HOME RAILS.

R. A. F.—If I were to make a selection of Home Rails as an investment I should recommend the following list: North-Western, Dover "A," Brighton "A," Great Northern Deferred, Great Central 1894 Ordinary, and Caledonian Deferred Ordinary. Demos.—You should hold your Great Northern Deferred at present, and you should certainly keep Great Central 1894 Ordinary, which you bought at 43¼, for an important advance. Glen B.—I quite agree with you that the Metropolitan District is doing exceedingly well, and that the present rise to 31 does not at all represent the real merits of this stock. You should hold for an important advance.

AMERICAN AND FOREIGN RAILS.

Nemo, Highgate.—It is quite correct that the Leopoldina Railway is being reconstructed into an English Company, and you should hold for an improvement. C. C. N. B.—I have already expressed my view as regards Canadian-Pacifics in last week's issue, and I should think that you would do well in Dover "A" and in Union Pacifics. A. K.—I almost think that you would do well to sell your Grand Trunk Ordinary, as you would now get out without a loss, and on any set-back in Grand Trunks to buy the Guaranteed. What is the good of holding a wild-cat stock which never pays any dividend? Amicus.—I cannot tell you when Reading First Prefs. will pay a dividend, but I have no doubt that the market will improve. Inquirer, Evesham.—You should certainly hold your Atchisons, there being every prospect of a further important advance. H. D., Bradford.—I accept no fees for replying to inquiries, neither can I answer by post. There is every prospect of the Argentine Railway stocks mentioned going higher during the present revival in Argentines. Argentine North Eastern Prefs. are now quoted 12½, the Debentures 35. Industrious, Market Harborough.—In the matter of American Railroad bonds I gave a full list in TRUTH of December 30. To get about 4 per cent. you should buy, say, Illinois Central Four per Cent. Gold bonds of 1953 at 105, and Pittsburgh, Cinn., Chicago, and St. Louis Four per Cent. Mortgage bonds of 1945 (Guaranteed by the Pennsylvania Company) at 105. Clarendon.—I certainly advise you to hold the bonds in question, but rather than buy more of these you should invest in some other Argentines of greater promise. You have done quite right in buying Great Central 1894 Ordinary. C. A. M.—It is quite impossible to foretell when the Grand Trunk Guaranteed stock will resume dividends; but I have no doubt that this will occur in the present year. London.—1. You have done quite right to hold your Union Pacifics, and having paid your assessments, you will have to receive $15 of Preference stock, valued now at about $9 per Ordinary share, but likely to appreciate much more. 2. You would be entitled to the same amount of new Preference stock as you hold of the Ordinary. The new securities will not be issued until February, and not only will I inform my readers when the distribution is made, but you will also receive due notice from the Company.

MINING SHARES.

Lex.—No; I hold an unfavourable opinion of the British Empire Finance Corporation, Limited, which was started in August. Not only is its scope far too wide for any ordinary board to control, but I do not like some of the names connected with it. Northern.—No option but to hold your mining shares Nos. 1 to 11 for an improvement. Yes, I hold a favourable opinion of British America Corporation shares (A and B). From the point of view of a further investment you might put more money into Lake View Consols (1), London and Globe (6), Lady Shenton (7), and British America Corporation (11). Spinks.—The old London and Globe Finance Deferred shares have been converted into new Ordinary shares. Air.—Yes, British American Corporation would be a good purchase, and you might make up a small trust of these, London and West Australian Exploration, Sons of Gwalia, Ivanhoe, Lady Shenton, and Hannan's Brownhill. W. A. R.—1. Hold, but do not yet buy more to average. 2. A fair mining proposition, but dependent upon the water supply. 3. Prospects, according to recent reports, appear to be good. Gymnast.—You ought to insist upon obtaining the scrip. Neophyte.—No option but to hold. They will recover. Regular Reader, Edinburgh.—The prospects of the two concerns are doubtful. Amongst the list mentioned by you, Barnato Consols (2), Randfontein (5), British America (4), London and Globe (5), East Murchison United (10), and Lady Shenton (11), look most promising. G. Bath.—1. Advices from the Lady Shenton mine continue favourable both as to the amount and quality of ore. 2. The mine crushes with the full power of its present battery, which is, however, being increased. F. H.—Yes, Consolidated Goldfields of South Africa might be bought on a decline. Consols.—1. Yes, you should join the reconstruction. 2. The amalgamation of the Paddington Consols and Wealth of Nations is now about to be carried out. See remarks under "Golden West Australia." 3. I have no information of a favourable kind concerning the Pilbarra United. 4. No option but to hold. Sell on an improvement. J. W., Yeovil.—You should hold these shares; it is a Land Company with a great future. Scrutator.—X. This is not stated yet. Y. You could sell these now, but you must, of course, stipulate that you will only deliver when the shares are issued. Z. A fair deep level risk. W. B.—You should certainly hold London and Globe Finance shares for a rise. The Company is doing exceedingly well. Eliza.—1. I am not exactly an admirer of the Exploration Company (New), which has not done well of late. All your Mining shares, Nos. 2-9 should be held for an improvement. Student.—I cannot, as a matter of principle, recommend individual stockbrokers. I do not consider Hannan's Treasure Trove and Hannan's Reward a good purchase. A. Q. W.—Sons of Gwalia appear to be good value for the money. Callema.—1. Yes, you should join the reconstruction. 2. Prospects of this Cycle Company do not look very rosy just now, as the cycle boom is over. Glencairn.—British America (1) would be preferable to the Klondike N.W. Terr. Exploration Company (2), which I should not recommend. 3. Hold, the amalgamation is about to be carried out. Aaron.—Hold Woodstock Transvaal (1) and see remarks under "The Kaffir Circus" last week. Hold also the other mining shares, Nos. 2-4. I suppose there is no option but to join the reconstruction of No. 5, and to sell after. No. 6 should recover. Nemoy.—1. There should be a prospect of an improvement in the Murchison concern. I have no recent information respecting the New Zealand mine, but see shares how you can get out of the payment of the calls. G. A. now.—Yes, you should hold, more especially the two first-named. A. W. Winter.—I am glad you have done so well in London and Globe on my advice. Amongst the shares named, I should prefer No. 3 (Associated Gold Mines). Mysore.—1. Langlaagte Estate should be held for a recovery. 2. Langlaagte Star are improving. Hold. 3. Hold. The amalgamation scheme is about to be carried out. 4. Yes, take your handsome profit. Brooch.—Yes, hold Randfontein and Glencairn. Malaxa.—1. Yes, Hampton Plains are promising. There seems to be no option but to hold the South African shares Nos. 2-4 for the present. Fair security. Edgirdla.—1. I have not heard of late what has become of this concern. The other shares should be held. You should in future number your inquiries, for obvious reasons. Vectis.—1. Prospects are not over bright. 2. Certainly join the reconstruction. As regards the other shares mentioned, they are not particularly promising, and you had better make your selection from my letter. Border Boy.—This is not the time to sell mining shares. You should hold all. The best prospects are those of Nos. 7, 15, and 16. Ignorant.—1-2. I should advise you to leave Cuddingwarra alone. 3. No option but to wait. K. C.—A fair mining risk at present price, but no catch.

INDUSTRIAL SHARES.

D. W. E.—The shares of the Trust in question (1) are a fair investment, but no catch. No. 2 looks promising. As regards the Preference shares of the Newspaper Company (3), they are obviously speculative. C. McL.—I really cannot give you names of individual stockbrokers. You had better apply to your bankers. I cannot reply by letter. E. L. P.—So far this American Industrial Company has not improved, but this should come about in time. M. M. M.—1. I should think that there is every prospect of this Preference stock improving again. 2. There has been a further decline in this Deferred stock, but you should not throw it away. 3. This is one of the best Nitrate Companies, and if you hold long enough you will see a portion of your loss recovered again. Gas, Chesterfield.—1. It is really impossible to say whether this Gas Company will maintain its dividend, as it can pretty well do what it likes. 2. I should almost feel inclined to hold. 3. Impossible to tell. 4. Ditto. Mantle.—The Welsbach Incandescent Company has a well-established business, and I should say that the new competition in question would not hurt it much. Motor, Derby.—It is a great pity that you went into the Great Horseless Carriage Company against my advice, but it is also a pity to throw good money after bad. F. W. H. P.—I see no objection to your list of investments Nos. 1 to 5, although you must always run the risks that attend industrial enterprises.

MIXED INVESTMENTS.

Trustee.—Hold the Uruguay debentures, but do not buy more to average until the political situation in Uruguay is assured. It is not at all improbable that the East London will eventually benefit. Chatham Ordinary are a fair investment at the present level. Mac.—1. Do not buy until fuller information is received from that mine. 2. I do not recommend purchase of the Cycle shares. G. S. H.—1. Not yet. 2. Nothing is known yet as regards the return of Colonel North's money. 3. Probably. 4. I cannot tell you. 5. Under present circumstances, I should certainly hold Nos. 1 to 7 for an improvement. 6. No; I cannot give you any information about this Company, and should be sorry to recommend investment in the same. A. C.—Nos. 1-4 are fair investments of the kind. As regards No. 5, no information is available in London. Telegraph.—The address of the West Coast of America Telegraph Company is Winchester House, Old Broad-street, E.C. 2. I do not advise on these shares, and if you are a regular reader of TRUTH you must know this. 3. A fair mining risk. Jonah.—1. I know nothing of this concern. No option but to hold Nos. 2-5 for the present. N. M. T.—1. A new English Company is being formed. You must hold. 2. The position of the Lady Shenton mine is, according to all accounts, good. 3. You might as well clear out of these Indian shares. 4. A fair risk. Ernest.—1. Hold Atchison Prefs. 2. No option but to hold. 3. A good bond. 4. I only recommended these from the investment point of view. 5. Fairly promising. Sutton.—1. A fair investment, but quite high enough. 2. Yes, a good investment. Royal Corrie.—1. Doubtful. 2. No. 3. I have not heard of this Syndicate (Kalgoorlie Timber). 4. No. Goldi.—I cannot recommend individual stockbrokers, and I must refer you to my letter as regards the rest. W. Y.—Some day, not far off, these Brewery shares Nos. 1-4 should come to the front again. 6. A fair mine, but much depends upon the water supply. The Seasons.—1. No fresh news. 2. Yes. E. C. I.—1. Possibly. 2. Copper shares generally are flourishing. 3. Perhaps, but there has been a big rise. 4. Certainly not, after the fall keep Consolidated Goldfields of South Africa. 5. British America Corporation. S. W. Co.—1. Yes, London and Globe Finance shares are expected to rise further. 2. Another dividend for 1897 is to be declared when the accounts are presented. 3. As regards the Manchester concern I do not hold a favourable view. Novicius.—1. If you are content with 4 per cent. you might place the money into gilt-edged American Railroad bonds. 2. I have already explained the position fully. 3. Yes, promising, but, of course, speculative. Stuart.—1. Anglo "A" are high enough. 2. Yes, these bonds are well secured. Investor, Cork.—Yes, there is no reason why you should not invest in the American bonds No. 1, or in Apollinaris and Schweppe Debentures (2 and 3). No. 4 is also a fair investment, but No. 5 is more speculative. Primrose.—Hold New York Central (1). These Cycle shares (2) may improve again. The Company No. 3 is doing well, and at present prices the Deferred seem cheap. There is, of course, always the risk of fresh competition.

VARIOUS INVESTMENTS.

There is every indication of my view that the Money Market will not for any length of time remain in the present easy condition proving correct. Short loans are harder at $1\frac{1}{4}$ to $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and rates for three months' bank bills, although still quoted at $2\frac{1}{4}$ to $2\frac{3}{8}$ per cent., are tending upwards. The surplus funds in the open market are now decreasing, and there is still a considerable demand for gold on Continental account. Consols have suffered a slight decline, being quoted $112\frac{11}{16}$ for the account. The demand for other gilt-edged securities has slackened, partly, perhaps, in view of fears of complications in the Far East, and the non-success of the last Liverpool Corporation issue is significant. It shows, too, the mistake to fix the minimum too high, that of 98 for a Two and a Half per Cent. loan being distinctly excessive in the case of that Corporation. I suppose, however, that Liverpool will gradually be able to obtain the balance of about one million sterling, which it still requires. Silver has fallen to $26\frac{3}{8}$d., and Rupee Paper is slightly easier at $63\frac{3}{16}$. The rumours with reference to coming trouble in the Far East are responsible for a decline in Japanese bonds to 101; but the Chinese stocks do not show much change. Dealings in the cycle section have been quite restricted, although buying on Dublin account has put up Dunlop Deferred to 13s. 3d. French Dunlops, however, remain weak at 4s. x.d. There is a rumour that these two Companies are to be amalgamated—for what reason I cannot possibly conceive. Humber Ordinary are slightly easier at 15s. 3d., but the Extensions are firmer at 11s. 3d. Cycle Components have declined to $2\frac{1}{2}$, while Singers at 14s., Swifts at $\frac{3}{4}$, Amalgamated Tyres at 7s. 3d. show little change. The Bovril dividend has been declared at the rate of $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the Prefs., 7 per cent. on the Ordinary, and 5 per cent. on the Deferred. The latter distribution was considered disappointing, especially as the profits made by the Company during 1897 are given as £160,000, against £88,789 in 1896, £57,605 in 1895, and £21,183 in 1894. The Deferred at one time dropped to 15s., from which there has been a recovery to 15s. Schweppes have been steady, the Deferred at 13s., the Ordinary at $1\frac{3}{16}$. There are still rumours of a coming amalgamation between the Apollinaris and Johannis and Pears' Soap, but the union would be such an unnatural one that I cannot bring myself to believe that it will come off. Coats Ordinary are stagnant at $62\frac{1}{4}$, and English Sewing Cottons (Threads) are quoted $\frac{7}{8}$ premium. There is still a general outcry at the slowness of the allotment. Allsopp Ordinary advanced sharply to $167\frac{1}{2}$ at one time, reacting to 166, on dividend rumours. Harrod's Stores have hardened on the announcement of a dividend of 15 per cent., for the six months ended December 31, 1897, making, with the interim dividend of 5 per cent. already paid, 20 per cent. for the year. The founders' shares will receive a distribution of 20 per cent. from their Company, and the quotation of Harrod's Stores Ordinary is steady at 5, ditto Founders' at $4\frac{3}{4}$. The shares of the Burma Railway have been put up several points on the report that amongst the conditions made by the British Government for granting a loan to China it has been stipulated that permission should be given for the line to be prolonged into Yunnan; but the line is even now only partially constructed, and it remains to be seen whether the negotiations with China will lead to a satisfactory conclusion. The Thames Ordnance and Engineering Company, Limited, is the name of an important new undertaking which will shortly be issued with a capital of £550,000, divided in equal proportions in Cumulative Preference and Ordinary shares, while there will, in addition, be an issue of £250,000 Four and a Half per Cent. Debentures. The Company proposes to manufacture and sell guns, ammunition, and other war material, and to acquire a concession granted by the well-known firm of Messrs. Schneider & Co., of Creusot and Havre, the celebrated manufacturers of guns and war material, by which the concessionaires will have the sole right to manufacture the

A MOST WONDERFUL PACKAGE of Crockery. Send your name and address to the Pearson Pottery Co., Hanley, Staffs., and we will forward one of our catalogues of cheap Crockery. One Hundred Pieces of Crockery for £1. 1s., including complete Dinner and Tea Services, and other pieces. Even an imitation of this advertisement impossible. Drop a post card for particulars.

Schneider-Canet artillery, for use in the United Kingdom, the British Colonies, and other countries, with the exception of France, Germany, Austria, and Italy. The Schneider-Canet artillery is used almost exclusively in the French Army and Navy, and is also being supplied to a number of other Governments. The business of Messrs. Easton, Anderson, & Goolden, Limited, engineers, of London and Erith, is to be absorbed by the new Company in order to avoid the delay inseparable from the establishment of new ordnance works. I have been favoured by Messrs. R. A. Smith & Co., of Star Chambers, 30, Moorgate-street, London, E.C., with a communication prompted by my remarks on the touting circulars which they have been issuing under the headings, "The New Limited Syndicate! A want of the Period! An Up-to-Date Scheme!" the system extolled in these circulars being one for speculating in stocks and shares. R. A. Smith & Co. proposed to obtain subscriptions from the public for an issue of 5,000 £1 fully-paid shares, for the purpose of dealing in securities for the rise or fall. They now inform me that, although the majority of their clients, before whom they placed the suggestion, received it favourably, for reasons of their own they have withdrawn the prospectus and returned all subscriptions in full. They, however, state their belief that "conducted honestly, it is a system especially calculated for those who will speculate and who reside at a distance, and are consequently unable to avail themselves fully of the fluctuations of the market." Probably the system would have been "calculated" for country people, but I should have been greatly surprised if in the end they had made any money by the system, and I congratulate Messrs. R. A. Smith & Co. upon having withdrawn their circular. By the way, I gather from a report of the meeting of creditors of F. S. Grosvenor, stock and share dealer, who traded as Grosvenor & Co., at 47, Moorgate-street, E.C., that this outside broker's accounts disclosed total liabilities of £14,465, of which £13,059 are unsecured, and assets £2,792. Of course the estate will be wound up in bankruptcy, and I expect that the creditors will obtain very little. It was explained at the meeting that the failure was caused "through the bankruptcy of George Gregory & Co., when a great distrust arose amongst the public, resulting in a general closing of accounts and withdrawal of deposits." I dare say the concern would have come to grief without the failure of George Gregory & Co., but the history of both these bankruptcies fully bears out my warning to have absolutely nothing to do with outside brokers of any kind, but to deal only through members of the Stock Exchange. On January 13 I commented on the balance-sheet of Appleton, French, & Scrafton, Limited, of Thornaby-on-Tees, which showed a loss of £92,226, chiefly due to speculations in wheat and to other losses on grain trading. I then expressed my strong opinion that no further capital ought to be found for a concern which could lose half its original capital within a period of twelve months. I see that Mr. Justice North has just appointed a receiver and manager of the business on behalf of the debenture-holders, and that it is proposed to carry on the business with the view to its sale as a going concern. It was also understood that the Company would this week pass a resolution for voluntary winding up, which is doubtless the only proper course to take. On applying to an advertisement which recently appeared in the Standard concerning "a safe, regular, and reliable income, and the promise of a monthly profit of 30s. on a capital of £30, and larger amounts at the same ratio; no gambling in stocks or shares or racing, but an investment in a genuine commercial enterprise; capital fully secured and returnable on application," a reader of TRUTH received a prospectus of the London Cab Co-operative Company, of 4, Bloomsbury-street, W.C. This concern, it appears, is prepared to receive sums of £15 and upwards from the investing public, each £120 thus received being expended in the purchase of a hansom cab, two horses, set of cab harness, and licenses. The Co-operative Company promises that the working of these cabs will yield on each £30 invested £1 2s. 6d. per month, or 7s. 6d. per week. A great deal is said with regard to the large profits made by other cab Companies, but it is needless to say that these have not always been successful. I fail to see that the capital invested in the London Cab Co-operative Company would be "fully secured," as stated in the circulars, or that the investment would be in any way a promising one.—Your affectionate Uncle, MOSES.

P.S.—TUESDAY MORNING.—To judge from the suddenness of the announcement of the despatch of an American man-of-war to Havana, and the time chosen, one would almost think that the statesmen in Washington were "Bears" of American rails, and were playing upon the carry-over in London. According to the explanations given by the Secretary of the U.S. Navy, however, no importance is to be attached to this matter, and it is not likely that ursine operators will benefit to any extent. The failure of an old established firm of brokers, members of the London Stock Exchange, who formerly did a large business, yesterday caused a number of forced sales of South African and West Australian mining shares, chiefly of the latter. South Africans are already rallying, and doubtless Westralians will follow suit. M.

All Rights Reserved.

QUEER STORY.

THE WINNING OF MABEL.

WHAT does the name Mabel suggest to you, reader? I wonder whether the Mabel of your imagination is the same as she who was always the creature of mine. I say "was" advisedly, because—however, I shall come to that in a few minutes. To me Mabel was a maiden, small, graceful, dainty, with sylph-like figure and fairy elegance of movement; her skin was white as porcelain, she had lustrous brown eyes, fringed with long, thick lashes, and a wealth of the deepest chestnut curls; her nose was a model of minute shapeliness, and her mouth was, as it were, the choicest specimen of Nature's button-holing. Her age was eighteen, and never varied; her voice was soft and silvery; her manner sweet, retiring, coy. Such was the Mabel I had always pictured to my fancy.

Not so very long ago, however, I was brought into contact with a real Mabel. She came to live where I live—at Bigham, in Surrey; and she was the very antithesis of the Mabel whom my fancy had depicted. She was tall and stalwart; not, indeed, ungraceful, but the reverse of sylph-like. Her complexion was an olive-brown, slightly weather-beaten; her nose was Roman, and bespoke self-will and self-confidence. So did her bright, black eyes, which met you fearlessly. So did her firm, compressed lips, and her square, withal shapely chin. Her voice, without being in the least discordant, was loud and resolute. Altogether, she gave you the impression of being a self-reliant young lady, accustomed to look after herself, and eminently capable of holding her own in any conjuncture. This was the real Mabel.

She came to live at Bigham, and brought her mother with her—she had a mother who was Mabel's obedient servant—for two cogent reasons; to wit, the excellence of the Bigham roads for cycling, and the excellence of the Bigham Links for golf. Mabel was an adept at both pastimes, and the whole devotion of her nature was given to them—especially to golf. It was on the links that I saw her for the first time in the act of driving from the tee. The finished and workmanlike ease of her swing at once struck me. I had never seen a girl swing so before.

You know how most girls swing; how, even in the best of them, their style is cramped and jerky; how seldom they achieve so much as an idea of the follow through. Mabel, however, had achieved the thing itself. She swung like a professor. From seeing her drive that one ball, I felt immediately that here was a girl worth knowing.

It was not many days ere this privilege was accorded me. I was introduced to her in the drawing-room of a mutual friend. The common bond of golf at once drew us together. We spent an agreeable half-hour talking unqualified shop. I really enjoyed it; so, I think, did she.

I haven't much small talk in a general way, and, therefore, I am usually rather at a discount with girls. But give me one who, like Mabel, takes an intelligent, nay, an absorbing, interest in the jargon of the greens, and I can hold my own against any man.

That was the beginning of our acquaintance. It soon ripened into a friendship—a golf friendship. I played many exciting matches with Mabel over the Bigham Links. I found that I could just give her a half, and on those terms she downed me quite as often as I downed her. Of course, when you play very level with a person, you like playing with that person better than with any one else. For this reason, I liked playing with Mabel better than with any one else.

But it was not to be supposed that I could always have Mabel to myself. She had other gentlemen friends—golf friends; and, in particular, Sandy Robson. Sandy Robson was a Scotchman—I beg the fellow's pardon, a Scotsman—and a conceited ass to boot. Because he had learned golf north of the Tweed, he considered himself in a different class from any of us southern players; and he used to talk very big of the feats he had achieved among the Royal and Ancients, and the Honourable Edinburghs. I am not denying he played a strong game. But I flattered myself that I was just as good as he was. I challenged him one day to a big match, for a fiver. We brought it off. He won, two up, and mighty cock-a-hoop he was. But I had had all the worst of the luck, and I wasn't satisfied. In fact, I made up my mind to take him on again at an early date, and see if I couldn't turn the tables.

That defeat, however, rankled less than the fact that he was always cutting in with Mabel in front of me, and securing her for his opponent in a match when I wanted to secure her for mine. Mabel, with a half, gave me such a much better game than anybody else did that it was really deuced annoying. Besides, I didn't like the idea of her being out alone so often with that Scotch cad. Of course, Mabel was well qualified to take care of herself; no girl better. Still, Robson was a good-looking fellow of his style—that red-haired, pink-faced, freckle-nosed Scotch style, which I have always detested—and he was popularly (though quite erroneously, I should imagine) supposed to be a dangerous fellow with the ladies.

That was just the mischief of it. Robson's reputation (however ill-deserved) would set people talking so confoundedly. Mabel, indeed, could take care of herself, as I have said; and she might be safely trusted to keep Robson in his place. But then she couldn't keep the tongues of the gossips in their places. And the people of Bigham were about the most awful collection of gossips in all suburban London. I made up my mind that I should have to do something to save Mabel from becoming the victim of a Bigham scandal.

Now, of course, it was easy enough to make up my mind I should have to do something. But it was extremely difficult to settle what that something should be. You see, the matter was delicate. I couldn't talk to Mabel about it, and to attempt to expostulate with a caddish-minded fellow like Robson would have been worse than useless. He was incapable of comprehending any but the lowest motives; and I know that he would have taken it into his carroty head that I was simply doing it from jealousy, or something absurd of the kind. While I was still puzzling over the matter, a certain line of action was unexpectedly forced upon me by Robson himself.

He happened to come into the club one evening and to find me the sole occupant of the smoking-room. I knew that he had just been playing a match with Mabel, and the fact annoyed me. I acknowledged the Scotchman's—hang him, the Scotsman's—presence with the most chilling of chilling nods. But he was evidently disposed to be chatty, and my coldness didn't put him off. Drawing up his chair close to mine, he lit his pipe and began to talk.

"I've just had sech a gran' match wi' Miss Mabel," he said. He could talk English well enough, but he liked to air his confounded kailyard—especially when he was disposed to be annoying.

"You seem to have a great many gran' matches wi' Miss Mabel," I replied, with cutting sarcasm.

Sandy laughed.

"True, mon," he admitted. "And so, for the matter o' thot, do you yoursel."

"Perhaps," I said, frigidly.

He puffed his pipe violently for several minutes, then he exclaimed, with some suddenness:

"Look here, mon; dinna ye think it's time that you an' I should come to some understannin'?"

"Some understannin'," I said. "About what, pray? I don't follow you. Be good enough to explain."

"Tut, tut, mon! Ye ken weel enough. About Miss Mabel, forshure."

"And what sort of understanding do you propose to arrive at in reference to that young lady?" I inquired, with dignity.

"Jest this, mon. Which of us twa is to hae the preevilege?"

"What preevilege?" I demanded.

"Hoots, mon, dinna ye ken? The preevilege of getting engaged to Miss Mabel. It must be ain or ither of us. It canna be baith."

"What reason have you for supposing that the young lady wishes it to be either of us?" I inquired. "Isn't the assumption, to say the least of it, premature?"

"Tut, mon, dinna gae pretennin'! You ken, as weel as I do, it's jest this way. Miss Mabel's greatly attached to us baith. But she canna mak up her mind between us. When I'm wi' her, it's me; and when you're wi' her, it's you. And sae lang as we're baith constantly wi' her she'll go on sheelly-shallyin, sheelly-shallyin, and won't jest say 'aye' to neither of us. And then, maybe, in the end, she'll tak up wi' some third fellow and marry him, if ainly to save hersel the trooble o' choosin' between us. Nae! There's but ane thing to be done. Either you or I mun withdraw in favour of the ither."

"And do you propose, may I ask, that I shall be the one to withdraw?" I queried, with an ironical laugh.

"Nae, mon, nothing o' the kind. I propose that we settle it fairly and honourably. Look here, mon, I've a suggestion to mak to you. You'll be rememberin' that you played me a match not long ago for five pun', and that you had a' the worst o' the loock, and were na' satisfied wi' the twa oop beatin' I giv' ye? And you said you'd tak me on again, you'll be recollectin', and turn the tables? Varra weel. The noo 's your chance. Play me a retur-r-r-n match to-morrow. And let the stakes be—Miss Mabel."

"Play you for Mabel?" I ejaculated, fairly staggered by this astounding proposal. "The suggestion is preposterous. It is an insult to the lady."

"Not at a', mon; not at a'. I dinna mean, of course, that we'll treat the lassie as tho' she were jest a few goff balls or a bank-note, to change hands, so to speak, wi'out her consent. And forshure, 'twadna be much use gin we did; for Miss Mabel has mighty strong opeenions of her own. But I'd pit it to ye this way. We'd play for a clear field wi' the lassie—the loser to withdraw for, say, twa month, and to leave the winner in undisputed possession. That 'nd give either the ain or the ither of us a fair chance to improve his poseetion. And gin he didna do it wi'in the time named, there wouldna then be ony hindrance to his rival re-enterin' the lists. What say ye to thot, mon?"

"I—I—still say it's a most extraordinary proposal. I—I—must think about it."

"Hoots, mon," said Sandy, provokingly. "Ye dinna seem varra eager to play me. You're afraid, I'm thinking."

Now no man likes to be told that he's afraid, least of all by a carroty cad of a Caledonian. And you may be sure I was up in my stirrups at once.

"If I was afraid of you, Sandy Robson," I said, "I'd be ashamed ever to look at my face in the glass again."

"Then you'll play me, and for the stakes named?" retorted the Scot, eagerly.

"I will."

I spoke unhesitatingly, in the heat and impulse of the moment.

"Done wi' you," cried Sandy, in a tone of ill-suppressed exultation. "Shak' hands on 't, mon!"

We shook hands solemnly, and the bargain was sealed. I saw from Robson's expression that he thought he had entrapped me into an ordeal in which he was certain of the advantage. Perhaps I had done foolishly in letting myself be thus entrapped. But it was now too late to back out. I set my teeth, and vowed in my soul that I would down this canny Scot, or die in the attempt.

Our match was fixed to begin at 6.30 next evening, when we should both be back from business. As it was mid-June at the time, there would be plenty of daylight for the eighteen holes. We came down by the same train from London Bridge, but, as luck would have it, on that momentous day the train was late. Consequently, it was close on seven o'clock before we drove off from the first tee.

That was a tremendous match. We both played as if our lives hung upon the issue. The first three holes were halved; Robson took the fourth; we halved the fifth and sixth; at the seventh, my antagonist mercifully found the pond with his approach, thus losing his ball and the hole; the eighth was halved; the ninth Robson secured by a flukey putt, leaving himself one up at the turn; I took the tenth, Robson getting into the bunker, and we were square again; the eleventh was halved; at the twelfth I unfortunately sliced my drive into the vulcanite manufactory—an accident which, of course, cost me the hole; we halved the thirteenth and fourteenth, Robson thus retaining his lead of one; but at the gravel pits—No 15—he providentially topped his drive, and got into a ditch, which it took him two to play out of. I was down in four—a fine performance—and we were square once again.

On the tee of the sixteenth, whom should we come across—by the strangest coincidence—but Mabel herself. She had been out, she told us, for a few holes' solitary practice; but she had by that time had enough of it, and the light, too, was beginning to fail, so she was just going off home. She was in no hurry, however, and if we would allow her, she should like to stroll on with us and see us finish our match.

"You two ought to play pretty level," she said. "How do you stand now?"

"I told her we were all even."

"'Umph,' she remarked, lightly. "Very exciting." Ah, Mabel! Thou little knewest how exciting, or how closely thine own fortunes were bound up with the issue of those three last holes! My heart was beating fast; my throat was dry; but in me burned a fierce determination—rendered all the fiercer by Mabel's inspiring presence—to wrest victory from the red-headed Scot at any cost. I looked at him; our eyes met. I saw that he, too, was full of desperate resolve. Then we addressed ourselves again to the mortal struggle.

At that sixteenth I had cruel luck. My ball struck a flint, which some idiot had thrown upon the green, and swerved off into the rushes on the right. Robson, who made no mistake, took the hole. But at the seventeenth I was avenged, holing a mashie approach in marvellous style, and thus getting down in front of Robson, whose ball was dead. His pink face turned white with rage when my ball trickled in. But he said nothing. Probably he could not trust himself to speak to the point, in a lady's hearing.

The state of the match was now positively syncopating—all evens and one to play. . . . We halved that last hole and the match! Mabel clapped her hands.

"What a splendid finish!" she cried. "What shall you do? Shall you play it off?"

I looked at Sandy; Sandy looked at me. Then he said, in a voice of fierce resolve:

"The leeght's gettin' varra indifferent. But I'm ready to gae on till the ain or the ither of us wins a hole!"

"So am I," I said, setting my teeth. And we marched to the first tee.

The nineteenth and twentieth holes of the match were halved. We came to the twenty-first—the third on the course, and the longest and deadliest in Surrey. The light was now so indifferent that there was scarcely any of it left, and the stars were beginning to twinkle against the faint blue of the summer sky. When we neared the green—having had the greatest difficulty in following our balls—Mabel ran forward and marked the hole to us. At forty yards we could just see her dark figure, and we aimed for it with mashie shots. Then we hurried on to the green ourselves, eager to see where our balls were, for they were lying like, and everything would depend upon their respective positions for the putt. One ball was dead, the other thirty yards away, on the edge of the scrub. Now, I was playing with a Silvertown, and Sandy with an Eclipse. I stooped in fearful anxiety to examine the dead ball. Joy of joys! Ineffable, unmeasurable bliss! It was the Silvertown.

Sandy made a desperate effort to hole that long putt. He failed. I put my ball down, and won the match, and Mabel! . . .

I escorted my prize home that night. My heart was beating fast and furiously; I was wondering whether I could summon up courage to tell her the truth—for what stakes Robson and I had been playing—when she said, with some suddenness:

"I have two confessions to make to you. One is this. I—I—happened to be coming from the professional's shop last evening, where I had been to leave a brassie, and the windows of the smoking room were open, and you were talking very loud, and—and—I overheard your conversation."

"Then—then—you know what Robson and I were playing for?" I gasped in astonishment. "And—and—are you satisfied with the result?" I ventured to ask, with eager anxiety.

"You had better first hear my other confession. Mr. Robson would have won the match; only—only—on that last green, when—when—it was too dark for me to be seen, I kicked his ball away into the scrub, and stopped yours with my foot on the edge of the hole."

MUSIC.

THE COMING OPERA SEASON.

I HAVE, from time to time during the past few months, given the principal details as to the new works under consideration and the engagements (as they have been settled) for the coming opera season at Covent Garden. The management, however, have now issued their preliminary prospectus to the subscribers, of whom, by the way, there is a strong journalistic contingent, responsible for four (and I think five) private boxes, besides some stalls. Although, therefore, most of the facts will be familiar to readers of TRUTH, it will now be convenient to give a précis. The season which Mr. Grau will direct, Mr. Neil Forsyth again resuming the duties of acting-manager, which he discharges so courteously and efficiently, will open on May 9, and will extend into July. There will this year, of course, be no "command" night, although Royalty will be frequently in evidence at the opera. Many of the old artists will return, a fact which, to a certain extent, is a source of weakness, for the average prima donna is a firm believer in the axiom that the voice, like wine, becomes more valuable with age. Also although the name of Mme. Melba is mentioned, I believe that her contract has not yet definitely been signed. But Mme. Calvé will return and will give that which the Americans have irreverently referred to as her "vaudeville" impersonation of Marguerite, likewise also singing Ophelia and in Massenet's "Sapho." Mr. Schulz-Curtius has arranged for the re-appearance of Mme. Ella Russell, and among the other artists of past seasons engaged are Mmes. Eames, Engle, Brema, De Lussan, Meisslinger, and Ternina, together, possibly, with Mme. Nordica, although that contract also has not definitely been concluded. The new comers are mostly connected with the proposed Wagnerian Cycle, and no effort seems to have been made to secure the new light soprano, whom, like the tenor who was to succeed Giuglini and Mario, it was once the constant aim of the impresario to discover. Among the debutantes will, however, be Frau Gadsky, the German-American Wagnerian singer; Mme. Von Artner, and Mme. Héglon, of the Paris Grand Opéra, the last being specially engaged to play Anna Bolena in Dr. Saint-Saëns' first opera "Henry VIII," a part created by Mme. Richard, at the original performance of the work in Paris, on March 5, 1883. The tenors will be MM. Jean de Reszke, who will play Siegfried in "Götterdämmerung" (as well, possibly, as in "Siegfried" itself), Dippel, Lieban, Bonnard, and Van Dyck, together with M. Sazela, of the Paris Opéra, and one or two others. Among the baritones and basses will be MM. Edouard de Reszke, Bispham, Renaud, Albers, Dufranc, Meux, Gillebert, Plançon, Journet, and Pringle, with, as new comers, Herr Von Rooy, the famous Wotan of Bayreuth, Herr Feinhals, of Mayence, and Herr Wittekopf, of Hamburg. At present the only novelties actually fixed are Massenet's "Sapho," and Dr. Saint-Saëns' "Henry VIII.;" but Mancinelli's "Hero and Leander" will again be placed upon the list, although the cast is still unsettled. Also we may possibly hear Spinelli's "A Basso Porto," unless the very lurid libretto prove too much for Covent Garden susceptibilities. So far as the Italian operatic productions of last year are concerned, there is not one worth transplanting here. Nor among the chief artists of the entire troupe is there a solitary Italian-born vocalist, unless, as is very probable, the Italo-American baritone, Campanari, be added to the company. The pernicious tremolo seems entirely to have dethroned the "land of song" from its once high vocal position.

THE GREATEST OF ALL PIANOFORTES. — THE STEINWAY PIANOFORTES. New York and London

One of the principal events of the coming season, at any rate from the point of view of Wagner enthusiasts, will be the two Cycles of "Der Ring des Nibelungen," to be performed under something like Bayreuth conditions. This year there is no Bayreuth festival, and, accordingly, it is thought possible that many of the wealthy Americans and others who spend their money so freely at the Bavarian mountain theatre will prefer to come to London, the more especially as the performances arranged for by Mr. Schulz Curtius, will be under the direct sanction of Frau Cosima Wagner, and in association with many of the Bayreuth people. Of course, the performances will be given in German, and this time they will be without "cuts," so that the music will be heard in all the severity of its relentless length. At Bayreuth there is an hour's break between each act, when the German audiences, who have dined in the middle of the day, refresh themselves with lager beer and other beverages until the trumpet sounds some of the Nibelungen themes to recall them back to the theatre, the performances closing before supper time. The audiences of the Royal Opera, however, can hardly be expected to wander about the purlieus of Covent Garden Market on a June night, waiting for the vocalists to recover their voices. Accordingly, there will be only one long break, namely, between half-past six and eight, when people will have an opportunity of dining. The Strand restaurants ought, therefore, to subsidise the German performances pretty largely. It is apparently hoped by the projectors of this scheme that the aristocracy will be willing to sacrifice the summer afternoon's sunshine in order to assemble in the Covent Garden Opera House at five o'clock to indulge in a gorge of Wagner until eleven. I, however, venture to predict that a considerable portion, at any rate of the lady subscribers to the Royal Opera, will take the liberty of coming in after the first act, namely, at eight o'clock. The new arrangement will, for one reason, be appreciated by the gallery folk, as the performances will be over about eleven, so that they will be able to catch their last omnibuses and trains. So far as the subscribers of the Royal Opera are concerned, they would probably prefer that the performances should run on till one o'clock in the morning. Or, in the alternative, we may this season see invitations issued for "five o'clock" tea in an opera box.

There will be no other opera season this summer. The Italian papers, it is true, state that agents are engaging artists in Milan for a rival opera season. But this rumour is a hardy annual, and a self-evident absurdity. Without the support of the subscribers, Covent Garden itself could not remain open a month. While the present generous conditions are observed at Covent Garden, no rival subscription list is possible. Moreover, no theatre is available. Even the English operatic scheme projected at Drury Lane at Easter has been postponed, as a revival of "White Heather" is rightly thought likely to be more profitable. The new Her Majesty's has been found unsuitable for opera, and if a complete company comprising a rejuvenated Titiens, Nilsson, Jenny Lind, Alboni, Mario, Tamburini, and Lablache were available to-morrow morning, the richest city in the world could not provide them with a suitable opera house, at any rate until the Opera Syndicate have become tired of Covent Garden. A rival opera scheme is, therefore, sheer nonsense. An autumn season is, however, quite on the cards.

It is reported in the papers that the Bishop of Newcastle, N.S.W., and the Bishop of North Queensland, recently took part in a service at the Church Army's City Church, St. Mary-at-Hill, and that afterwards the Bishops were present "at the usual supper to fifty starving men." I wonder whether those fifty starving men were candidates for the post of organist at this place of worship. It will be recollected that three weeks ago I published the list of requirements for an organist at St. Mary-at Hill, the fortunate incumbent of the post being required to take part on Sundays at choral celebration at 9 a.m., Sunday school 11 and 3, sacred concert 6, lantern choral even-song at 7, and instruction service 8 to 9, besides daily organ recitals, practices and performances of a small orchestra, a choir, and a brass band. It was frankly stated that only "three hours a day" were free "for giving lessons, rest, or recreation," the remaining time of the organist, lest doubtless Satan might find mischief still for idle hands to do, being filled up in "helping the officer in charge of the City Samaritan Office and finding work for the destitute." For these multifarious duties the munificent salary was offered of £52 a year, with lodging free, but bedroom to be "shared with an evangelist."

The Rev. W. Carlile, Rector of St. Mary-at-Hill, has now issued an explanation of this delightful circular. In my opinion, it makes matters no better. The reverend gentleman explains that the hours of "our Samaritan" office are "only from nine to five," while "three hours are allowed out of this for pupils, and one hour for dinner, making a working day of four hours for five days a week." He adds: "Sunday duty amounts to six hours, making, with two hours for practice, twenty-eight hours for twenty shillings, or 8½d. per hour." Mr. Carlile manifestly thinks this a royal wage, to say nothing of the privilege of abstaining from alcohol and tobacco and sharing a bedroom with an "evangelist." I regret I do not agree with him. Even the best of charities should, I think, be innocent of sweating. Indeed, nothing, I should imagine, could better exemplify the need of an Organists' Trade-Union, a duty which the Royal College of Organists or the Incorporated Society of Musicians might usefully have taken up. Many a British artisan would turn up his nose at "8½d. per hour," particularly as a great portion of this is Sunday labour. What, then, can be thought of such a fee for a highly and expensively trained musician? The Rev. Mr. Carlile, however, seems to be personally aggrieved at the criticisms which have been passed upon the adequacy of the salary. He declares:—

> I maintain that, though the pay is small, it is fair and sufficient for a young beginner, while the accusation of sweating is altogether unfair, and particularly so while I have had numerous applications to do most of the work for less than half of what I offered.

All I need add is that if the reverend gentleman's facts are correct, there is all the more need of an Organists' Trades-Union. The plea that others are ready to do the work,

---

NOW RUNNING daily, 9 till 5.—HAMPTON & SONS' (Ltd.) GREAT INAUGURAL SALE. Reductions in all departments varying from 25 to 75 per cent. Special stocks of Antique Furniture, Oriental Carpets and Screens, Silk Damasks and Brocades, all at clearance prices. See detailed catalogue sent free.—Pall Mall East, S.W.

after a fashion (a "young beginner's" fashion) at a lower price is a favourite argument of the "sweater." It is inadmissible at St. Mary-at-Hill, which is a celebrated musical church, and it is certainly not the place for a young beginner. Its services are rightly attractive, and they are frequently attended by 800 or 1,000 people. If it be a fact that the Rector has received numerous offers to do the work at fourpence farthing per hour, it only furnishes an additional reason why parents should avoid music or, at any rate, organ music, as a profession for the young. Barrel-organ music would pay a good deal better.

Two or three weeks ago I guilelessly printed a paragraph concerning the petition which was being signed in the hope of securing a Civil List pension for the widow of the distinguished organist, Mr. W. T. Best, of Liverpool. Something was said about the Corporation of Liverpool, who merely gave Mrs. Best £160, the balance of her husband's salary for the rest of the year. In reply, I had a letter from an Alderman of Liverpool, who—as it seemed to me very pertinently—pointed out that the Corporation had no power under their Act of Parliament to grant pensions to widows of persons in their employ. Upon this I have now received from Mr. J. C. Sotherland, of Liverpool, a species of volume of ten folio sheets, each 13 in. by 16 in. and weighing an ounce or so short of half a pound avoirdupois. He modestly suggests that if the document is too long (which it most certainly is) it should be cut in half and published in two detachments. As, however, this would imply my devoting to the communication something like three pages of TRUTH, I may perhaps—I hope without discourtesy—be excused from accepting the suggestion. I can assure my readers, however, that they miss much owing to this gentleman's redundancy. I will merely quote the following commendably brief sentence (it all runs on without break) as an example of the vigor and thoroughness of his style:—

> No one can possibly feel aggrieved with you for printing grossly incorrect statements when you, as in this instance, received your information direct from a source usually spoken of as the Fountain Head, the misfortune being that in this case the Fountain Head was a singularly muddled one, so muddled that one feels justified, perfectly justified, in expressing a sense of not only keen annoyance but downright indignation that an individual so muddled, confused, and ignorant, should have the rashness, the impudence, to send you misleading, grossly incorrect, and preposterous rubbish, which he has caused you to circulate through the medium of your world widely-read columns; and I again repeat, that the concocter of this trash owes you, and not only you, sir, but your readers, and particularly your musical readers, an apology, and an ample one, for the misleading and grossly incorrect statements which, through his presumptuous ignorance, have appeared in your columns.

I, however, take the liberty of summarising Mr. Sotherland's letter. Mr. Best's salary, he says, was £375, and not £400 a year, the balance being contributed to the superannuation fund. Consequently, on his retirement, not £200 but £240 5s. per annum was paid him as pension for the rest of his life as an absolute right. The £160 granted to Mrs. Best was the balance of her husband's pension for the rest of the year. Mr. Sotherland admits that the Corporation have no power to give Mrs. Best a pension, but he seems to indicate that the citizens of Liverpool would condone any little arrangement with the auditors.

Mr. Sotherland, however, is able to put forward very cogent reasons, which most of us will cordially endorse, for a favourable consideration on the part of Mr. Balfour of the petition for a Civil List pension to Mrs. Best. Best left a little money, which would amply keep the widow herself. But, unfortunately, not only has she an unmarried daughter, but also a son, who, when in a merchant's office in South America, was stricken with an almost fatal attack of typhoid fever, which left him with a mind unhinged and permanently disordered, necessitating his detention in a private asylum. Best's Civil List pension of £100 a year was devoted by him to the keep of this young fellow in an asylum. Now, however, for economy's sake, young Mr. Best has been removed to Dr. Stanley Gill's institution at the reduced cost of £70 or £80 a year, which comes out of the widow's slenderly-lined pocket. As Mrs. Best is now seventy, it is not likely that she will long enjoy any pension that Mr. Balfour may see right to award her. But the case, I venture to think, is at least as deserving as those of widows of other musicians (two of them certainly with near relations in very comfortable circumstances) who within the past few years have received Civil List pensions, although by no means in the same pecuniary straits. This is the gist of Mr. Sotherland's communication—a weighty affair in more sense of the term than one.

We are, it seems, this summer again to have an imported foreign band at the Imperial Institute. According to Ricordi's paper, the Gazzetta Musicale of Milan, an Italian orchestra, conducted by Signor Leandro Campanari, has been engaged, thanks to the influence of Signor Randegger, conductor of the Norwich Festivals. Whether we are also indebted to Signor Randegger for the replacement of British novelties at the Norwich Festivals by the masterpieces of Mancinelli and Bottesini, I am unaware. But Signor Randegger has been for many years past in the well-earned enjoyment of a large income from British purses, so that, if the Gazzetta Musicale is right, he should, I think, in common gratitude, have reserved his efforts at the Imperial Institute for British orchestras. As to the conduct of the authorities of the Imperial Institute, which was founded out of British and not by Italian money, something more may be said hereafter.

I beg to extend my condoleences to Mme. Patti, who last week became a widow. The death of M. Nicolini was, of course, by no means unexpected. He had, indeed, during the past few months absolutely wasted away, according to some doctors, of a malignant growth; according to others, of a liver complaint. At any rate, his state was hopeless, and, after a sojourn at a Welsh seaside resort, he went to Pau, where last week he died, and was interred in the pretty cemetery there. Mme. Patti meanwhile had refused nearly all professional engagements, and, indeed, the only date at present fixed for her is, I believe, that in June, at which she will sing on the Handel Orchestra of the Crystal Palace. She will not yet return to Craig-y-Nos, which I should not be surprised to hear is open to be disposed of to a suitable purchaser.

The Crystal Palace directors have issued for their new season of Saturday concerts a prospectus which contains barely a single novelty. Indeed, as the performances will be given between March and May, a time of the year when concerts are taking place in London proper at the rate of forty or fifty a week, novelties at Sydenham would probably pass more or less without notice. Accordingly the directors propose to devote themselves to certain favourite and, in some cases, hackneyed works of the ordinary repertory mainly, no doubt, in order to attract the amateurs of the locality. They will, of course, also rely upon the drawing powers of several eminent artists, amongst others, Dr. Joachim, Mr. Santley, Mr. Borwick, Mr. Lamond, Mme. Russell, Lady Halle, and M. Gabrilowitsch. Whether ordinary programmes of favourite works, but without novelties, will attract the residents of Sydenham is an experiment which well deserves to be tried.

The music of the week has been of comparatively little importance. English music, as exemplified by Mr. Cowen's "Scandinavian" symphony, drew, as usual, only a small audience to the Queen's Hall Orchestral Concert on Saturday, when M. Rivarde made his reappearance, and played Mendelssohn's violin concerto. At the Popular Concert on Saturday, Lady Halle led a fine interpretation of Schubert's Quintet in C, while, on Monday, the programme was devoted exclusively to Beethoven. M. de Greef, a Belgian pianist who is better in lighter pieces than in Beethoven, has given another recital; while Herr Stradal, in association with Mr. Armbruster, gave us on Monday a hearing for pianoforte duets of Liszt's "Dante" and "Faust" symphonies.

MORTLOCK'S (Oxford-st.), Estd. A.D. 1746.—The collection of China and Glass now on view in their Galleries fully maintains the high reputation and pre-eminence enjoyed by "MORTLOCK'S" for the last century and a half, and well repays a visit of inspection.

LETTERS ON BOOKS.

MY DEAR MR. WYNDHAM,—Mr. Crowest's interesting life of "Verdi" (1) is another illustration of the vanity of contemporary criticism of a genius, and of the fallibility of the only Pope left to us—the journalist's "we." It is nothing short of ludicrous to read the savage and silly criticisms of the Times and of the Athenæum upon operas of Verdi's which are allowed to-day by all men and journals to be masterpieces. The truth is the rays of a fixed star, which shines by its own light and for ever, take years to reach us, because of its being so far above and beyond our system; whereas a meteor, being within our system and our range, challenges every eye for a moment; but it is a brief moment:—

> Brief as the lightning in the collied night,
> That ere a man hath power to say, "Behold!"
> The jaws of darkness do devour it up.

It was fortunate for Verdi that he had not to indemnify for their sufferings all the critics of these early days who pronounced his music atrocious, as he had to indemnify the audacious Aristarchus of the following delightful story:—

> When the "Aida" was produced at Milan in 1872, a certain person named Bertoni went from a neighbouring village to hear it—his outing, including supper, cost him fifteen francs ninety centimes. He happened not to like the opera. However, the next day, on finding it praised on all sides, he resolved to give it another trial. Accordingly, when it was again performed he went for a second time to hear it, spent twenty francs, and was more dissatisfied than ever. Full of anger, he wrote to Verdi, telling him that the opera was a failure, doomed to early oblivion, and asking for the return of thirty-five francs ninety centimes, which sum he alleged he had wasted on going to hear it! Verdi was not offended. He sided with the aggrieved one. Taking a pen in hand, he authorised his publisher to send Signor Bertoni thirty-one francs fifty centimes, adding, "It is not quite as much as the gentleman demands, but I think he could have had his supper at home!"

Apropos of Verdi and Press criticisms of his work, it is at once interesting and instructive to contrast our own views of contemporary English dramatists with those of so competent and sympathetic a foreigner as M. Augustin Filon. His "English Stage" (2), translated from the French by Mr. Frederick White, and introduced to us by Mr. Henry Arthur Jones in an able but acrid preface, gives probably an approximate estimate of the place dramatists of our day will hold with "Prince Posterity." Of that one of them who is most likely to survive and attract the notice of his Highness—Tennyson—M. Augustin Filon has a far higher opinion as a dramatist than the poet's own countrymen have conceded to him. Of "Becket," indeed, and of "The Falcon" and "The Cup," M. Filon does not think as highly as their success upon the London stage seemed to place them in English judgment, but to "Queen Mary" and to "Harold" he gives almost Shakesperian rank. By the way, it is odd to find M. Filon discovering in "The Falcon" a likeness to a tale told by Boccaccio. "It is like a tale by Boccaccio, but by a Boccaccio who is ingenuous and pure." In the first place, a large number of Boccaccio's tales are ingenuous and pure, and, in the second place, "The Falcon" is a tale told by Boccaccio—Fifth Day: Novel IX.—which Tennyson simply dramatised. Another translation from the French may appropriately be mentioned while on the subject of the English stage, M. Waliszewski's most interesting biography of "Peter the Great" (3) which has just appeared in a second—one volume—edition. "Jonathan Wild The Great," was a mild, moral, and magnanimous humanitarian compared with M. Waliszewski's ruffianly hero, who was simply a wild beast with brains. It is true that his biographer in one place professes to disbelieve that his hero was a were-wolf, but he thereby contradicts not only his biography generally but himself specifically:—

> I can discover nothing in Peter's case which would point to the authentic mark of a real wild beast—the greedy delight in inflicting suffering, the downright taste for blood. He shows no sign of anything of this kind; there is not even an habitual condition of sanguinary fury.

When, however, you come to Peter's murder of his son Alexis—which was in perfect keeping with his other ferocious crimes—M. Waliszewski tells you that "his inquisitorial tastes, his instincts as a despot and a merciless judge, were all excited. He thirsted for blood." It is interesting to compare the most probable account of Alexis' murder with that Mr. Irving has adopted:—

> "On the day of the Prince's death, the Tsar, accompanied by Tolstoï, went to the fortress and into one of the vaulted dungeons, furnished with gallows and all other necessary preparations for applying the knout. The unhappy wretch was brought in, and having been fastened up, he was given numerous blows with the knout, and—though I am not sure of this," says Lefort, who was in the Tsar's service—"I have been assured that his father struck the first blows. The same thing was done at ten o'clock in the morning, and towards four o'clock he was so ill-treated that he died under the lash."

Count Rabutin, the Emperor's Resident, is more definite in his assertions:—

> Peter struck his son, and, as he did not know how to use the knout, he struck so hard that the poor wretch fell swooning to the ground, and the ministers thought he was dead.

But Alexis had only fainted, and when he had recovered Peter said angrily, as he moved away, "The devil will not take him yet!" In fact, the "journal" of the St. Petersburg garrison leaves little doubt that the wretched Alexis was knouted to death in the presence, if not by the hands, of his own father:—

> On June 14 a special torture-chamber was arranged in the Troubetzkoï bastion, in a casemate close to the dungeon in which, on that same day, the Tsarevitch had been shut up. On the 19th two visits were paid to this chamber, the first from noon to one o'clock, and the second from six to nine o'clock in the evening. The following day a third visit was paid, from eight to eleven, and on the 24th, two more, one from ten o'clock in the morning till noon, and the other from six till ten o'clock at night. On the 26th there was yet another visit, in the Tsar's presence, from eight o'clock in the morning till eleven; and that same day, at six o'clock in the evening, the Tsarevitch died.

To call Peter a wild beast is grossly unfair—to wild beasts. "There is no wild beast in the world," says Julian the Apostate, "so much to be feared by man as man." Apropos of the murder of Princes and of the diabolical cruelty of man, you will find in a truly delightful book of travel, Mrs. Bishop's (Miss Bird) "Korea and Her Neighbours" (4), a revolting account of the murder of the Queen of Korea—a singularly able and winning woman—by the Japanese in 1895. After she was stabbed, but probably before she was dead, kerosene was poured over her body, and fired!—Believe me, my dear Mr. Wyndham, ever yours very sincerely,

DESMOND B. O'BRIEN.

(1) "Verdi. Man and Musician." His Biography, with Especial Reference to his English Experiences. By Frederick J. Crowest. (London: John Milne. Price 7s. 6d.)

(2) "The English Stage." Being an Account of the Victorian Drama. By Augustin Filon. Translated from the French by Frederick White. With an Introduction by Henry Arthur Jones. (London: John Milne. Price 7s. 6d.)

(3) "Peter the Great." By K. Waliszewski. Translated from the French by Lady Mary Loyd. With a Portrait. (London: William Heinemann. Price 6s.)

(4) "Korea and Her Neighbours." A Narrative of Travel, with an Account of the Recent Vicissitudes and Present Position of the Country. By Mrs. Bishop (Isabella L. Bird). With a Preface by Sir Walter C. Hillier, K.C.M.G. With Maps and Illustrations. Two vols. (London: John Murray. Price 24s.)

GIRLS' GOSSIP.

DEAREST AMY,—Miss Lily Chetwynd had a very wet day for her wedding, but, after all, the weather really makes very little difference. Brides have not time to think of such trifles. She was the gentlest, sweetest, quietest bride I have ever seen. There was absolutely not one scrap of self-consciousness about her as she quietly moved up the aisle, in her lovely lace gown and her jewels, which seemed to have walked straight out of an "Arabian Nights" story. Emeralds and diamonds! Emeralds and diamonds! Emeralds and diamonds! Even the sound is pretty, is it not? And it is said that the gifts of jewellery given her by her bridegroom have been valued at £100,000. His presents numbered fifty-seven, so you may imagine how devoted he is. "Lily, from Ux," occurred again and again, and again and again among the cards denoting the givers of the magnificent wedding presents. Those she wore on her wedding day were a pearl dog-collar round her slight waist, fastened with a diamond and emerald clasp, a long chain of diamonds passed two or three times round her neck, supporting a magnificent emerald and diamond pendant, and a pearl necklace with crossing ends.

But it was her delicious dress that fairly captivated me. Instead of the usual stiff and trying white satin, she wore the softest and most exquisite Brussels lace, arranged in flounces, all softly falling, under the long Court train, which was embroidered in diamonds, and hemmed with orange blossoms. Her veil was of similar filmy lace, disposed over a tiara made of orange blossoms, and she carried in her hand a few sprays of Annunciation lilies. I hope she has been photographed, for she made a most delicious picture.

Her train was held by two pretty boys in white satin Georgian suits. After these came two tiny bridesmaids all in white and turquoise blue, and these were followed by ten grown-up bridesmaids. Their dresses were very pretty, white satin, girdled with turquoise blue, and with folds to match round the neck. The ceremony, including an address delivered in the most pedagogic voice I ever heard, occupied exactly eight minutes. It must have been about the shortest on record. There was no music, the Pope not approving of the marriage, as the bridegroom is a Protestant.

The congregation was one of the most brilliant ever assembled on similar occasions. The bride's mother wore a princess dress of palest mauve cloth, almost lavender, the cut of which showed off her lovely little figure to perfection. A band of soft rose-pink about the neck brought it into harmony with the toque of pale mauve and bright pink, which exactly suited the wearer's inimitable colouring.

The dress, in fact, was far the smartest we have seen for ever so long. There were capes that we had to covet, unwilling as we were to yield to anything so naughty. One was sable of the darkest and deepest, with chinchilla let into it in deep points and continued up the collar, which was lined with sable. Another was sable, with a deep frill of the same fur, and a third consisted of russet velvet, with rows of grey fur placed horizontally upon it. A sable toque was another delicious item, being turned up with brown and white feathers, and raised, though very slightly, at one side with Russian violets. Mrs. Arthur Paget's emerald green coat was a fine bit of colour, and was worn by probably the only woman in the church who could have ventured upon it with impunity. Good complexions are common enough, but perfect ones are not so usual. Most of the gowns were turned back with soft whiteness in the form of chiffon or lace, fastened with multitudinous diamond ornaments. Several of the toques were all a mass of bright steel at one side, some of them on both sides. Too much glitter, Amy, too much glitter! Grey was, however, the prevailing colour, as it has been now for a considerable time, as I think I remarked last week.

The dresses in "Trelawny of the 'Wells'" at the Court Theatre are quite too fearfully awful. Can it be possible that Englishwomen ever wore such huge and hideous crinolines? I admired the perfect unconsciousness of the actresses of anything unusual in their garments as they whisked their immense hoops about. Even the servant girl had a crinoline and a chignon, the former allowing the audience distinctly to perceive the dilapidated condition of her shoes and stockings. But even at their best, white stockings looked frightful, and as to the boots with elastic sides, they seemed a remarkably hideous style of footgear. The only tolerable dress was the rose-coloured silk worn by Miss Irene Vanbrugh in the third act, when she is sampling domestic life in Cavendish-square. The arrangement of the wall papers and the pictures on the walls all breathed of a period when art was asleep, and the colours of the dresses were eloquent on the same theme. Miss Pattie Browne wore a most excruciating blue in the first act, and Miss Eva Williams a bright arsenic green in the third. The trimmings of the latter were beyond expression senseless and irrelevant, just as trimmings were wont to be in the Sixties, as depicted by John Leech.

Oh, Amy! If you could only see the chignons at the Court! Huge mounds of hair are gathered into nets of the most excruciating colours—bright green, aniline blue, and a sort of russet, which, though perfectly abominable, was the least offensive of them all. Miss Hilda Spong, who managed to look very pretty in spite of everything, wears a most wonderful bonnet in the last act—a huge coal-scuttle, with a peak that rises high in the air. Her green gloves were atrocious, and some one else wore bright blue gloves, and some one else lilac. There was really so much to notice that I could go on enumerating the eccentricities of costume, but how thankful we ought to be that we do not live in such a barbarous sartorial period! It is very amusing to see it reproduced in accurate detail before our eyes on graceful and pretty women. The pit roared when the wearers of crinoline moved about in their apparently unmanageable rotundities, and every time a fresh specimen of 1860 dress entered, not a word could be heard for the laughter of the gods and pittites.

We went on the second night, when Society mustered strongly, partly to see the play and partly to see the Earl of Rosslyn, who plays a small part in it. By the way, dear, he wore a new sort of coat in the last act, when he comes in just after a journey. It was grey, edged all round with black braid, and the pockets were also bound with similar braid. I wonder if this is a new fashion, or if it, too, is a reminiscence of the Sixties?

Our own fashions will, doubtless, look ridiculous a few years hence, but they cannot possibly compete with crinolines and chignons in the direction of the ludicrous. It was almost refreshing to visit the Globe and see the very latest fashions of the present day as worn by the actresses in the pretty play, "A Bachelor's Romance." Miss May Harvey wears gowns that breathe of Paris. One of these is a dinner-gown in yellow brocade, with long sprays of apricot roses in relief, with their green leaves, all running downwards from the slender waist. On the front of the bodice and on either hip a large true-lover's knot is embroidered in diamonds, the long, wavy ends straying to the edge of the skirt. The front of the bodice is arranged in the very newest way, with the line of the gown rising high on the centre of the chest, and drooping low at the sides. A trimming in the shape of two pointed leaves, all covered with lines of diamonds, finishes it in the middle. The necklace worn with this dress was one of the new ones with crossing ends, so becoming! Another evening dress worn in this act was black, with the skirt set into a yoke, thickly jetted, and the whole of the front was alight with sparkling jet. From it issued frills of black net, rising towards the back, each standing out in absolute freshness, nothing of flatness marring the effect. The bodice was all frills, and the sleeves were a network of black and white, and long enough to cover the hands. The heroine's gown in this scene is a very graceful one in white satin with a Watteau from the centre of the shoulders flowing out in a long train. The bodice was swathed about with a deep, folded belt, also in white satin, the upper line of which was bordered with half-open roses, so pretty in connection with a young girl's first dance. In the idyllic country scene the ladies wear Arcadian frocks, which in themselves almost bring the scent of the hayfields across the footlights, being greatly assisted in this matter by the marvellous improvement wrought in Mr. Fred Kerr's complexion by haymaking, early hours, and a diet of raw apples and sweet milk. The buttercups and daisies on Miss Mona K. Oram's hat seem to have jumped there straight out of the meadows, and the sweet corn-coloured gown and red poppies of Miss May Harvey are in themselves an epic of rural joys in the prime of the year. If your fiancé were not a cleric he might be interested to hear that Mr. Hare wears a double stripe down his evening trousers, a fact I only mention in order to impartially share the sartorial information with both the sexes.

The children of the "Salon," that meritorious and very successful institution which has already endowed at least two cots in London hospitals and largely contributed to the fund for supplying poor School Board children with breakfasts and dinners, were entertained by "Levana," their fairy godmother, on Saturday at the Grafton Galleries. They mustered in great force, and the beautiful rooms were soon filled with happy groups. Mr. Sellar's much-discussed pictures covered the walls, and the Ladies' Mandolin and Guitar Band supplied sweet music, entertainments going on in the large room at intervals. Mrs. Wordsworth's pupils skirt danced to perfection, and gave examples of the half-forgotten old-world minuet. Little Miss Lina Verdi recited "A Little Bit of String," and lightly whirled in a mazy dance afterwards. A small boy played extremely well on the piano, and a tiny girl very cleverly recited. Miss Aida Jenoure sang "The Owl and The Pussy" with much animation, and the nursery songs given by Mr. Isham were a much appreciated novelty. There was conjuring, too, and tea downstairs in the beautiful banqueting hall was by no means the least pleasing item in a capital programme.

Obesity.—The happy knack of forming a symmetrical contour and a perfect foundation for a well-setting gown is the especial art of Mesdames Sykes, Josephine, & Co., Anatomical Corsetières, 280, Regent-street, Oxford-circus, London, W.

The Green Park Club has issued a list of dates of its forthcoming entertainments for Friday afternoons; February 4 is the next, and they recur every fortnight. We looked in at last Friday's, and found a smart crowd assembled, the members of which were congratulating themselves on the fogs having gone away. There have been several additions to the Club, including a new drawing-room in Moorish style, as well as a new writing room, both of which are reserved for the exclusive use of ladies. On the other hand, gentlemen are now permitted to be in the large French drawing-room as well as the dining-room on the first floor.

The next Carnival at Niagara is fixed for Friday, February 4, and there is to be a fancy ball at the Brighton Rink on February 18. How well these entertainments have caught on with the public. People seem never to tire of the pleasure of dressing up. It is interesting to see how one would look if Providence had arranged for one to be a gipsy, an early English Queen, a mediæval lady, or an Alsatian peasant. And I am sure a man of the ordinary, likable kind, who is not too good for human nature's daily food, is just as anxious to see how he would work out as a Chaucerian knight, a Sir Galahad, a Pope of Rome, a Greek warrior, a crusader, a roi fainéant, or a troubadour.

You will remember my telling you about the excellent Red Spider Association and the good work it is doing for poor ladies who could otherwise find no market for their work. Well, dear, a matinée musicale is to be held early in February for its benefit, at 53, Rutland-gate, by its very kind friend, Mrs. Hugh Bonham Carter. I hope it will be largely patronised, for one of its many good points is that the workers for it receive the entire value of the articles vended, less only the fraction needed to cover postage and other minute expenses. It is not always so with these benevolent undertakings, I assure you! I see that the Irish Industries Sale is to be held this year at Lansdowne House. This splendid mansion is so little known that the prospect of seeing it will prove a great draw, to the high benefit of the Sale. There is plenty going on, you see, in town, and I am fondly hoping that we are not going to have any winter. It would be too lovely. But, then the doctors say that the warm weather at this season favours influenza, which is now so rife. Our doctor advises us to take a dose of ammoniated quinine every time we go out as a preventive, and never to leave the house when hungry. This latter part of the prescription is pleasanter to follow than the former, for the ammoniated quinine is anything but agreeable to the palate. It is better than the "'Flu," though!

Christabel writes from Paris:—

I must begin with a word of warning. Pray don't be carried away with the reports in English papers that the so-called dress-improvers (?) are coming in again. They are certainly not worn here; quite the contrary, the skirts are made tighter and plainer than ever at the top—no fulness, gathers, or pleats at the back even—but they are so gored and cut so as to fall in fulness towards the base. This is the result of my inquiries at some of the first-rate houses, also of private information and observation.

This week Comtesse de Kessler gave a matinée, and entertained her friends with some charming theatricals. The pretty drawing-room stage was admirably arranged, and the pieces were well acted.

Here are a few of the pretty toilettes worn by the guests, comprising the élite of the American and English colonies, with a good sprinkling of Parisians. A very elegant costume was of pale grey velvet, made with a plain tight skirt, the bodice spangled with steel, plain sleeves with puff at the top, and toque of the same velvet, with grey feathers. A very stylish woman was in plain black velvet, the bodice pointed in front, with black satin ribbon round the waist forming the point, a little lace at the throat and small cuffs of the same; the toque-capote had a gold crown set with emeralds, from which rose three black ostrich feathers, forming a diadem in front. A muff of sable, lace, and sable tails completed this handsome costume. One lady wore black lace over white satin, with a capote to match. A very effective bodice was of black silk crêpon, with collar and revers of black satin, on which was laid some very handsome steel passementerie; the bonnet was black velvet and feathers, with steel ornament.

There was a rather pretty wedding at St. Philippe du Roule two days ago. The bride was in the orthodox white satin, with rich veil of Brussels lace and orange flowers. The bridegroom's mother wore black velvet spangled with steel, made quite plain, and bonnet to match. Her married daughter was in sapphire velvet, bordered with sable, and very splendid white lace on the bodice. Her small toque was velvet, sable, and lace. A very elegant dress was of silver-grey velvet, the skirt bordered with chinchilla The bodice had a narrow front of cerise velvet, over which fell a jabot of lace; the collar and waistband were also of cerise velvet, the sleeves tight with epaulettes bordered with chinchilla. The chinchilla toque had the crown draped with velvet, with white camellias at the side and an aigrette of mistletoe. The muff was chinchilla, lined with ermine, and a bow of cerise velvet at the side. It was rather a new shape, being smaller at the top, like a drawn bag.

Red and cerise will be much worn. In proof of which here are two blouse bodices just made by a large firm. The material of the first is red foulard, with a white pattern all over it. There is a yoke of lawn and guipure insertion, and red braid going across. The bodice below this is in small pleats to the waist, instead of the usual gathers; the sleeves have also small pleats at the top, and the fulness formed by these is drawn in again at the wrists in pleats in the form of cuffs.

The other is white taffetas, with red squares or checks. It is open V shape in front, with small black satin revers; there are folds of black satin round the neck, with a bow in front, and the V is filled in with a frilling of white chiffon. The blouse sleeves have small, pointed revers of black satin. Foulard seems rather cold at this season, but these things are prepared beforehand, and I send you them as a forecast.

Do you prefer home-made marmalade? This is a simple, but trustworthy, original recipe:—

Take as many Seville oranges as you wish (about a dozen), cut them through, then slice them as thinly as possible. Weigh the fruit, and to every pound put 3 pints of cold water; allow them to stand for 24 hours, then boil it quite slowly in a preserving pan until the chips are tender. Turn the mass into an earthen pan and allow it to stand again until next day. Now to every pound of the boiled fruit add 1 lb. of loaf-sugar. Boil it quickly for half an hour, when the chips should be quite transparent and the marmalade done. It will require frequent stirring during the last boiling.

Parmesan rings with anchovy cream make a charming savoury:—

To make the rings:—Rub 4 oz. of butter into 4 oz. of flour and 4 oz. of grated Parmesan cheese, season it with salt and a pinch of cayenne pepper, roll it out, cut it into rounds about 2 in. in diameter, and stamp out the centre with a much smaller cutter. Bake the rings a nice colour in a slow oven. Put the juice of half a lemon, a pinch of salt and pepper, and a dessert spoonful of SAHARA (TURKISH) CIGARETTES.—Messrs. W. D. & H. O. WILLS, Ltd., the sole manufacturers, invite the attention of connoisseurs to the excellence and regularity of these high-class Cigarettes.

"THE SUNNY SOUTH."—Messrs. REDFERN have designed some becoming Costumes for wear along the Riviera, and which are now on view in their Showroom. Very moderate in price. Inspection invited.—REDFERN, 26, Conduit street, London, W. essence of anchovy, into a gill of thick cream, and whip it until it is stiff. Now pile the cream in the centre of a silver dish, arrange the rings round the base, and sprinkle the top with coralline pepper.

These rice croquettes with tomato sauce form an admirable little entrée:—

Shower 2 oz of Carolina rice into half a pint of boiling stock, and allow it to simmer until the rice has absorbed all the moisture, and is quite soft. Season it with salt, pepper, a dessert spoonful of grated Parmesan cheese, and a teaspoonful of chopped parsley. Mix in the yolks of 2 eggs, and put it aside to cool Then form the mixture into barrel-shaped croquettes, roll them in bread crumbs, then in beaten egg, and again in bread crumbs. Fry them a nice colour in hot lard, drain them on paper, arrange them in a pyramid on a thin border of mashed potato, and pour good tomato sauce round it.

A nursery novelty:—

Pare six large apples, take out the cores, and put them into a stewpan, add ¼ lb. of sugar, a little cinnamon, and 2 tablespoonfuls of water. Cook them over a slow fire, stirring constantly. When thick, or like a marmalade, remove them, and allow them to stand until cold. Beat well the yolks of 4 eggs, then stir in a tablespoonful of breadcrumbs and 2 oz. of liquid butter. Mix it with the apple pulp, place all in a well-greased and ornamental mould. Set it in a slow oven. When cooked place it upon a dish. Whip the whites of the eggs to a froth, adding about a teaspoonful of rose water. With this decorate the pudding, and throw over it tiny comfits of many colours.

Haricot beans are excellent dressed in this way. They can be served as an entrée or for second course. Before cooking it is necessary to rub off the fine skin and soak them in cold water over night:—

Put half a pint of beans in a stewpan with 1 oz. of butter and sufficient cold water to cover them, stew the beans until tender, and strain in a colander. Make half a pint of white sauce, and cook five or six white mushrooms in salted water, to which must be added a small piece of butter and the juice of half a small lemon. Now make the beans hot in the sauce, add the minced mushrooms, a little cream, the yolk of an egg, and salt and pepper to taste. Serve the beans in a dish that is stuck with a border of fried croûtons, place poached eggs on the top, sprinkle each with coralline pepper, and serve at once.

Ever, dear, your loving cousin, MADGE.

DIAMONDS OR OLD SILVER
For PRESENTS.
SPINK & SON

SPOONS AND FORKS 2/11 oz. BELOW STORE PRICES.
17 & 18, Piccadilly, W.
AND AT
1 AND 2, GRACECHURCH STREET, CORNHILL, E.C. [Est. 1772.

"SANITAS EMBROCATION."
For Aches, Pains, Sprains, Strains, Bruises, Stiffness, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Rheumatism, and for Veterinary purposes.

"I have little doubt that 'Sanitas Embrocation' will come into prominent favour as a stable requisite and for various other purposes, human and veterinary."
(Prof.) WOODROFFE HILL, F.R.C.V.S.

In Bottles, 8d., 1s., and 2s. 6d. Of all Chemists, Stores, and
THE SANITAS CO., LIMITED, BETHNAL GREEN, E.

THE MANUFACTURING
GOLDSMITHS' & SILVERSMITHS' COMPANY,
Show Rooms: 112, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W. (Adjoining Stereoscopic Company.)
Supply the public direct at Manufacturers' Cash Prices, saving purchasers from 25 to 50 per cent.

Exquisitely Chased and Pierced Silver Dessert Dish, £10. 10s.

THE LARGEST and CHOICEST STOCK
OF SILVER PLATE
IN LONDON,
suitable for Public Testimonials, Wedding and Complimentary Presents.
AN INSPECTION INVITED. NEW ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE POST FREE.
Goods forwarded to the Country on approval. Special designs and estimates free.

THE ANCIENT WRITING PAPER OF THE PRIESTS.
NOTE PAPER, 5 Quires, 1s.
COURT ENVELOPES, 1s. per 100.
MOURNING ENVELOPES, 1s. 6d. per 100.
THIN, FOR FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE, 5 Quires, 1s.
MOURNING NOTE, 5 Quires, 1s. 6d
HIERATICA (Regd).
Every Sheet and Envelope Watermarked HIERATICA. Reject Imitations. Any difficulty in obtaining, send stamps to Hieratica Works, 68, Upper Thames Street, London. Samples Free. Parcels Carriage Paid.

A Feature of the Metropolis. SPIERS & POND's
CRITERION RESTAURANT, Piccadilly Circus, London, W.
EAST ROOM. Finest Cuisine, unsurpassed by the most renowned Parisian Restaurants. Luncheons, Dinners, and Suppers, à la carte and prix fixe. Viennese Band.
GRAND HALL. Musical Dinner 3/6 per head. Accompanied by the Imperial Austrian Band.
WEST ROOM. Academy Luncheon 2/6, Diner Parisien 5/-, during both of which the renowned Mandolin Quartette performs.
BUFFET & GRILL ROOM. Quick service à la carte and moderate prices. Joints in each room fresh from the Spit every half-hour.
AMERICAN BAR Service of special. American Dishes, Grills, &c.
Splendid Suites of Rooms for Military and other Dinners

"JAP" CARPETS

42/-

Size 12 ft. by 9 ft.

Other Sizes. All Colourings.

ASK FOR CATALOGUE.

ORIENTAL CARPETS

Sold at Low Prices

BY

TRELOAR & SONS

LUDGATE HILL.

ASK FOR PRICE LIST.

£10,000.

TEN THOUSAND POUNDS is the penalty payable by any of the rubber manufacturers who may supply us with materials of inferior quality for the manufacture of

DUNLOP TYRES

This tremendous penalty enables us to safeguard the public against unsatisfactory tyres. DUNLOPS are not merely made to SELL, but to RIDE; and when we have sold a tyre we follow it all over the World with our Guarantee, and interpret that Guarantee in the most liberal spirit. And it must not be forgotten that our Guarantee is worth

20s. in the £

The DUNLOP PNEUMATIC TYRE COMPANY, Ltd.
160 to 166, CLERKENWELL ROAD, E.C., LONDON;
Works: ALMA STREET, COVENTRY.
Branches: Birmingham, Wolverhampton,
Nottingham, Manchester, Glasgow, Dublin, &c.

LIFE and VIGOUR for the HAIR.

The only article which really affords nourishment to the hair and resembles the oily matter which nature provides for its preservation is

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL.

Without it the hair becomes dry and weak; it feeds the hair, removes scurf and harshness, and produces a strong and healthy growth; it is the best tonic and dressing for ladies' hair, and should always be used for children. Also sold in golden colour. Bottles, 3/6, 7/-, 10/6.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO is the finest dentifrice; removes all impurities from the teeth, imparts to them a brilliant polish, and prevents decay.

Sold by Stores and Chemists.

HAMPTON & SONS

Limited.

GREAT SALE CLOSES SATURDAY NEXT, 29th inst.

Remnants 28th & 29th.

Great Sale embraces the entire Stock of the Old English Furniture Co. at a Reduction of 25 per Cent. off the O. E. F. Co.'s plainly marked tickets, none of which have been removed.

Also the entire Stock of Oriental Carpets and Screens from the Great City Fire at Salvage Prices. Also a Spitalfields manufacturer's Stock of Rich Silk Damasks, Brocades, and other Choice Silken Furnishing Fabrics, many of which are being cleared at Less than One-Fourth of the original prices. For details of the reductions and of the extraordinary bargains in all departments

SEE SPECIAL SALE CATALOGUE, ILLUSTRATED AND PRICED, SENT FREE.

PALL MALL EAST, S.W.

MAURUS JÓKAI'S WORLD-FAMED NOVELS.

At all Libraries.

DR. DUMÁNY'S WIFE. By MAURUS JÓKAI. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. Third Edition.
"A remarkable novel. Has a dash and daring which none of our own writers can approach."—Western Morning News.

'MIDST THE WILD CARPATHIANS By MAURUS JÓKAI. 5s. Second Edition.
"This novel is like a series of pictures in tapestry. But it is very interesting tapestry, very original and varied—above all, very gorgeous."—Daily Chronicle.

MAURUS JÓKAI'S MARVELLOUS NOVELS.

UNIFORM EDITION, with FINELY ENGRAVED PORTRAIT OF AUTHOR. Crown 8vo, art linen, gilt top, 6s. each.

THE GREEN BOOK. By MAURUS JÓKAI. 6s. Sixth Edition.
"Takes rank with the great novels of the century."—Spectator.

BLACK DIAMONDS. By MAURUS JÓKAI. 6s. Third Edition.
"Maintained throughout at a high level of merit."—Times.

PRETTY MICHAL. By MAURUS JÓKAI. 6s. Third Edition.
"A spirited tale of 'Border chivalry'—a charming love story, full of genuine poetry."—Literary World.

THE LION OF JANINA. By MAURUS JÓKAI. 6s. Fourth Edition.
"It is a fascinating story. . . . a brilliant and lurid series of pictures drawn by a great master's hand."—Daily Chronicle.

London: JARROLD & SONS, 10 & 11, Warwick-lane, E.C.; and of all Booksellers.

TO INVALIDS.—A LIST of MEDICAL MEN, in all parts, receiving RESIDENT PATIENTS sent gratis, with full particulars. Schools also recommended.—Medical, &c., Association, Ltd., 8, Lancaster-place, Strand, W.C. Tel. Add., "Triform, London." Telephone No. 1,854 (Gerrard).

£20 TOBACCONISTS COMMENCING. Illd. guide (259 pgs.), 3d., 'How to open respectably £20 to £2,000." Tobacconists' Outfitting Co., Euston-rd., Ldn. Hairdressers fitted.—H. MYERS.

SERVANTS! SERVANTS!! SERVANTS!!!

FOR

THOROUGHLY RELIABLE SERVANTS

With personal characters for London or country, also foreign servants. Apply to the BELGRAVE LADIES' AGENCY,
SOLE OFFICES,
88, EBURY-STREET.

Also job servants with references taken up before recommendation can be had on the shortest notice.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

ARCHIBALD FORBES'S NEW BOOK. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, 12s.

THE LIFE OF NAPOLEON III. By ARCHIBALD FORBES.

With Photogravure Frontispiece and 36 Full-page Illustrations.

"A book not only of great interest, but of considerable historical value."—Glasgow Herald.

"Mr. Forbes has done excellent service by his intimate picture of the strange adventures, on and off the throne, of Napoleon III. Everybody is aware that the brilliant war correspondent had many opportunities of studying the Emperor at close quarters, and these pages show that he turned them to good account."—Leeds Mercury.

"In addition to being the last, this is also the greatest book given to the world by the famous war correspondent, who was a eye-witness of the most momentous scene in the life of the man whose chequered biography he has written."—Morning Leader.

"The task of writing a popular biography of this kind could not have fallen into more capable hands than those of Mr. Archibald Forbes. Partisanship is a fault that certainly will not be charged against the author of this volume."—Daily News.

"We need hardly say that the military portions of the book are first-rate. In fact, some of the passages in these are as vivid and powerful as any which the famous war correspondent has ever written. We wish for this latest book of Mr. Forbes all the success and popularity it so well deserves."—Echo.

THE NEW GOLDFIELDS. Immediately. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 16s.

THROUGH THE GOLDFIELDS OF ALASKA TO BEHRING STRAITS. By HARRY DE WINDT. With Map and 33 Full-page Illustrations.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "WITH THE RED EAGLE."

On February 3. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

A WOMAN TEMPTED HIM. By WILLIAM WESTALL, Author of "With the Red Eagle," &c.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "BEYOND THE PALE."

Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

MISS BALMAINE'S PAST. By B. M. CROKER, Author of "Diana Barrington," &c.

"An interesting and well-told story."—Glasgow Herald.

"The writer's very boldness has brought us into a region of mystery and cross-purpose as attractive as those seductive spots which old romancers always placed on the further side of some almost impassable morass. . . . A story which, despite its inherent difficulties, is distinctly amusing. . . . We give ourselves up to Mrs. Croker, who carries us on to the end in a way that makes us wish she were always as good as she is at her best."—Daily Telegraph.

M. ZOLA'S NEW BOOK. Immediately. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

PARIS. By EMILE ZOLA. Translated by Ernest Alfred Vizetelly.

This volume forms the concluding volume of a Trilogy, of which the first two volumes—"LOURDES" and "ROME"—have already been published.

Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

MORE TRAMPS ABROAD. By MARK TWAIN.

"Mr. Clemens's new book is a really admirable piece of craftsmanship. . . . Even if the book had no other side than its serious one, it would be well worth reading; but being by Mark Twain, it is needless to say that it has plenty of humour as well. . . . There are nearly five hundred pages in his book, but we must confess to having read it through at a sitting; and we can remember no other work from his pen which we have found so attractive."—Guardian.

"None of Mark Twain's works would stand better for a sample of all his wares—humour, good sense, good nature, genuine good fun, shrewd observation, and bits of description which would be hard to equal in the writings of the most serious travellers."—Athenæum.

"At his best Mark Twain is a delightful as well as a droll companion—a comedian as resistless as Charles Mathews used to be in 'As Cool as a Cucumber.' . . . We will end by biding those who are in search of laughter to make haste to take, by proxy at least, 'More Tramps Abroad.'"—Standard.

Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

THIS LITTLE WORLD. By DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY, Author of "Joseph's Coat."

"Mr. Murray has never done anything better than this fine story. The incidents are presented with wonderful force and freshness, the action never drags, and in vividness and power of characterisation the story is masterly. . . . It is a book that will add to Mr. Murray's reputation."—Birmingham Post.

"Long and agreeable experience has taught us to turn to a new novel by Mr. Christie Murray with a certainty of finding good and wholesome entertainment therein, and 'This Little World' has not tended to impair that cheerful and comforting expectation. It is a long time since we have read anything better in its way than Mr. Murray's racy portraiture of the great-little men of a Midland village, or his loving delineation of the beauties of the Midland landscape."—Spectator.

"There can be nothing more pleasing in the shape of a novel than that which pursues the even tenor of its way, and depends for its charm on the manner of the telling of it rather than on sensational and obtrusive realism. Such a novel is 'This Little World.' In construction, completeness of detail, and character-sketching it fulfils all the requirements of an artistic piece of work. It is long since we read so wholesome, pleasing, and interesting a novel; above all, it is written in the very best of English."—Weekly Sun.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

TALES IN PROSE AND VERSE. By DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY. With Frontispiece by Arthur Hopkins.

Crown 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 6s.

BY THE RISE OF THE RIVER: TALES and SKETCHES IN SOUTH TYNEDALE. By AUSTIN CLARE, Author of "For the Love of a Lass," &c.

"Mr. Austin Clare, already favourably known by a former story of Tynedale, entitled 'The Love of a Lass,' gives us some excellent studies and sketches of the same region and its people in a volume called 'By the Rise of the River.' The best test of the value and beauty of these stories, which go deep into the pain and pathos, the strife and stress, of human life, in quiet scenes and under fair appearances, and also in stirring scenes and amid the play of strong human emotions, is to be found in the fact that the dialect—a particularly trying one—of the dwellers by Tyne does not materially interfere with the pleasure which the book affords."—World.

NEW EDITIONS FOR 1898, JUST READY.

WALFORD'S COUNTY FAMILIES OF THE UNITED KINGDOM (1898). Containing Notices of the Descent, Birth, Marriage, Education, &c., of more than 12,000 distinguished Heads of Families, their Heirs Apparent or Presumptive, the Offices they hold or have held, their Town and Country Addresses, Clubs, &c. Royal 8vo, cloth gilt, 50s.

Walford's Complete Peerage, Baronetage, Knightage, House of Commons (1898). Royal 32mo, cloth, gilt edges, 5s.
Walford's Shilling Peerage (1898). 32mo, cloth, 1s.
Walford's Shilling Baronetage (1898). 32mo, cloth, 1s.
Walford's Shilling Knightage (1898). 32mo, cloth, 1s.
Walford's Shilling House of Commons (1898). 32mo, cloth, 1s.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's-lane, W.C.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

The FIRST EDITION being nearly exhausted a SECOND EDITION is in preparation.

Edited with a Preface by

THE COUNTESS OF WARWICK.

JOSEPH ARCH.

THE STORY OF HIS LIFE TOLD BY HIMSELF.

In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 12s. With Photogravure Portrait.

"The public is indebted to Lady Warwick for having induced Mr. Arch to write this very interesting autobiography; important to the historian and the student of politics. But it is as a human document that the life of Joseph Arch will appeal to many thousands of readers, altogether independently of the cause with which his name is associated. We hope that the few samples we have quoted will send our readers to the bulk. They will be amply repaid. Would that all autobiographies were so written, nor can we envy any one who fails to read the book with interest, profit, and amusement, or finishes it without genuine admiration for the author."—Daily Telegraph.

"Of absorbing interest. Altogether it is a notable book, the story of a great career, which has made its mark on the people and the State. No bishop's life was ever issued in a more presentable volume, or under auspices of more unimpeachable respectability."—Daily Chronicle.

"Full of interest from every point of view. A striking autobiography."—Manchester Guardian.

A LIFE OF PETER THE GREAT AT A POPULAR PRICE.

PETER THE GREAT.

By OSCAR BROWNING.

With Full-page Illustrations. In cloth gilt, 5s.

"The book is scholarly and popularly written, and it is altogether an admirably drawn portrait of the famous emperor."—Daily Mail.

"Will well deserve the crowd of readers it is likely to attract.—Globe.

NEW NOVEL BY EMMA BROOKE.

THE CONFESSION OF STEPHEN WHAPSHARE.

By the Author of "A Superfluous Woman."

In cloth gilt, 6s.

The World says:—"There is a pleasant surprise in store for the novel-readers who have been asking of late, with reasonable despondency, whether they are ever to have anything new, quite new, not merely cleverly reconstructed. In 'The Confession of Stephen Whapshare' those novel-readers will find novelty and interest of an exceptional kind. The author has done nothing within measurable distance of this strong, compact, one-motived, and tragic story; conveyed with entire originality and power. The plot of this story is admirably constructed, and has the writer's characteristic boldness, with more of subtlety than she has hitherto displayed. The plot and the action, however, form only a portion of the attraction of the work. Its best charm will be found in the exposition of the mental struggles of Stephen Whapshare presented with power and effect."

JUST PUBLISHED.

A NEW NOVEL BY M. E. MANN.

THE CEDAR STAR.

By the Author of "Susannah."

In cloth gilt, 6s.

FIRST REVIEW.

The Academy says:—"A charming book, beginning with good chapters of child life, and containing memorable figures, notably Billy the Curate and Betty herself. Betty is, indeed, quite a discovery."

ON FRIDAY NEXT.

NEW NOVEL BY ADELINE SERGEANT.

THE LADY CHARLOTTE.

In cloth gilt, 6s.

IMMEDIATELY.

NEW NOVEL BY MARY ANGELA DICKENS.

AGAINST THE TIDE.

In cloth gilt, 6s.

"The best all-round book that we have yet seen placed at the service of elocutionists."—The School Board Chronicle."

THIRD LARGE EDITION OF

MILES' STANDARD ELOCUTIONIST.

In large crown 8vo, half-bound leather and gilt, 610 pages, 3s. 6d.

Comprising a popular treatise on the Vocal Organs, with Illustrations by Lennox Browne, F.R.C.S., Senior Surgeon of the Central Throat and Ear Hospital. A chapter on the Art of introducing Musical Accompaniments into Elocutionary Recitals, by Clifford Harrison, with Musical Examples. An Essay on the Principles of Elocution, on Public Speaking, the Selection, Study, and Delivery of Recitations, and upwards of 500 pieces, forming a graduated series, for study, selected from the best authors, by Alfred H. Miles.

LONDON: HUTCHINSON & CO., PATERNOSTER ROW.

ON THE STŒCHIOLOGICAL CURE OF

CONSUMPTION,

ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, AND LUNG COMPLAINTS.

By JOHN FRANCIS CHURCHILL, M.D.

One Shilling, Post Free.

T. BURLEIGH, LATE DAVID STOTT, 370, OXFORD STREET.

STERILITY IN WOMEN: Its Causes and Curative Treatment. An Illustrated treatise based on the special practise and observation of the last 15 years. Price 3s. 6d.; post free, 3s. 8d.

London: HENRY RENSHAW, 356, Strand.

SMITH, ELDER, & CO.'S LIST.

CONAN DOYLE'S NEW NOVEL.

On February 1st.

With 40 Full-page Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE TRAGEDY OF THE KOROSKO.

BY A. CONAN DOYLE,

Author of "The White Company," "Rodney Stone," "Uncle Bernac," &c.

Ready this day. With 2 Portraits and 2 Views, large crown 8vo, 12s. 6d.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ARTHUR YOUNG.

With Selections from his Correspondence.

Edited by M. BETHAM-EDWARDS.

CORNHILL MAGAZINE.

For FEBRUARY. CONTENTS:— PRICE ONE SHILLING.

The Second of a Series of

FIGHTS FOR THE FLAG:

BLAKE AND THE DUTCHMEN.

By the Rev. W. H. FITCHETT, Author of "Deeds that Won the Empire."

MISTRESSES AND SERVANTS.

By Mrs. C. W. EARLE, Author of "Pot-pourri from a Surrey Garden."

AN INVOLUNTARY PRESIDENT. By W. L. Alden.

SOME REAL TIGER STORIES. By A. Sarathkumar Ghosh.

LONDON FISH AND FISH-SHOPS. By C. J. Cornish.

A GAY CAVALIER. By Miss Eva Scott.

THE BRIGANDS OF CALABRIA. By Clare Sorel Strong.

CONCERNING BREAKFAST. By E. V. Lucas.

A DESERT DREAM. By E. and H. Heron.

MY FIRST SHIPWRECK: a Narrative of Fact. By Frank T. Bullen.

PAGES FROM A PRIVATE DIARY.

THE CASTLE INN. Chaps. 5-8. By Stanley Weyman.

Ready at all Booksellers' on January 26th.

London: SMITH, ELDER, & CO., 15, Waterloo-place.

NOTICE.

MISS BRADDON'S NEW NOVEL will be published on Thursday next by Messrs. Simpkin & Co., Ltd.,

ROUGH JUSTICE,

in one volume, crown 8vo, cloth gilt, price Six Shillings. Will be Ready at all Booksellers on Thursday next, February 3rd.

DOGS AND DOG-KEEPING. Practical Articles, Beautifully Illustrated, of interest to every one who keeps a Dog, will be found in THE DOG OWNERS' SUPPLEMENT. Given Free with The Bazaar, Exchange and Mart Newspaper of Monday next, the 31st inst.

FEBRUARY FASHIONS, for Ladies and Children, Fully Described and Profusely Illustrated in THE LADIES' SUPPLEMENT (16 large pages). Given Free with The Bazaar, Exchange and Mart Newspaper of Wednesday next, February 2nd.

THE BAZAAR, EXCHANGE AND MART Newspaper, with the Supplement complete, may be had at all Newsagents and Bookstalls, price 2d., or for 3d. in stamps from the Office: 170, Strand, London, W.C.

BEHIND THE MASK

Complete Story by

MAX PEMBERTON,

SEE

Cassell's Magazine

For February, Price 6d.

NOTICE. — Mr. E. W. HORNUNG'S New Novel, "YOUNG BLOOD," will be published shortly, price 6s.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited, London; and all Booksellers.

THE HOUSEWIFE:

A thoroughly Practical, Up-to-date, Illustrated Sixpenny Monthly, concerning Everything in and about the Home. Oldest and best of its class. Only ladies' Magazine sympathetically reporting the New Woman Movement.

"WOMEN'S WORK AND WAGES,"

The "Housewife Annual" for 1898, an extra, price 6d., is also to be had of all Booksellers and at Smith's Bookstalls.

1/- (BY POST, 1/2½.) 1/-

QUEER STORIES

—FROM—

"TRUTH."

"TRUTH" PUBLISHING OFFICE,

10, BOLT COURT, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, RUSSIAN, & SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the Houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE IN ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS NOW OFFERED AT GREATLY REDUCED PRICES.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 PAGES) SENT GRATIS AND POST FREE TO ANY ADDRESS.

The List contains Popular Works in Travel, Sport, History, Biography, Science, and Fiction. Also New and Surplus Copies of French, German, Italian, and Spanish Books.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, LIMITED,

—34, NEW OXFORD ST.; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA ST., E.C. LONDON; AND AT BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

THE BEST SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

THE WAR OF THE WORLDS. By H. G. WELLS, Author of "The Time Machine."

The Daily News.—"The bewilderment and horror of the narrator of this tale is conveyed with all Mr. Wells's power of vivid realisation. The spell of terror is never lifted for a moment. The imagination, the extraordinary power of presentation, cannot be contested."

THE TRIUMPH OF DEATH. By GABRIELE D'ANNUNZIO.

The Daily Telegraph.—"The range of his female portrait-gallery is almost as wide and varied as that of George Meredith. There are many pages of poetry, of tender appreciation of Nature, of rare artistic skill, of subtle and penetrative analysis."

THE FOURTH NAPOLEON. By CHARLES BENHAM.

Mr. ZANGWILL.—"Surely one of the most remarkable first-books of our day. A daring imagination working itself out in a minute realism, a sombre, subtle sense of la comédie humaine, such are the characteristics of this powerful book. A thoroughness and subtlety which Balzac could not have excelled."

GOD'S FOUNDLING. By A. J. DAWSON, Author of "In the Bight of Benin."

THE BETH BOOK. By SARAH GRAND.

The Sketch.—"The book is a complete success, and stands far ahead of the novels of recent date."

THE GADFLY. By E. L. VOYNICH.

The St. James's Gazette.—"A very strikingly original romance, which will hold the attention of all who read it, and establish the author's reputation at once for first-rate dramatic ability. Exciting, sinister, even terrifying, we must avow it to be a work of real genius."

THE CHRISTIAN. By HALL CAINE.

The Sketch.—"It quivers and palpitates with passion, for even Mr. Caine's bitterest detractors cannot deny that he is the possessor of that rarest of all gifts—genius."

THE NIGGER OF THE "NARCISSUS." By JOSEPH CONRAD.

The Daily Telegraph.—"There are few characters among the crew which do not stand out with vivid and lifelike presentment. We know them all. Mr. Conrad has for the first time given to the world the English seaman as he is."

THE NIGGER OF THE "NARCISSUS."

Mr. ZANGWILL names "The Nigger of the 'Narcissus,'" with three other books, as worthy of being crowned by the "Academy."

THE NIGGER OF THE "NARCISSUS."

Mr. H. G. WELLS writes:—"To my mind, the most striking piece of imaginative work, in prose, the year 1897 has produced."

THE NIGGER OF THE "NARCISSUS."

The Globe.—"Mr. Conrad's amazing study of the sea and those who wrestle with it is in the highest degree worthy of recognition."

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford-street, W.C.

The Sequel to "THE PRISONER OF ZENDA," by Mr. Anthony Hope, is now appearing monthly in the "Pall Mall Magazine" under the title of "RUPERT OF HENTZAU." The Sequel began in the December Number.

The FEBRUARY NUMBER of the

PALL MALL MAGAZINE.

IS NOW READY.

Finely Illustrated.

PRICE ONE SHILLING NETT.

CONTENTS.

On the Dogger Bank. FRONTISPIECE.
From a Painting by C. Stanfield, R.A.
Song of the Four Winds. CHRISTIAN BURKE.
With Illustrations by E. F. Skinner.
St. Michael's Mount, Hon. JOHN ST. AUBYN.
Illustrated from Special Photographs.
The Bird at the Neck; Part II. "X. L."
With Illustrations by John Sheriff.
South London: II. The South End of the Bridge. SIR WALTER BESANT.
With Illustrative Sketches by Percy Wadham.
A Valentine, WILFRED DRAYCOTT
British Army Types: IX. A Subaltern Scots Grey.
Drawn from Life by Arthur Jule Goodman.
Wanted: a Working Housekeeper. MARY STUART BOYD.
Stevenson. G. EDGAR MONTGOMERY.
With Illustrations by G. Grenville Manton.
The Great Seal: Part II. J. HOLT SCHOOLING.
With Reproductions of Selected Impressions.
Rupert of Hentzau. Chapters VI., VII. ANTHONY HOPE.
With Illustrations by Sydney Cowell.
The Wind. EDWARD W. DUTCHER.
Illustrations by H. Granville Fell.
The Campaign of Copenhagen. JUDGE O'CONNOR MORRIS.
With plan of the Battle.
An Incident of the Boom. JESSE MANSERGH
The Bookbinders' Art. ARTHUR L. MARLOW.
With Reproductions of designs by Old Masters.
The Last Experience of Adam Skirving. MARY W. L. FALCONER.
With Illustrations by Bernard Higham.
A Historic House. WALTER DURNFORD
A Mysterious Fever. W. L. ALDEN.
With Illustrations by John Beer.
From a Cornish Window. A. T. QUILLER COUCH.
With Thumb-nail Sketches by Mark Zangwill.
The Humours of the Month.

Publishing and Editorial Offices; 18, Charing Cross-road, London, W.C.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW BOOKS.

THE NIGER SOURCES. By Colonel J. TROTTER, R.A. With a Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s.

An account of a Commission appointed for Frontier Delimitation between England and France.

EXPLORATION AND HUNTING IN CENTRAL AFRICA. By Major A. ST. H. GIBBONS, F.R.G.S. With 8 full-page Illustrations by C. Whymper, 25 Photographs, and a Map. Demy 8vo, 15s.

An account of Travel, Adventure, and Big Game Shooting among the Marotse.

THE CRISIS IN CHINA.

FROM TONKIN TO INDIA. By Prince HENRI OF ORLEANS. Translated by Hamley Bent, M.A. With over a Hundred Illustrations and a Map. Crown quarto, gilt top, 25s.

"The Prince's travels are of real importance. . . . His services to geography have been considerable. The volume is beautifully illustrated."—Athenæum.

"Instructive and fascinating, and will certainly make one of the books of 1898. A nearly model book of travel."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"China is the country of the hour. All eyes are turned towards her, and Messrs. Methuen have opportunely selected the moment to launch the work."—Liverpool Daily Post.

ANARCHISM. By E. V. ZENKER. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A critical study and history, as well as a trenchant criticism, of the Anarchist movement in Europe.

THE LIFE OF ERNEST RENAN. By Madame DARMESTETER. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A polished gem of biography, superior in its kind to any attempt that has been made of recent years in England."—Athenæum.

"A perfect biography."—British Weekly.

A HISTORY OF BRITISH COLONIAL POLICY. By H. E. EGERTON, M.A. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

"Admirably lucid and valuable."—Globe.

"The thoughts this well-written and able volume suggests are grave, dignified, and weighty."—Birmingham Post.

"Full of facts and intelligent thought."—Pall Mall Gazette.

WORKHOUSES AND PAUPERISM. By LOUISA TWINING. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. [Social Question Series.

NINE POPULAR NOVELS.

Six Shillings Each.

THE VINTAGE.	E. F. BENSON.
TRAITS AND CONFIDENCES.	EMILY LAWLESS.
JOSIAH'S WIFE.	NORMA LORIMER.
LOCHINVAR.	S. R. CROCKETT.
BYEWAYS.	R. S. HICHENS.
A PASSIONATE PILGRIM.	PERCY WHITE.
A CREEL of IRISH STORIES.	JANE BARLOW.
A DAUGHTER of STRIFE.	JANE FINDLATER.
OVER THE HILLS.	MARY FINDLATER.

Messrs. Methuen's Catalogue and New Book Gazette sent to any address.

METHUEN & CO., 36, Essex-street, Strand, W.C.

NOW READY.

With 17 Photogravure Illustrations, demy 8vo, cloth, price 16s.

THE TWO DUCHESSES:

Family Correspondence of, and relating to, Georgiana, Duchess of Devonshire; Elizabeth, Duchess of Devonshire; the Earl of Bristol (Bishop of Derry) and Countess of Bristol; Lord and Lady Byron; the Earl of Aberdeen; Sir Augustus Foster, Bart.; and many eminent personages of the period 1777-1859.

Edited by VERE FOSTER.

London: BLACKIE & SON, Limited, 50, Old Bailey.

AMUSEMENTS.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.
Sole Lessee, Mr. Frederick Harrison.
Managers, Mr. Frederick Harrison and Mr. Cyril Maude.
EVERY EVENING, at 8.30, THE LITTLE MINISTER, by J. M. Barrie.
Miss WINIFRED EMERY and Mr. CYRIL MAUDE.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY, at 2.30.

QUEEN'S HALL.
SUNDAY AFTERNOON CONCERTS.
EVERY SUNDAY, at 3.30.
Conductor, Mr. Henry J. Wood.
The Queen's Hall Grand Orchestra.
Admission free. Reserved seats, 2s., 3s., 1s., and 6d.

OLYMPIA.
BARNUM AND BAILEY.
GREATEST SHOW ON EARTH.
Fifth Week of the Limited Season.

Overwhelming and Unabated Success.

The Grandest Show ever Seen.
Magnificently and Gorgeously Presented.

3 Circus Companies in 3 Rings.
2 Olympian Stages, 1 Huge Race-track.
2 Complete Menageries, 3 Herds of Elephants.
Museum of Living Freaks and Curiosities.
20 Funniest Clowns on Earth.
70 Horses Performing in One Ring.
400 Horses, 2 Droves of Camels, Hosts of Queer Animals.
1,001 Marvellous Sights and Wonderful Objects.
A Perfect Kindergarden for Children.

TWO GRAND EXHIBITIONS DAILY, at 2.0 and 8.0 p.m.
Doors open at 12.30 and 6.30 p.m.
Early Gates open (Hammersmith-road) at 12.0 noon and 6 p.m. for 3s. seats and upwards. Early entrance fee 6d. extra.
Owing to the stupendously large show, and the general magnitude of the Exhibitions, necessitating great preparations, the Menageries, Freak, and Horse Fair Departments can only be open from 12.0 to 4.15 p.m., and from 6.0 to 10.30 p.m. No Promenade Tickets sold. Every ticket entitling holder to a reserved numbered seat, and admitting to all advertised departments without extra charge.
Prices.—Admission: Amphitheatre, 1s. and 2s.; Arena seats, 2s., 3s., and 4s.; Balcony seats, 3s.; Stalls, 5s., 7s. 6d.; Private Boxes, 5 to 6 seats, £3. 3s.; Single box seats, 10s. 6d. Special price for Royal Box when not engaged. Children between 4 and 10 years of age half-price to all except 1s. and 2s. seats. Box-office open from 9.0 a.m. to 9.30 p.m. 1s. and 2s. seats on sale only after Doors open. All other seats may be booked in advance at box-office and at usual libraries.

CRYSTAL PALACE.
The one absolute novelty this Christmas is to be seen at the CRYSTAL PALACE!
GREAT RIVER SCENE
in ENGLISH STAG HUNT,
at
WULFF'S GREAT CIRCUS.
Hounds, Horses, and Riders, plunge into and swim the river!
Rounds of applause and roars of laughter.
No such scene ever before beheld in any show.
TWICE DAILY, at 3 and 7.30.
Children half-price to numbered seats, both afternoon and evening. Free admission to Palace after 6.30 p.m. to holders of Circus Seat Tickets, which are on sale at Low Level and Central Entrances. Numbered Seats, 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., and 5s., may be booked in advance at Central Entrance and usual London Ticket Agents. 3,000 sixpenny and 2,000 shilling seats.

NEW NIAGARA. SKATING.
Morning, 9.30 to 1; Evening, 8 to 11, 3/-
Afternoon, 3 to 6.30, 5/-
Non-Skaters (Afternoon), 2/6.
SEASON and HALF-SEASON TICKETS ISSUED.
THIRD CARNIVAL will be held, TUESDAY, February 8th.

BRIGHTON ICE RINK. SKATING.
Morning, 9.30 to 1 Evening, 8 to 11, 2/6
Afternoon, 3 to 6.30, 4/- Non-Skaters, in the Afternoon, 2/-
Monthly Tickets, £2 10s.
SEASON and HALF-SEASON TICKETS issued.

RIVOLI, Strand, London.—The Greatest Combination of Talent in London.—Open EVERY EVENING, at 7.30, and SATURDAY MATINÉE, at 2.30, with a STAR PROGRAMME, embracing every Artiste of fame.—Manager, Mr. VERNON DOWSETT.

LONDON PAVILION.—Charles Godfrey, Fannie Leslie, Chirgwin, Vesta Victoria, T. E. Dunville, Marie Collins, and many others, including Mark Melford's Sketch, MY WIFE WON'T LET ME.—Prices from 6d. to £3. 3s. Doors open at 7.30.—Manager, Mr. FRANK GLENISTER.

PALACE, Shaftesbury-avenue. — The HANDSOMEST THEATRE in EUROPE. The finest Variety Entertainment in London. Licence. Prices from 6d. Doors open 8.—Manager, Mr. CHARLES MORTON.

MADAME TUSSAUD'S EXHIBITION, Baker-street Station.—A True and Realistic Tableau, HERR ANDRÉE and his Two Companions starting in Balloon on their journey to the North Pole. Now on view all of Tableaux. Admission 1s. Children under Twelve, 6d. Extra rooms, 6d.

THEATRE TICKETS.—Boxes, Stalls, Balcony, and Upper Circle Seats in the best positions can be had at any office of the DISTRICT MESSENGERS' COMPANY.—Letters and telegrams, 193, Piccadilly.—for every theatre. If you ever want a MESSENGER FOR ANY PURPOSE, any distance, at home or abroad, ask for a "DISTRICT MESSENGER." s in all parts of London, open Day and Night. Electric call boxes, to non messengers, are in every first-class club, hotel, and house.

AMUSEMENTS.

DRURY LANE THEATRE ROYAL.—Managing Director, ARTHUR COLLINS. THE CHILDREN'S PANTOMIME, THE BABES IN THE WOOD. Twice daily at 1.30 and 7.30. For full particulars, see daily papers. Box Office open all day.

LYCEUM.—PETER THE GREAT, by Laurence Irving.
EVERY EVENING, at 8 punctually.
HENRY IRVING, Miss ELLEN TERRY.
MATINEES Wednesdays, February 2 and 9, at 2. Box office (Mr. J. Hurst) 10 to 5, and 7.30 to 10. Seats booked by letter or telegram.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.
Proprietor and Manager, Mr. HERBERT BEERBOHM TREE.
EVERY EVENING, at 8.15.

JULIUS CÆSAR.

Scenery and Costumes produced under the supervision of Mr. Alma Tadema, R.A.

MATINEES EVERY SATURDAY, at 2.30.
Box-office open 10 to 10. Seats booked from 2s.

ADELPHI. A. & S. GATTI,
Sole Proprietors and Managers.
EVERY EVENING, at 8.30,
Messrs. Gatti will present a Drama, in Four Acts, founded on an incident during the Great French Revolution, entitled CHARLOTTE CORDAY,
in which will appear
Mrs. BROWN-POTTER and Mr. KYRLE BELLEW.
Preceded, at 8, by a Farce, entitled "B.B."
MATINEE WEDNESDAY NEXT, January 26, at 2.30.

GAIETY THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, GEORGE EDWARDES.
EVERY EVENING, at 8 (doors open 7.40),
THE CIRCUS GIRL
(2nd year).
Box-office open daily from 10 till 6.
MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY, at 2,
Doors open 1.40.

PRINCESS'S.—Mr. ALBERT GILMER, Sole Manager.
ENORMOUS SUCCESS OF THE GRAND CHRISTMAS PRODUCTION.
EVERY EVENING, at 8 o'clock, will be presented an entirely New and Original Melodrama, in Five Acts, entitled
HOW LONDON LIVES,
By Martyn Field and Arthur Shirley,
For which Mr. CHARLES WARNER is specially engaged,
Miss Kate Tyndall, Miss Geraldine Olliffe, Mr. Oscar Adye, Mr. Charles Garry, &c.
Doors open at 7.20. Box-office open 10 to 6.
Telephone No. 5,227, Gerrard.

SAVOY THEATRE.—Every Evening, at 8.20, and Every Saturday Afternoon, at 2.30, THE GRAND DUCHESS OF GEROLSTEIN. At 7.40, OLD SARAH. Box-office 9 a.m. to 11 p.m.—R. D'OYLY CARTE, Manager

GARRICK.—Lessee and Manager, H. T. BRICKWELL.
TWICE DAILY, at 1.30 and 7.30,
Mr. OSCAR BARRETT'S FAIRY PANTOMIME,
CINDERELLA.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.
Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER, Sole Lessee and Manager.
TO-NIGHT and EVERY EVENING, at 8 punctually (LAST 13 NIGHTS),
THE TREE OF KNOWLEDGE.
A New and Original Play in Five Acts; by R. C. Carton.
LAST TWO MATINEES, SATURDAY and SATURDAY following, at 2.
FEBRUARY 16 at 2.30, and EVERY EVENING following, at 8,
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.
Box plan now open 10 to 10. ST. JAMES'S.

DALY'S THEATRE.—Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTIN DALY.—EVERY EVENING, and SATURDAY MATINEE. Mr. George Edwardes's Company in THE GEISHA. The book by Owen Hall. Lyrics by Harry Greenbank. Music by Sydney Jones.

COMEDY THEATRE, Panton-street, Haymarket.
EVERY EVENING, at 9,
ONE SUMMER'S DAY, by H. V. Esmond.
Mr. Charles Hawtrey, Miss Eva Moore, &c.
At 7.50, A SHEEP IN WOLF'S CLOTHING. Mrs. Bernard Beere and Mr. Henry Neville. Doors open 7.40.
MATINEE EVERY WEDNESDAY and SATURDAY, at 3. Box-office 10 to 10.

VAUDEVILLE. A. & S. GATTI,
Sole Lessees and Managers.
EVENINGS, at 9,
WEDNESDAYS, at 3 and 9,
A. & S. Gatti and Charles Frohman will present the Farcical Comedy,
NEVER AGAIN,
8.15, THE CAPE MAIL, by Clement Scott.
Box-office open 10 to 10.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.
Managers, Messrs. WILLIAMSON and MUSGROVE.
EVERY EVENING, at 7.30,
Mr. LEONARD BOYNE and his COMPANY in a New and Original Drama, entitled
SPORTING LIFE,
By Cecil Raleigh (part author of "The White Heather") and Seymour Hicks, under the direction of Mr. C. J. Abud.
Box-office now open at Theatre and Libraries.

CRITERION THEATRE.—Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.—EVERY EVENING, at 8.15, THE LIARS, by Henry Arthur Jones. Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM, Miss MARY MOORE, and Company. MATINEE EVERY SATURDAY and WEDNESDAY, Feb. 2.

ALHAMBRA.—Every Evening, New Grand Ballet, BEAUTY AND THE BEAST. Exceptional VARIETY Programme. Doors open 7.30. ALFRED MOUL, General Manager.

EMPIRE THEATRE.—EVERY EVENING, UNDER ONE FLAG and TREASURE ISLAND. Grand VARIETIES. Doors open at 7.45.

"TRUTH" HOTEL LIST.

BATH.—LANSDOWN GROVE HOTEL.—Desirable residence, in beautifully wooded grounds, 400 feet above sea level, facing south, and protected from north and east. Air dry and bracing. Assembly and Pump Rooms within easy distance. Omnibus free to and from Hot Mineral Baths. Billiards, Tennis Lawn

BONCHURCH HOTEL, Bonchurch, Isle of Wight, one mile from Ventnor Station.
A comfortable, quiet, and most beautifully-situated Hotel. Pretty garden. Good sea view.
H. RIBBANDS, Proprietor.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HOTEL MONT DORE.—South aspect, 150 rooms, electric light throughout, passenger lift, first-class cuisine, winter garden and lounge, covered tennis court. Turkish, sea-water, and medicated Baths. The Hotel is within two minutes' walk of the Golf Links.—For tariff, address W. KNEESE, Manager.

BOURNEMOUTH.—HIGHCLIFFE HOTEL. Unrivalled position, West Cliff, full south. Splendid sea view. Table d'hôte (separate tables). Supplies from Alderney Dairy Farm. Telephone 27.—J. KILNER, Proprietor.

BRIGHTON.—BEDFORD HOTEL.—Old-established. Unequalled in situation; opposite West Pier. Spacious coffee and reading rooms; sea-water service; unequalled cuisine; great variety of excellent wines. Moderate tariff. Electric light in all rooms. Passenger lift to all the floors.
GEO. HECKFORD, Manager.

BRIGHTON.—GRAND HOTEL.
Centre of Sea Front. Electric Light throughout. Lift to all floors. Bicycle room. INCLUSIVE TERMS IF DESIRED from 10s. 6d. to 15s. per day. For particulars apply to A. D. HOOK, Manager.

CARBIS BAY HOTEL, Cornwall. The very spot to obtain rest and quietude. Overlooking the finest bay in England. Mild yet bracing climate. Within easy distance of London by G. W. R. Splendid Golf Links. "A more beautiful spot for residence could hardly be imagined." —Truth.

FOLKESTONE.—BATES' HOTEL, West Cliff Gardens, and LONGFORD PRIVATE HOTEL, The Lees. Oldest established and most select Family Hotels in Folkestone. Reduced terms during Winter and Spring months. Pension (new Coffee-room) at Bates' Hotel.—G. L. HART, Proprietor.
Sanitation Certified.

FOLKESTONE.—The LEAS HOTEL.—Situated in private grounds. Adjoining fashionable promenade. Sea views. Refurnished throughout. Passenger lift. Certified sanitation. Excellent cuisine. Moderate tariff. Good golf links and tennis court.

GRAND CANARY.—The Newest and Best Hotel is The METROPOLE. Facing the sea. Delightful position.
Terms most moderate.
Agents, ELDER, DEMPSTER & CO., 14, Castle-street, Liverpool, and 4, St. Mary Axe, London, E.C.

JERSEY.—GRAND HOTEL.—Beautifully situated, facing the sea, full south, and sheltered from the north-easterly winds, with all modern comforts and liberal management. Reduced winter terms from October 15th.
D. DE LEIDI, Manager.

MALVERN—The IMPERIAL HOTEL occupies the best position, and receives visitors en pension. The golf-links (18 holes) are one of the best in England. Capital stabling for hunters. Droitwich Brine, Turkish and large Swimming Bath in separate buildings.—For tariff, apply to the Proprietor, F. MOERSCHELL.

SANDGATE.—ROYAL KENT HOTEL, a favourite resort of Ruskin. An ideal summer and winter residence, delightfully situated in its own grounds, facing the sea. Redecorated and refurnished. New Coffee-room, Smoking-room, and Conservatory have recently been added Fifteen minutes from Folkestone. Omnibus meets all trains Sandgate Station.—J. E. TANARE, Prop.

TORQUAY.—IMPERIAL HOTEL.—Under entirely New Management. New sanitary arrangements throughout. It is the largest and best-situated Hotel in Torquay, and the best winter residence on the South Coast. Visitors received en pension or à la carte. Terms moderate.
F. FISCHER, Manager.

A FINE HOTEL] DOVER [IN DOVER BAY

Accommodates 400 guests. Is superbly appointed, with all the comforts of a well-arranged mansion, at moderate cost. Perfect cuisine. The Dover Golf Links for use of Hotel Burlington visitors. The finest coast hotel in England Brochure and Tariff free.

Facing the Pleasure Pier and in centre of Dover Bay.

HOTEL BURLINGTON

INNS OF COURT HOTEL, Holborn, London.—A first-class Family Hotel, with 200 bedrooms, &c. All modern conveniences and moderate terms. Electric lights, lifts, &c. The Central Hall, as a lounge for writing &c., is the finest and the Dining-room the pleasantest in London. Public meeting rooms, &c. Visitors may dine at the Table d'hôte or in the new Restaurant. Tariff gratis.

THE INTERNATIONAL PALACE HOTELS.

CAIRO ..... Shepheard's.
CAIRO ..... Ghezireh Palace.
NICE ..... Riviera Palace.
LISBON ..... Avenida Palace.

London Office, 14, Cockspur-street, S.W.

ILFRACOMBE.

A Charming WINTER RESORT, climate mild and equable.

The ILFRACOMBE HOTEL,

First-class Return Tickets issued from London (Waterloo), L. & S. W. R., from November to March, including seven days' bed, board, and attendance, at the Ilfracombe Hotel, £5. 5s. each, available for one month. Ask for Hotel tickets, available by all trains.
H. R. GROVER, Manager.

HASTINGS. Due South, Facing Sea.

QUEEN'S HOTEL,

LARGEST AND BEST APPOINTED.
Sunny, and most sheltered position in Hastings and St. Leonards.
ELECTRIC LIGHT. PASSENGER ELEVATOR.
Moderate Tariff. Hotel Flys attend the trains.
WILLIAM GLADE, Manager.

PALACE HOTEL, HASTINGS

Modern Sanitary Arrangements. Lounge. Elevators. Electric Light throughout.
SPIERS & POND (Proprietors)

CANARY ISLANDS.—SANTA CATALINA HOTEL, Las Palmas. In midst of beautiful gardens, facing sea. Sanitary arrangements perfect. English physician and nurse. English church. Golf, tennis, cycling.—The Canary Islands Coy., Limited, 1, Laurence Pountney-hill, E.C.

NEW ZEALAND, AUSTRALIA, HONOLULU, FIJI.

CANADIAN-AUSTRALIAN LINE STEAMERS, fastest and finest from American Continent to Australasia, LEAVE VANCOUVER Monthly. For berths, inclusive through tickets, viâ Montreal or New York, and world-famed scenery of Canadian Pacific Railway, apply, C. P. R. Co., 67 and 68, King William-st., London Bridge; 30, Cockspur-st., Trafalgar-square; or C.A. Line (J. HUDDART & CO., Managers), 150, Leadenhall-st., E.C.

JAPAN, CHINA, AROUND THE WORLD.
CANADIAN PACIFIC ROUTE, viâ Vancouver. Largest, fastest, only twin-screw steamers on Pacific.
For berths or descriptive pamphlets, apply PASSENGER DEPARTMENT, CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY, 67 and 68, King William-street, London Bridge, or 30, Cockspur-street, Trafalgar-square.

YACHTING EXCURSION, viâ Magellan Straits (Summer Season).—VANCOUVER, KLONDIKE, &c.
THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY,
having purchased the ROYAL MAIL STEAMERS "TARTAR" and "ATHENIAN," late of the Union Line Cape service, intend dispatching them from Southampton (for Klondike service), the "Tartar" about February 1st, and the "Athenian" about a week later, to Vancouver, B.C., viâ Straits of Magellan, during summer months in Southern latitudes. Ports of call will be Teneriffe, Rio de Janeiro, and Callao. The steamers are fitted for first and second class passengers only, are electric lighted, carry a surgeon, and are luxuriously fitted throughout with saloons, library, bath-rooms, &c. They should reach Vancouver about end of March, allowing Klondike passengers ample time to obtain outfits and proceed by same steamers from Vancouver to Wrangel, when Stikine River navigation opens. Liberal baggage allowance.

Prices to Vancouver, 1st class £30, 2nd class £20. Round trip (exclusive of meals and sleeper on train), returning from Vancouver through world-famed mountain, prairie, and lake scenery of Canadian Pacific Railway and Niagara Falls, allowing choice of any steamer from trans-Atlantic ports, price £65. Round the World, returning from Vancouver viâ Japan, China, Colombo, and Suez, £120. Round the World, returning viâ Hawaiian Islands, Fiji, New Zealand, New South Wales, Colombo, and Suez, £125. Break of journey allowed at all Canadian Pacific Railway stations and all steamship ports beyond Vancouver. A few first-class passengers will be booked to the following ports at rates named:—Teneriffe, 10 guineas; Rio de Janeiro, 20 guineas; and Callao, 25 guineas. For berths apply quickly to Company's offices, 67 and 68, King William-street, E.C., 30, Cockspur-street, S.W., 7, James-street, Liverpool, 67, St. Vincent-street, Glasgow, or any of Thos. Cook & Son's offices.

WINTER IN THE WEST INDIES.

SPECIAL TOURS. SIXTY-FIVE DAYS for £65, by magnificent vessels of the

ROYAL MAIL STEAM PACKET COMPANY.

For particulars apply 18, Moorgate-street, or 29, Cockspur-street (West End), London.

FOR KLONDIKE,

Passengers should book to Vancouver City, terminus of the CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY. The arrival platform is the departure wharf of all Klondike steamers. Complete outfits can be purchased in Vancouver City cheaper than in the United States. Purchasers save not only in first cost, but escape all Customs duties. Remember Klondike is in Canada. All outfits purchased elsewhere pay an average duty of 30 per cent. Steamers leave Vancouver City regularly direct for the Klondike.—Apply, CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY OFFICES, 67 and 68, King William-street, London Bridge, E.C.; 30, Cockspur-street, Trafalgar-square, W.C.
Vancouver Board of Trade,
W. GODFREY, President.

Do you Feel the Cold?

Then fortify your System by the use of

MELLIN'S

COD LIVER OIL

EMULSION

which is both

Agreeable

and Warmth Yielding.

Sample free on receipt of 2d. for postage from Mellin's Emulsion Co. Ltd. Peckham, London, S.E.

FIELD'S

OZOKERIT

CANDLES

VE AWARDS AT BRUSSELS EXHIBITION, 1897.

HOSPITALS & APPEALS.

GREAT NORTHERN CENTRAL HOSPITAL, Holloway.
UNENDOWED and VERY POOR.

PATIENTS ADMITTED FREE, sickness and poverty the only passports to relief.

£10,000 needed annually to support the work of relieving 1,400 in-patients, and 25,000 out-patients.

LEWIS H. GLENTON KERR, Secretary.

LONDON FEVER HOSPITAL, Islington, N.

Over 80,000 sufferers from infectious fevers have been admitted into this Hospital since 1802, and probably ten times as many other persons have thereby been preserved from infection.

Patients pay about one-fourth of their cost, the other three-fourths falling upon the funds of the institution.

The contributions received in 1897 show a serious falling off compared with those of 1896.

ADDITIONAL HELP is URGENTLY NEEDED.

Governors' subscription, one guinea or more for more than one year; Life Governors' donation, ten or more guineas in one sum.

Governors' own domestic servants and certain employés of subscribing firms, clubs, and hotels, are treated free of all charge.

Help will be gratefully received by

Major W. CHRISTIE, Secretary, at the Hospital.

Bankers: Prescott & Co., 50, Cornhill, E.C.

THE EARLSWOOD ASYLUM FOR IDIOTS.

FUNDS URGENTLY NEEDED to maintain the 394 elected Patients now in the Institution.

A debt of £4,630 has been incurred to meet current expenses.

Nearly 130 afflicted cases seeking admission.

Cases received on payments regulated by the Board.

ALDERMAN SIR J. C. DIMSDALE, Treasurer.
JAMES DOWNING, Secretary.

Offices, 36, King William-street, London Bridge, E.C.

DIAMONDS. — DIAMONDS from the JURA MOUNTAINS.

THE JURA DIAMONDS are very fine WHITE DIAMONDS of great purity, of all sizes, and undistinguishable from Cape and Brazilian Diamonds of the finest quality. The JURA DIAMONDS can be worn at all times both by day and night. The JURA DIAMONDS are mounted in the best style and in the same manner as the most expensive jewels. The JURA DIAMONDS possess the limpidity and scintillating brilliancy of the true diamond. The PRICE of the JURA DIAMONDS is infinitesimal and within reach of every one. DIAMOND Brooches, Rings, Ear-rings, Pins, Hat Pins, Combs, Diadems, Tiaras, Bracelets.

"ORIENT PEARLS," in colour, shape, and weight, are the same as real pearls. PEARL and DIAMOND ORNAMENTS in gold and other settings. The Designs are beautiful and artistic. Goods sent on approval. Illustrated Catalogues and Price List post free.—CORREZE DIAMOND SYNDICATE, LTD., Portland House, Basinghall-street, London, E.C.

"A POCKET TREASURE."

MADE IN 3 SIZES AT 10/6, 16/6, & 25/- each.

POST FREE

FLOWS

REGULARLY

CONSTANTLY

SMOOTHLY

EASILY

Head Office:—93, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON, E.C.

OLLVAAN DIAMONDS

Solid Gold and Silver Brooch, set with 14 Ollvaan Diamonds, with Pearl Centre, 16s. post free.

(Rgd.) are all mounted in SOLID GOLD and SILVER, but that is not the point. The point is that these stones are in themselves the Only Rivals of real Diamonds, of which they are an exact representation.

Book of illustrations post free for the asking. Address:

OLLVAAN, Rgd., 227, Regent St.

REAL GERMAN HOLLOW GROUND

KROPP RAZOR

Black Handle 5/6 | Pair, Ivory Handles, in Russia Leather Case, 21/- | Kropp's Duplex Strop 7/6
Ivory Handle 7/6 | | Kropp's Strop Paste ...6d.

Wholesale: OSBORNE, GARRETT, & CO., LONDON, W.

Write for Pamphlet, "Shaver's Kit and Outfit," sent post free.

WELCOME IN EVERY HOME!

The POLYPHON Musical Box with Interchangeable Steel Discs, is the greatest novelty of the age. It plays to perfection any air from the Operas, or renders most brilliantly any selections of secular or sacred music which a purchaser may desire.

All Dealers, or write for Illustrated No. 50 Catalogue, post free.

	The Infanta.	The Kleberg.	The Gordon.	The Eugene.
With 6 Discs	32/-	51/-	85/-	170/-
Extra Discs	5d.	8d.	1/4	2/6

For Higher Priced Instruments see Catalogue.

NICOLE FRÈRES, LTD.
21, Ely Place, London E.C.

COLEMAN'S WINCARNIS

Is a delicious beverage and tonic made from Port Wine, Liebig's Extract of Meat and Extract of Malt.

OVER FIVE THOUSAND

Unsolicited Testimonials have been received from Medical Men.

The following Important Testimonial has been received from Dr. FLETCHER.

Applecross, Rosshire, N.B., July 2nd, 1897.

Dear Sirs,—Please forward quarter of a dozen "Wincarnis" immediately as my patient's supply is about done.

I trust there will be no delay, as he takes no other nourishment, and has been sustained and gained strength by "Wincarnis" for twelve weeks. Yours faithfully, DUNCAN FLETCHER, L.R.C.P.

Sole Proprietors and Manufacturers of the above,

COLEMAN & CO., Ltd., NORWICH and LONDON.

Sample Bottle may be had, free of charge, on receipt of full postal address. Sold in Bottles, 2/9 and 4/6.

COLEMAN'S WINCARNIS is strongly recommended by Medical Men in cases of Influenza.

FOR COMPLAINTS of the STOMACH, LIVER, etc., DRINK

VICHY CELESTINS Spring

Sold by all Chemists, Druggists, and Grocers throughout the Kingdom.

Sole Importers: INGRAM & ROYLE, Ltd., 52, Farringdon Street, LONDON, E.C.

AN IDEAL LIGHT

For Tables, Rooms, Conservatories, &c.,
Is obtained by using (GREEN'S PATENT)

ARCTIC LAMPS

FOR CANDLES

Indispensable for all Decorative Lighting.
Safe, Artistic, and Economical.
Specially recommended for use in Country Houses & Shooting Boxes
The "Gondola" Table Decoration.

No. 155.—White China Gondola for ferns or flowers, complete with Arctic Lamp and Silk Shade. Price 15/- each. Postage 6d. extra.

Send for Illustrated Catalogue of Novelties for Table and Room Decoration, Free by Post.

Price of the Arctic Lamps only:—6in. for Small Candlesticks, Brass Mounts, 4s. 6d., Plated, 5s. 3d. each. 8in. for Small Candlesticks, Brass Mounts, 5s., Plated, 5s. 9d. each. Specially prepared Candles for burning in above 1s. 4d. & 2s. per box of 12. SOLD EVERYWHERE

They can be seen in use, with all accessories, at the Showrooms of

THE ARCTIC LIGHT CO., 179, Regent St. London, W.

Nearly Opposite Liberty's. Wholesale Offices: 49, Hatton Garden, E.C.

CARTER 6A NEW CAVENDISH ST. PORTLAND PLACE, LONDON.

ONLY ADDRESS OF ORIGINAL CARTER

LITERARY MACHINE.

For holding book, lamp, meals, &c., in any position over an easychair, bed, or sofa.

Deliciously luxurious. A most useful gift. Prices from 17/6

INVALID FURNITURE.

ADJUSTABLE COUCHES and BEDS from £1. 10/-

Bed Lift £3. 10/-
Reclining Boards, 25/-
Walking Machines
Portable W.C.'s,
Electric Bells,
Urinals, &c.
Air & Water Beds.

Bed Rests 7/6
Leg Rests 10/-
Crutches 10/6
Bed Baths 12/6
Commodes, £1. 5/-

Carrying Chairs from £1.

Self-Propelling Chairs from £2

Breakfast in Bed Tables from 30/-

BATH CHAIRS FROM £1. 5/-

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUES POST FREE.

JOHN CARTER, 6a, NEW CAVENDISH ST. Portland-pl. London, W.

A REMARKABLE PIPE! Why? Because

The "MASTA" Pipe

Absolutely carries out what is claimed for it—viz., Simplicity of Construction, Perfect Freedom from Nicotine, No Choking, Cool, Dry, Sweet, Clean, & Healthful Smoking.

Prices from 1/6, 2/6, 3/6. Your Tobacconist will supply it. If any delay, write The "Masta" Patent Pipe Co., 153, Fleet-street, London, E.C.

What Smokers say:—Gr. R. KNOX, R.M.A., H.M.S. Victorious, Channel Fleet, Gibraltar, Oct. 23rd, 1897, writes—"I think the 'Masta' the nearest to perfection I have ever tried, and would advise every smoker who likes a pleasant smoke to get one."

VINOLIA TOILET REQUISITES.

4d PREMIER VINOLIA SOAP
(For Family Use)

For Delicate, Sensitive, Irritable Skins.

The CHEMIST AND DRUGGIST reports "An ideal soap, delightfully perfumed."

1/- per box of 3 Tablets.

6d FLORAL VINOLIA SOAP
(For Private Use).

Keeps the Skin as soft as Velvet.

The MEDICAL NEWS reports:— "Beautifully emollient and softening to the skin."

1/6 per Box of 3 Tablets.

10d TOILET VINOLIA SOAP
(OTTO)

Scented with Choice Otto of Rose Perfume.

Beautifies the Complexion.

The GENTLEWOMAN reports: "Strongly recommended to keep the skin smooth and free from roughness."

2/6 per Box of 3 Tablets.

3½d UNSCENTED VINOLIA SOAP.

Keeps the Complexion clear.

The EDINBURGH MEDICAL JOURNAL reports: "Unscented Vinolia Soap cleanses the skin thoroughly and pleasantly, and at the same time leaves it soft, cool, and smooth."

10½d. per Box of 3 Tablets.

6d BLONDEAU TOILET SOAPS
(Favourite Brand).

You may now obtain Vinolia Soap perfumed with any scent you prefer.
Jequilla Soap, Marequil Soap, Heliotrope Soap, Musk Lavender Soap, Maréchal Niel Soap, Opoponax Soap, White Rose Soap, Baby Soap, Violet Soap, Lys de France Soap, Shampoo Soap, Oriental Soap, Lettuce Soap, White Rose & Cucumber Soap, Jasmin Soap, Cold Cream Soap, Cucumber and Glycerine Soap.
1/6 per Box of 3 Tablets.

1/1½ VINOLIA CREAM

For Itching. Face Spots. Chaps, Chilblains

The LANCET reports: "An emollient cream for the skin in eczema, rash, eruptions, &c."

1/1½, 1/9, 3/6, and 6/- per Box.

1/- VINOLIA POWDER

For Redness, Roughness, Toilet Nursery, &c.

The LADY'S PICTORIAL reports: "Superseding the old-fashioned toilet powders which are apt to cause acne spots on the face by blocking up the pores of the skin."

In White, Pink, and Cream Tints.
1/-, 1/9, 3/6, and 6/- per Box.

6d VINOLIA SHAVING SOAP.
(STICKS AND FLAT CAKES)

Causes no Blotches.

STICKS: Premier 6d., Toilet 1/-, 1/6, 2/6. Vestal, 2/-.

FLAT CAKES: Premier 1/-, Toilet 2/-, Vestal 2/6.

Vinolia Shaving Cream, For using without Brush and Water. 9d.

6d LYPSYL.

A Coralline Emollient for Dry, Rough, Cracked, or Pallid Lips.
In Rose-Red and White Tints. 6d and 1/- a Tube.

1/- VINOLIA LAVENDER WATER.

Natural and Very Lasting.

Contains the finest Essential Oils, Concentrated, therefore the Most Economical.

In 1-oz., 2-oz., 4-oz., & 8-oz. Bottles.
6d., 1/-, 2/-, and 3/6.

2d BLONDEAU TOILET SOAPS.
(BRITANNIA BRAND).

Guaranteed Neutral and Pure.

1/- per Box of 6 Tablets

(Assorted Colours and Perfumes).

6d PREMIER VINOLIA DENTIFRICE

Aromatic, Tonic, Refreshing, Preservative.
Keeps the Teeth Ivory White.
Premier, in Round Box and Glass Bottle, 6d.
English—2 6.
American—1 6.
VINOLIA TOOTH PASTE.
Delicately Perfumed 6d

6d BLONDEAU CARBOLIC TOOTH POWDER.

Contains no Grit or Mineral Acids.

In Round Metal Box, 6d. & 1/-.

6d BLONDEAU PERFUMES

Concentrated, Delicate, Pure

*Vinolia Bouquet, *Marequil, *Jequilla, *Losaria, Wood Violet, White Heliotrope, Ess. Bouquet, Frangipanni, Jockey Club, Maréchal Niel, Millefleur, White Rose, Jasmin, Musk Rose, Honeysuckle, New Mown Hay, Lily of the Valley, Rondeletia, Hyacinth, Ylang Ylang, Stephanotis, Opoponax, Patchouli, Musk, Ambergris, Amaryllis, White Lilac, Narcissus, Chypre, Violette de Parme, Mignonette, Clematis, Wallflower, Violet, *Rhine Violets, Peau d'Espagne.

6d., 1/-, 2/-, 3/-, and 5/- per bottle.

* These perfumes are not supplied in the 6d. quality.

1/- Vinolia Hair Wash

Freshens and Revivifies the Hair.

In two kinds, Dry and Moist, 1/- per bottle.

In 3 odours: Portugal, Rose, and Violet.

1/- VINOLIA EAU DE COLOGNE.

Fragrant. Refreshing.

As fine as can possibly be made.

The "Court Circular" reports: "Vinolia Eau de Cologne we consider is absolutely unequalled for strength, purity, and delicacy of aroma."

6d., 1/-, 2/-, 3/3, and 5/6.

3d per 2-oz. Packet VINOLIA VIOLET POWDER.

Sanitary. Antiseptic. Soothing.

Specially prepared for Toilet and Nursery use.

In 2-oz. Packets, 3d. In ¼-lb. Packet or Tin, 6d.

BLONDEAU ET CIE., MALDEN CRESCENT, LONDON, N.W.

HILDITCH'S ANNUAL SILK SALE

Great Reductions.

Patterns forwarded.

NOW ON.

11 & 12, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON.

USE ONLY

BLAISDELL PENCILS

SELF-POINTING.

ALL COLOURS.

ALL GRADES.

No Waste. Best Leads.

SOLD EVERYWHERE. Sample Box 1/-

BLAISDELL PENCILS LIMITED,
46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

"The Old Favourite."

MAX GREGER'S CARLOWITZ

SAFEST,
SOUNDEST
Dinner Wine.

PURE
HUNGARIAN BURGUNDY.

From 15/- per doz.

Of all Wine Merchants and Grocers.

See that every cork bears the brand "Max Greger." Without it the wine is not genuine.

1,000,000 SCOTCH FIR PLANTS

From the Highlands of Scotland,
TO BE SOLD AT HALF USUAL PRICE.

SIZES TO OFFER SPECIAL.

	Sale Price.	Usual Price.
1 to 1½ feet high	12s. 1,000	20s. 1,000
1½ to 2 feet high	14s. 1,000	24s. 1,000
1½ to 2½ feet high	18s. 1,000	30s. 1,000
2 to 3 feet high	20s. 1,000	40s. 1,000

Orders exceeding £25 delivered Carriage Free.

All are thoroughly good plants in every way, and are grown from seeds collected in the celebrated Forests of Strathspey. They can therefore be relied upon as the best procurable, and are sure to do well, when planted out into cold and bleak situations.

National Telephone No. "One."

WISEMAN,
NURSERYMAN,
ELGIN.

Telegrams; "Wiseman, Elgin."

Established 1850. General Nursery Catalogue Free.
NOTE.—Please quote the above Special Prices when ordering.

WATER ABSOLUTELY FREE FROM DISEASE GERMS, BY USING THE

BERKEFELD FILTER

FOR THE PRIVATE HOUSE OFFICE, FACTORY, HOTELS RESTAURANTS, CLUBS, &c. &c.

Can be Easily and Cheaply Fixed to the Service-Pipe of any HOUSE having ordinary pressure.

Supplied to H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES, DUKE OF WESTMINSTER, K.G., and others too numerous to mention; THE HOUSE OF LORDS, and THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Glass and Earthenware Table Filters, price from 8s. 9d. each.
In use in all the Principal Hotels. Simple in Construction. Most easily cleaned.
PRICE FOR FILTER AS ABOVE, 42s.
SMALLER SIZE, 25s.
For other prices see price-lists.
Offices and Show-Rooms:
The BERKEFELD FILTER Co. Ltd.
121 Oxford St. London W.

NOTE.—Joseph Lunt, B.Sc., F.C.S., British Institute of Preventive Medicine, in his report on the Berkefeld Filter, says, "Exhaustive experiments showed that with London tap-water strongly infected artificially WITH THE TYPHOID BACILLUS, not a single typhoid bacillus was detected IN THE FILTERED WATER for a period of 26 days."

No Country House Should Be Without One.

City Depot: W. SCHACHT & CO., 26, Finsbury Pavement, E.C.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.
Clarke's "Pyramid" and "Fairy" Light Co., Ltd., Cricklewood, London, N.W.

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER

Prevents the Hair from falling off.
Restores Grey or White Hair to its ORIGINAL COLOUR.
Being delicately perfumed it leaves no unpleasant odour.
IS NOT a dye, and therefore does not stain the skin or even white linen.
Should be in every house where a HAIR RENEWER is needed.
Ask your Chemist or Hairdresser for

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER.

Price 3s. 6d. per large Bottle.

Prepared only by the

ANGLO-AMERICAN DRUG COMPANY, Ltd.,
83, FARRINGDON ROAD, LONDON, E.C.

FLORILINE

FOR THE TEETH AND BREATH.

IS THE BEST LIQUID DENTIFRICE IN THE WORLD.

Prevents the Decay of Teeth.
Renders the Teeth Pearly White.
Is perfectly Harmless and Delicious to the Taste.

Of all Chemists and Perfumers throughout the World 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE TOOTH POWDER

Put up in Glass Jars, price 1s.

WOMEN'S LONDON GARDENING ASSOCIATION,
COURT FLORISTS,
62 and 64,
Lower Sloane-st., S.W.

ORIGINAL TABLE DECORATIONS.

Home-made JAMS, JELLIES, FRUIT-PICKLES, CONFECTIONERY, &c.

Bouquets, Sprays, Wreaths, and Floral Decorations of all kinds.

The Best CHAINLESS Cycle!

1898 THE BANTAM 1898

New Regd. 'Alpha' Frame.

List, Testimonials, and "Notes on the Bantam," free; also particulars of Bantamette, Crypto Safety, Gardner Back-Pedalling Brake, Collier 2-Speed Gear, Crypto Carrier-Cab, &c.

CRYPTO WORKS CO., LTD.,
29, CLERKENWELL ROAD, LONDON, E.C.

HAVE YOU TRIED
CEPHALIA
For HAY FEVER, NEURALGIC PAINS, & COLDS in the HEAD, &c.?
If not, send 13½d. for a Box to
REECE & CO., Medical Hall, Piccadilly, London.
EFFECT SIMPLY MIRACULOUS.

Shall We Send You a Cat

ALOGUE OF GREENHOUSES from 30s.? BLOCK POULTRY AND RUSTIC HOUSES, IRON BUILDINGS, CHICKEN HOUSE RUNS AND COOPS, TIMBER, IRON, GLASS, AND SUNDRIES.
CLEARANCE SALE NOW ON
at extraordinary Low Prices to clear. Send to-day, as when once cleared, cannot be replaced at anything like the price.
W. COOPER,
Horticultural Provider, 755, Old Kent Rd. London, S.E.

PRESS OPINIONS
ON PALMERS' EXHIBIT AT THE STANLEY SHOW,
LONDON.

"There is no better workmanship nor a sounder mount to be seen at the Stanley Show."—Wheeling.
"The firm are to be congratulated on the quality of the machines they are turning out."—The Cyclist.
"Certainly one of the most interesting shows in the hall."—Cycling.
"The machines are certainly amongst the best."—Cyclers' News.
"Perfect, as one's knowledge of perfection goes."—Scottish Cyclist.
"The finish of the whole exhibit is of the finest description."—The Irish Cyclist.
"A machine that would make any agent proud, and is bound to make a name for itself."—Irish Wheelman.
"Leaves very little to be desired."—Sketch.
"Splendid machines."—Sportsman.
"On splendid lines."—Sheffield Telegraph.
"Effectively displayed, and calculated to easily commend themselves to possible customers."—St. James's Gazette.
"Solid and simple."—Manchester Courier.
"Veritable masterpieces in the art of finish."—Newcastle Journal.
"Built with great care and neatness, and displaying a perfect finish."—Newcastle Leader.
"A collection of mechanical triumphs."—Durham Chronicle.
"A very attractive and valuable exhibit."—Shipping Gazette.

PALMERS' CYCLES
MANUFACTURED BY
PALMERS' SHIPBUILDING AND IRON CO., LTD.
JARROW-ON-TYNE.
LONDON DEPOT: 18, HOLBORN VIADUCT, E.C.

WHAT IS IT?

, an ATTACHMENT
SPEAKING-TUBE
neans of which can carry on a ined conversation need only have one ment for 6 or ibes.

Showrooms: 6 Bruton-street, New Bond-street, W.

Best is Cheapest. Fixed prices.

TRADE MARK
Dr. JAEGER'S SANITARY WOOLLEN SYSTEM CO. LIMITED
SOLE CONCESSIONARIES
PURE WARRANTED WOOL

PROTECTION FROM CHILL.

Jaeger

PURE WOOL
Underwear, Hose, Pyjamas, Rugs, Blankets, Cashmere Sheets, Dressing Gowns, Shawls, Corsets, Cycling Outfits, Boots & Shoes, Hats and Caps, &c., &c.

"Health Culture" and Jaeger Price List Free.

3 and 4, PRINCES-STREET, CAVENDISH-SQUARE (near Regent-circus).
126, REGENT-STREET (near the Quadrant).
30, SLOANE-STREET (adjoining McPherson's Gymnasium).
456, STRAND (near Trafalgar-square).
85 and 86, CHEAPSIDE (near King-street).
TAILORING (only):—
42, CONDUIT-STREET, NEW BOND-STREET, W.

Goddard's Plate Powder
SIX GOLD MEDALS.

Non-Mercurial.
THE BEST and SAFEST article for CLEANING SILVER and ELECTRO PLATE. Sold in Boxes, 1s., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. each, by Grocers, Oilmen, Chemists, &c., everywhere.

HUNDREDS OF TONS
HUNDREDS OF TONS
OF
HAIR ARE USED EVERY YEAR
BY
MAPLE & CO

IN THE MANUFACTURE OF MATTRESSES

These Mattresses are made and finished in the most perfect manner, affording that measure of elasticity which is delightfully restful without being enervating.

Comfortable Hair Mattresses for Single Beds can be supplied for 27s. 6d., or for Double Beds at 42s.

SPECIAL PRICE LISTS of BEDDING POST FREE.

MAPLE & CO
LONDON AND PARIS

The SUBSCRIPTION LISTS will be open on TUESDAY, JANUARY 25th, and CLOSE for TOWN and COUNTRY on or before FRIDAY, JANUARY 28th, 1898, at FOUR p.m.

THE MOUNT LYELL PROPRIETARY MINES, LIMITED.

Incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1893.

CAPITAL - - £500,000,

In Shares of £1 each.

ISSUE OF 400,000 SHARES AT PAR.

Payable: 5s. on Application, 5s. on Allotment, 5s. February 25th next, and 5s. March 25th next, or the whole amount can be paid up in full on Allotment.

Of this issue, £100,000 in Cash or Shares is for Working Capital, leaving 100,000 Shares in reserve for additional Working Capital.

DIRECTORS.

SINCLAIR MACLEAY (Director the Ivanhoe Gold Corporation, Limited), 157, Winchester House, E.C.
D. E. CARDINALL (Director and Trustee for the Debenture Holders of the Manchester Brewery Company, Limited), 18, Cromwell-road, Brighton.
EDMOND KASTOR, 7, Rue Meyerbeer, Paris.
GERARD WELMAN, late Government Secretary, Selangor, Straits Settlements.
ALBERT T. WRIGHT (Messrs. Wright, Becket, & Co.), Water-street, Liverpool.
The Vendors have the right to nominate another Director after allotment.

Tasmanian Advisory Board.

The Hon. NICHOLAS J. BROWN, Member House Assembly, Member Executive Council, and late Minister of Mines and Public Works for the Colony of Tasmania, Hobart.
The Hon. N. E. LEWIS, Member Executive Council, and late Attorney-General for the Colony of Tasmania, Hobart.
A. G. D. BERNACCHI, J.P., Hobart.

Consulting Engineer.

MACNAMARA RUSSELL, Member Institute of Civil Engineers, 57A, Park-street, Grosvenor-square, W.

Bankers.

THE LONDON AND MIDLAND BANK, Limited, 52, Cornhill, E.C., and Branches. In Australia—Bank of Australasia.

Brokers.

G. H. and A. M. JAY, 17, Old Broad-street, and Stock Exchange, London; PIXTON & COPPOCK, 12, Half Moon-street, Manchester. JAMES KIRKWOOD & SON, 62, Buchanan-street, Glasgow; R. G. LAWS, 12, Mount Stuart-square, Cardiff.

Solicitors to the Company.—ASHURST, MORRIS, CRISP & CO., 17, Throgmorton-avenue, E.C.

Solicitors to the Vendors.—BLYTH, DUTTON, HARTLEY, & BLYTH, 112, Gresham House, Old Broad-street, E.C.

Auditors.—CRAIG, GARDNER, & CO., 41, Moorgate-street, E.C., and at Dublin and Belfast.

Secretary (pro tem.) and Offices.—E. A. HORNE, 8, Princes-street, Bank, E.C.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This company is formed for the purpose of acquiring and working on an extended scale the remarkable copper properties lately owned by the Great Southern Mount Lyell Mining Syndicate (of Melbourne) (no liability), in the colony of Tasmania, and covering an area of 567 acres or thereabouts. The properties to be acquired by this company comprise the following mineral leases formerly held upon the usual conditions by the following local companies for terms of 21 years, renewable: (1) The Lyell Minerals Company, Limited; (2) Mount Lyell Tinto Company; (3) Lyell Junction Company; and (4) the original Great Southern Mount Lyell Syndicate. In addition to the above there are also included several adjoining leases originally granted to private individuals.

These properties are all situated in the immediate vicinity of the justly famous property owned by the Mount Lyell Mining and Railway Company, and consist of two blocks of 40 and 527 acres respectively. The boundary of the former block is about 66ft. east from the renowned "Crotty's Iron Blow," where the Mount Lyell Mining and Railway Company's principal workings are situated; it also adjoins on the North the King Lyell Mine. The block of 527 acres is separted from the smaller block of 40 acres by a narrow strip of land (to the south-east) belonging to the Mount Lyell Mining and Railway Company. The 40-acres block was selected and pegged out in August, 1891, by Mr. Macnamara Russell, M.I.C.E., and by Mr. A. Kelly. Its great value may be judged by its close proximity to Crotty's Iron Blow, the most wonderful copper deposit which probably the world has ever known. The properties are coloured blue on the map which accompanies the Prospectus.

THE 40-ACRE BLOCK.

Mr. G. Thureau, F.G.S., late Government Geologist and Chief Inspector of Mines, Tasmania, has made an exhaustive report on this block, which, as already stated, immediately adjoins the parent mine.

THE 527 ACRES.

Mr. George D. Gibson, M.A., Institute M.E., has made exhaustive reports upon the Company's territory comprised in the above-mentioned 527 acres, and which is almost the immediate extension south-easterly from the Great Mount Lyell Mine.

Having regard to the large area to be acquired by this Company, the Directors contemplate eventually the formation of subsidiary companies, to take over and work portions of the property.

The Mount Lyell Mining Company's railway line is now in operation, and by its statute that Company is under obligation to carry for the public. The North Mount Lyell Company have also recently obtained an Act, enabling them to construct another line to the coast, and this railway when completed will also be available for public traffic.

Application will be made for a Stock Exchange settlement and quotation of the Shares in due course.

Applications may be made for Shares on the forms accompanying the Prospectus.

Copies of the memorandum and articles of association of the Company, together with the above-mentioned reports and contracts, can be inspected at the Offices of the Company's solicitors.

Prospectuses and forms of application for Shares may be obtained from the Company's bankers, solicitors, brokers, or secretary, from whom all information can be obtained.

London, 21st January, 1898.

For the Weary, Wakeful, & Sick!

The

GORHAM BEDSTEAD

Doctors recommend.
Nurses delighted.
Press unanimous.

Buy or Hire it.

RELIEVES PAIN.

The British Medical Journal says:—"By means of a Gorham Bedstead any invalid may be placed in a reclining or sitting position, turned on the side, lifted and swung in an easy hammock, or placed sitting at table for eating, reading, or writing, by simply turning a wheel."

Fracture Patient using foot and seat rest for meals.

Now in use in the Principal Families & Hospitals

Write to-day for Illustrated Price List, Post Free from the

GORHAM PATENT BEDSTEAD Co. Ld,
3 to 6, South Place, Moorgate Street, London, E.C.

The Public Benefactor.

HOVIS BREAD

DISTRIBUTES HEALTH.

No loaf genuine unless stamped HOVIS.

All good class Bakers make and sell Hovis.

Hovis Flour and Biscuits can be obtained from all leading Bakers and Grocers, or 6d. and 1s. samples will be sent on receipt of stamps by—

S. FITTON & SON, Hovis Mills, Macclesfield.

PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.—Holborn Bars, London.

EVERY DESCRIPTION OF LIFE ASSURANCE AND ANNUITY BUSINESS TRANSACTED.
REVERSIONS PURCHASED.

Invested Funds, £30,000,000.

The last Annual Report can be obtained on application to the Secretary.

SPECIAL ADVANTAGES TO PRIVATE INSURERS.

THE IMPERIAL INSURANCE COMPANY, LIMITED. FIRE. Est. 1803, 1, Old Broad-st., E.C., & 22, Pall Mall, S.W. Subd. Capital, £1,200,000. Paid-up, £300,000. Total funds, over £1,500,000.—E. COZENS SMITH, Gen. Man.

SUN INSURANCE OFFICE

63, Threadneedle-street, London, E.C.

THE OLDEST PURELY FIRE OFFICE IN THE WORLD

SUN FIRE OFFICE FOUNDED 1710.

SUM INSURED IN 1896 - £388,952,800.

BIRKBECK BANK (Estab. 1851), Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane, London. Two and a-half per cent. interest allowed on deposits, repayable on demand. Two per cent. on current accounts, on the minimum monthly balances when not below £100.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK with particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

LONDON AND COUNTY ADVANCE AND DISCOUNT COMPANY, Limited.—Cash advanced from £10 to £500, without preliminary fees or deductions for interest, for short or long periods, repayable by easy instalments, at moderate rates, upon approved security. Bills Discounted. Forms free. Offices, 57 and 58, Chancery-lane, W.C.—JOHN STONE, Secretary.

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

NOTICE.

No Member of the Stock Exchange is allowed to advertise for business purposes, or to issue circulars to persons other than his own principals.

Persons who advertise as Brokers or Share Dealers are not Members of the Stock Exchange, or under the control of the Committee.

A List of Members of the Stock Exchange who are Stock and Share Brokers may be seen at the Bartholomew-lane Entrance to the Bank of England, or obtained on application to

EDWARD SATTERTHWAITE,
Secretary to the Committee of the Stock Exchange.
Committee Room, The Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

BALTIMORE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY 5 PER CENT. GOLD BONDS, due 1925.

The undersigned are prepared to purchase on and after February 1st next, the coupons maturing on that date at their face value on Bonds of the above issue, which have been deposited with them, and will pay the amount thereof at the rate of 49 5-16d. per $, being £5 2s. 9d. per coupon, less English Income Tax, to the Holders of Trust Receipts issued under the Agreement of April 10th, 1896.

The Trust Receipts must be lodged for that purpose at the Offices of the undersigned, 7, Lothbury, London, E.C., and left three days in order that such purchase may be stamped thereon.

The suit of the Union Trust Company mentioned in the advertisement of August 3rd, 1897, is still pending.

London, January 24th, 1898. SPEYER BROTHERS.

"TRITICINE" FOR INVALIDS.

Toilet "Lanoline" For Delicate and Sensitive Skins. 6d. AND 1s.

"LANOLINE" Toilet Preparations "LANOLINE"

Dartring Brand. from all Chemists.

Wholesale Depôt:—67 HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON.

"Lanoline" Toilet Soap For Health and Beauty of the Skin. 6d. PER TABLET. 3 IN A BOX 1s. 6d.

THE LATE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD,
SIR MORELL MACKENZIE,
OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES,
MISS EMILY FAITHFUL,
THE LATE GEN. W. T. SHERMAN,

and many other persons of distinction, have testified to the remarkable efficacy of Himrod's Cure for Asthma.

Established over a Quarter of a Century.

Prescribed by the Medical Faculty throughout the world. It is used as an Inhalation and without any after bad effects. A free Sample and detailed testimonials free by post. In tins, 4s. 3d. British Depôt: 46, Holborn Viaduct, London; also of NEWBERY & SONS, BARCLAY & SONS, LYNCH & CO., J. SANGER & SONS, W. EDWARDS & SON, MAY, ROBERTS, & CO., BUTLER & CRISPE, JOHN THOMPSON, Liverpool, and all wholesale Houses.

The PARISIAN DIAMOND CO.

"ORIENT" PEARL and DIAMOND CROWN.
A very exquisitely executed piece of Diamond work. Price £80 0 0.

THE "Orient" Pearls.
THE COMPANY'S GREAT SPÉCIALITÉ.

143, Regent St., W,
THE COMPANY'S NEW BRANCH
(Opposite Liberty's, Chesham House).

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1889.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE POST FREE.

DIAMOND TIARA.
New Design. Set à jour in Real Diamond Mounts.
Price £27 0 0.

143, Regent St., W.
43, Burlington Arcade, W.

85, New Bond St., W.
And in Paris.

OUR PUZZLES.

RULES.

1. The sum of £2. 2s. will be given every week for the best EPIGRAM, CONUNDRUM, LIPOGRAM, BOUTS-RIMÉS, or whatever the announced subject of the competition for the week may be.
2. The Puzzle Editor reserves the right, however, of dividing the above sum between two or more competitors, or of withholding the prize, should exceptional circumstances render such a course desirable.
3. The decision and award of the Puzzle Editor must be considered final and irrevocable, and, for obvious reasons, no appeal from his critical judgments can be entertained.
4. In every instance the prize will be given in money, subject to no condition whatever, except the publication of the winner's real name and address in this journal.
5. Competitors will be allowed eleven days for the composition and despatch of their efforts; but all such communications must, at the latest, be received at the TRUTH OFFICE by the first post on the morning of the second Monday succeeding the publication of the subject for competition.
6. Not more than one Prize will be given a Quarter to the same competitor.
7. ALL NEW CONTRIBUTORS ARE REQUIRED TO FORWARD WITH THEIR FIRST ANSWERS THEIR REAL NAMES AND ADDRESSES FOR REGISTRATION; such names and addresses will not be published except in the case of Prize-winners.
8. The nom-de-plume chosen by competitors should not exceed 12, and must under no circumstances consist of more than 14, letters.
9. COMPETITORS MUST ON NO ACCOUNT CHANGE THEIR NOMS-DE-PLUME THEY HAVE ONCE ASSUMED.
10. On the announcement of the Prize-winner's nom-de-plume, the successful competitor must write and make formal application for the Prize, stating the address to which the cheque must be sent. Any competitor failing to do so within three months of winning the Prize will forfeit all claim to the same.
11. No communications can be received on post-cards, by telegraph, or by hand. They must all be sent by the time named above. All post letters addressed—

PUZZLE EDITOR OF "TRUTH," CARTERET-STREET, QUEEN ANNE'S-GATE, S.W.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 977.—AMUSING SAYING OF A CHILD.

PENDARLEY (real name and address will be published in due course) £2 2 0

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 987.—SUGGESTION FOR A ROUND GAME.

PAT-A-CAKE (real name and address will be published in due course) £1 1 0
AVIS (real name and address will be published in due course) £1 1 0

"TRUTH" TOY AND DOLL SHOW.—SPECIAL NOTICE.

Several prize-winners at the recent TRUTH Show have as yet failed to write for the prizes. May I ask them to make their selection at once, so that the prize distribution can be completed without delay.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

J. C.—The Rules of the Puzzle Competition forbid such a concession as you ask.

MUMPS.—I fail to see the analogy.

W. GIBSON.—The suggestion is a good one, and I thank you for it. As a fact, however, a similar competition was given in TRUTH about two years ago.

THE PUZZLE EDITOR.

"TRUTH" PUZZLES, Nos. 986 AND 988.

The result of these two competitions will be announced when Competitions Nos. 989 and 991 are decided.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 992.

The usual prize of Two Guineas is offered this week for

THE BEST UP-TO-DATE PARODY OF BRET HARTE'S WELL-KNOWN VERSES "THE HEATHEN CHINEE."

The number of lines in the original must not be exceeded, and I need scarcely say that the rhythm and rhymes of the original should be adhered to as far as possible. All answers must reach me by the morning of Monday, February 7, at the latest.

"TRUTH" PUZZLE, No. 989.—ASSORTED SPECIMENS—GOOD AND OTHERWISE.

SELECTIONS OF THE BEST EPITAPHS ON (A) A PRIME MINISTER, (B) A 'BUS CONDUCTOR, (C) A LOW COMEDIAN, (D) A RAILWAY GUARD, (E) A STOCKBROKER.

A. Resigned to fate, not fated to resign. Quatre-ras. B. Though he liked a short fare better, he ook a long fare-well. G. R. M. C. Set up on high hose that be low. C. F. Reid. D. We must all ravel in his train. Elk. E. Anticipating "Arise."
inona.—Violette.

A. For now he hath obtained more excellent ministry." C. F. Reid. B. He has taken his last ire well. Roughty, Granite, and Ooloo. C. Restig. Mandeville, Pigtail. D. All change here. ustic. E. Anticipating "Arise." Sinona. — eorgina.

A. A prey to dissolution. Mac. B. Always ehind—he is now gone before. Melrose. C. One hom the "gods" loved. Roughty. D. He sleeps ithout a break. Quilp. E. On earth a bull, a ag, a bear, but human bones lie sleeping here.
'earside.—Bredon.

A. Dissolution has placed him in a great majority.
uilp. B. Mates, he has moved "higher up."
hittabob. C. He passes from the comic to the ave. Excelsior. D. Now in the train of the ints. Gallio. E. He died because he had no ption. Quilp.—Gallio.

A. Returned to (higher) power with an overhelming majority, Treddust. B. He had to travel underground at last. Gallio. C. He has played any a humorous rôle, now comes the grave.
perenza. D. He was ever in the van. Welsh arp, Quatrebras. E. Awaiting settlement of count after a deal in futures—with no option.
er Glowe.—A. D. P.

A. He has been sent for. Wig and Gown. B.
ways behind, he is now gone before. Melrose. C. rtain. Tan Tun. D Among the sleepers still. andeville. E. He got below par and broke. Wild yme.—Wild Thyme.

A. Dissolution at last. Melrose. B. Always hind, he is now gone before. Melrose. C. From y to grave. The last was his first tragic exit.
loo. D. He was ever in the van. Welsh Harp.
Waiting for a rise. Mac.—Neptune.

A. A prey to dissolution. Mac. B. He has taken last fare well. Roughty. C. From gay to ve. Triumph. D. We must all change. Mer-cutio. E. He died because he had no option. Quilp.
—Scotus Viator.

A. (Prime Minister). Here rests a great leader awaiting a coming session. Elk. B. (Bus Conductor.) Peace evermore, he lies inside who stood outside before. Triumph. C. (Low Comedian.) A higher rôle he plays now—drawn from life. Treddust. D. (Railway Guard.) He sleeps without a break. Quilp. E. (Stockbroker.) Life is a fluctuating game, here lies one who played it well. Violet. —Scotia.

A. For now he hath obtained more excellent ministry. C. F. Reid. B. Mors mihi omnibusque finis. Apemantus. C. Let not the pit shut her mouth upon me. Eston Villa. D. We must all change. Mercutio. E In this corner he confidently awaits a rise at the final settlement. Kappa. —Comma.

A. His place his safe with the majority. Ludwig B. B. Always behind, he is now gone before. Melrose. C. I've left the stage, and now occupy the pit. Apemantus. D. Among the sleepers still. Mandeville. E. Lying low, waiting for a rise. Ludwig B.—Ginger.

A. A prey to dissolution. Mac. B. Last home journey. Tan Tun. C. He has made his final exit. Wig and Gown. D. Waiting for the signal. Sinona. E. He has carried his account to the other side. Espèrance.—Nurse.

A. A prey to dissolution. Mac. B. He aspired to the box, and got it when death hailed him. Cochran Field. C. From gay to grave. Triumph. D. God guard him in death who was our guard in life. C. M. P. E. Waiting for a rise. Mac.—Viresco.

A. Resigned to fate, not fated to resign. Quatrebras. B. All the way. Frivola. C. From gay to grave. Rustic. D. All change here. Rustic. E. Ready for the last call. Welsh Harp.—Moonstone.

A. He has gone where there are no oppositions or divisions. J. M'Grigor Allan. B. He has given up the 'buses, and gone Underground. Great Gun. C. He'll tread the boards no more, but we hope the golden floor. Chittabob. D. May no signals be against him, may he keep away from the "stoker." Xnihps. E. His stock remains at par, waiting for a rise. Neko.—Blanche.

A. He has gone to take his seat in the Upper House. B. Mors omnibus communis. C. One whom the "gods" loved. D. We must all travel in his train. E. Gone to meet his last account.—Ivy Leaves.

A. He whom majorities followed now follows the majority. Mercutio. B. He has taken his last fare well. Roughty. C. From gay to grave. Triumph. D. His travelling days are o'er. Enigma. E. He awaits the great settling day. Wig and Gown.—N. C. N.

A. I have rest, the Commonwealth repose. Daniel. B. Mors omnibus communis. C. The last act crowns the play. D. A man can earn his Victoria Cross in charge of railway trains. E. He deserved hanging, but he died in his bed.—Paddy.

A. Resigned to fate, not fated to resign. Quatrebras. B. Formerly he went behind, now he's gone before. Simonides. C. From gay to grave. Simonides. D. All change here. Rustic. E. Waiting for a rise. Mac.—Seton.

A. Of his calling and election sure. Gallio. B. Gone to render his account. Sinona. C. He has passed from gay to grave. Almaviva. D. He rests after a long journey. Almaviva. E. Gone to his final settlement and account. Apemantus.—Geneva.

A. Summoned by Black Rod to the Upper House. Cogerach. B. He has taken his last fare well. Roughty. C. One whom the "gods" loved Roughty. D. He slips without a break. Quilp. E He has gone a deal further. A. E. L.—Yalgogrin.

A. From the steps of a throne a crown of his own. Robert Martin. B. On thy last journey fare thee well. Mandeville. C. From gay to grave. Simonides. Triumph. D. His journey done, his terminus won, he reaches home at last. Violet. E. Gone to his last account; life's ups and downs are o'er. Bredon. —Coloniensis.

A. For now he hath obtained more excellent ministry. C. F. Reid. B. Thou hast taken thy last fare—fare thee well. Esperanza. C. He has passed from gay to grave. Almaviva. D. His travelling days are o'er. Enigma. E. He awaits the great settling day.—Generolf.

A. In recess here he calmly faces a grave situation. Ooloo. B. Who stood so long outside now lies at rest within. Haldon. C. If there be humour here, 'tis dry as dust. Envoy. D. We must all travel in his train. Elk. E. He has speculated much; now he knows. Esperanza (1).—Scissors.

A. O, fading honours of the dead! O, high ambition, lowly laid! Excelsior. B. Who stood so long outside now lies at rest within. Haldon. C. One whom the "gods" loved. Roughty. D. His journey done, his terminus won, he reaches home at last. Violet. E. Tired of this life of change, he rests here. Tonks.—Pickwick.

A. He has gone to take his seat in the Upper House. Esperance. B. Alive, he cried, "there's room above"; dead, he goes to prove it. Violet. C. One whom the "gods" loved. Roughty. D. For years he followed in the van, now he leads the way. Wearside. E. He died because he had no option. Quilp.—Molly Bawn.

A. Dissolution has placed him in a great majority. Quilp. B. His is the blessed assurance of escape from eternal woe (woa!) Quilp. C. A higher rôle he plays now—drawn from life. Treddust. D. He sleeps without a break. Quilp. E. He died because he had no option. Quilp.—Imara.

A. Dissolution at last. Melrose. B. He had to travel by underground at last. Gallio. C. Impersonator of the droll, How has the grave become thy rôle? Great Gun. D. Shunted to up line; awaiting signals. Scissors. E. On earth a bull, a stag, a bear, Yet human bones lie sleeping here. Wearside.—Ne Quid Nimis.

A. He whom majorities followed now follows the majority. Mercutio. B. His last drive was to the Angel. Sceptic. C. Who, losing his wit, fell into the pit. No Nom-de-plume put, but the last in the list. D. God guard him in death, who was our guard in life. C. M. P. E. What shall a man give in exchange for his soul. Aston Villa.—Bluebell.

A. For now he hath obtained a more excellent "ministry." C. F. Reid. B. Last home journey. Tan Tun. C. One whom the "gods" loved. Roughty. D. Waiting for the signal. Sinona. E. He is ready for the last call. Welsh Harp.—Pop.

A. Dissolution at last. Melrose. B. He has taken his last fare well. Roughty (and others). C. From gay to grave. Triumph (and others). D. Waiting for the signal. Sinona. E. He died because he had no option. Quilp.—Bertha.

A. After dissolution he retired from public life. Simonides. B. Changed into an angel. Ludwig B. C. He has played many a humorous rôle, now comes the grave. Esperanza. D. All change here. Rustic. E. Waiting for a rise. Mac.—Leaf Rule.

A. Gone out with the flowing tide. Roughty. B. Peace evermore; he lies inside who stood outside before. Triumph. C. "The gods" propitious, need he fear the "pit." Ludwig B. D. His journey done, his terminus won, he reaches home at last. Violet. E. In-vestment dull, earth holds him for a rise. Treddust.—Profond.

A. A prey to dissolution. Mac. B. He has taken his last "fare"-well. Granite. C. He has passed from gay to grave. Sceptre. D. In many a progressive movement he was in the van. Wig and gown. E. Gone to his final settlement and account. Apemantus.—Nodding Violet.

A. A prey to dissolution. Mac. B. He has taken his last "fare"-well. Granite. C. He has passed from gay to grave. Almaviva. D. He rests among the sleepers. Sceptre. E. He is ready for the last call. Welsh Harp.—Whig.

A. Of his calling and election sure. Gallio. B. Formerly he went behind, now he's gone before. Simonides. C. Let not the pit shut her mouth upon me. Aston Villa. D. Shunted to up line; awaiting signals. Scissors. E. He died because he had no option. Quilp.—Footer.

A. He has been sent for. Wig and Gown. B. Mors omnibus communis. C. F. Reid, Ivy Leaves. C. From gay to grave. Rustic, Triumph. D. Waiting for the signal. Sinona. E. Waiting for a rise. Mac, Frivola.—Cam.

A. He has been sent for. Wig and Gown. B. Higher up. Mac. C. Again he has chosen the better part. Quatrebras. D. Shunted at the terminus. Cogerach. E. Broke by a fall. Waiting for a rise. Wig and Gown.—Zoe.

A. Gone to the country during dissolution. Scissors. B. He has taken his last "fare" well. Granite. C. The "gods" propitious, need he fear the "pit?" Ludwig B. D. Once alert, but now a sleeper in a permanent way. Ooloo. E. Waiting for a rise. Mac.—Ooloo.

A. Dissolution has placed him in a great majority. Quilp. B. Changed into an "Angel." Ludwig B. C. He is keeping the pit in a roar. Melrose. D. We must all travel in his train. Elk. E. Waiting for a rise. Mac and Frivola.—Mercutio.

A. He has been sent for. Wig and Gown. B. He has given up the 'buses, and gone underground. Great Gun. C. One whom the "gods" loved. Roughty. D. He has gone on a journey without a break. A. E. L. E. He died because he had no option. Quilp.—Quilp.

A. Farewell, a long farewell to all my greatness. Tweet. B. Last home journey. Tan tun. C. He is now made up for a new part. Tweet. D. Right away for ever. Tan tun. E. Waiting for a rise. Mac.—Tweet.

A. I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever. Aston Villa. B. Peace evermore; he lies inside who stood outside before. Triumph. C. Impersonator of the drole, how has the grave become thy rôle? Great Gun. D. We must all travel in his train. Elk. E. Though "dropped" awhile, we hope he'll "rise" again. Haldon.—Pelican.

A. For now he hath obtained more excellent ministry. C. F. Reid. B. Though he liked a short fare better, he took a long fare well. G. R. M. C. He played many a humorous rôle, now comes the grave. Esperanza. D. We must all change. Mercutis. E. He died because he had no option. Quilp.—Sinona.

A. Resigned to fate, not fated to resign. Quatrebras. B. Who stood so long outside now lies at rest within. Spaldon. C. Death took him off, who took off everybody. Cochran Field. D. Shunted at the terminus. Cogerach. E. On earth a bull, a stag, a bear, yet human bone lie sleeping here. Wearside.—Me.

A. He has been sent for. Wig and Gown. B. Last home journey. Tan Tun. C. He played his light part and the curtain fell. Elk. D. We must all travel in his train. Elk. E. Broke by a fall, waiting for a rise. Almaviva.—Ting.

A. From the steps of a throne to a crown of his own. Robert Martin. B. He has left the road-car for the underground. Treddust. C. From gay to grave, the last was his first tragic exit. Ooloo. D. God guard him in death, who was our guard in life. C. M. P. E. In-vestment dull, earth holds him for a rise. Treddust.—Lyudene.

A. He has been elevated to the Upper House. B. He has taken his last fare well. C. The curtain has dropped upon the scene. D. Here he has reached the terminus of life. E. He has gone to settle his account. Granite.—Harebell.

A. A prey to dissolution. Mac. B. He's gone higher up. Mercutio. C. From gay to grave. Triumph. D. He has reached the terminus, we must all follow in his train. Baritone. E. Waiting for a rise. Frivola.—Ali Baba.

A. A prey to dissolution. Mac. B. Mors omnibus communis. C. F. Reid and Ivy Leaves. C. From gay to grave. Triumph and Rustic. D. We must all change. Mercutio. E. Waiting for a rise. Mac and Frivola.—Woodlands.

A. Once the people's elect, now God's. Tonks. B. Mors omnibus communis. C. F. Reid and Ivy Leaves. C. He could raise the spirits, even of the grave.—Sceptic. D. God guard him in death who was our guard in life. C. M. P. E. What shall a man give in exchange for his soul.—Matt. xvi., 26.—Briony.

A. Dissolution has placed him in a great majority. Quilp. B. He was a man of fare (fair) dealings. Wild Thyme. C. Set up on high those that be low. C. F. Reid. D. For years he followed in the van, now he leads the way. Wearside. E. Anticipating a rise.—Sinona.—Susy.

A. Gone to another place. Caer Glowe. B. Last home journey. Tan Tun. C. From gay to grave. Triumph, Almaviva, Rustic, Simonides. D. Waiting for the signal. Sinona. E. He is ready for the last call. Welshharp.—Alicujus.

A. Here rests a great leader, awaiting a coming session. Elk. B. Thou hast taken thy last fare—fare thee well! Esperanza. C. From gay to grave. Rustic. D. All change here. Rustic. E. Gone to his final settlement and account. Apemantis.—Oceauia.

A. A prey to dissolution. Mac. B. Last home journey. Tan Tun. C. From gay to grave. Triumph. D. Gone off by the last express. No. 986, last specimen unsigned. E. Waiting for a rise. Mac.—Pentland.

A. A prey to dissolution. Mac. B. The angel and the world's end this journey only. Snaresbrook. C. He is in a new piece (peace). Phyllis. D. Gone off by the last express. No name. E. Settlement come, he has carried over and sent in his cheques. Max Straube.—Irma Lee.

A. For now he hath obtained more excellent "ministry." C. F. Reid. B. Higher up. Mac. C. If there be humour here, 'tis dry as dust. D. In the van on the up-line. Mac. E. He suffers change who once exchanged on 'Change. C. M. P.—Penea.

A. He has been sent for. Wig and Gown. B. Higher up. Mac. C. He played his light part and the curtain fell. Elk. D. We must all travel in his train. Elk. E. Broke by a fall, waiting for a rise. Almaviva.—Ten Nails.

A. Gone over to the majority. Pigtail. B. He has taken his last farewell. Granite. C. From gay to grave. Triumph. D. He has reached the terminus; we must all follow in his train. Baritone. E. Gone to his last account; life's ups and downs are o'er. Bredon.—Nescioquis.

A. A prey to dissolution. Mac. B. He has taken his last farewell. Granite, Roughty, &c. C. "The gods" propitious, need we fear "the pit?" Ludwig B. D. He was ever in the van. Quatrebras. E. On earth a bull, a stage, a bear, yet human bones lie sleeping here. Wearside.—McRabbit.

A. Here lie I; between mine and the other party lies the truth. Triumph's List. B. He has left the road-car for the "underground." Treddust's List. C. He brought down the house till he was himself brought low. Wild Thyme's List. D. Death took the wheel and put on the brake. Toria's List. E. He's gone to meet his last account. Elk's List.—Percina.

Answers have been received from Nettie, Kappa, Cogeragla, Audrey, Jelsberg, Osmond, Vicar, Lyons, Maria, Mosquito, Fanny Squeers, Twenty-five, Gonora, Taringa, Violette, Œdipus, Carima, Knight's Pawn, T. Helps, Hugo, Muff, Tom, Miss Rogers, Myra, Queensholme, Pilu Golal, Metchley, Melrose, Opera, Crock, Wyalony, Sissie, Sophrosyne, Waben, Quero, Nin Nin, Echo, Duky Pue, Thug Thug, Schanidge, Yoko, Esperanza, Cecilia, Percina, Ten Nails, Ludwig B, Nescroquis, Done Again, C. M. P., Irma Lee, Oceania, C. F. Reid, Alicujus, Fritz, Susy, Sceptic, Woodlands, Ali Baba, Harebell, Lyndene, Almaviva, M. E., Sinona, Pelican, Tweet, A. E. L., Mercutio, Ooloo, Quatrebras, Imperieuse, Cane, Footer, Whig. Nodding Violet, Baritone, Profound, Leaf Rule, Courage, Bertha, Crow, Squiny, Llwslly, Esmeralda, Pop, Peepysnoozle, Percentage, Blue Bells, Avis, Aldburn, Vinolia, The Quidnunc, W. G. B., Ismara, Wild Thyme, Rich Man, A. H., S. T. S., Molly Bawn, Pickwick, Scissors, Eenerolf, Andee, Hireling, Colonnusis, A. S., Dumnorix, Senex, Yulyogrin, Phiz, Geneva, Set On, Paddy, N. C. N., Ivy Leaves, Blanche, Moonstone, Viresco, Nurse, Ginger, Common Beginner, Scotia, Scotus Viator, Neptune, Wild Thyme, A. D. P., Georgina, Gallio, Bredon, Blossom, Hibernia, Miss Newall, Blossom, Viking, St. Anne, A. R. F., R. Martin, Dobby, G. Newall, The Hen, Subaltern, Golfer, Cygne, Crock, Trebor, LL. D., Cromwell, Boss, Laddie, and Charlwood.

ATKINSON'S EAU DE COLOGNE

Is absolutely the finest made.

More fragrant, more lasting, and very much more refreshing than all others.

USE ONLY ATKINSON'S!

ONCE USED, ALWAYS USED.

Single Bottle 2/3 post free,
Case of 6 Bottles 11s. Carriage Paid.
OF ALL DEALERS.

J. & E. ATKINSON, Limited, 24, Old Bond Street, London,

INVENTORS OF THE CELEBRATED

"WHITE ROSE" PERFUME.

"A Charming Scent."—H.R.H. The Duchess of York.

TORPID LIVER. HEADACHE.

Small Pill.
Small Dose.
Small Price.

Purely Vegetable Sugar Coated.

1s. 1½d.

ienuine Old Welch Dressers

(Inlaid and Carved Oak), from £6. 10s.

LUSTRATED PRICED CATALOGUES POST FREE.
L GOODS CARRIAGE PAID TO ANY STATION IN GREAT BRITAIN.

HEWETSONS,

TTENHAM COURT ROAD, London, W.

FARADAY & SON's

Electric Light Fittings

3, BERNERS ST., LONDON, W.

Quaint Designs from Old Models

SOUND WORKMANSHIP

A Great Public Boon!

LIPTON'S

(Finest Quality)

EXTRACT OF BEEF

EXTRACT OF BEEF AND FLUID BEEF

Are made from Fresh Ox Beef, under the most skilful, scientific, and practical supervision, by a process entirely his own, unquestionably making his EXTRACT OF BEEF and FLUID BEEF

FLUID BEEF

Finest Quality ever offered to the Public, and saving purchasers from 25 to 35 PER CENT.

LIPTON'S EXTRACT OF BEEF. MADE FROM FINEST OX BEEF.

LIPTON'S FLUID BEEF. A PERFECT FOOD.

THE DAYS OF HUGE PROFITS ARE OVER!

It is admitted by everyone that LIPTON caused a revolution in the Tea Trade, and forced Tea Dealers and Merchants to REDUCE THEIR PRICES. Before s introduced his celebrated Teas, THE PUBLIC HAD TO PAY nearly double the price they are now charged by LIPTON for the Finest Teas the World roduce.

WHAT LIPTON HAS DONE IN THE TEA TRADE, LIPTON WILL DO IN THE EXTRACT OF BEEF TRADE.

In these days no Housewife can afford to throw money needlessly away, which she will do if she buys any other than LIPTON'S EXTRACT OF BEEF or LIPTON'S BEEF.

No fancy names are used to describe LIPTON'S EXTRACT OF BEEF and FLUID BEEF. Every person can therefore understand at once what they are. There is stery about them. They are made from the finest quality of Beef. LIPTON can offer buyers no greater inducement than the high-class quality of these and their remarkably low prices.

LIPTON'S EXTRACT OF BEEF. LIPTON'S FLUID BEEF.

WHAT THEY ARE AND WHAT THEY DO.

They are made from the finest quality of fresh Ox Beef, and contain all its nourishing, stimulating, and strengthening properties. They are invaluable o the invalid and the strong. They nourish and fortify the system, and are unequalled for their strength-giving properties. LIPTON'S EXTRACT OF or FLUID BEEF make the richest Beef Tea. They are also invaluable in the domestic economy, and will be found by all good cooks the most economical e best for flavouring Soups, Gravies, Sauces, Entrées, &c.

Lipton's Extract of Beef and Fluid Beef can be obtained from Lipton's Markets and Agencies throughout the World.

CHIEF OFFICES: CITY ROAD, LONDON, E.C.

A WONDERFUL MEDICINE!

BEECHAM'S PILLS

Have been before the Public for more than fifty years, and have now the greatest sale of any Proprietary article. This has been achieved without the publication of testimonials, the convincing fact is, that BEECHAM'S PILLS RECOMMEND THEMSELVES.

WORTH A GUINEA A BOX

FOR ALL
Bilious & Nervous Disorders
SUCH AS
Sick Headache, Constipation,
Weak Stomach, Impaired Digestion,
Disordered Liver and Female Ailments.

Annual Sale, SIX MILLION BOXES.

Sold everywhere in boxes 9½d., 13½d. and 2/9 each.

BOVRIL

Contains all the nourishment of

PRIME OX BEEF
and is unequalled
IN THE KITCHEN
OR
IN THE SICK ROOM

ELSWICK CYCLES are fitted with the PATTISON HYGIENIC SADDLE.

CITY AGENTS— BENETFINK & CO 66, Cheapside, E.C.

THE ELSWICK

1898

Elswicks are, if possible, superior to those previously made and are as perfect as money and skill can make them.

W. & F. THORN, 19, Gt. Portland-st. W.

LONDON AGENTS.

THE STEREOSCOPIC COMPANY, 106, 108, Regent-st W.

FIRST SPECTACLES.—When these are required the advice of a very skilful optician should be taken, as, unless the spectacles used in the first instance are exactly suited to the eyes, mischief is soon done which cannot afterwards be remedied.

BROWNING'S SYSTEM OF SUITING THE SIGHT
IS ALWAYS SUCCESSFUL.

Mr. JOHN BROWNING, President of The British Optical Association, and Author of "Our Eyes," now in its 17th Edition, price 1s., 63, STRAND, LONDON, W.C. May be consulted personally free of charge.

THE MOST NUTRITIOUS COCOA.
EPPS'S GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.
COCOA
FOR BREAKFAST AND SUPPER.

• TRUTH •

"Cultores Veritatis Fraudis Inimici."—Cicero.

No. 1101. Vol. XLIII. Thursday, February 3, 1898. Price Sixpence.

NOTICE.

An Index to the Forty Second Volume of Truth will be forwarded, post-free, to any address on application to the Publishing Office, Bolt-court, Fleet-street, E.C. The half-yearly Volume can be obtained at the same address, price 25s.

The terms of Subscription to Truth, which are payable in advance, are as follows:—To any address in the United Kingdom, for 3 months, 7s.; 6 months, 14s.; and for 12 months, 28s. The Thin Paper Edition is forwarded to countries within the Postal Union for 3 months for 7s. 8d.; 6 months, 15s. 4d.; and 12 months, 30s. 8d. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be made payable to the Manager, Truth, "Truth Building," Carteret-street, S.W.

ENTRE NOUS.

THE first Drawing Room of the season is to be held at Buckingham Palace on Friday, the 25th, by the Princess of Wales for the Queen. There will be a second Drawing Room next month, which is to be held by Princess Christian, as the Princess of Wales will then be at Copenhagen. The third and fourth Drawing Rooms are to be held early in May, and the Queen herself will attend one of these, in order that she may receive the Corps Diplomatique. There are to be only four Drawing Rooms this year, and as the number of presentations will be limited to two hundred at each function, prudent people will not postpone sending in their names until after Easter, or they will very likely lose the chance of going to Court this season.

As I have before stated, there are to be two Levees at St. James's Palace before Easter, the one held by the Prince of Wales, on Monday, the 21st, when H.R.H. will receive the Corps Diplomatique, and the second early in March, held by the Duke of York. There will be two Levees between Easter and Whitsuntide, and one in June.

I hear that the Court officials have been much inconvenienced by the appearance in several papers of a statement that the Thatched Lodge, a Crown residence in Richmond Park, had reverted to the Queen by the death of Sir Henry Lynedoch Gardiner, the result being that vast shoals of applications for the place have been received. When the Queen granted the Thatched Lodge to General Lynedoch Gardiner, there was a clause in the warrant, giving the place to his wife for her life in case of her surviving him.

A great deal of nonsense is being printed by some of the papers about the Queen's approaching trip to the Continent. The Pall Mall Gazette announced last Tuesday that on Saturday "a large party of her Majesty's household will leave England" for Cimiez. It is difficult to imagine what members of the Household would find to do at Cimiez more than five weeks before the arrival of the Queen. As a matter of fact, the Queen's servants will not leave Windsor for Cimiez until Monday, March 7, when the horses, carriages, and heavy luggage are also to be despatched to the Riviera. The suite will this year be limited to one lady-in-waiting, one maid of honour, one equerry, Sir Arthur Bigge (private secretary), Sir James Reid (medical attendant), and the inevitable Munshi Abdul Karim, and the Oriental domestics, who give ten times more trouble than all the rest of the Royal party put together.

The Queen is sure to be overwhelmed with applications for the office of Keeper of the Regalia, which is worth £300 a year, with a very good furnished house in the Tower of London. The place, which is nominally held under the Lord Chamberlain, is in the gift of the Queen herself. The late Sir Frederick Middleton had held the post for less than two years, having been appointed to it when Sir Michael Biddulph was made Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod. Sir Frederick Middleton, who distinguished himself during the Indian Mutiny, was for ten years Commandant of the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and he afterwards did good service in Canada in 1885.

The Duke of Connaught, who is now on the Riviera, will resume his duties at Aldershot on the 15th. The Duke is to be in command of the forces during this year's Autumn manœuvres, which are to take place on Salisbury Plain.

Empress Frederick, who has been residing at Berlin for nearly two months, is expected to arrive at Osborne next week on a visit to the Queen, and she will stay in England until the middle of March. The Empress is to be conveyed from Flushing to East Cowes in the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert.

The Irish Viceregal establishment moved from the Viceregal Lodge, Phœnix Park, to Dublin Castle, from which it is only a little over two miles distant, this week. Lord

Cadogan gave an object-lesson in the impossible dual parts an Irish Lord Lieutenant is expected to play by hurrying over to take part in the Cabinet Council as a member of the Conservative Government, immediately before holding a Levee at Dublin Castle as representative of the Queen. No other country but Ireland offers the spectacle of a quick-change artist ruling its destinies from a Viceregal throne. The Irish do not require to go back to memories of another '98 to justify dissatisfaction with the way in which they are ruled; the present Government offers absurdities and injustices enough for any reasonable people to reasonably revolt against.

The Castle season which has just begun will be a short one of just six weeks. During this time the first week of Lent will, according to custom, cause an interval in the programme of festivities. As usual, two Levees and two Drawing Rooms will be held, and many dinners and dances and three or four big balls will be given. The Drawing Room this week will be followed by dinners and dances on Thursday and Friday nights. The Dublin season, of which the Castle season is only a part, is expected to be unusually gay. A number of houses have been taken in the capital, and the hotels are well filled. Lord and Lady Roberts will entertain at the Royal Hospital, and Lord and Lady Ashbourne will give a ball or two at their residence in Merrion-square.

The Kildare Hunt Ball took place last week at Naas, and was largely attended, all the houses in the county being filled for the occasion.

Even the intricacies of the Land Act, with its fortieth section in especial, which have been, of late, engaging the attention of most of the Bench and Bar in Ireland, have not killed the perennial flow of wit at the Four Courts. Mr. George Morris, the brother of Lord—formerly Sir Michael—Morris, has lately been made a K.C.B., so the Gazette says. At the Four Courts he has been more pointedly gazetted a Knight of Michael and George.

Lady Salisbury's illness will prevent her from attending any of the Drawing Rooms, so the Diplomatic presentations are to be undertaken by either the Duchess of Devonshire or Lady Lansdowne.

Lady Susan Brown, who died last week, was the elder daughter of the Marquis of Dalhousie, the famous Governor-General of India, and he left her the large estate of Coalstoun, near Haddington, which he had inherited from his mother, who was the heiress of the Browns, an ancient East Lothian family. Lady Susan was twice married, first to Lord Connemara, and secondly to Dr. Briggs, who assumed the name of Brown.

Lady Susan Brown had possession of the whole of Lord Dalhousie's papers, which are preserved at Coalstoun in an immense iron safe, and they include his correspondence, and also a copious diary, which he kept carefully during his political career in England, and also when in India. Lord Dalhousie's papers, which are of exceeding interest in connection with the secret history of India during the important eight years of his rule (between Lord Hardinge in 1847 and Lord Canning in 1855), are not to be published until 1910, for Lord Dalhousie added a codicil to his will forbidding the publication of any of his papers until fifty years after his death, which took place in 1860. Lord Dalhousie was only thirty-five when he went out to Calcutta, being the youngest man who ever ruled over India. The office was first offered to Lord John Russell, and Sir James Graham, who refused it, after consultation with Sir Robert Peel.

Some years back, when there was a great outcry over the condition of the London Board Schools, I thought it necessary to criticise somewhat severely Major-General Moberly's position in relation to the scandal in his capacity of Chairman of the Works Committee. Whatever may be thought now about that matter, there can be no question that during his long tenure of that post General Moberly showed himself on the whole a most able administrator and a good friend to the children. I do not suppose, and never did suppose, that he was personally responsible for the blundering negligence which at one time reduced the schools to such an unsatisfactory condition, and when once the facts became known, he undoubtedly did his very best to remedy all that was amiss. During his long connection with the School Board the late General showed himself a most conscientious and able administrator, and he was personally most popular with all parties on the Board, as well as in private life.

The local authorities along the Riviera will be extremely ill-advised if they ultimately allow the completion of the proposed electric tramway from Mentone to Cannes. There is a universal feeling against the project among all visitors, as well as among the leading residents, and this feeling is well founded. The proposed line will utterly ruin the lower Corniche as a carriage drive, and in places it may create serious danger to the general traffic. It is not wanted, for there is already an excellent service of trains, and the generally accepted explanation of the undertaking is that it is chiefly designed for the benefit of the croupiers and hangers-on of Monte Carlo, who will thus be enabled to reside at a greater distance from their daily work. In view of his recent dealings with the Casino authorities, it would be interesting to know what part the Prince of Monaco plays in connection with the tramway undertaking.

Talking of the Riviera, it will interest visitors to that part to know that another new English hotel of the first class is soon to be opened at Beaulieu under the auspices of the syndicate which owns the Coburg Hotel in Grosvenor-square. Beaulieu is a place which has increased

---

For the Truth Hotel List, see page 296 in the present issue.
For Hospitals and Appeals, see page 298.
For Amusements, see page 297.
For Our Puzzles, see page 305.

very rapidly of late, and it has the reputation of being one of the healthiest spots on the coast. The new hotel is to be called the Bristol, and is to be fitted up by Messrs. Maple & Co.

I hear that there is a chance of the marine drive at Bournemouth, which has been so long talked about, being constructed at last by a syndicate or company formed for the purpose. I have always contended that this is an improvement urgently needed in the interest of the town, and if it is worth while for a private company to undertake the work on a commercial basis, a fortiori would it have been a profitable investment for the municipality. By the way, a friend staying there, tells me that during the whole of the present winter (so-called) the lowest temperature registered at Bournemouth, either by day or night, has been 45 deg.—an extraordinary record. It is not surprising to hear that the hotels are full and the town very lively.

A recent visitor to a large hydropathic establishment in Scotland relates that when the "Sawbath" arrived the whole of the novels, books, newspapers, &c., were removed from the tables with the exception of the Bible and a copy of TRUTH. I have no sympathy with Sabbatarianism, but I am glad to learn that there is method in this form of madness.

Another visitor, to one of the Brighton hotels, had an unpleasant experience. He found in the morning that his boots, which he had put outside his bedroom door over-night, had disappeared for good, and the hotel servants repudiated all knowledge of them. Fortunately the traveller had a pair of evening pumps with him, and was able to make his escape from his bedroom, when, after agitating vigorously, he succeeded in discovering that the boots had been misnumbered and taken to a wrong room. The experience seems worth relating, as a warning to people to have a spare pair of boots when staying at an hotel. The wonder is, not that such mistakes happen, but that they do not happen more frequently, especially in view of the great temptation which boots placed outside doors at hotels offer to practical jokers.

Having last week offered some remarks upon the new editions of sundry books of reference, I find a whole host of these annual publications pressing their claims upon the notice of TRUTH. To do justice to them all is out of the question, but there are one or two whose merits I feel bound to acknowledge. Foremost among them is Hart's Army List, for it is rarely that a number of TRUTH goes to press without some assistance from that invaluable publication, and I have never yet had cause to regret any reliance on its accuracy. The Financial Reform Almanac is another. Every Radical possesses it as a matter of course, but I wish I could persuade some of my Conservative readers to read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest a few of the suggestive facts about our national finances to be found in its columns. There is another valuable book of reference which has come to the front in recent years—Sell's Directory of Telegraphic Addresses. Its modest title gives a very imperfect indication of the immense amount of useful information—especially for commercial purposes—which the book contains. By the way, seeing the enormous number of telegraphic addresses now registered, is it not about time that the Post Office reduced the registration fee?

An interesting item of news has been telegraphed by the Times correspondent at Singapore. It is to the effect that an agitation has begun among the Chinese with a view to dispensing with pigtails, educating women, and other reforms. A sidelight has been thrown on this piece of information by a communication which I have received, purporting to come from a certain Wun-Hi. I have decided to print it as I have received it, as, in spite of his many orthographical peculiarities, the meaning of my correspondent is, I think, tolerably clear:—

THE HEATHEN CHINEE UP TO DATE.

"We dat belongey China side, we no dam foolee—no!
We see as well as Inglissman de way de windee blow;
You foleign debils clowdee roun an wantee loan to make:
You tink dat we don't want him, eh? You make one glate mistake.

"We wantee all de cash you have—go bling it, neva stop!
We bollow all. It's velly nice! It's numpe one first chop!
Our countly he need ploppin' up, and you sall plop him—see?
And, if you likee, Chinaman mole civilized will be.

"We cuttee pigtails off! Oh, yes, if dat sall make you glad.
We wearee tip-top hats, and cally gamps when weatha bad;
We say 'dam-dam' and dlink paylayl and tly your Ingliss meat;
And, lookee, if you like, our wifes sall glow glate Ingliss feet!

"But if we do all dis, of coss, our leason you will guess,
We sall explect you in return to makee intlest less:
We dless like foleign debils when we walkee through the town;
We cut our first-chop pigtails up—you cuttee intlest down!

"You want to chargee six per cent. because you say 'Oh, oh!
Ah Sin he is a foolee man, and he no betta know;'
But when our wifes wear glate big boots and we've no pigtails—see?
You'll have to make leduction, den, and only chargee tlee!"

Some important changes have taken place at the Bodleian Library during the Christmas vacation. For many years the floor of the building which is known as the Camera has been filled with tables and open cases of the books which were most in demand by readers. This was a very convenient arrangement, but of late many books have been mysteriously lost from the open cases, so that they have been removed. The alteration will inevitably be unpopular with readers, but the reason for it is cogent. There is, however, a great complaint among serious students at the Bodleian that changes in the rules of the Library are inconveniently frequent.

A BEAUTIFUL HOTEL AT BOURNEMOUTH.—The "ROYAL BATH." "Hôtel de Luxe of the South." Sea frontage, 1,000 ft.; grounds, 5 acres. Due south. Only Hotel on East Cliff. Moderate fixed tariff.

The Canterbury Convocation is to meet at Westminster next week, and the Northern Convocation will meet at York on the 16th. The Primate is to reside at Lambeth Palace until April 1, when he will go to Canterbury for a stay of between three and four weeks.

Archdeacon Furse has replaced Canon Eyton as the Canon-in-residence at Westminster Abbey, and he will preach on Sunday afternoons during this month.

The rectory of Southwick, near Sunderland, which is now the richest living in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Durham (net value nearly £800 a year, with residence), has become vacant by the death of the Rev. Charles E. S. Collingwood, who has held it for nearly thirty-five years, and the presentation will be awaited with much anxiety by the clergy of the diocese. Mr. Collingwood was a very distinguished member of the Durham University and a most accomplished scholar and antiquary. He has left several books of real and permanent value, notably his excellent biography of Bernard Gilpin and his Life of St. Columba.

A correspondent writes :—

The Bishop of Marlborough tells you that he is informed that the Rev. W. Earle did not receive preferment from the Archbishop of Canterbury. Either he has been misinformed or there was a curious error in the announcements of Mr. Earle's appointment to the living of Brixton. The Archbishop is the patron of the living, and it is a curious incident if the patron did not present the new incumbent.

The affairs of Compton-Chamberlayne parish are again under discussion in the Salisbury Press, a gentleman who signs himself "One who Knows" having set the ball rolling by a letter in reply to the Truth article of January 6. Mr. "One who Knows" sent me a letter very similar to that which he addressed to the Salisbury Times; but as it seemed to me that he was rather one who may have known once than one who knows now, I did not consider that his reply called for publication. Before dealing with the question, I had specially sent all the way to Compton-Chamberlayne to verify my facts, and I myself can, therefore, claim to be "one who knows."

Practically, all that the other one who knows (or pretends to know) has to say is (1) that the lord of the manor is authorised to keep the churchyard door locked by a resolution of the last Easter Vestry, confirming another thirty-four years older; and (2) that any one lawfully desirous of entering the church can obtain the key by applying to the custodian. What difference does this make? Who, outside the village, would attach any importance to resolutions passed by a village vestry-meeting for the benefit of the lord and master of the whole parish? How do the arrangements for the custody of the key lessen the indecency of a parish church being in the private grounds of a gentleman who insists on keeping the door locked? I can discover no question of fact in this case worth disputing about. The only difference there can possibly be is one of opinion about the facts. Mr. Penruddocke is doubtless of opinion that he has some grievance against the Vicar, and that he has done nothing inconsistent with the maintenance of his dignity, rights, and privileges. His friends, toadies, and dependants may share, or pretend to share, this opinion. My opinion, on the other hand, is that Mr. Penruddocke thinks a great deal too much about his own dignity and rights; that the position of the Vicar is one of intolerable humiliation; and that the relations between the Squire and the Church amount to an ecclesiastical scandal. I give my opinion for what it is worth, but I shall be surprised if nine out of ten people, who know the facts, do not agree with it.

At Webster City, Iowa, a public dance was recently held, of which the more austere Christians among the inhabitants strongly disapproved. On the following Sunday the minister of the principal Presbyterian Church warmly denounced the dance, and animadverted in scathing terms upon the conduct of those who had attended it. The sermon, indeed, was too strong for some members of the congregation, and while the concluding prayer and hymn were going on two young women hastily left the church, and proceeded home, where they obtained a couple of whips. They then returned to the church, and, having waited for the minister until he left the vestry, they proceeded to thrash him with such vigour that he was conveyed home in a fainting state, and was so prostrated that he was obliged to obtain a substitute for his evening service.

In noticing the other day the appeal for the restoration fund of Clonfert Cathedral, I expressed a hope that the restoration would be conducted on judicious lines. Since that I have had a letter from the architect in charge of the work, who wishes to make known that "the utmost care, caution, and reverence are being bestowed upon the work by both Canon MacLarney and myself." After giving some details of the work contemplated, this gentleman writes :—

In conclusion, I would say that if the question of professional fees had ever entered into my calculations I should never have associated myself with the work. This I mention not as a bit of self-laudation, but to convey to any of your readers who may be inclined to contribute an assurance that my first consideration is the fabric; and I hope that some at least of those readers may be induced to send the Canon a few pounds. His address is Benaghet. Not many men would have persevered as he has done, and he deserves to succeed.

By the kindness of one of my readers at the Cape I am able to offer to philatelists a great opportunity of increasing their collections and benefiting the Truth Toy Fund at one stroke. I have for sale an unused British Bechuanaland postage and revenue stamp for 2s. The issue is, I understand, obsolete, British Bechuanaland now using the same stamps as Cape Colony. In the catalogue of one of the leading dealers I find this identical stamp valued at 25s. In view of the deficit in the Toy Fund, I should hardly like to accept less than that amount for it, but I am open to receive as much more as any generous-minded stamp collector is disposed to offer.

I have received the following amounts towards the deficit of the Toy Fund :—

Pluto, £1 1s.; Walter and Mary Bird, £1; A. C. D., £2 2s.; Little Fay, £1 1s.; H. T. W., £10.

Every one must sympathise with the Bishop of Southwark when he takes up the cudgels on behalf of his brother, the late General Yeatman-Biggs; but, however honourable the motive, it is out of the question to suppose that the friends of the deceased officer can seriously refute such criticism as Sir William Lockhart passed upon the Dargai operations in his recent despatch, and it would be a much wiser thing not to make any such attempt. Sir William Lockhart is an officer of high and well-deserved reputation, and in no quarter, so far as I know, has any blame been imputed to him for the disastrous failure of the late operations on the frontier. He is not the man to criticise a subordinate without cause, and if he has erred at all in apportioning the blame in his recent despatch, he probably erred on the side of indulgence to the officer referred to. This is the opinion of every military man with whom I have discussed the question.

A cadet of excellent physique, who recently passed out of Woolwich, and was examined at 18, Victoria-street, although passed as perfectly sound in constitution, was rejected as being "defective in green," although his eyesight was otherwise excellent. The victim of this absurdity was a tall and well-developed lad, to all appearance admirably qualified for an officer. If he had been passing an engine-driver's examination, I could understand his being objected to as defective in green, but why on earth this should be a disqualification for an artillery officer, I fail altogether to understand.

I publish the following letter, not so much for the novelty of the views expressed in it—which, indeed, have been expounded dozens of times—as for the sake of the striking simile at the end of it. It is not in the least my desire to be mistaken for a Bishop—nolo episcopari—and if a declaration to this effect should cause the Army Medical Staff to renounce its craving for combatant titles, I shall feel that I have at last done some good in the world:—

Liverpool.

Dear Truth,—I consider that all the difficulties of the Army Medical Department lie with the doctors themselves.

Why do they want titles likely to be mistaken for those of combatant officers, which, I think, is a direct insult to one of the noblest professions?

Can you conceive any one with the power of bringing health and hope to many a weary man "watching late in pain" wishing to be mistaken for anything but what he is? This snobbishness of the A.M.D., of which I have had a great deal of experience, makes me loathe the name of an Army doctor; and the combatant officers and men do so for the same reason. Would you wish to be mistaken for a Bishop because you tell the Truth?—Yours faithfully,

One who Loves his Calling and Never Suffered from "Disrespect."

When you come to think of it, it is certainly a strange thing that any doctor should wish it to be supposed that his ambition is to kill rather than to save life. No doubt there are many doctors who have killed more men than the most valiant warrior in the service of the Queen; but they would resent any suggestion to that effect. Let us hope that Lord Lansdowne will speedily form his Medical Corps, and that the titles will be arranged in such a way as to relieve the members of all suspicions of a desire to shed blood—except for the benefit of their patients.

An advertisement was recently quoted in Truth from a Colchester paper in which a firm who wanted a stableman notified that no soldier need apply. I suggested that the reason for this limitation might be worth inquiring into, and the suggestion seems to have been well-founded, for I have had a very interesting explanation of the objections which civilian employers in many cases have to engaging ex-soldiers. The writer is a Service man himself, and his main contention is that military training tends to destroy all individuality, intelligence, and initiative in the man subjected to it, and thereby disqualifies him hopelessly for any subsequent employment where these qualities are required. This contention might be applied in many ways, but, as an illustration of what is meant, it is sufficient to look at it in relation to the particular case of the Colchester advertisement.

My correspondent, speaking of what he must know thoroughly well, remarks that the routine of barrack work in stables is altogether insufficient to qualify a cavalry or artillery soldier for a subsequent position as a groom or stableman. The man has to do certain work in grooming his horse and cleaning the stables. He does it in a certain mechanical way day after day, but does nothing beyond it, and of the why and wherefore of what he does he knows nothing, and gets no chance of learning. If the management of the horse requires anything more than comes within the range of the duty which he is expected to perform, that work devolves upon somebody else. The result is that, as my correspondent contends, nine out of ten men serving in mounted corps in the Army at the present time know nothing of any of the following points:—

1. How to put a bandage on a horse's leg properly.
2. How to treat the most simple wound or sprain.
3. How to detect the seat of lameness should a horse go lame.
4. How to administer a draught or ball of any description.
5. How to feed a horse on scientific principles.
6. The elementary principles of shoeing.
7. The diagnosis or symptoms of any single disease or ailment beyond the bald fact that the animal is "off his feed."
8. The ventilation and general management of stables.

One need not look further than this for an explanation of the unwillingness of the civilian employer to entrust his stables to an ex-Army man. Over and above all this, of course, soldiers are notoriously incapable of thinking or acting for themselves, and are not unfrequently slack when they have no one to look after them. My correspondent says that he knows a Volunteer officer, who is thoroughly devoted to soldiers, and has three times engaged a soldier as groom; but although each man was well behaved, clean, willing, and anxious to please, he had to part with them all for the simple reason that if he omitted every morning to give them the whole of their orders and instructions for the day, he found on his return that nothing whatever had been done, and that the man was sitting still, waiting for orders.

H. L. Savory & Co.'s Cigarettes.—By Special Warrants of Appointments, to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, H.R.H. the Duke of Saxe Coburg-Gotha, H.S.H. the Duke of Teck, and the House of Lords and Commons. To be obtained of all the leading Houses in the Trade.—Sole address, 59, Piccadilly, London, W.

Major Howe & Co.—Fashionable Boots and Shoes.—16, Coventry-st., W. (also 60, Strand), and City, London. "Note Addresses." (Repairs.)

These points are worthy of consideration when efforts are being made to improve the lot of the ex-soldier. They apply specially, of course, to stable work, because soldiers from mounted corps are primâ facie fitted for employment of this kind in civil life; but mutatis mutandis the same kind of thing might be said of soldiers employed in any capacity. It is not easy to see how the evil is to be got over, for half the purpose of military training is to convert a man into a machine. But where, as in the case of a mounted corps, you have soldiers engaged on a particular kind of work outside the purely military drill, at least the effort might be made to instruct them in it thoroughly and develop their intelligence. This is desirable, one would think, in the interests of the Service and for the sake of efficiency, quite as much as for that of the soldier himself when he leaves the ranks. Taking the above estimate of a cavalry soldier's veterinary knowledge, a large percentage of our cavalry would soon be hors de combat in a long and arduous campaign, from pure ignorance on the part of the men of the proper treatment of their horses under the conditions of active service.

The following appeared in the battalion orders of the 1st Northamptonshire Regiment at Peshawar on January 3. There seems to be something wrong in the casting, but I give the figures as they appear in the original:—

Charges on Account of Bedding and Clothing Lost on November 21, 1897.

A Company	78 men at Rs. 2-6-0	...	Rs. 185	4	0
B ,,	13 ,,	,,	...	Rs. 30	14	0
C ,,	5 ,,	,,	...	Rs. 11	14	0
D ,,	5 ,,	,,	...	Rs. 11	14	0
F ,,	77 ,,	,,	...	Rs. 182	14	0
G ,,	76 ,,	,,	...	Rs. 180	8	0
I ,,	5 ,,	,,	...	Rs. 11	14	0
K ,,	59 ,,	,,	...	Rs. 04	12	0
Officers	17 ,,	,,	...	Rs. 40	10	0
				Rs. 795	14	0

I understand that nearly all the articles above mentioned were lost on field service, and practically through the insufficiency of the transport. Surely it is not right that the men should be called upon to replace things so lost, more especially seeing that a large part of the charge is for blankets and warm clothing, which will be appropriated by the Commissariat at the beginning of the hot season.

Another item of news from the same battalion is of much more than local interest. I hear that a short time back a number of men were called upon to provide out of their own pockets new barrels for their rifles, the old barrels having been worn out by the cordite ammunition. I suppose that if cordite destroys the barrels of rifles in one battalion it will in another, but the extra wear and tear ought certainly not to come out of Tommy Atkins' pocket. The British taxpayer must bear that burden, and grin, if he can, while he bears it; but by rights it strikes me that the cost ought to be borne by the parties who have such an affection for the new ammunition, and are currently understood to have made such a good thing (for themselves) out of it.

Talking of the Northampton Regiment, in which I feel a peculiar personal interest, reference was made in Truth of October 21 to the extortionate prices charged in the regimental coffee-shop when the 1st Battalion was at Rawalpindi. Subsequent accounts show that matters were very much worse when the battalion moved up to the front. Some rise in prices under these circumstances might be unavoidable, but the circumstances certainly do not justify such famine rates as seem to have prevailed in the 1st Northampton. As previously mentioned, these extortionate prices are charged by a native who runs the coffee-shop, and they are said to be sanctioned by the Commanding Officer. The native in question seems to have a good friend in the C.O. I hear that on one occasion when water was short, orders were given that the coffee-shop was to be supplied first, with the result that the privileged native was selling tea at four annas a quart when the men could not get water to cook their rations.

Here is a little matter relating to Naval canteen management at Esquimault which calls for the immediate notice of the Naval authorities. The brewers who had for some time supplied the Naval canteen at Esquimault to the complete satisfaction of the customers, recently found themselves confronted, on a change in the management of the canteen, with a demand to pay 3d. per gallon to the petty officer of a ship on the station, who had just been put in charge. The brewers declined to be bled, and the contract was thereupon given to a rival firm. This was not their first experience of the same kind. A year or two earlier, the manager of another canteen at the same station, an N.C.O. in the Royal Marines, refused to allow the same brewers to supply the canteen, or to see an officer for the purpose of negotiations, unless they would promise to allow him 3d. per gallon on the beer ordered. This also was refused, and the negotiations got no further. Every one knows that blackmailing of this kind is widely prevalent, both in the Army and the Navy, and that the men are the ultimate sufferers by it. It, therefore, behoves the authorities, whenever an offence of this kind can be brought home to any individual, to take the matter up energetically. The above facts are given to me by the brewers at Esquimault who were concerned in these two cases, and it may be mentioned that they are the only firm of English brewers in the place, their competitors being Germans. I have only to add that the statement in my possession is at the service of the Admiralty, if they should wish to use it.

An old naval man sends me a suggestion with regard to recruiting for the Navy which seems worthy of attention just now. It is, that regular efforts should be made to recruit in the Colonies and abroad. The writer makes various suggestions as to the way in which the training of the men could be carried on; but these are details which the authorities could easily work out for themselves if the principle of recruiting abroad were once adopted. How much ground there is for the jeremiads we have been hearing about the decay of the British seaman I do not know; but it is quite certain that in the event of a naval war the supply of men for the Navy would soon fall short of the demand, and it is only common sense to increase the sources of supply by every means at our disposal. It has been announced that the Government are going this year to ask for an additional 7,500 men for the Fleet, a very necessary measure, apparently, for we have gone on building ships out of all proportion to the provision for manning them. The increase now contemplated seems to offer a very good opportunity for some extension of the basis of recruiting.

For Mosquito Bites nothing allays the irritation so quickly as Scrubb's Cloudy Fluid Ammonia, and it is an immediate remedy for Wasp or Bee Stings.

In that sound democratic journal, Reynolds's Newspaper, there have been one or two interesting letters on lower-deck life in the Navy, with special reference to recent displays of insubordination on certain ships. For obvious reasons the public hear a great deal less of the grievances of sailors than of those of soldiers. "Jack" has not the same opportunities as "Tommy" of making his voice heard. But for this very reason I suspect a great deal occurs on board ship which the public would not stand for a moment if they knew of it. From time to time I get suggestive hints to this effect myself. One of the latest of them is an incident on board H.M.S. Redbreast on the East Indies station. In the course of gun drill the Captain found some fault, and put a question to one of the men. The man, according to his own account, supported by the evidence of those about him, only answered "Yes, Sir;" but, whether from a misunderstanding or what not, the man was subsequently charged with the serious offence of answering a question which had not been put to him, and was sentenced to seven days' cells and reduction to second class for conduct, which means a serious loss of pay and leave. The seven days' cells was subsequently altered to fourteen days "10 A," but even at the mildest the punishment seems to have been entirely uncalled for. Though these things may not get into the newspapers, they get talked about in the seaport towns; and if the Admiralty want to get more men for the Fleet, they will do well to keep a sharp eye on abuses of authority, whether on the part of captains or subordinate officers.

Apropos of what has been said in Truth during the last fortnight about Somerset House, a correspondent complains of having been refused permission to make a few notes of a will, which he went to inspect on behalf of a lady in very humble circumstances. Let us, however, be reasonable in our criticism. I cannot see much point in this complaint. There is a certain charge for merely inspecting a will, and an increased charge for copying it. If a person who merely pays for inspection is allowed to take notes of the contents, the demand for copies would very soon cease. The Somerset House officials cannot possibly be expected to discriminate between making "notes" and making extracts, or copying all the material parts of a will.

By a misprint, the cost of a certificate of birth, marriage, or death, when obtained from a District Registrar, was given in last week's Truth as 3s. 9d., exclusive of postage. It should have been 3s. 7d. inclusive of postage—3s. 6d. fee and 1d. the stamp.

As the Post Office comes in for a good deal of unfavourable criticism in Truth, it is only fair to that Department, to give publicity to the following experience: A week or two back a gentleman posted at Liverpool to various addresses abroad a batch of packets prepaid at the book rate, but inadvertently closed up, so that they would only be transmissible at the letter rate. At the letter rate the deficient postage on each packet would have amounted to 3s. 11d., that is to say, each recipient of one of the packets would have had to pay 7s. 10d. on delivery. The mistake was noticed in the Liverpool Post Office, the packets were detained, and a notification of the state of things was conveyed to the sender, with the result that he was able to put the matter right. Perhaps the publication of this story may encourage the postal authorities generally to show in other instances an equal amount of vigilance, courtesy, and attention to the public interest.

I am beginning to think that the promise of a universal postal delivery must have become absolutely a dead letter, for complaints from people who are no better off in this respect than they were before the Chancellor of the Exchequer's announcement are pouring in upon me from all parts of the kingdom. One of the most remarkable of them is the case of a resident near a loch in Argyleshire, who has his letters left in a box on the opposite side of the loch, which is about a mile broad, and if he wants them he has to row across and fetch them. During stormy weather he is cut off from postal communication, unless he chooses to send a man four miles to meet the post at the foot of the loch. It might be well for those people in the country who are still waiting for the promised delivery to try the effect of a remonstrance direct to St. Martin's-le-Grand. I hear of one case in the West of England where this has been done with good effect. Failing that, I would recommend the aggrieved parties to lay their cases before the Chancellor of the Exchequer as early as possible through their Parliamentary representatives.

Distinct signs are perceptible that St. Martin's-le-Grand is developing something in the nature of a conscience. Let us congratulate St. Martin's, and ourselves. A fortnight ago attention was called to the fact that the Post Office, after taking a gentleman's money (to the amount of over one pound) for telegrams to Holland, had forwarded the telegrams by post, like letters, and declined to refund the money paid, on the ground that the possibility of delay had been notified when the message was handed in. As I expressed a somewhat strong opinion on this proceeding, I am glad to be able to add that St. Martin's-le-Grand has thought better of it. Although Official A peremptorily declined to disgorge, Official B has now written a long letter, in which, after proving to his own satisfaction that the first decision was entirely right, he winds up by admitting that the case is exceptional, and notifying that the money will be returned. The conclusion being so satisfactory, it is hardly worth while to quarrel with the logic. The great thing is to note that the Postmaster-General has for once bowed to public opinion.

The Grand Hotel, Monte Carlo, the most fashionable hotel & restaurant on the Riviera. Perfect English sanitation. Now under English management.—Managing Directors, Messrs. Noel & Pattard.

In the recent discussion in TRUTH of the treatment of clerks in the joint stock banks, special reference was made to the Capital and Counties Bank. In view of what was said, it is only fair to the Directors of the bank to say now that they seem to have taken the question up very promptly and energetically, and I hear that very considerable additions are being made to their staff. In particular, several men at the provincial branches have been brought up to London; and I see from an Aberdeen paper that two gentlemen from the head office of the North of Scotland Bank have received appointments in the Capital and Counties.

It is very gratifying to know that the discussion of this subject has had some practical result, and I would strongly impress upon some of the other joint stock banks the desirability of following the excellent example which the Capital and Counties is setting. The banking dividends for last half-year are now being declared, and in several instances increased profits are recorded. The City Bank, another referred to unfavourably in my recent articles, has increased its dividend. Before pocketing increased profits, it is the duty of the shareholders to look into the manner in which they are earned. I doubt if there is a single joint stock bank in which the staff have not a just and unanswerable claim to better remuneration; and, so far from increasing dividends, the claims of the staff ought to be satisfied, even at the cost of a reduction.

In contrast to the action of the Capital and Counties Bank, let me invite the attention of the shareholders and the public to the recent action of the Mercantile Bank of Lancashire, Limited. Three weeks ago I published some facts concerning the remuneration of the staff, including not only juniors but even managers of this bank, which eclipse anything in the way of sweating that has yet come to light. On the day following the appearance of this paragraph in TRUTH, the general manager called the staff one by one into his office, and questioned them as to whether they had communicated with me. One gentleman acknowledged that he had done so. He was thereupon suspended until a Board meeting on the following Wednesday. He went to the bank on that day, but the Board declined to see him, and he was informed that he was dismissed with one month's salary in lieu of notice, which was paid to him. The Directors of this bank have offered no contradiction of the statements which appeared in TRUTH, and they dare not do so. They have not charged their dismissed servant with any misrepresentation of the facts. But simply because this gentleman has dared to make known to the public the abominable way in which the Directors treat those in their employment, he is summarily ejected from the establishment. I do not ask any pity for him, for the loss of the wretched pittance with which he was remunerated is a matter of no consequence, and he can probably do better elsewhere. What the Directors have done, therefore, may be looked upon simply as a manifestation of their impotent rage at being shown up to the public in their proper colours.

Prior to the incident above mentioned, I had received from other quarters corroborative evidence of the facts alleged against the management of the Mercantile Bank of Lancashire. In one case a gentleman, after seventeen years in their service, became manager of their second largest branch at a salary of £180 a year, with no house or allowance of any kind. At another of their branches this bank now have, or had recently, a manager receiving a salary of £120 annually. This man is over thirty-five years of age, and entered the service of the bank after large business experience elsewhere. Well may the Board gnash their teeth with rage when facts like this are made known. It is a disgrace to any institution that men occupying positions of the greatest possible responsibility, standing in a highly confidential relation to the customers, and having daily hundreds, and possibly thousands, of pounds passing through their hands, should be employed at less than the wages of a skilled mechanic or the master of a National School; the knowledge that a business is so conducted is hardly calculated to attract customers. That, I take it, explains the vindictive treatment by the Board of the gentleman referred to above.

The inquest held last week on a recent fire at the Church Extension Association premises in Paternoster-row tends to confirm one of the objections that have been urged against the cubicles in use in the dormitories of the Kilburn Sisters' institutions. A Superintendent of the Metropolitan Fire Brigade gave the following evidence:—

> As regards the Church Extension Association rooms, they were very dangerously constructed with woodwork, and the Sisters slept in cubicles which were in themselves a source of danger.

This was one of the points which I discussed with the Sisters when visiting the Kilburn Orphanage two years ago. About fifty or sixty small children were—and, I suppose, still are—caged every night in such cubicles in one dormitory, the doors being locked, and one handle opening the whole of the doors in each row. Although the Sisters contended that this arrangement would be an advantage rather than the reverse in the event of fire, I could not accept that view; and now we have an expert expressly condemning the cubicles. What SAVOY HOTEL, Savoy Restaurant, London. Large reception-rooms for fashionable réunions. Orchestra plays daily during dinner and opera supper.

To stimulate a sluggish liver, banish biliousness, assist digestion, disperse dyspepsia, prevent sick and nervous headaches, relieve gout, rheumatism, and kidney disorders, and restore the clear skin, the bright eye, the alert gait, and all the other evidences of sound health, use KUTNOW'S Improved Effervescent Carlsbad POWDER. Write, mentioning TRUTH, for a free and post-paid trial sample, and the printed evidence of eminent Physicians and leading Medical publications, to S. Kutnow & Co., Limited, 41, Farringdon-road, London, E.C.

applies to a small room in Paternoster-row must apply with ten times more force to the large dormitories at Kilburn.

It would be interesting to know how many persons sleep in these cubicles at Paternoster-row, and who they are. A sister described as "Madame Pettywood"—a curious designation for an English lady who is, I presume, unmarried—stated at the inquest that she and "seven other females" slept on the premises. Unless the organisation of the establishment has been changed quite recently, these seven "females" would be girls from the orphanages, and in that case they probably all sleep in the patent Kilburn cubicles. The sister was quite confident that the fire did not originate in her premises, but in those of a tenant on the first floor. But, as on previous occasions, the Kilburn statements did not stand investigation, the evidence making it clear that the fire originated with Sister Pettywood's cooking-stove, and the jury found accordingly. I believe that I can carry the evidence a little further, for there was a fire on the same premises in 1893, and there is reason to believe that the cooking-stove was the source of the mischief then.

Since commenting last week on the disappearance from the tax-collector's demand notes of the notice that the landlord is required to allow his tenant the amount paid under Schedule A, I have paid my own taxes; and I find that the notification appears on the receipt. This is all very well, but it does not supply the place of the notification on the demand note. Most taxpayers study the latter document carefully, and master the whole of its contents to the best of their ability. But it is otherwise with the receipt, which few people ever look at, beyond noting that the amount is correctly entered. A writer in the Birmingham Post states that the notice disappeared from the demand note at least as far back as 1894. I should still like to know why, and I am strongly of opinion that steps should be taken to get it restored.

One of my readers, writing apropos of this point, comments on the injustice of compelling a man to pay his landlord's tax with no possibility of getting it back for nearly three months. "If I am compelled to advance money," he argues, "to pay my landlord's debts, under penalty of distraint on my goods if I fail to do so, I ought at least to be allowed a liberal interest for the accommodation." I agree. At the same time, as the demand note is presented with the regularity of clockwork on January 1, unless a man has paid his Christmas rent with uncommon punctuality, he can deduct the landlord's Property Tax from that quarter. A good many people, to my knowledge, do this. Is there any legal reason why they should not?

The regulation of the Local Government Board requiring Poor Law medical officers to reside in the districts for which they act is a very useful one, but it needs the exercise of a little common-sense in its interpretation. Last week I referred to the dissatisfaction that has been caused in a district of the Farnham Union by the appointment of a doctor who is not a permanent resident in the district, but who is permitted by the Local Government Board to fulfil the residential qualification by sleeping occasionally in a cottage which he rents for the purpose. By way of contrast to their decision in this case the Board has now objected to the present medical officer of the Bawtry district in the Doncaster Union holding the post, because his house happens to be ten yards over the boundary of the district. Every medical officer of the district for the last half-century has lived in this same house, but neither this fact nor the further circumstance that no doctor actually in the district is willing to take the appointment has had the slightest weight with the authorities at Whitehall. They swallow the Farnham camel, but strain at the Bawtry gnat.

For charities with a total revenue of £5,212 16s. 6d. to have no less than £2,500 6s. 2d. absorbed by the cost of administration is certainly, on the face of the facts, a state of things demanding some explanation. A member of the Gloucester City Council last week asserted that this is what happens in connection with the Lysons and other local charities, but the Mayor replied that it was unfair, unjust, and ungentlemanly to make any reflection upon the trustees, who had honestly done their duty; and nothing further was said. It would be difficult to devise a more inconclusive and unsatisfactory method of meeting such a serious statement. There may be plenty of reasons for the expenditure of nearly half the income of the charities in its "administration," much depending upon the nature of the outgoings that are included under this head. But the matter ought to have been explained, and it is childish nonsense to talk of a reference to the figures as unfair, unjust, and ungentlemanly. The Council elected a new trustee, and the best thing he can do is to begin his duties by enlightening the public upon the point which the Mayor so foolishly burked.

Concerning the mysterious affair at Bromyard Workhouse to which I referred last week, a local magistrate informs me that he has had an assurance from the Home Office that the case is receiving due consideration. It now appears exceedingly improbable, if not impossible, that the woman Bird could have committed suicide, and, seeing the time that has already elapsed, the Home Office should make the further inquiries that are required without any delay. The Bromyard Workhouse has been mentioned, I notice, in connection with the case of the unfortunate woman who, whilst in labour, was sent by the Poor Law officers from Malvern to Upton-on-Severn, with the result that she was confined in the cab during the journey. The woman alleged that she had been discharged from the Bromyard Workhouse on the morning of the same day, the authorities there refusing to allow her to remain, though she was in considerable pain. To this the Bromyard Bumbles reply that she was not turned out, but left of her own accord. It does not seem to have occurred to them that, considering the state the poor creature was in, charity required that she should be induced to stay there instead of starting off for a long day's walk. There was apparently not even a suggestion that she might remain if she preferred to do so.

The Maximum of Effect at the Minimum of Cost.—An Object Lesson in Decorating and Furnishing can be obtained by inspecting Messrs. Waring's Suites of furnished rooms at 175-181, Oxford-st. W.

The Famed "Adelphi" Turtle forwarded from the Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool, to all parts of the country. Per quart jar, 18s.; per pint jar, 9s. 6d., carriage paid. Speciality for Invalids.

The most elementary duty of a sanitary authority appears to sit lightly upon the Urban District Council at Uckfield. Recently a gentleman removed to this place from a town where—as in every well-regulated town—the municipal dustmen took away his house refuse once a week. At Uckfield he found that the collection of house refuse is made only once in two months in winter and once a month in summer; and in reply to a suggestion that this necessary service should be performed at least once a month all the year round the Council have just stated that they see no necessity to depart from the existing arrangement. Nothing less than an epidemic of disease will make any impression upon some of these benighted local authorities, and Uckfield will probably learn such a lesson in due course—in fact, it has lately had more than one serious outbreak of diphtheria.

The Carmarthen Corporation seems to be waiting for a similar disaster to wake them up, judging from the account one of the sufferers sends me of the state of things at Johnstown, in that borough. It appears that the residents in this district are subjected to a most intolerable nuisance and danger to health owing to the pollution of certain open watercourses with sewage from the neighbouring lunatic asylum. There have been complaints for years, and isolated cases of diphtheria have recently occurred, but the woodenheaded municipal authorities take no really effective steps to deal with the matter, nor does it seem likely that they will do so until the inevitable epidemic occurs.

A firm in the City have been taken aback by a printed letter from the Borough Engineer of Colchester, bearing all the appearance of an official document, and intimating that he would be glad to acknowledge the receipt of any sum they may send as a contribution towards the expenses of the Colchester Corporation Employees' Annual Dinner. Whether the firm in question have any business relations with the Corporation I cannot say, but it is a reasonable presumption that they have. In that case it seems a most objectionable thing for an officer of the Corporation to tout for subscriptions in this way. People who give on such terms give, as a rule, not out of benevolence, but for fear that a refusal may lead to loss of business. It is bad enough for private firms to dun their customers for tips or presents to their employees. On the part of a Municipal Corporation the thing is utterly unjustifiable.

For Truth, and all other Newspapers, Magazines, and Periodicals, send your Subscriptions to Wm. Dawson & Sons, Ltd., Cannon House, Bream's-bldngs., London. (Estab. 1809.) Catalogue gratis.

There is a curious story in the Aldershot News of the negotiations between the Aldershot District Council and the parish authorities for the purchase of some land which the former body wishes to acquire as a site for public offices. The land in question, about nine acres in extent, is vested in the churchwardens, overseers, and vicar for the benefit of the parish clerk; and it cannot be built upon or sold except for public purposes. The Council first made an offer of £2,500, but the parish authorities required £3,750. It was at last agreed to give this price, but the trustees then changed their minds and refused to sell. After allowing the question to rest for a considerable time, the Council have recently made a fresh offer of £4,000, but it is now announced that by some mysterious process —for the overseers have not been consulted—the price has been put up to £5,000. The way in which the business has been managed for the parish authorities seems anything but creditable, and, considering the terms upon which the land is held, they can hardly be acting in the interests of the parish clerk in refusing the offer of £4,000, which would give that functionary an income three times as large as that he at present derives from the property.

Mr. Francis seems to have been a long way from distinguishing himself as a Solomon in the case at the South-Western Police-court last week, in which a man named Everest claimed the custody of his two children. Everest's wife had been granted a separation order with the custody of the children on account of his desertion; but he now alleged, as the ground for his application, that she was addicted to drink and neglected the little ones, and some evidence of this was adduced. On the other hand, the mother asserted that her husband had ill-treated not only her but the children as well, and one of them on being questioned by the magistrate said she was afraid of her father because he beat her. Mr. Francis decided to grant the man's application, and the parting of the mother and children, who appeared devoted to one another, produced what the report describes as a really heartrending scene. In the face of the evidence, it is difficult to see the justice or humanity of this decision. If the mother neglected the children she ought to have been dealt with for it; but surely it was aggravating the cruelty of their lot to hand them over to the father who had ill-treated and deserted them, and of whom they stood in so much dread.

My attention has been directed to the fact that in a case before the Lord Mayor at the Mansion House last week his Lordship's son was the junior counsel instructed by the Public Prosecutor. I am sure that nobody who knows the Lord Mayor will for a moment imagine that his judgment would be influenced in the slightest degree by the fact in question; nor would anybody, I hope, like to see Mr. H. Gordon Davies suffering in his practice, because his father happens to be the Chief Magistrate of the City. At the same time, there are very strong objections (as the Lord Chancellor has recognised in the case of County Court Judges) to a son appearing as an advocate in a Court over which his father is presiding, and as the Mansion House is not the only Court in London, the Public Prosecutor, without any injustice to Mr. Gordon Davies, could easily avoid briefing him in cases which come before the Lord Mayor. This should be borne in mind in future, as what has happened at the Mansion House sets a very bad example to country magistrates with sons in the legal profession.

A load has been taken off my mind by the result of the action of Sharpe v. Feeney and others. In the course of an extensive and peculiar experience I have become pretty well acquainted with the vagaries of the law of libel and the flimsiness of the pretexts upon which a newspaper may be sued for damages. But this case opened up an entirely fresh field for such litigation. The plaintiff—a solicitor who does not belie his name, though he now knows to his cost that it is possible to be too sharp—wanted damages from the Birmingham Daily Post and the Birmingham Daily Mail not only for a sin of commission, but for sins of omission as well. He complained first that the defendants had conspired to keep his name out of their papers on many occasions in reports of cases in which he was engaged; secondly, that on one occasion they had erroneously inserted his name instead of that of another solicitor as the defendant in a case. It was the first part of this claim which bore so distinctly the charm of novelty. If it had succeeded, a new terror would have been added to the lives of editors. It would have brought out on the war-path all the pushful nonentities who think they are entitled to more publicity than they get, and as I myself inflict many disappointments upon the practitioners of the gentle art of free advertising, I should have expected writs to fall in Carteret-street thick as autumnal leaves in Vallombrosa.

Fortunately, the action did not succeed. The first part of the claim was at once demolished by Mr. Justice Hawkins, with some caustic comments upon its inherent absurdity. The two defendants had ceased to mention Mr. Sharpe's name in cases in which he acted in consequence of his conduct in connection with a previous threat to take proceedings against them; and, as Sir R. Reid suggested, it is only natural that newspapers should resort to such a boycott against solicitors who subject them to shabby and unworthy treatment. Mr. Justice Hawkins held that in excluding the plaintiff's name from the reports the defendants were perfectly within their rights, so that there was no cause of action. As to the second part of Mr. Sharpe's claim, it was shown that there had simply been a clerical mistake, which did him no injury, and which was promptly corrected; and without waiting for the evidence for the defence, the jury returned a verdict upon which judgment was given for the defendants with costs.

The result of this case before Mr. Justice Hawkins, coupled with the results of several that have lately come before the Lord Chief Justice, should give courage to the most timid newspaper proprietors to resist impudent and baseless claims for libel. At the same time it is not altogether surprising that in the existing state of the law many proprietors, especially of the smaller country papers, prefer to settle such claims—in other words, to submit to a species of blackmail—rather than fight the matter out with the certainty that nine times out of ten, even if they win, they will be heavily mulcted in costs. What is required, if we are to have a truly free Press, is some amendment of the law which will render it less easy for frivolous and vexatious actions to be brought. The Bill proposed by the Newspaper Society would, among other amendments of the law, allow a defendant to pay money into Court with a denial of liability, give increased facilities for the consolidation of actions in respect of the same libel appearing in several newspapers, and — most important of all — enable the defendant to demand security for costs in certain circumstances. I see the Bill is to be reintroduced in the coming session, and I hope it will fare better than it has hitherto done.

It is a decided gain to the cause of law and order in Ireland to find that an Act of Parliament cannot, after all, be rendered null and void—as Sir Andrew Reed seemed to think it could be—by an edict from Dublin Castle. About thirty cyclists discovered this to their cost last week when they were summoned at Cabinteely Petty Sessions for riding their machines on the footpath. The defendants pleaded that they were only acting in accordance with the order published by the Inspector-General of Constabulary, but the excuse was of no avail, for every one of them was fined. I do not know whether Sir Andrew will be sufficiently conscience-stricken to refund the penalties which have been thus incurred in reliance upon his authority; but he should, at any rate, see that the time has arrived for the withdrawal of his ill-advised order, which distinctly encourages contraventions of the law of the land.

Nobody who watches the proceedings of criminal courts can fail to be struck with the marked difference that is made in the treatment of prisoners of questionable sanity. Society would be rightly horrified at the execution of a murderer whose mental condition was of doubtful soundness. Accordingly, when any suspicion of insanity arises in the case of a man charged with murder, or any really serious crime, his state of mind is subjected to the closest scrutiny; and if any good reason is found for supposing that he is not responsible for his actions, he is consigned—as the assassin of Mr. Terriss was the other day—to a criminal lunatic asylum. But nothing like the same vigilance is displayed in dealing with petty offenders of weak or deranged intellect—unless, of course, they happen to have money or friends—and scores are committed to gaol when they ought to be sent to an asylum.

A case in point is furnished by the committal of one Lynch for trial at the Preston Quarter Sessions on a charge of theft. The account that is given of his conduct in a brief report of his committal by the Kirkham Justices in itself suggests that he is non compos. A local correspondent, who knows Lynch, and is acquainted with his history, tells me that as a matter of fact this poor fellow is as mad as a March hare. He was always half-witted, but magistrates in their wisdom have persisted in treating him as a rational being, with the result that after innumerable terms of imprisonment — he has been convicted, I understand, some seventy or eighty times—he is now, and has been for years past, hopelessly insane. It has invariably been for minor offences that he has been cast into gaol, where his crackbrained breaches of the rules have brought upon him increased—even corporal—punishment. If the so-called criminal career of this unhappy wretch had taken a more dangerous turn, or if he had not had the misfortune to be poor and friendless, it is quite certain that he would have long since been an inmate of a lunatic asylum. Such a case—and it is typical of scores that occur—is a pretty commentary upon the boasted humanity and civilisation of English law and justice.

One Hundred Pieces for £1. 1s.—Send a postcard to the Pearson Pottery Co., Hanley, Staffs., for particulars of the most wonderful package of crockery the world has ever seen. Sold all the world over.

There are, of course, exceptions to the rule that persons accused of the graver forms of crime are dealt with as insane if there is any evidence of their insanity. Mr. Justice Grantham was responsible for such an exception at Norfolk Assizes last week, when a young man named Cross was indicted for feloniously wounding two women with intent to kill them. Every witness who was examined, not only for the defence, but for the prosecution as well, expressed the opinion that the prisoner was not of sound intellect, and three medical men were quite emphatic upon this point. It was admitted that Cross might be able to judge the difference between right and wrong, but the medical superintendent of the local asylum pointed out that neither this fact nor the existence of a motive for the crimes was in any way inconsistent with the theory that the man was insane. "Most lunatics," said this witness, "know the difference between right and wrong." With the remark that if everybody "a little below the average of intellect" was to be excused for crime, it would be a bad job for the rest of the world, Mr. Justice Grantham contemptuously brushed aside all this evidence and, under his direction, the jury found Cross guilty, though they "strongly recommended him to mercy on account of his weak intellect."

Mr. Justice Grantham thereupon sentenced Cross to twelve months' hard labour, and so pleased was he with his handling of the case, that next day, in condemning another man to the Draconic punishment of three years' penal servitude for stealing 4s. 6d. from a till, he took the opportunity of observing that no doubt if medical evidence were called the doctor would say that this prisoner also was not responsible for his actions. What the evidence would have been in the latter case I cannot say, but it is clear that in the former case the prisoner should have been dealt with as a criminal lunatic; and though the idea naturally did not present itself to the mind of this sapient judge, it would be a much better thing for the rest of the world if the man were sent to Broadmoor, where he would be permanently kept under control, instead of being allowed at large again after a year's imprisonment has completely broken down a mind already unhinged.

It is uncontradictably true that what is everybody's business is nobody's business, so year after year the Statute-book of this country, with its obsolete but unrepealed Acts, panders to the mischievous inclinations of the faddist, and enables him to make himself generally obnoxious, and to take up the time of the Courts at one and the same moment. The most recent illustration of this has just occurred at Caversham Petty Sessions, where some young men were prosecuted for playing football on a Sunday. The prosecution was founded upon an Act of Charles I. obtained for the suppression of "bloodshed and great disorder" engendered by "disorderly and improper sports on Sunday." The Caversham Bench appear, however, to have been equal to the occasion, for they eventually stopped the case and dismissed the defendants, refusing leave to appeal, amidst the loud applause of a well-filled court.

The remarks of Mr. Justice Wills, in passing sentence in the Sheridan libel case, were certainly called for, and might have been stronger without incurring the reproach of being unfair. The defendants were committed on a charge of blackmailing, and the evidence given was clear and definite. As the Judge pointed out, there must have been perjury on one side or the other, and it might have been expected that in such a state of things one party, at least, would have insisted on the issue being tried out. The prosecution, however, withdrew the blackmailing charge, and the defence offered no objection. I gather from another remark which fell from the Bench, that had not the application for the withdrawal of the charge been made by a Queen's Counsel (Mr. Carson having gone to Manchester for this occasion) it probably would not have been granted. From this we arrive at the paradoxical conclusion that it may be sometimes rather an advantage than otherwise to have an eminent Q.C. to prosecute you.

The Justices of the Peace responsible for the sentences for sleeping out at Highgate Police-court, noticed in my Legal Pillory last week, were not Messrs. Glover and Barfield, but Messrs. A. J. Reynolds and Fraser Black, who, I now learn, heard the case in a second court. Mr. Reynolds further informs me that the prisoners were two middle-aged women of bad character, who were truly described in the evidence as pests to the neighbourhood, and who, upon the last occasion when they were before the Court, were discharged upon promising to leave the district. From these and further particulars which Mr. Reynolds gives, I have no doubt that the women fully deserved a month's imprisonment; but I do not think the sentence should have been passed upon a charge of sleeping out. It would, apparently, have been easy enough to proceed against them in another way.

Below I give my Legal Pillory for the week, which exhibits as usual a series of effective object-lessons in Justice's justice—the purblind and muddle-headed justice which treats the grossest offences of violence and cruelty as venial in comparison with the simplest acts of vagrancy, poaching, and petty larceny. Look, for instance, at the strange aberration of judgment of the Worcester County Bench, who think a fine of half a sovereign sufficient punishment for a brutal assault, while at the same time they inflict seven days' hard labour upon a hungry tramp for the nefarious crime of begging a crust of bread; or at the equally instructive performance of the Bristol J.P.s, who let off two animal torturers with pecuniary penalties, but send a poor wretch to gaol for the sin of sleeping out without visible means of subsistence. Concerning the case at Nottingham, I would point out that if the defendant was not given the option of a fine—and the report in the Nottingham Daily Guardian makes no mention of a fine—the sentence was not only harsh, but illegal. The man was not charged with night poaching; the magistrates have no power to commit to prison without the alternative of a fine for any other offence under the Game Laws. The sentence upon a poacher at East Grinstead is also interesting as an example of magisterial ignorance upon the one subject which magistrates might be expected to understand:—

Worcester County Petty Sessions. Before Messrs. F. J. A. Wood, P. S. Williams, F. Ames, and Colonel A. Winsmore Hooper. James Bishop, charged with assaulting James Aston. Complainant said defendant knocked him down and treated him in a very brutal manner. A witness said he found complainant on the ground insensible and smeared with blood. Defendant denied the assault, but the Bench were convinced of his guilt and fined him 10s. and costs.

Worcester County Petty Sessions. Before the same magistrates. Thomas Fraser, charged with begging at Ombersley. On reaching this village, after walking all day, the prisoner ventured to ask for a piece of bread. Seven days.

Southampton Borough Police-court. Before Mr. G. P. Perkins and other magistrates. Wm. Prince, charged with sleeping out. Seven days

Bristol Police-court. Before Messrs. J. H. Woodward and W. Dove Willcox. Joseph Wheeler and George Bush, charged with cruelty by working a horse whilst it was in an unfit state. The horse was in a wretched condition, having sores upon its back and appearing to have been starved. Both defendants had been previously summoned in respect of the same animal. Bush fined 40s., and Wheeler 10s. and costs.

Bristol Police-court. Before the same magistrates. Robert Erwin, charged with vagrancy by wandering abroad and having no visible means of subsistence. He had taken up his quarters in a railway carriage, where he was found asleep. It was said he had been in custody at Gloucester for begging. Ten days.

Newcastle (Staffs) Borough Police-court. Before Messrs. T. P. Heath, R. B. Mellard, and J. Lovatt. Thomas Garraghty, convicted of assaulting his wife, who said he threw her down and kicked her, knocking three of her teeth out. Fined 20s. and costs.

Nottingham Police-court. Before Messrs. Thomas Hill and W. F. Fox. George Smith, charged under the Poaching Prevention Act with having been in pursuit of game, and with having in his possession three rabbits and a net. Committed for one month.

Arundel County Police-court. Before Captain Kemp and other Justices. Wm. Millam, butcher, charged with cruelty by starving two goats. A veterinary surgeon deposed that one animal had died of starvation, having probably been kept without food for ten days or a fortnight. The other was in a very emaciated condition. Fined £1 and costs.

Grimsby Borough Police-court. Before the Mayor, Messrs. W. Jackson, C. Morton, E. de Lacy Read, and T. C. Palmer. Elizabeth Collins, married woman, charged with stealing a rabbit from a shop front. One month.

Blaenavon Petty Sessions. Before Mr. W. L. Pratt and other magistrates. John Smith, charged with ill-treating his son, aged nine years, and with assaulting his wife. Defendant had more than once brutally beaten the boy, a delicate little child, with the buckle end of his belt, inflicting a number of cuts and bruises. The mother was kicked. Fined 40s. for the first offence, and 20s. for the second.

Doncaster West Riding Police-court. Andrew Gordon, charged with committing an aggravated assault upon his wife, a schoolmistress, who had previously separated from him, owing to his conduct. He struck her two violent blows, in consequence of which she had partially lost her hearing. Ordered to pay 28s. 6d. costs, and bound over to keep the peace.

Kirkcaldy Police-court. Before Bailie Tait. Hugh Kelly, sen., convicted of a cowardly assault upon his wife by kicking her several times on the body. The magistrate said it was a most unwarranted attack. Fined 5s., or two days in gaol.

Watford Petty Sessions. Before Mr. F. Sumner Knyvett and other magistrates. Joseph Francis Smedley, pauper, charged with absconding from the workhouse. The prisoner, an old man of over seventy-five years of age, had given notice that he would take his discharge, but absconded a day before the notice expired. Ten days.

Sherburn Police-court. John Dovaston, miner, charged with poaching, in company with other men who had already been convicted. He said he was out of work, and his wife and children were "pining" in the house, and so he was tempted to go with the poachers. One month.

Hastings Borough Police-court. Before Messrs. W. Carless, G. Osborn, and Alderman Weston. Victoria Gannon, charged with sleeping in the open air and having no visible means of subsistence. Seven days.

East Grinstead Petty Sessions. Before the Rev. C. W. Payne Crawfurd, Messrs. A. Brand, T. E. Ravenshaw, C. W. Bell, J. M'Andrew, J. H. Luscombe, and C. H. Everard. Sidney Packham, charged with poaching. One month's hard labour, and ordered to find sureties not to offend again, or in default, a further seven days' imprisonment. This was the sentence passed, but, as a matter of fact, the magistrates have no power to fix the imprisonment in default of finding sureties at seven days. The Act fixes it at six months, nothing more or less, and Packham will have to remain in gaol for that period if he fails to get sureties.

It is a common enough complaint that magistrates deal too lightly with police brutality. The numskulls who make the law an ass and justice a mockery at Rathdrum Petty Sessions go a step further than this, and deliberately encourage the ill-treatment of prisoners. Recently one Keogh was arrested by a sergeant of police for being drunk and disorderly. Keogh resisted, and Constable Bond went to the sergeant's assistance. On the way to the police station Bond struck the prisoner several blows in the face, and at the police station, while the man was being held by the sergeant, he renewed the assault. The sergeant remonstrated with Bond, but the fellow merely replied that "he wished to God he had given Keogh more of it." It is now clear that he might have done so with perfect safety, for when the district inspector, greatly to his credit, summoned the constable for assaulting a prisoner under arrest, the Rathdrum Bench dismissed the case, and Mr. A. Meldon, R.M., added that "the police were not supposed to handle men of Keogh's class with kid gloves, and there should be roughness on the part of the police in dealing with a man that was acting roughly." A more outrageous and mischievous utterance from the Bench could hardly be conceived, and it is a pity this pretty specimen of an Irish R.M. cannot be proceeded against for inciting the constabulary to break the law.

Mr. Lane was called upon last week to do justice between a public enemy, who kept a barking dog at the end of his garden, and a suffering neighbour, who threw "missiles" and even discharged a gun at the brute, but, alas! without quieting him. The magistrate acquitted himself in a highly judicial fashion, by informing the victim that he must not, whatever his sufferings, discharge guns or throw missiles, and recommending the dog-owner to have more regard for his neighbours' peace of mind. Had I been on the bench, I should have recommended the complainant to go and take lessons at a shooting gallery, or else to put a little dynamite into his missiles. Failing that, he might do worse than put the S.P.C.A. on to the dog-owner. The man who keeps a barking dog is generally guilty of cruelty to the dog as well as to his neighbours. The animal does not bark without a cause, and in nine cases out of ten it is a cause for which the owner is to blame.

Subscriptions greatly needed by The Royal Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.—6,929 convictions this year; 7,320 last year. Address complaints of cruelty, contributions, letters, &c., to Secretary, 105, Jermyn-st., London.

"Screwing" a lunatic, in the parlance of asylum attendants, is to get the patient's arm behind his back and twist it round by the wrist. It is a disciplinary measure for refractory madmen which is, of course, strictly prohibited by the authorities, but attendants sometimes resort to it on the sly; and in a case at Garlands Asylum the other day a patient was "screwed" with such cruelty and persistence that his arm was fractured. There are asylums in which every effort is made to hush up any incident of this kind, to say nothing of graver occurrences; but the medical superintendent at Garlands has the good sense not to follow this pernicious policy, and at his instigation the two guilty attendants were summoned before the Carlisle magistrates, who fined them three pounds each and costs The penalty did not err on the side of severity, but it is at any rate satisfactory to know that the culprits have met with some punishment, and still more satisfactory to see the management of the asylum dealing with such an affair in this open way instead of trying to hush it up.

A novel question was raised at an inquest at Batley last week as to the right of a medical man to make a post-mortem examination of his patient's remains without first receiving instructions from the coroner. The inquest related to the death of a young man who was at first supposed to have been poisoned by some tinned salmon which he had eaten. The doctor was not satisfied that this was the case, and with the sanction of the young man's father — the matter not being at that time in the hands of the coroner—he made a post-mortem examination, the result being to show that death was, in fact, due to another cause. At the inquest the coroner expressed himself very strongly as to "the impropriety" of the doctor's conduct; and, by way of punishing him, took evidence as to the result of the examination on hearsay, the consequence being, he said, that the doctor would "get nothing" for what he had done. Whether this medical gentleman acted regularly or not in making the examination before the death had been reported to the coroner, the latter would certainly appear to have acted irregularly in accepting evidence on hearsay.

An Irish J.P. lately received one of the usual communications from our old friend the Spanish prisoner. In the innocence of his heart this worthy magistrate, "believing at first that it might possibly be a genuine case of misfortune," offered to assist the unhappy victim of Spanish tyranny by arranging for his daughter and her governess to be supplied through a tourist agency with tickets for their contemplated journey to Ireland. It is almost superfluous to say that this generous proposal was not accepted. The prisoner wrote again asking that the sum of £35 should be remitted to him in English bank-notes, and the J.P. has now sent the letters to me, with the delightfully ingenuous remark that "he has reason to believe the writer is a swindler." Reason to believe, forsooth! It is quite evident, my dear sir, that you do not study your Truth with the diligence which befits every good citizen, and which is especially beneficial and wholesome for J.P.s. Had you done so, I should not now have to explain that this fraud is one of the oldest going, that it is systematically carried on by several gangs at Valencia and Barcelona, and that it has been constantly exposed in these columns for something like twenty years past.

By the way, it may be interesting to mention as another proof of the world-wide extent of the Spanish prisoner's operations, that I have just received a letter that he had addressed to a reader of mine at Port Blair, Andaman Islands. It is one of those variants of his old, familiar story, in which the swindler claims a distant relationship with his intended dupe.

It might be going too far to say that the usurer Shuckburgh, alias the Clerical and Medical Bank, has surpassed himself in the following case of unscrupulous trickery and extortion; but at any rate he has worthily maintained his high reputation in that line of business. Attracted by an advertisement of the so-called bank, a farmer in temporary need of cash (though in a position to offer good security to the amount of two or three thousand pounds) applied for a loan to A. B. J. Stone, Shuckburgh's agent, at 46, Queen-street, Exeter. He received an advance of £100, and signed a document, which he believed to be simply an undertaking to repay that amount with interest at 5 per cent. per annum. A month afterwards Shuckburgh sent two bailiffs to take possession of the farmer's goods and stock. The deluded borrower then discovered for the first time that what he had signed was a bill of sale for £220, with £5 per month interest. The interest was payable monthly, and the moment the first payment became overdue Shuckburgh, without the slightest preliminary notice or warning to his unsuspecting victim, put in the bailiffs.

Including a levy fee of £11, costs of possession and other items, the total amount the blood-sucker demanded, in return for the £100 he had lent a month previously, was about £250. A land agent at Exeter went with the farmer to Shuckburgh's head office at Bristol, pointed out that the bill of sale had been signed under an entire misapprehension—an exceedingly mild way of describing an undoubted swindle—and offered £100 in settlement of the claim. This offer was subsequently increased to £130 and then to £150, and while it was being discussed the usurer's representative became greatly excited, grossly insulted the farmer's friend, and finally struck him in the face. After this exhibition of blackguardism the services of a Bristol solicitor were invoked, and eventually Shuckburgh agreed to accept the £150.

If you want to entirely Furnish your House or select any article of Furniture or Carpet, &c., send for Hewetsons' Illustrated Priced Catalogue.—Hewetsons, Tottenham Court-road, London.

Beautiful Torquay.—The Imperial Hotel has the best position, and is the leading hotel in Torquay. Grand climate. Cool in summer, warm in winter, and well known as the "Queen of Watering Places."

I fancy that if the victim of this barefaced robbery and the gentleman who advised him had known as much as I know about the shark Shuckburgh and the sharper Stone, an attempt would have been made to get the bill of sale set aside. It would apparently have been a question between the evidence of Stone and the evidence of the borrower as to whether the former explained and the latter understood that it was a bill of sale he was signing, and that it embodied the preposterous terms mentioned above. Now Mr. Algernon Benson Joseph Stone has had the misfortune to have his sworn testimony more than once rejected as unworthy of credence. Before he was relegated some months ago to the branch at Exeter, Stone was the manager of Shuckburgh's head usury shop at Bristol. In that capacity he was time after time accused of obtaining signatures to documents by deliberate misrepresentations as to the contents; and I recollect at least three cases in which County Court Judges declined to believe the evidence he gave on oath in support of such transactions, and so morally, if not legally, convicted him of perjury. It is a pity, therefore, that his latest performance of his old dodge was not challenged in a Court of Law, as the bill of sale would in all probability have been set aside.

I see that in his very latest prospectus the above-mentioned Shuckburgh states that his precious "Bank" grants advances to beneficed clergymen at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum. I hardly need say that the beneficed clergyman who expects to get a loan at 10 per cent. from this rascal will be wofully deceived. Notwithstanding the repeated exposures of his rapacity, however, I have no doubt he still finds plenty of fresh prey in country vicarages. It would be interesting to know how many parsons, to say nothing of doctors and farmers, he has fleeced and ruined during the past few years.

Should the Junior Army and Navy Stores ever get into trouble again under the Merchandise Marks Act, I recommend the Directors to observe a discreet silence respecting the unpleasant incident. A more feeble apologia than the document they have just issued in reference to the recent ham prosecution has seldom been penned. The directors do not venture to assert that the evidence given at the police-court was untrue; but they have held a private inquiry, which has satisfied them that the evidence gives "a most exaggerated notion" of such irregularities as existed, and they plead that these irregularities were "in direct conflict with the instructions laid down by the management." They have, however, made a complete change in the management of their provision department, and taken other steps to avoid a repetition of the irregularities. In short, they are not guilty, but they will take very good care not to do it again.

An anxious reader writes to me to inquire why, if he can prosecute a man who sells him margarine for butter, or American hams for Irish, he cannot prosecute his butcher who has been selling him American beef as British for years past, and has practically swindled him of 5d. on the price of every pound of beef sold during that period. He wants to know if he has any remedy. I fear not. On principle there is no reason, I suppose, why the same law which applies to margarine, hams, and a few other goods, should not apply to meat. At the same time, I would point out to the gentleman above mentioned, and others, that they can make a remedy for themselves by obtaining a warranty from the butcher that the meat he sells is home-bred, or by inspecting the meat at the time of delivery and rejecting it if it is not what they have ordered. In ordinary matters of business precautions of this kind are always taken, and the law answers all the purposes required of it. But in domestic affairs people leave all these things in the hands of their servants, who possibly do not know, and probably do not care, whether their master gets the article he pays for; and the butcher, not to mention other tradesmen, has a free hand in consequence.

The half-yearly meetings of the Cambridge Waterworks Company and the Cambridge Gas Company have thrown further light upon the frauds of Mr. William Peed, the highly-respectable and much-trusted solicitor, whose disappearance, leaving behind him liabilities to the amount of £115,000, was noticed in TRUTH some time ago. Peed was secretary to both these concerns, and he swindled them impartially, the Waterworks Company to the extent of £5,511 10s., and the Gas Company to the extent of £4,611 10s. 6d. The marvel is that he showed such moderation, for he might have taken twice these amounts with just as much ease. Nothing could be simpler than his modus operandi. It is true he deigned to pick up a few unconsidered hundreds by the ordinary processes of embezzlement; but, for the most part, when he wanted money from these companies he contented himself with selling bogus shares. With the seal of each company and every other necessary material in his hand, the work of forging the certificates was childishly easy, and with no sort of precautions against such frauds the sale of the fraudulent stock was not at all difficult. The Gas Company declines to accept any sort of liability for these forged shares until it is forced to do so by a court of law; but the Waterworks Company has met the difficulty by paying to the holders the face value of the bogus certificates. In view of what has happened, it is amusing to read now that the case has been taken up by the Public Prosecutor. Much good the Public Prosecutor is likely to do three or four months after the criminal has absconded.

SAHARA (TURKISH) CIGARETTES. SAHARA (TURKISH) CIGARETTES. SAHARA (TURKISH) CIGARETTES. Manufactured by W. D. & H. O. WILLS, Ltd., from a special blend of the choicest Turkish Tobacco

There are probably scores of other companies which might profit by the lesson these two concerns at Cambridge have received. It is not difficult to devise checks against the issue of bogus stock by the officials of a company, but these Cambridge directors did not think it necessary to do anything of the kind, Peed being, of course, a man in whom they had the most implicit confidence. Now that the steed has been stolen they are proceeding to lock the stable door. Other companies in which similar laxity prevails should take the hint, and lock the door before the theft.

Will the Editor of Tit-Bits kindly inform the public what is the position of Messrs. Hubback and Overton in first-class cricket? During last summer, prizes to the value of £150 were offered in Tit-Bits to those who could decipher the names of fifty "first-class cricketers" represented pictorially. When the prize was ultimately awarded, it appeared that the names of the two players above mentioned appeared among the fifty first-class men. Having recently called attention to one or two eccentricities in the puzzle competitions of similar papers, I have received communications from several readers of Tit-Bits who are highly dissatisfied with the result of this particular competition. Not trusting to my own knowledge, I have inquired of various experts as to who Hubback and Overton may be, and they quite scout the idea of those two gentlemen—though doubtless worthy men in their way—being ranked as first-class cricketers.

Here is another of those multum in parvo conundrums to which an editor is supposed to have an answer at his fingers' ends:—

To the Editor of the TRUTH.—Will you please inform me the cost of a divorce, and oblige a constant reader.—Yours, &c.,

The answer depends on a variety of data, which are not supplied. For instance, if you are a lady (petitioner or respondent), it need not cost you anything. If you are a petitioning husband, you may actually make something out of the transaction, provided the jury take a severe view of the facts. If you are a respondent husband, you are bound to be a few hundred pounds out of pocket, whatever the verdict. If you are a co-respondent it may cost you anything up to £10,000. I trust, therefore, constant reader, that you are a constant wife, for in that case you can do it cheap; but to name a figure is a task for your solicitor, not for your humble servant, the present writer.

As a humble journalist I am gratified to note that on two points some, at least, of our railway managers seem to agree with the conclusions arrived at in my recent articles on the shortcomings of the railways. In the first place, I see that the South Eastern Company have appointed M. Achille Adam, who has long represented them at Boulogne, to be a resident director of the company at that place. This is an admission of the soundness of the principle of localising members of the Board in different districts of the line; and I hope that it will be followed by the appointment of resident directors on this side of the Channel.

The South-Eastern management, again, admit the necessity of improving the approaches to London by deciding to widen their main line as far as Orpington—that is to say, throughout the whole suburban district. The widening between Charing Cross and London Bridge is approaching completion, and when it is extended to the other side of Chiselhurst the public may look for a real improvement in the punctuality of the South-Eastern service. A still more significant announcement is that of the proposed widening of the Great Western line between Westbourne Park and Paddington, and the enormous extension of Paddington Station and the adjoining depots, which, if I understand the plans aright, are to be extended nearly up to St. Mary's Hospital. It is little more than twenty years since the Great Western Company doubled its line all the way to Taplow. Now it finds again that the approach to London is insufficient for the traffic. Yet the Great Western at present ranks among the most punctual and best served lines in the kingdom. Can any one doubt, in the face of this, that the allegations as to the inadequacy of the approach to Euston are well-founded; or that the main cause of the unpunctuality on the West End service of the Brighton line is the bottle-neck approach to Victoria station?

At the same time, I feel bound to acknowledge that since the TRUTH articles the up service between Brighton and Victoria—at any rate in the morning—has greatly improved. On Monday morning last the unprecedented feat was accomplished of landing us at Victoria one minute before the appointed time. I congratulate every one concerned upon this result. The record of the last month, as compared with that of the previous year or two, shows what can be done even under the present conditions, if only the requisite effort be made. That being so, I venture to suggest that a similar effort should now be made with the down traffic to Brighton in the evening. What I should like to see is a resident director who had to go home every night by the 5.40 train from Victoria.

Let us journalists all thank our stars that the offence of "Majestäts-Beleidigung" is unknown to the criminal law of this land. Were it otherwise, there is hardly a journal in England whose editor would not by this time have incurred worse penalties than Herr Trojan of the Kladderadatsch. My friend, Mr. F. C. Burnand, would ere this have done many a term in the pillory; many an esteemed contemporary would probably be now walking about minus his ears; and the head of the Editor of TRUTH would have been long ago served up at Court on a charger. The Kaiser, whose sacred person is supposed to have been irreverently treated by the Berlin Punch, is credited with a special knowledge of and affection for things English. I recommend him to study again the history of our Stuart kings, for assuredly he is walking in their footsteps. The Germans are a patient, long-suffering race, but there are more explosive elements in Germany to-day than there were in England in the seventeenth century.

BEXHILL-ON-SEA.—The Mentone of England.—THE SACKVILLE HOTEL, an ideal winter and spring residence. Special inclusive terms till Easter. For tariff, &c., apply to Manager.

A "MAILED FIST" FOR EDITORS.

The Editor of the Kladderdatsch, the German Punch, was sentenced last week to two months' confinement in a fortress for lèse-majesté. He had merely published in his journal a cartoon in which one of the Kaiser's recent extraordinary utterances was mildly satirised.—Daily Paper.

Two months for that? No wonder then,
  Though we our fears dissembled,
That, as we seized our stylograph,
  Instinctively we trembled;
For if, thought we, the German law
  Thus punishment disburses,
Years of confinement we may risk
  By these outspoken verses.

But reassurance quickly came (Grateful as dew on Hermon)—
This country, we recalled with joy,
  Is luckily not German.
So when on ill-considered acts
  Mistaken monarchs venture,
Here we can fearlessly proceed
  To satirise or censure.

Lèse-majesté, forsooth, with us,
  Is never set in motion;
We have a Gracious Queen who scorns
  So retrograde a notion;
And should our Princes take a course
  That seems to be misguided,
They never make absurd complaint
  If they are chaffed or chided.

But Kaiser Wilhelm seems resolved
  To justify the rumour
That he most certainly has not
  The faintest sense of humour.
As eaten up with self-conceit,
  His words have oft disclosed him;
But, come, he's more ridiculous
  Than even we supposed him!

For years he's made preposterous claims
  In language wildly flighty;
For years declared he is a sort
  Of German God Almighty;
For years he has been shouting out,
  In phrases well-nigh stunning,
That he and Providence combined
  A joint concern are running.

And now he has a climax reached,
  And made it his endeavour
To be addressed as "King and Lord,
  For ever and for ever!"
Now that his speeches at reviews,
  And his behaviour after,
Make the astonished Continent
  To ring with hearty laughter;

'Tis now, when he no limit puts
  On his inflated bragging—
'Tis now he thinks the time most meet
  His subjects to be gagging;
And with an antiquated law,
  And spite which never varies,
Comes down on those who even dare
  To smile at his vagaries.

Well, Germans, you are meek indeed
  (Our words might be much stronger)
If you submit to so absurd
  A tyranny much longer.

To have to suffer Wilhelm's whims
  Should be extremely wearing;
But not to be allowed to laugh—
  That must be quite past bearing.

You are not fools, and you must know
  That when such rant he utters,
That when his latest whirling speech
  Each Bourse of Europe flutters,
That every time, in short, he makes
  So painful a sensation,
'Tis he commits lèse-majesté
  Against a sovereign nation.

Then why not tell him—saving thus
  Much sorrow and confusion—
That 'tis high time his antic tricks
  Were brought to a conclusion?
For if you meekly suffer them,
  No matter what your plea is,
You cannot fail to make yourselves
  As ludicrous as he is!

SCRUTATOR.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN'S "LITTLE GAME."

EUROPE is becoming every day more of a manufacturing centre to the world. Each separate country has perceived that in this way alone can it hold its own. But it is one thing to manufacture goods, and another thing to sell them. The struggle, therefore, between the European nations is an endeavour of each to secure markets for its manufactured goods. We have of late sought to find new markets in Africa. But the African cares little for civilized goods, because he is uncivilized. Moreover, he is lazy. In no part of Africa does he work beyond what labour is needed to secure each day his food. If he does do more, it is to obtain spirituous liquor in order to get drunk, or a gun to shoot his neighbour, or a few gewgaws to decorate his person. To annex any part of uncivilized Africa as a commercial speculation is a mistake. It is paying thirteen-pence for a shilling. The cost and the responsibility outweigh all prospective profit. In Asia the case is different. The Asiatics are civilized after their manner. For untold centuries they have exchanged their native products for European manufactured goods. In China there are 400 millions of human beings. Why they do not—with their cheap labour, their love of work, and their intelligence—manufacture much that they import from Europe, is strange. But so it is. For long they threw impediments in the way of international trade. We insisted that this commercial isolation should cease, and we secured certain treaty ports, as they are called. At these ports goods of all kinds, and of all origin, can enter the country on payment of a comparatively small duty. So far all European nations are on an equal footing. But we are in a better position than other nations, from the fact that we forced China to cede to us Hong Kong, which is an English commercial emporium, and an English military harbour. By treaty, foreigners may travel in all parts of the Chinese Empire, but in many parts of it they cannot safely do so. Moreover, each Province claims to levy dues on merchandise passing through it, and these internal dues are a great impediment to European manufactured goods circulating freely throughout the Empire.

Heering's Copenhagen Cherry Brandy. The most delicious Liqueur. Established 1818. Of all respectable Wine Merchants.

For a considerable time after China was thus thrown open to the commercial enterprise of the world, English goods had practically almost a monopoly of its markets. This was mainly due to England being the only great manufacturing country. We had skill, and enterprise, and capital, and we could undersell other Powers. But there has been a great commercial awakening amongst the Continental Powers. We have no longer to fear alone competition from America, but from Germany, France, and other States. And to these Japan—a most formidable competitor—is now to be added.

Japan recently engaged in war with China, and vanquished her. We held aloof. France, Russia, and Germany stepped in to protect her, and obliged Japan to moderate her demands. Their object was clear. It was the do ut des. Russia is building a railway across Siberia to connect her Empire dominions with the far East by a land route. But, on the Pacific, her coast line is closed to navigation by ice during several months of the year. Her primary aim, therefore, is to get hold of an open port which would serve as the terminus to her railway. This was to be obtained either in Manchuria—a northern and somewhat uncivilised Province of China, or in Corea, which is an independent State, but over which China has always claimed suzerainty. It is evident, moreover, that Russia wishes to bring both Manchuria and Corea directly within her sphere of influence. These aims are on the way of attainment, for, I think, we may take it that the temporary occupation of Port Arthur by Russia, with China's consent, will be permanent. Germany also wanted a naval and commercial station, which would be to her what Hong Kong is to us. France, probably, will lay claim also to some naval station on the north-western shores of China. As it is, she has established herself on the south-eastern frontier, and is seeking to push her trade in the adjacent Chinese Provinces. Japan, too, distrustful of Russia, and bitten with the mania of annexation, has designs on China.

By the treaty between that country and China, which was concluded after the late Chino-Japanese war, China bound herself to pay a large monetary indemnity. Chinese credit is bad, and Russia kindly offered to provide the requisite money for her by guaranteeing a loan. We have, it would seem, met this by ourselves offering to guarantee a loan on still better terms. This appears to me to be a mistake. It is all very well for us to say that we are doing this in the interests of Europe. We are doing it in our own interests. By the English Government becoming the creditor of China, we should occupy in that country an exceptional position. The objections that we entertain to Russia guaranteeing a loan, Russia may reasonably entertain to our guaranteeing one. Mr. Balfour has truly stated that our interests in China are commercial, and not territorial. If we become Chinese mortgagees, our interests will soon become the latter, just as the mortgagee of an estate in England has a territorial interest in that estate. I see no reason why Russia should not have her port; indeed, it seems only reasonable that Manchuria and Corea should be brought within the sphere of her influence. Nor can we fairly object to Germany or France having each of them their Hong Kong. What we have to look to is that the treaties that we have with China shall remain in force, and that, in regard to the importation of goods, there shall be a fair field to all and no favour to any. When these treaties are attacked, it will be time for us to interfere. As it is, the less that we do the better it will be.

It is pretty clear that there are two conflicting Parties in the present Cabinet. Lord Salisbury, although in home politics a blinded Tory of the old and bad school, is an able Foreign Secretary, so long as he acts on his own initiative. Mr. Chamberlain is at his old game. It is impossible for him to be a member of a Cabinet without intriguing against its head, and seeking to supplant him. He is only doing now what he did when in Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet. As a Member of a Tory Government, this ex-Radical is in a difficult position. The Tories do not trust him in anything connected with home policy. He is desirous, therefore, to find favour in their eyes by dragging the country into a policy of foreign adventure, in which he can pose as the great patriot, bidding defiance to the world. With this object in view, he never makes a speech without indulging in bluster, offensive to other nations, and which must be regarded with positive loathing by a sensible and able Foreign Minister like Lord Salisbury. At one moment, he is lauding to the skies Mr. Rhodes as an honourable man, for having acted basely to the Governor of the Colony of which he was the Prime Minister, and having joined in a piratic raid against a State with which we were at peace. At another moment, he is using his position as Colonial Secretary to drag us into a quarrel with France about some barbarous States on the Congo River, that he wishes to annex. At another moment, he is announcing that he will lend out money to any impecunious Crown Colony. At another, he is vapouring about our absolute right to the Upper Valley of the Nile. What does all this mean? That he sees no chance of supplanting Lord Salisbury so long as domestic reforms are to the front, and that, therefore, he is engaged in a desperate effort to do so by seeking to show that he is more of a Jingo than his chief.

I do not ignore Mr. Chamberlain's abilities. He is an excellent speaker, and he is pushful and energetic, but I regard him as a dangerous man to the well-being of the Empire. So greedy is he of power, so self-seeking, so anxious to force his way to the front, that he is capable of ruining us, in order that he may fish up a Premiership in the troubled waters. I should be glad if the Unionists were routed hip and thigh. My objection to Lord Salisbury as Foreign Secretary is, that he allows himself to be used for all sorts of foolish purposes against his own judgment. But the Unionists are in office, and they seem likely to remain in it for the next three years. Owing to the faults, the quarrels, and the absence of all decision amongst their opponents, the country declared at the last General Election that it had more confidence in them than in the Radicals. In the present Parliament a Radical can hope for no Radical advance in home politics. In foreign politics he must do his best to render the Tory rule as little baneful as possible. To do this with any effect, he must show Lord Salisbury that, if only he will assert himself, he will aid him to control the wild reckless policy of adventure advocated by Mr. Chamberlain for his own personal ends, for if our choice is only between two evils, it is the part of wisdom to prefer the less. In this, we ought to be able to hope for the support of many Tories. Many of them are honestly desirous for the welfare of the Empire. Not being fools, their eyes must be open to Mr. Chamberlain's "little game," and it can hardly be supposed that they will further it, for whilst they have been ready to accept his services as a condottiere to fight their Parliamentary battles, they have as little confidence in him as we have, and are by no means inclined to aid him in his efforts to become their leader and master. Boldness in domestic reforms, caution in all foreign entanglements, is our rule. At least, those Tories who prefer country to party should be with us in the latter.

This country is a comparatively small island, with a comparatively small population. Already we have hundreds of millions of human beings subject to us. Our resources, great as they are, are limited. Our aim should be to consolidate and to defend what we have. Expansion pushed too far is weakness rather than strength. Those who call attention to the folly of imagining that the law of our being is ever to increase our responsibilities, and ever to bring fresh subject races under our rule, are told that they are wanting in the true instincts of patriotism, and are narrow minded, parochial, and contemptible. So, I make no doubt, was it whispered amongst the Roman Jingoes when the wisest of their Emperors voluntarily withdrew from the province beyond the Danube which had been brought under the sway of Rome, and laid down the doctrine of no further territorial expansion. Yet to this policy Gibbon ascribes it that the Roman Empire continued to exist for many centuries. So talked the French when they egged on Napoleon to his dream of universal conquest. That a man should be sneeringly termed a Little Englander because he is satisfied with being the citizen of the greatest Empire that the world has ever seen, and would maintain it powerful and inviolate, is assuredly a strange misnomer.

THE FRONTIER FIASCO.

Though I am daily in communication, personally or by correspondence, with military men of all ranks, I have found no sign of any difference of opinion among them respecting the article in last week's TRUTH on the failure of the Frontier Campaign. On the contrary, I hear from all sides that the opinions reflected in that article are those universally held in military circles, that I have rendered a public service in placing the truth before the public, and that I shall do well to persevere until Parliament and the country manifest a clearer appreciation of the present situation. That is certainly my intention, and in this intention I am fortified by many communications received from India during the past week.

Let me call attention at once to one of the most significant of these. Last week I gave the views of an officer who had taken no part in the operations, but was in a position to speak authoritatively respecting the opinions of brother officers returning from the front. Here is a letter from an officer of still higher rank, who has had even better opportunities of knowing the truth. For the sake of brevity, I have omitted many passages which deal with points already discussed, but the passages omitted are of precisely the same tenor as the rest:—

"The first phase of the Afridi Campaign, the Tirah Expedition, is at an end, and the troops—all that remains of them—are standing at ease around Peshawar waiting for the next chapter in the fiasco. A more cruel and senseless fight we have never been engaged in, and the laurels gathered are scarcely fit to wear. The arrangements were bad from the start. The first mistake made was that we began operations at least two months too late, after the crops had been harvested, obliging us to draw all our supplies from Rawal Pindi (next to nothing is to be had locally in Kohat), and exposing our soldiers and our miserably-clothed camp followers to the rigours of a terribly cold winter in the snow-covered hills. But why did we begin too late? Simply because we had no transport train organised to start at a week's or even a month's notice. The whole of the Civil Staff of Upper India was put on to ransack the villages for camels and mules and ponies. The Government orders to the district magistrates were to seize these by force from their owners, if they could not be procured otherwise. They were either purchased or hired; in either case at a figure far below what would have been paid had the deal been a perfectly open one. But transport had to be furnished, and as the Commissariat supply was insufficient, we fell back upon the good old system of helping ourselves. I only hope the owners are blessing her Majesty, who in her Jubilee year (a most disastrous one for India, steeped in famine, plague, and war) may be excused for making an extra call upon her loyal subjects when the integrity of her Empire is at stake.

"Well, transport was got together, by fair means or foul, mainly foul; and camp followers were, in many cases, similarly impressed, and started off to the front, and the campaign began gaily, though, as I have already said, two months too late. General Lockhart arrived post-haste from Switzerland to find his plan of operations drawn out for him, and his troops marshalled in brigades, under Brigadiers in whose selection he had had no voice. His Staff was also presented to him ready-made, a Staff far in excess of his requirements. But so also were the fifty odd thousand soldiers. Half the men, half the Staff, and half the Generals would have done the work better, and half the transport difficulties would thus have been avoided, to say nothing of half the cost. Cost, however, is the last consideration with the Indian Government when a Frontier Expedition has to be undertaken. . . .

"General Lockhart unfortunately fell into bad health almost from the start, and the campaign was practically run by others whose gifts of tact and temper failed to shine out brightly when "the band began to play." The method of conveying orders to the numerous Generals was not particularly happy. Consequently a cloud of sulkiness spread over the higher ranks of the Force almost before we had crossed the border, and dwelt over them until after the closing skedaddle late in December down the Bara Pass into the Peshawar Valley. But let me record once and for all that the tone of every regimental officer and man in the Force was magnificent throughout. Not a symptom of grumbling or cavilling at orders, even when these were obviously foolish. No expressed discontent when detachments were left exposed all night upon freezing hill tops, without blankets and without food, and when marches and counter-marches were made with no object which intelligent man could fathom. No growling when small bodies were left to be cut off by an ever-sleepless enemy, watching eagerly for every blunder we made; and these were many. . . .

China and Glass. — Messrs. Goode, Artists and Designers, solicit an inspection of their collection in their recently-extended South Audley-street premises, now by far the largest and most important in Europe. Messrs. Goode guarantee the excellence of all their productions, and invite a comparison of their prices with those of any co-operative stores.

"Shortly, the force was too large and unwieldy for rapid movement along the series of goat-paths over mountain precipices towards the various objective points. The long lines of starving transport animals, always overladen with reference to the task required of them, presented a tempting bait to the watchful Afridis, who found no difficulty in helping themselves throughout to as much ammunition as they required. Then we failed all through, even up to the last melancholy sauve qui peut into Bara, to appreciate the splendid tactics of the enemy, and to take measures against them. Had the Afridis been commanded by a Napoleon or a Wellington, they could not have devised a better defensive programme. They fixed upon their plan of campaign at the outset, and they adhered to it with immense success to the very last day of our visit to their country. They understood that without guns and without military leaders they were no match for us on the plain. So they threw out scouts, who brought them early news of our movements, posted their best marksmen (armed with rifles and ammunition stolen or captured from the invaders) under perfect cover at the most advantageous points for offence along our path; swooped down upon our unmanageable chain of transport animals wherever they found the escort weakest, cut off stragglers, and finally made our camps at night a hell upon earth by pouring in bullets with such deadly effect as to make our poor weary soldiers often long that it were day. When history has time to record the last few days' fight—or, shall we say, flight?—down to Bara, criticism will not find much to say in favour of those who, after all their previous experience of the methods of the Afridis, allowed our transport animals to stampede in the mire, flinging off their loads (in many instances of ammunition) for the benefit of the closely-pressing enemy, and who cast upon a tired-out, weakly brigade the duty, day after day and night after night, of protecting the rear of the column from the constant onslaught of an enemy emboldened by our want of success all through and by the undignified haste of our retirement.

"Returns have been prepared and published from day to day of the numbers of our officers and men killed and wounded in this unsatisfactory campaign. But dare any official say, if he knows it (which I doubt), what the tale is of our unfortunate camp followers slaughtered? Soldiers volunteer for service, they long for fighting, and they receive the reward which contents them in the form of a medal. Camp followers are forced to the front. They get poor food, poor clothing, plenty of kicks, very few halfpence, and when they are killed no record is kept, because they are camp followers. They are merely reported as 'missing' when the superior officer comes round at the end of the month to check the muster roll. . . .

"And what will be the verdict of the British nation upon the outcome of the war? I may guess it in London to be: That our Highlanders did splendidly (which is true; but why ignore other regiments, black and white, that did quite as well?); that we have gone one step further in securing our scientific border; and that it only needs a few more equally successful campaigns to bring peace in the land up to the snow-line of the Sufed Koh. Well, out here we respectfully beg to differ. We are nearer the paling, and have seen more of the game. It is the same old game that has been played in these north-western mountains over and over again, ever since the military element secured the upper hand in the Simla Councils. The soldiers want blood-letting, the officers want medals, the staff want brevets, the Generals want decorations. All want excitement. Damn the expense; let the country do without railways and canals, and let us wake war! This is how an expedition is started.

"What damage have we done the Afridis? We have ruined many of their homesteads. These they will build up again in six weeks. We have in most barbarous fashion ringed and destroyed their fruit and shade trees. For this they will curse us to the end of the chapter. We have caused many of their women and infant children, driven out of their homes, to die in the snows. This will be remembered against us when Russia invites them, some fine day, to join her in the sack of Delhi and Lucknow. We have killed a few, a very few, of their fighting men. But, man for man, have we not lost many more? Ask any officer who was in Afridi-land throughout the campaign.

"And what damage have we done to ourselves? Well, the whole of India knows that we took up 50,000 soldiers to fight the Afridis and failed to bring them to terms. Regiments that started from their cantonments 800 strong have crawled back barely 300. Bullets and sickness account for the remainder. General and Staff officers, in whom the public (mainly on their office form) had confidence, have returned with shattered reputations and broken constitutions. Mules and camels and ponies by the thousand are mingling their ashes with cans of bully beef, commissariat flour and ammunition boxes (abandoned unopened), spread around in the confusion of our retirement, for the benefit of the wild highland race we tried in vain to conquer. No, there cannot be the least doubt about it. Our prestige has not gained, and our powers of organisation have not shown up well in this our latest effort against the wily Pathan. The operations have cost us three and a half millions sterling. No one would have grudged that, had we, for once only, been able to say that the thing for which we went in had been effected. But history will repeat itself. Forgetting the lessons of the present campaign we shall, a year or two hence, again gaily enter into warlike operations on the Frontier; and nothing you, dear Truth, or I can urge will stop the soldierly element in the Simla Government from having another shot at the cocoanut. Let us hope they will hit it soon, and have done."

The latest intelligence does not furnish much ground for such hope. No disaster that has happened throughout the campaign is more shocking than that of Saturday last, with its perfect holocaust of officers, and the ugly record of seventeen British soldiers missing—a return which tells its own tale to those who can read between the lines. Nor does anything that has yet happened point more obviously to negligence or blundering. Listen to the official explanation:—"The leading troops reached Shin Kamar Kotal at 10.30. No opposition was offered to their advance. Colonel Haughton, with the Sikhs, proceeded about a mile to search the caves. On the arrival of the main body at the Kotal it was discovered that a company of Sikhs had somehow been withdrawn from a high ridge on the west, which was the key to the position. The enemy had at once occupied this ridge, and its recapture involved heavy loss." A company had been "somehow" withdrawn from a high ridge which was the key to the position. Was there ever such a confession? And this after all the lessons of the last four months. Well may the Standard begin to awake at last to the fact that things are not going quite as well as might be desired, and to suspect that some inquiry will be necessary into the management of the campaign and the condition of the Indian Army!

Before saying more on this point, let us look at another matter which has not yet been touched upon in the Press. I have received a lengthy letter from a Medical Officer, whose services entitle him in every way to public respect, on the hospital organisation, both at the base and in the field, during the late campaign. It points to precisely the same lack of preparation, forethought, and organising ability as does the story of the operations in the field. The writer begins by a reference to the state of chaos which prevailed at the Palace Hospital at Ismailia in 1882, and then draws a comparison with the condition of things at Rawalpindi in 1897, very much to the disadvantage of the Indian arrangements, although, of course, a dozen excuses could be offered for the breakdown at Ismailia which have no application to Rawalpindi. Here are the chief facts commented upon :—

Sahara (Turkish) Cigarettes are manufactured solely by W. D. & H. O. Wills, Ltd., from a special blend of the choicest growths of Turkish Tobacco. Finest quality obtainable.

No. 1 British General Hospital should have been opened on October 9, but, from some unforeseen circumstances, it was not ready until a much later date. In the meantime, convoy after convoy of sick kept arriving from the front. These convoys, sometimes as many as fifty in number, being detrained at Pindi about midnight, in the bitter cold of October, hoped to find at last rest and comfort.

What was the state of this hospital?

The medical officer who had been in charge was removed and sent to a Field Hospital at the front, and a Surgeon-Major, who had been detailed from Bombay for this Field Hospital, was placed in charge about a week before the sick streamed down from the front. This swapping horses while crossing a stream does not usually succeed. To make matters worse only three medical officers were available to attend 397 or more sick, and some of these had other duties to perform. If there had been a sufficient number of assistant surgeons and trained men of the A.H.C. to assist, matters might have jogged along in some way, but, to complete the Field Hospital at the front every man who could be found was sent forward. Owing partly to this, and partly to overwork on the part of the medical staff, sick men were for days without medicine or attendance except when the fagged-out, sick, and over-worked medical officer in charge himself struggled round these wards. Many were sleeping on the floors and in the hospital library. Some were in tents. The difficulty of obtaining sufficient tentage was extraordinary, considering that the whole resources of India were behind and in connection by rail. This appeared still more extraordinary when, on its being intimated that Sir George Wolseley, the Lieutenant-General Punjab, was soon to arrive, acres of canvas suddenly appeared, pitched in Oriental magnificence and gorgeous array.

Will it be believed that with many serious cases, several men wearing themselves out owing to abscess of the liver, only one feeding-cup could be found in this large hospital?

Such was its state when handed over to what may be called the Journeyman Surgeon-Major. Loud and specific complaints are also made of the cleanliness of this hospital, and the state of the bedding and other equipment. What can the Medical Officer have been like who left his hospital in such a state on departure for the front, and who was the P.M.O. who permitted such a state of affairs? Doubtless they will be specially promoted, and originate another grievance amongst the thousand-and-one in our A.M.S. The unfortunate Surgeon-Major who took over charge, or, more properly speaking, at whose head this vast hospital was pitched, worked night and day in order to overcome difficulties which were almost insurmountable. Work as he may, it was in vain. He was soon struck down with enteric fever, and barely escaping with his life, is now invalided.

Whilst this was going on in the European hospital, the condition of the native general hospital at the base was a hundred times worse. It was under-officered (four where ten should be), badly equipped, and without food supplies. Native troops in hospital provide their own rations, but these poor unfortunate soldiers who fought so bravely for the "White Queen" came down from the front in a condition little short of starving, consequent on their having no money to buy food by the road.

At the front the cry arose, "Evacuate the Field Hospitals," and evacuated they were with a vengeance! Men were passed down from Field Hospital to Field Hospital with little or nothing the matter with them, to arrive at the base, hamper the staff, and overcrowd this hospital, only to be discharged in a day or so. All this entailed immense labour on the already overworked medical staff, and what army could maintain the fighting strength at the front under such conditions? If the Field Hospitals had been advancing daily there would have been some excuse, but they were in some instances stationary for ten to thirteen days at a time. No army could keep the field for any time with such a system of leakage as this.

The unwieldy and overloaded Field Hospitals were a veritable nuisance and a curse to the Brigade, many a man losing his life on baggage guard whilst protecting their cumbrous and utterly unsuitable stores and equipment. . . .

I remarked last week that one of the most disquieting features in the disastrous record of this campaign is the light it lets in upon our boasted Indian military organisation. This is the point which comes out most strongly in the two letters published above. Not only was the campaign badly planned and the troops badly handled, but the account of the way in which the transport was got together reveals an utter lack of preparedness in one of the most important departments for an emergency of this kind; while another department is equally condemned by this evidence as to the condition of the hospital arrangements. The public at home have to face not merely a disastrous failure in the field, but a failure manifestly due to lack of intelligence and skill at the head of affairs and to radical defects of organisation. The ablest commanders and the most perfect army cannot command success, but at least they can deserve it. The Indian military authorities seem to have deserved nothing but failure. The campaign was opened out of season; the force was too unwieldy for the task it had to perform; the General was a stranger to his staff; the staff were incompetent; the transport was ill-equipped, and unsuited to the circumstances of the campaign; the medical staff was overmanned at the front and undermanned at the base; the hospital organisation was chaotic. Wherever one looks, one sees the evidence of incompetence at headquarters and disorganisation in the lower departments—the failure of individuals and the breakdown of a system.

Parliament meets next week. It should be the first business of every one in the House who values the safety of the Empire to insist upon a searching inquiry into the causes of this deplorable fiasco. If we are told that this is unpatriotic, so much the worse for patriotism, as understood by its professional exponents. If we are told that to condemn the policy and the conduct of this inglorious and disastrous war is the part of "Little Englanders," so much the better for those who are called Little Englanders. At a time when almost every day brings forth some new crisis in our foreign relations, and when our fire-eating politicians and pressmen are ready to beard any foreign Power at the first pretext for a quarrel, we find the Indian Government, which is nothing if not an efficient military administration, checkmated, humiliated, paralysed in an attempt to "teach a lesson" to a few thousand undrilled savages. At a time when India is stricken by plague and famine, when its Government is but one degree removed from bankruptcy, we see money being squandered in millions on a policy which is of doubtful expediency and condemned by many of those most competent to judge its merits. It behoves every man who is concerned for the credit of England or the welfare of India to call on the rulers of the Empire for an explanation of the past failure, and a satisfactory declaration as to what is intended in the future, and to resist further expenditure of blood and money until both are forthcoming.

THE HIGH SHERIFF AND "TRUTH."

Some unknown friend has sent me a curious little pamphlet, entitled "Copy of Correspondence between W. W. A. FitzGerald, High Sheriff of County Clare, Ireland, and Truth. With Extracts from an Article in Truth." The pamphlet is printed by Messrs. Spottiswoode & Co. It contains certain letters which passed between myself and Messrs. Bolton & Co., of Temple Gardens, in August and September last, an extract from a letter which I wrote to Mr. J. B. Molony, solicitor, of Ennis, and a few sentences from an article entitled "The Clare Grand Jury Case," which appeared in TRUTH of September 30. These are the whole contents of the pamphlet, and no indication is given as to the parties at whose instance it has been printed, or the object of its publication. From the manner in which it has been compiled, however, it seems a legitimate inference that it is intended to put right the High Sheriff of Clare with those who were unfavourably impressed by the manner in which the Grand Jury was summoned last summer, and the Secretary to the jury appointed. The pamphlet gives a most imperfect and misleading impression of what passed between myself and the representatives of the High Sheriff and the successful candidate at the election. It selects from the correspondence and the article certain passages in which I withdrew statements which had been corrected, while suppressing all those remarks which were not corrected, and studiously ignoring the failure of the High Sheriff to answer the most serious and pertinent questions arising in the case. Whoever is responsible for this proceeding has acted with great disingenuousness, and did well to refrain from disclosing his identity upon the pamphlet.

I do not know how long this publication has been in existence, nor to what extent it has been circulated, but it appears to call for some reply on my part. For that reason let me briefly recapitulate what passed between myself and the representatives of the High Sheriff and the Messrs. Studdert in August and September last. In the first instance, a paragraph appeared in TRUTH of August 12 explaining that the appointment of Secretary to the Grand Jury of Clare at the last Summer Assizes rested between one gentleman, who was a landlord and nephew of the Lord Lieutenant, and another, who was the son of the High Sheriff's land-agent; and that, although the former was a very popular gentleman in the county, and generally considered a most likely candidate, the High Sheriff's agent's son was elected. It was asserted that many who had habitually received summonses as Grand Jurors did not do so on this occasion, and that prior to the summoning a canvass had been made of the county, and the names of those who were favourable to each candidate ascertained. Finally, I said that there had been a departure from the usual practice of summoning the jury, and that the matter required sifting. Upon this paragraph I received a letter from Messrs. Bolton & Company, of Temple Gardens, acting on behalf of the High Sheriff, who denied that there had been any departure from the usual practice, and asserted that all the gentlemen summoned had been for some time past on the panel. This was on the face of it a very limited and guarded traverse of the allegations which I had made, and entirely failed to deal with the chief point—namely, that certain gentlemen who had been habitually summoned were left out on this occasion; but as the solicitors had called upon me to withdraw and retract charges, I published the letter, with an explanation that I made no imputation upon the High Sheriff's character, adding that I should be glad to go further if Messrs. Bolton would deny categorically (1) that persons who had been habitually summoned had been left out on this occasion, and (2) that the work of issuing the summonses had been practically left in the hands of the High Sheriff's agent, or his son, the successful candidate. In order that the High Sheriff might fully appreciate the reasons for asking these questions, I subsequently furnished his solicitors with particulars showing that eleven out of twenty-three jurymen were connected with the Studderts by blood, marriage, business, or other ties; and also with the names of several gentlemen who, having been summoned several times in succession, had been omitted on this occasion. To this I received no answer for three weeks.

In the meantime, Mr. Molony, of Ennis, acting on behalf of the Messrs. Studdert, had written to inform me that he had received instructions to commence proceedings against me, and to demand the name of my informant, or of my solicitors in the event of my refusing to disclose the source of my information. I gave in reply the names of my solicitors, but at the same time explained that I should be perfectly happy to correct any mistake in my statements, and apologise for it, if Mr. Molony would explain what it was. I then received from Mr. Molony a categorical denial of the statement that the summoning of the Grand Jury was left in the hands of the Messrs. Studdert—a statement which, even if true, hardly seems to furnish the Messrs. Studdert with a cause of action, or to justify the peremptory letter which their solicitor addressed to me. Mr. Molony further stated that it was the practice to omit from every Grand Jury a certain number of those summoned to the previous jury, so that nothing unusual had taken place on the present occasion. Later on I received a letter from Messrs. Bolton, putting forward some attorney's pretext for not answering the questions which I had put to them respecting the composition of the jury, and intimating that, unless an apology was published for the erroneous statements made in the original paragraph, I must take the consequences in the shape of proceedings for libel. Quite independently of the threat thus conveyed, it would be entirely contrary to my practice to refuse reparation for any erroneous statement made in TRUTH. Although the main allegations made in the original paragraph of August 12 had never been contradicted, either by the High Sheriff or by the Messrs. Studdert, this gentleman had asserted that I was in error in two particulars. I accordingly stated in the article of September 30 that I desired to correct these two statements, and to apologise for having made any mistake. The statements thus corrected were simply that the High Sheriff had left the summoning of the jury in the hands of one or other of the Messrs. Studdert, and that the jury was not summoned in accordance with the usual practice. No other part of the original allegations had been traversed; and when making the desired correction, I pointed out emphatically that a correction and apology for two incidental inaccuracies in no way affected the substance of the original allegations, and that the facts which remained undisputed by the High Sheriff amply justified my original comment that the composition of the jury called for explanation. I concluded my article by repeating what the undisputed facts were, and I put it to the High Sheriff plainly that it was his duty to clear the whole matter up. Neither the High Sheriff nor the Messrs. Studdert thought fit to say another word after this point. The obvious inference is that the serious part of the charge cannot be answered; and this inference is certainly not weakened by the course taken in putting forth a garbled and disingenuous compilation from the correspondence and the TRUTH articles for the purpose of conveying the impression that my criticism has been satisfactorily rebutted.

A MOST WONDERFUL PACKAGE of Crockery. Send your name and address to the Pearson Pottery Co., Hanley, Staffs., and we will forward one of our catalogues of cheap Crockery. One Hundred Pieces of Crockery for £1. 1s., including complete Dinner and Tea Services, and other pieces. Even an imitation of this advertisement impossible. Drop a post card for particulars.

NOTES FROM PARIS.

THE LAST PARIS PRODUCTION.

MONTALEMBERT, the son of a French father and Scotch mother, could neither do with or without Roman Catholicism. He loved free thought, and he had a passion for submitting his mind to authority. Likewise Lavedan, who hates aristocracy, can neither do with nor without it. He gives us, however, a less number of gilded and other aristocrats in "Catherine" than in most of his plays. The heroine is in rather humble bourgeois life. He calls the comedy (in four acts) after her. Now, Catherine (Mlle. Lara) is anything but a ladylike name. The young person bearing it is the daughter of a poor organist (M. Vallon), and one of four children who live in a garret. The heroine graduated with a first prize for the piano at the Conservatoire, and is the music mistress of Madeleine de Coutras, sister of the young Duc de Coutras, and only daughter of a sweet and yet stately dowager Duchesse. This character Mme. Pierson personates delightfully, and with all her old, suave Crecle grace. The Duc falls in love with Catherine as she teaches his sister. But he has no chance of declaring himself until Madeleine is one day called to attend to her invalided old nurse. The piano serves, as the book did to Francesca da Rimini and her stepson, but Catherine does not forget to play, as the Italian lovers forgot to read. However, things are becoming warm when Hélène de Grisolles enters. Mlle. Brandès personates this naughty personage. Hélène is a cousin of the Duc, has been married to a too fast nobleman, and is trying to have her marriage annulled at Rome, as a step for proceedings in the Divorce Court. She is a person of warm feelings, and, when Catherine retires, confesses in a way her passion for De Coutras. The confession takes the form of an appeal to him for advice. She is in love, and endeavours to say with whom. But he manages not to let her and parries until his mother comes in.

De Coutras in the next act declares to the dowager his passion for Catherine. She, being an indulgent mother, and esteeming the music-mistress, consents to the marriage. The Duc is her darling and a spoiled pet. In French fashion, she goes herself to Catherine's father to make the proposal, and to state, the girl having no dowry, what she proposes to settle on her. She climbs six flights of stairs to the abode of honest petty-bourgeois poverty. The prizes won at school by the four children of M. Vallon ornament the wall. Artificial orange-blossoms are kept under glass. Children's hoops are preserved as cherished souvenirs. Catherine works at a sewing-machine. Blanche, her anæmic sister—anæmic from want—makes shades for lamps. There are two boys, who have just come in from school, and are otherwise busy. All this is new to the Duchesse. She rather shrinks from the notion of choosing a daughter-in-law in such a place. But the organist—a shabby old man—enters. She states the cause of her visit. He feels in honour bound to tell her of his poverty and of some debts. She waives all objections. But when he consents, Catherine refuses. Her troth is pledged to an old friend of the family, Mautel, who proposes for her as a way to rescue her from black poverty. He might almost be her father. Being a just man, however, he releases her from her engagement. The music mistress becomes Duchesse de Coutras.

Six months come and go. The Duc is not so much tired of his wife as of her family; their ways are not the ways of his monde. Her brothers make themselves too much at home at his country house. The cowed, humble air of old Vallon makes him wince. Why will he sit on the edge of his chair in company, and cut his bread instead of breaking it? Catherine herself gets on his nerves. She is lovely; dressed to perfection by a skilled femme de chambre. But she often betrays her former calling of music mistress. Still he could put up with this, were it not for the family.

As he chafes Hélène reappears. She is a perverse creature, and fonder of him since his marriage. Her apparent object is to say good-bye, but her real one to entice him to go with her to Rome. She is called there to look after her suit. The Duc might yield to the temptress, but for the intervention of Catherine. She has overheard the conversation. Her honest heart revolts, and she tells Hélène to be gone, and take with her the man she (Catherine) has ceased to love. The dignity of the injured wife wins back the husband. He falls on his knees to implore forgiveness. But Catherine is like stone. She writes to her old admirer Mautel for leave to place herself under the protection of his friendship. He has greater eloquence than any one could have suspected. It is shown in remonstrating with the Duc. Mautel reveals his former engagement and (as it has turned out) the loss Catherine incurred in being released from it. What with his speech and the other influences, a reconciliation takes place. Mautel proposes to serve as father to the two boys, and take them to a place he has far away in the country. The father agrees to give up visiting Catherine, who can go to see him. In this way the dénouement is fairly satisfactory. As to Hélène, she succeeds in getting her marriage set aside, and marries a Roman nobleman. In any case—one feels—the divorce court is open to the young Duc and Duchesse. If the Duc's nerves suffer further, he can go there for a remedy.

"Catherine" is society gossip dramatised. It is not very deep or extremely brilliant, but easy and amusing from first to last. Great pains were taken with the stage decorations. All the porcelain in the salon of the Duchesse is lent by the Museum of Sèvres. Signor Annunzio was at the first representation. He could have seen that the agency of Byronic passions is not needed for an attractive four-act play with much literary charm.

The anti-Semite agitation must go hard with aristocrats who are sons or husbands of Jewish ladies. Such noblemen are among the most illustrious in name and title of the "Livre d'Or." The Prince de Ligne, the Duc de Gramont, and the Prince de Wagram are married to Rothschilds. The Duchesse de Rivoli is adopted daughter of the late Mme. Furtado Heine. Her daughter is Princesse Murat. The Princesse de Polignac is the only daughter of Mirès; the Duc de Richelieu is grandson of Michel Heine, of New Orleans. The Duchesse d'Etampes, née Rommengen; the Marquise de Solignac-Fénelon, née Hertz; the Dowager Duchess of FitzJames, née Lovenhjem; the Marquise de Breteuil, née Fould; the Marquise de la Marismas, née Jacob; the Vicomtesse de la Pannonie, née Heilbronn, are all of Jewish origin. Then we have the Marquise de Rochouart, née Erard; the Princesse F. de Lucinge Faucigny, née Cahen; the Marquise de Presle, née Klein; and the Marquise de Gronchy, née Haber. The late Marquise de Noailles, née Lachmann, was a Polish Jewess. The late Duchesse Decazes—step-daughter of the so-called Duc de Campo Felice—was née Singer. A Duc de La Rochefoucauld has married Mlle. Rumboldt. This being so, I cannot see how, with any decency, sons of the Crusaders can take up arms against Israel. I am told that one of the reasons why they subscribe to Drumont's paper is that Jews do not care to give any longer their millions and their daughters to French noblemen. The divorce law has brought down the value of titles in the marriage market.

LETTER FROM THE LINKMAN.

It appears to me, Dear Lady Betty, that a series of Club Conversations should be very instructive. The following is to be regarded merely as a specimen:—

Scene: A Club. Enter Smith.

Jones: "Well, Smith, how are you? How is the world treating you?"

Smith: "Magnificently! You know Midas, the Klondike King?"

Jones: "Yes, by name. An abominable ruffian, is he not?"

Smith (laughing): "A colossal thief, I should imagine . . . . but a very useful man to know. His Klondike Consolidateds are already at eight, and Midas tells me that he and his gang are going to force them up to twenty. . . . . I have five hundred of them."

Jones: "What was the property valued at originally?"

Smith: "The capital of the concern is a million. Of course, before the shares reach twenty, we who are behind the scenes will sell out."

Jones: "And who will bear the loss?"

Smith: "The public, obviously."

Jones: "You call that business? It appears to me that Midas is merely a gigantic swindler, and that those who are 'behind the scenes,' as you call it, are accessories to the act, and, therefore, swindlers too."

Smith: "But there is nothing illegal in manipulating the market, or in forcing shares up to a fictitious value."

Jones: "Only because the Legislature never contemplated that modern ingenuity would devise such an elaborate system of fraud."

Smith: "But every one in the West End and in the City speculates upon such private information. It is to obtain this that we make the acquaintance of men like Midas, give them dinners, put their names down for election at our clubs, and show them much civility."

Jones: "All that only makes the matter worse. It shows that the West End is now so eager to make money that it altogether disregards the first principles of honesty."

Smith: "My good Jones, it is waste of time to discuss business principles with you. . . . . Wait till I have sold my Klondike Consolidateds, and you will come to eat my ill-gotten delicacies and to drink my ill-gotten wines."

. . . . .

Scene: The Same Club. Time: Six Months Later.

Enter Smith.

Jones: "Well, Smith, how is Midas?"

Smith (savagely): "A d——d scoundrel! He ought to be in gaol, and if I can get him there I shall."

Jones: "Why? Did Klondike Consolidateds not go up to twenty?"

Smith: "Of course they did not. Midas merely unloaded his own shares upon his friends at eight, after which the concern collapsed. He made his money; we lost ours."

Jones (chuckling): "So long as Midas was only going to cheat the obscure public, retired tradesmen, clergymen, and ignorant widows, there was nothing dishonest in the transaction. When, however, he caught you, he became an abominable scoundrel."

Smith: "My good Jones, it is useless to talk about business with you. Any man who possesses the slightest knowledge of business can see that . . . ."

Jones (interrupting): "To cheat others is honest, but it is dishonest to cheat us."

Exit Smith, growling.

* * * * *

Six years ago Messrs. Spottiswoode & Co. first published a little volume called "Clubs," and attention was directed to it in this column at the time. The object of the publishers in producing the work in question was to provide a book in which the names of all the clubs used by the English in all parts of the world should be recorded, together with the dates on which each was founded, the number of members they have on their books, and much other information which might be useful or interesting. In compiling a work of this kind it is difficult to avoid making mistakes occasionally, and some errors of comparatively trifling importance are still to be found in the edition for 1898. A careful study of "Clubs," however, brings to light some especially curious facts. There are now over one hundred and forty-five clubs in London, of which only thirty existed half a century ago, whilst seventy-five have been founded during the past twenty years, dividing between them no less than a hundred thousand members. At the beginning of the century there were probably not more than twelve hundred men who had secured election to a London club, and now there are considerably more than two hundred thousand! Of course, no distinction now attaches to being a "club man," but it is curious to observe that the revolution as regards clubs in London only commenced just twenty years ago and has raged with unabated energy ever since.—Believe me to be, very truly yours,

MARMADUKE.

The results of an over-indulgence in food or drink are promptly rectified, without pain or discomfort, by taking a teaspoonful or two of Kutnow's Improved Effervescent Carlsbad Powder, which acts quickly and brings the patient into a proper condition for further indulgence in the good things of life. Write, mentioning Truth, for a free and post-paid trial sample, and the printed evidence of eminent Physicians and leading Medical publications, to S. Kutnow & Co., Limited, 41, Farringdon-road, London, E.C.

SPORTING NOTES.

MANY years have elapsed since there has been any Two Thousand betting in January, and the transactions recorded last week are wholly unworthy of notice, being paltry in amount, and representing merely the harum-scarum fancies of foolishly impetuous backers. For example, the dark Angus appears to have been backed at 100 to 7, whereas his stable companion Disraeli, who is one of the Derby favourites, is not mentioned. It is any odds on Disraeli being the best horse from this stable, and it is quite likely that Angus will prove a difficult animal to train. As to Hawfinch, I shall be vastly surprised if the Kingsclere stable does not supply a better candidate in either Batt or Collar. Ninus is not engaged in the Derby, so it may be assumed with confidence that he will be prepared for the Two Thousand if possible, but Prince Soltykoff's colt will want a lot of time, and it is quite likely that he may not be seen at his best until the Grand Prix. Ninus is decidedly one of the finest three-year-olds in training, and he looks like a stayer. Hawfinch was lame in his knees during the greater part of last year, and it may be taken for granted that if he is really a Derby horse he would have been bought by the Duke of Westminster.

Hermiston is mentioned as being "well in" at Lincoln, and the colt is certainly most favourably weighted, but there is not the least prospect of his running so early in the season. It is quite possible that Hermiston may go for the Kempton Park Jubilee Handicap, but that race is run only four days before the Newmarket Stakes, in which Mr. Low's colt is also engaged.

Orzil has been stopped in his work at Newmarket owing to some trifling mishap. He was overworked last season, and has considerably benefited by a long rest, but I do not believe that Mr. Brassey's colt will ever really stay over a longer distance than six furlongs.

Mr. Belmont's Bridegroom II., who is a son of Rayon d'Or, is one of the most improved three-year-olds in training, and he is just the stamp of horse to show to advantage over the Epsom gradients. He is not engaged in the Two Thousand, but he is entered for the Deby, St. Leger, and Grand Prix.

The American horse Voter has been well taken care of by the handicappers, and his owner must the more bitterly lament that his steed was amiss last autumn after his arrival at Newmarket from the United States, for he would certainly have won the Cambridgeshire if he had been all right.

If Major Egerton's estimate of Bay Ronald is correct, then the City and Suburban is surely over, if Mr. Brassey's horse can be got fit and well to the post. At Lincoln, Bay Ronald (8 st. 11 lb.) is placed within 5 lb. of Knight of the Thistle and 1 lb. behind Voter, while Merman has the same weight, and he has to give Bradwardine 4 lb. At Epsom, Bay Ronald receives 8 lb. from Knight of the Thistle and 7 lb. from Voter, while Merman gives him 9 lb., and Bradwardine has the same weight. It seems to me, however, that the City and Suburban handicap is a very indifferent production, having apparently been framed on the fatuous and absurd "flattering" system. Every owner will be delighted with his own horse's weight until he has considered the weights of those owned by other people.

The Stewards of the Jockey Club stipulated for two hundred entries for the Princess of Wales Stakes of 1901, and they ought to think themselves very lucky in obtaining one hundred and ninety-nine. It is difficult to understand why, under such circumstances, the Stewards should have waited for a week to decide whether or not they should go on with the race. This stake would not have come near obtaining the required number of subscriptions but for the generous support of the public breeders and the American owners. The expectation that horses would be lavishly entered, under the new conditions, to run as six-year-olds and upwards, have been grievously disappointed, as was confidently predicted by all practical people. Not a single four-year-old has been engaged, and there are actually only five three-year olds, which are King of Thebes, Ninus, Leisure Hour, Alt Mark, and a brother to Comfrey, whose public form last season is not indicative of high excellence, for he ran eight times, and his only victory was in the Warwick Nursery during the last week of the season. I recently mentioned King of Thebes as likely to prove a dangerous candidate for the Two Thousand and Derby, and the fact that he has been entered for this race shows that his owner and trainer have a good opinion of him. Alt Mark has also been noted by me as a filly that may be expected to run well for the One Thousand and Oaks. Most of the animals engaged are yearlings, and I shall be vastly surprised if the race does not cost the Newmarket fund at least £4,000, for the subscription is heavy, the amount payable on each entry after the final forfeit has been declared being £115. There is sure to be a prodigious weed out in October next, when the minor forfeit is declared. Sir R. Waldie Griffith is the largest subscriber among the owners, having ten entries, and among them are a two-year-old sister to King of Thebes and a yearling half-sister, by St. Serf. The Duke of Westminster has seven entries, his three yearlings all being sired by Orme, the colts out of Quetta and out of Throstle, and the filly out of Vampire. The Duke of Portland also has seven entries, including a yearling by Carbine out of Memoir, with the crazy name of ·303. It may be hoped that other owners will not follow this example, for there is surely more than enough confusion already in the matter of names without any more being created by such fantastical aberrations. Of the public breeders Sir Tatton Sykes has entered ten of the Sledmere yearlings, which will be sold at Doncaster in September, including colts by St. Simon out of Marchioness and out of Mimi, by Morion out of La Flèche, and by Royal Hampton out of Elizabeth and fillies by Orme out of Wedlock (dam of Best Man), by Amphion out of Claribelle, and by Isinglass out of Reprieve. Mr. Platt has engaged five of the Bruntwood yearlings, including a colt by Isinglass out of St. Marguerite, and colts by Kendal out of Geraldine and out of Pixie.

After all the idiotic eulogies which were lavished by crack-brained visionaries upon the Stewards of the Jockey Club for excluding three-year-olds from the Princess of Wales Stakes for 1901, it is amusing to find that, in order to obtain an adequate number of entries, it has been found necessary to reduce the distance from a mile and a half to a mile, a course which nobody can pretend to regard as a satisfactory trial of merit for four-year-olds and upwards.

No fewer than twenty-one three-year-olds have been left in for the Union Jack Stakes of £950 at the Liverpool Spring Meeting, including Cowl, Bittern, The Reeve, Jeddah, Vatel, Sugar Loaf, and Devon. Of this lot Bittern, Sugar Loaf, Devon, and The Reeve have also accepted for the Bickerstaffe Stakes of £600 at the same meeting.

It is quite on the cards that M. Ephrussi's Margaux, by Galopin out of Alicante, by Hermit, may turn out to be a colt worth remembering as the season goes on. Margaux ran several times in France last year without winning, but it may be taken for granted that it is not without reason that he has been left in for all the £10,000 stakes of the season.

Mr. T. K. Barnes, whose death is announced, was the owner of Swaledale, and he had some horses in training at Penrith. Mr. Barnes inherited a large fortune from his father, who sold the Tring Park estate to Lord Rothschild.

Lord Warwick's colt Lucknow will turn out to be one of the most speedy three-year-olds of next season if he goes on all right. This colt must be remembered whenever he starts for a five-furlong race. He has been entered for the Great Surrey Handicap at the Epsom Spring Meeting, but he has quite enough weight there.

The Duke of Portland was at Newmarket last week to see his horses canter. Wantage, his dark three-year-old, is very good-looking, but nothing is known as to his form. The grandly-bred Elizabeth Hardwick, half-sister, by Orme, to Donovan, is never likely to do much good on the Turf, in spite of her splendid pedigree. It is not often that an owner has two such hopeless failures that are so highly bred as this filly and Golden Moments, by Sheen out of Memoir, who has been relegated to the stud. The Duke has a promising lot of two-year-olds, and he is sure to be dangerous at Lincoln, where he has several animals engaged in the Brocklesby Stakes; but, of course, it will not be known which one is to carry his colours there until they are tried about six weeks hence.

Lord Rosebery is sending his well-known horse, Quarrel (winner of the Royal Hunt Cup at Ascot in 1896), to Dalmeny, where he will be at the service of the tenant farmers in the district. Quarrel is to leave Newmarket to-day. This fine horse is by Discord out of Free and Easy. Lord Rosebery has given the farmers of the Lothians every opportunity of raising good blood stock, and during the last twelve months Oriflamb (by Bend Or out of Illuminata, dam of Ladas and Chelandry) has been standing at Dalmeny. Lord Rosebery has a very smart two-year-old by Oriflamb, named Flambard, now in training at Newmarket.

The Prince of Wales has nine horses in training at Newmarket, five of them being two-year-olds, all of which were bred at Sandringham. H.R.H. commenced last season with the same number, and, of that lot, Persimmon has retired to the stud, Glentilt has been sold to the Duke of Devonshire, who wanted him to lead Diendonné in his work, St. Nicholas has been sold, and Safety Pin and Oakdene are being trained for hurdle-racing by Mr. Thirlwell. As to the much-trumpeted Ormathwaite he has not a 500 to 1 chance for the Derby, but he may win some races over short and easy courses if he is judiciously placed. The Prince's three-year-old fillies, Azeeza (half-sister, by Surefoot, to Persimmon), Mousme, and Little Dorrit are all moderate, and H.R.H. will have to depend mainly upon his two-year-olds next season. Sandringham, own brother to Persimmon, is a splendid colt, and it is hoped that he will be ready to run at Ascot, but he wants time, and it is quite likely that his début may be postponed until the July meeting at Sandown Park, where he is engaged in the £5,000 stake, which is the richest two-year-old race of the season. Sandringham is entered for the Prince of Wales's Post Sweepstake at Goodwood, which will be worth £2,600, and there are no penalties. After Sandringham—longo intervallo—it is probable that Eventail, by Ayrshire out of Fanchette, will turn out to be the best of the Prince's two-year-olds, and she is heavily engaged. Warbler, half-brother to Ormathwaite by Windgall, is a promising colt. The Epsom Spring Meeting is likely to be the first meeting of the season for the Prince, as it is probable that H.R.H. will be at Copenhagen during the Newmarket Craven week. His yearlings at Sandringham include Diamond Jubilee, own brother to Persimmon, and Fitzsimmons, half-brother, by St. Simon, to Grig. The Prince will have the first claim on Watts next season, and there is not a particle of foundation for the report, which went round the papers, that H.R.H. was anxious to get Sloan, the American jockey, to ride for him. This story was simply the purest of fictions, but it appears to have been universally accepted as correct in the United States.

With reference to the removal of Mr. Martin D. Rucker's horses to Sir Blundell Maple's stables at Newmarket, the true facts, as given me by a Newmarket correspondent, are these: Sir Blundell Maple made Mr. Rucker a sporting offer for his horses in training, together with his mares and foals. All of them are to be put under the hammer at an early date, and the surplus, if any, over and above the price paid by Sir Blundell Maple, is to be divided between that gentleman and Mr. Rucker. King Hampton and Northallerton, however, were not included in the deal. The former was made a present of to Sir Blundell Maple, while the latter has passed into the hands of a syndicate of three, who, in the judgment of more than one owner at Newmarket, have secured a useful animal. That Mr. Rucker has become tired of his ill-fortune on the turf is nothing to wonder at, seeing that his expensive stud has done nothing toward its keep. After his experience, Mr. Rucker is probably wise in forsaking the "Sport of Kings," and remaining true to bicycles, out of which he is supposed to have amassed a fortune.

The Duke of Leeds is to replace Major Dent as Master of the Bedale Foxhounds. A former Duke hunted this district from Hornby Castle at a time when it was included in the vast Raby country. Mr. Harris has resigned the Mastership of the South and West Wilts, a country which has been for some time distracted by local squabbles. Captain Heywood Lonsdale will not hunt the whole of Shropshire country (in which he succeeded his father last year) after this season, but he is willing to hunt the northern district three days a week at his own expense. There are constantly recurring difficulties about the south or Shrewsbury side of this immense country, the whole of which was hunted by the late Mr. Heywood Lonsdale for fourteen years without any subscription. Several other changes of Mastership are reported to be impending, but Mr. Cockburn has consented to withdraw his resignation of the Blankney country.

The reason why Englishmen are preferred by Scotch constituents for electioneering purposes is becoming very obvious. Mr. Munro-Ferguson has been severely heckled for golfing on the Sabbath by his Musselburgh voters. Poor man! He is not the only sinner. He has had the misfortune to be found out, and that is all. I know a gentleman who was a member for a Scotch constituency. He was a Scotchman, and he loved golf. But he had a pious fear of the unco' guid. Therefore he did not venture to play golf on Sunday when the House was sitting. Tooting or Richmond knew him not on Sunday. On week days he diligently cut divots from the turf. On Saturday he went for a change of air by the shore of the loud sounding ocean. There, as a matter of fact, he did golf. But he took good care that the papers put in a little paragraph about the seaside and his health, and so his constituents pitied him. If he had golfed near town, his name would have gone into the papers for a certainty; and this, as he observed, would offend some of the voters. It is therefore much safer for an Englishman like Mr. Morley, who never golfs, or like Mr. Asquith, who tries to golf and cannot, to sit as a Scotch member.

But, after all, the Scotch are not the only people who regard Sunday enjoyment with religious horror. Near Caversham, which is not far from Reading, there is a village called Southstoke. Here did the youth of the parish indulge in football on a Sunday afternoon. The ground was practically a private one. They had been encouraged to play by the late vicar; but objections were raised by his son who succeeded to the living, but who does not seem to have inherited his father's good sense, and, at his Reverence's instigation, the Parish Council started a prosecution under a long-forgotten Act of Charles I. But the police testified that there was no rioting or rowdyism or betting, and the Bench dismissed the case on the ground that there was no illegal concourse of people within the meaning of "1 Car. I., cap. 1." Well, surely it is better that young fellows should play football or cricket on a Sunday afternoon than loaf about with pipes in their mouths and their hands in their pockets waiting till the local public house opens. The lower people are in the social scale the less they may do on a Sunday in the way of exercise and enjoyment. The richer folk have the Queen's Club with lawn tennis and racquets. Those who can afford it have the river in the summer, and then there is the ubiquitous bicycle. But those who cannot afford to ride have nothing to do. As good Christian men their duty is to put on their best clothes and hang about, playing pitch-and-toss, and smoking all day long—unless, of course, they can be induced to vary these pursuits by going to Church, where, in many parishes at any rate, they will have to hear some parson talking abject nonsense for half an hour, Surely it would be much wiser to encourage them to take a little healthy exercise. The late vicar was a wise man in his generation. It is a pity there are not more like him about. Then perhaps on Sunday afternoons we should see in the London parks and on the village greens just as much cricket as there is on a Saturday. The turf might suffer a bit, but a good many young fellows would be much healthier and better for the game.

Brandauer's Circular-Pointed Pens. Neither scratch nor spurt. Glide over the roughest paper with the ease of a soft lead pencil. Assorted sample box, 7 stamps, from the Works, Birmingham.

The first round of the Association Cup ties proper is now over, and the hopes and aspirations of a certain number of clubs are laid to rest for another year. Aston Villa, the holders, will not be seen at the Crystal Palace. They were beaten by Derby County after a great struggle. The result might have been different had the Aston forwards shot better. Another surprise was nearly effected. It was all the more remarkable as the match was played at Sheffield when the Burslem team made a draw with the League champions. The United scored from a foul, and the Burslem goal-keeper played a great game. Preston North End were at home to Newcastle United and the visitors actually won, Peddie scoring for them by a lovely shot just in the nick of time. A tremendous crowd assembled to see West Bromwich play New Brighton Tower, and the latter showed surprisingly good defence. The only southern team that survived the round was Southampton, who beat Leicester Fosse after a splendid game. The upshot of all the games seems to be that the first division of the League are not such a long way ahead of other football clubs as some people imagine.

In Rugby football, the games that were played were not particularly interesting. Cambridge had an easy win over Richmond, Mackie and Pilkington at three-quarter showing some very pretty combination. Coventry as usual were weak when playing from home, but so were Blackheath, and yet the visitors to the Rectory Field were badly beaten. Lennox once more showed what great improvement they have made this season by beating Kensington after a close game. Although they had not much the best of the score, the Old Merchant Taylors always had the best of the match with Croydon, whose outsides played a strong defensive game. In the County Championship, Durham had only to beat Northumberland to be champions of the North. Unfortunately, Pool, their full-back, had to leave the ground for a time, and during his absence Northumberland gained the only try scored. By the way, in the match against Coventry, one of Mitchell's place kicks was rather remarkable; the ball hit the top of the right-hand pole and dropped over the crossbar. It was given a goal.

At Oxford the crew is practically settled although Phillips has not yet taken his seat, and Pitman will probably be tried at bow. The eight looks like being a very powerful one, but a good deal will depend on Darling. The Cantabs have improved a great deal. They are, unfortunately, light, but they look like making a fast crew all the same. There is no doubt that Fletcher's efforts are beginning to bear excellent results.

In another exhibition game at billiards Roberts has beaten Harverson. But when is the champion's match with Dawson coming off. Apparently, Dawson has staked a hundred pounds and Roberts refuses to do anything until he sees a thousand on the table. It really looks as though Roberts were not so anxious about the match after all. He may know his own business best, but one can scarcely understand how he allowed himself to be drawn and to make the public statements he did if he had no intention of seeing the matter through. It almost amounts to a breach of good faith with the public when a leading man like Roberts acts in this way.

Tincler, the Irish runner, looked much more fit in his three-quarters of a mile race against Kilpatrick than he did when he ran half a mile. The track at Blackburn was loose and the wind high. Tincler had to make his own running, and won easily in what was, under the circumstances, excellent time.

It is very satisfactory to know that the A.A.A. and the N.C.U. have healed up their little dispute over racing tracks. The N.C.U. has been agitating for a reduced rate for the carriage of bicycles by the railway companies. Something ought to be done in the matter. But, without going into the question, it is interesting to note that the N.C.U. has approached the Cyclist Touring Club, and invited that august body to join with them in the matter. One would have imagined that the C.T.C., with all its thousands of members and the enormous power it wields (in its own estimation), would have but to speak the word and the thing would be done. It is, therefore, very amusing to find the N.C.U. taking the initiative. It would seem that the policy of the C.T.C. is about as ridiculous as its book-keeping. It is absurd to expect that a body which carries on a stationery and drapery business would pay attention to such a trivial matter as railway rates.

MAMMON.

From MOSES MOSS to BENJAMIN BOSS.

Sunday.

MY DEAR BEN,—Although movements have been by no means uniformly in the upward direction during the past week, we have had strong speculative outbursts in several departments, and important advances have been established in many of the stocks to which I have of late drawn attention. The Mining Markets and the Home Railway section, almost alone, have displayed dulness, but there are indications that this is not going to last.

The Outlook Brightening.

The outlook generally has distinctly improved, and the situation in the Far East no longer gives cause for anxiety. Even the Russian Press now acknowledges the correctness of England's attitude in standing up for the freedom of trade, and I should be very much surprised if the Celestials were to renounce the much-coveted British loan. Should the latter be concluded amidst favourable surroundings, it would probably give quite an impulse to speculative activity in all the markets, with the exception, perhaps, chiefly, of gilt-edged securities from Consols downwards. The disinclination of the public to pay fancy prices for British Corporation stocks is sufficiently indicated by the fiasco of the Liverpool Two and a Half per Cent. issue at 98, and now we have the Hull Corporation going on the warpath with a Two and a Half per Cent. redeemable stock at 96. It looks to me almost as if this class of securities would reach a still lower level. The general outlook is further improved by the return of the engineers to work. Had not unfavourable dividend announcements been made in the Home Railway department, we should probably have seen a strong rally in these stocks. As it is, the first favourable dividend will probably produce a recovery after the almost general decline. The most animated departments have been those of American Rails, Canadian Rails, and Mexican Rails. In Canadian Pacifics and Grand Trunks, however, the movements have not been all the same way, and, as I anticipated, there have been large realisations accompanied by temporary reactions. The despatch of the American warship Maine to Havana harbour, which had a week ago encouraged the "Bears" to renewed efforts, has proved a blessing in disguise to the Yankee market, as after a moderate relapse a strong improvement set in, which was at first started by the news that the visit of the Maine was a friendly one, and was to be followed by equally amicable calls of Spanish vessels at United States ports. Then followed the announcement of the great New York Central-Lake Shore deal, which is one of the most important events that has ever taken place in connection with the history of United States railroads, and finally, President McKinley's strong speech in favour of currency reform more than counteracted the Teller resolution. The leaders of the Wall-street market are evidently on the "Bull" tack now, and we may have drastic developments. Mexican Rails have been put up to a higher level, and there has been a boom in most other Mexican railway stocks, Inter-Oceanic of Mexico securities, to which I drew attention to when much lower, coming into special notice. The South American section, generally, has been firm, and I maintain my view that we may look for great animation in these stocks during the present year. South African mining shares have hardened slightly since the carry-over, and the market is now awaiting the result of the Presidential contest in the Transvaal. But in view of several favourable developments, set out elsewhere, we may at any time see a sharp rally. West Australians have moved irregularly, and the public are, for the time, neglecting this department. Declines have, however, been moderate, and several leading shares have shown continued strength. The Industrial section is becoming a huge gambling hell, the speculation in petroleum, fish oil, cotton, and electric light shares being excessive, and likely to lead to serious disaster.

Home Rails—A Reaction.

The Home Railway Market has had to bear the brunt of several unfavourable dividend-announcements, which have more than neutralised the favourable feature presented by the settlement of the engineering strike and the return of the men to work. I herewith give, as usual, my comparative table of dividends:—

—	Date of Declaration of Dividend for second half of 1896.	Dividend at the rate of per cent. per annum.	Amount carried forward.	Dividend for second half of 1897.	Amount carried forward.
	1897.		£.		£.
Great Central	Jan. 13	1½	2,400	1	2,200
London and Brighton	,, 13	8	22,280	8	26,000
South Eastern	,, 14	6¾	5,520	6⅝	4,000
Great Eastern	,, 14	4¾	50,918	5	51,000
Metropolitan	,, 20	3⅜	14,130	3¾	17,000
Do. Sur. Lands Stock	,, 20	2⅝	—	2¾	—
London and South Western	,, 21	8¼	24,805	8½	23,038
London and Chatham First Prefs.	,, 22	4½	64,543	4½	72,295
Lan. & Yorkshire	,, 25	5¾	29,140	5¼	21,000
Metropolitan District Prefs.	,, 26	2¼	403	2¾	4,000
North Eastern	,, 28	7¼	31,602	7	—
Great Northern	,, 29	5¼	8,096	5	15,094
Great Western	Feb. 4	7¼	42,884	—	—
London and North Western	,, 5	8	99,779	—	—
Midland	,, 5	7	40,036	—	—
Caledonian	Mar. 2	5	17,418	—	—
North British	,, 11	3	1,484	—	—

It will be seen that the South Western dividend, showing an increase of ¼ per cent., was fairly satisfactory, although somewhat below the market estimate. Neither is there any fault to find with the Metropolitan District Preference dividend, at the rate of 2¾ per cent., against 2¼ per cent. a year ago, the carry-forward being considerably larger. District Ordinary have fallen to 30¼, although there is no apparent reason for this movement. Not only is the introduction of electric traction assured, but the various extensions in which this Company is interested are being carried out, and must eventually greatly benefit the line. There remain the unfavourable announcements of the North Eastern and Great Northern Companies. A reduction in the North Eastern dividend from 7¼ per cent. to 7 per cent. is undoubtedly disappointing, and shows that the expenses have largely increased. This Company has, of course, suffered very considerably through the engineering lockout. The Great Northern dividend at the rate of 5 per cent., against 5¼ per cent. last year, although with a larger balance carried forward, created a very unfavourable impression, and put down the price of the Deferred stock to 58, from which it has recovered to 58¼. It is not, of course, difficult to find an explanation of this unsatisfactory result. Heavy working expenses mostly account for it, while the policy of the Board has no doubt been to trench upon revenue in preparing to face the coming competition of the Great Central. It should not be forgotten, however, that the Deferred stock at the present price yields 3⅞ per cent. The dividends of the three remaining Heavy lines should be announced in the course of the present week, and should these prove satisfactory the Home Railway department will doubtless experience an important recovery. The last settlement showed that stock was generally scarce, and that instead of being frightened out of their holdings investors appeared to have increased the same. Traffics continue to show large increases, and the resumption of work in the engineering shops should further improve the returns. For the week ending January 23 the increase amounted to £49,464. The traffics, more particularly of the Caledonian, were satisfactory, while the Brighton and South-Eastern gains continue on a large scale. At the Brighton meeting the Chairman was able to show that the reduction of fares had stimulated passenger traffic, a feature being the success of the policy of tempting people out of the third into the second-class by reducing the latter fares. Goods traffic is also increasing, but this will entail a considerable outlay in waggons. There is no doubt that the Brighton Company will have to spend large sums on capital account in the near future, and from that point of view the present quotation of Brighton "A" would appear to be high enough, although at 178½ xd. they yield 3⅞ per cent. per annum. At the South-Eastern meeting Sir George Russell was able to make satisfactory statements. As regards the passenger traffic, however, the chief increase was in the third-class, in which it amounted to nearly £20,000, while the second and first classes together only went ahead to the extent of £12,500. There seems every hope that by the widening of the approaches to Charing Cross and Cannon-street the South-Eastern will be able to run a considerably larger traffic than hitherto, especially in the summer months, and its Continental business is also expanding. In fact, the only "Bear" point that the market has got hold of is the approaching opening of the City and Waterloo Railway, but I fancy that the loss from that source is greatly overrated. Dover "A" at one time rose to 116¼, reacting to 115¾. When the dividend of 3⅞ is deducted, they will look very cheap. Great Centrals have been steady, the Preferred at 71, the 1894 Ordinary at 43 xd. The latter stock is no doubt especially suitable for a lock-up, and promises to advance to a much higher level. The Chatham Company has done well during the last half of 1897, the increase in passenger receipts being as much as £22,000. The Company, however, requires an addition to its rolling stock in the way of goods trucks. The dividend estimates of the Heavy lines have not so far been reduced on the unsatisfactory results obtained by the Great Northern and North-Eastern Companies, and it would be imprudent to prophesy so close to the event. I should think, however, that the distributions will be more satisfactory than in the case of these two lines. The Scotch stocks have suffered a moderate set-back; but the Caledonian, especially, has so much to gain from the reopening of the shipbuilding yards on the Clyde, that I quite anticipate an important upward movement in "Coras."

The American Market—Sensational Advances.

The outlook in the Yankee market was by no means bright at the commencement of the week, and the Cuban and silver bugbears were being worked by the ursine party to their hearts' content. The revulsion of feelings was great in Wall-street when it transpired that the despatch of the American man-of-war Maine to Havana was a peaceful event. Recent successes of the Spanish army in Cuba, moreover, appear to foreshadow the coming end of the insurrection, and it looks as if the "Bears" would have to discover some other point to work on. There remains, of course, the silver agitation, but Senator Teller's resolution in the U.S. Senate, declaring United States bonds to be payable either in gold or silver, although passed, has been altogether disregarded, it being of academical interest only. It was, moreover, counteracted by the strong pronouncement of President McKinley at the banquet given to him in New York by the Association of Manufacturers of the United States in favour of currency reform and sound money. The President has thus nailed the colours to the mast, and has openly pledged himself in favour of sound money. Whether the President's Administration will be able to pass an effective currency reform measure this session is another question, the Senate still being under the control of the silver men, but we may at least rest assured that during his tenure of office no Bill in favour of silver will have a chance of becoming law. The big leaders in Wall-street are evidently recognising that the time is favourable to a strong upward movement, and thus the Vanderbilts have selected the past week for the announcement of the deal between the New York Central and the Lake Shore. The New York Central is to take over the Lake Shore, acquiring the stock of the latter by a large bond issue. According to latest advices, the New York Central will offer $200 in New York Collateral Trust Three and a Half per Cent. bonds for each Lake Shore share, and as a majority of the stockholders of the Lake Shore have already agreed, there is no doubt about the deal being consummated. But the new policy of the Vanderbilts is a much farther reaching one, as by acquiring control and allying themselves with the Chicago and North-Western, the Union Pacific, and the Oregon roads, they secure an absolute Vanderbilt trans-continental route from New York to San Francisco. The importance of this event can hardly be over-rated, as the Vanderbilts have always looked well after their Companies, and have discountenanced the wrecking which used to go on in other roads. The new departure, therefore, is of special moment to all those interested in the Union Pacific, which under the Vanderbilt and Morgan influences promises to develop into one of the most prosperous railroads in the United States. The new combination will, doubtless, also benefit largely by the coming rush to Klondike, of which there are already strong indications. In the meantime, very important advances have been established. Lake Shores jumped on Saturday 6 points in New York, and the following comparative list of quotations shows how important the rise has been in these, in New York Centrals, in Union Pacifics, and in Northern Pacific Prefs. :—

—	Price, Jan. 2, 1897.	Highest in 1897.	Lowest in 1897.	Jan. 21, 1898.	Jan. 31, 1898.
Atchison	14⅜	17⅛	10	13	13¾
Do. Five per Cent. Pref.	23¾	36¼	17¾	30⅝	32¼
Canadian Pacifics	57¾	90⅛	46¾	91¼	90¾
Central Pacific	15½	18½	7½	13¾	14½
Denver	12⅛	15½	9 7/16	2⅝	13¾
Do. Pref.	42¾	51⅞	37⅝	49	52¼
Erie	15¼	19 11/16	12	15	15¾
Do. First Pref.	35	46½	28⅝	38¾	40¾
Grand Trunk 1st Pref.	—	66⅛	30⅛	66¾	67⅜
Do. Guaranteed	—	74¼	39⅝	77	76¾
Lake Shore	144	183	156	83	199
Louisville	49¼	65¼	43⅛	57¾	62¼
Milwaukee	75⅛	105⅛	71⅞	97⅜	99½
Mis., Kan., and Texas	13½	17⅜	10¾	12⅞	14⅛
Norfolk Adjust. Pref.	—	50	22½	48⅝	50
Nor. Pacific New Pref.	—	61⅞	34½	65⅞	70⅞
New York Central	96½	118⅛	95⅛	115¾	122¾
Ontario	15⅛	20 9/16	13	17	18½
Reading	13¾	15¼	9⅞	11⅓	11⅝
Southern Ordinary	9⅝	13	7 11/16	9⅛	9⅝
Do. Pref.	26¼	39	25	31⅛	33
Union Pacific	9¾	35 7/16	19 13/16	32⅜	36
Wabash Pref.	15¾	24¾	12⅛	18¾	19½

There is a growing disposition on the part of the leading groups to take up the stocks seriatim. Thus, after the Vanderbilt transaction, we are apparently going to have a big deal in Louisville and Nashville on the refunding scheme, an improvement of from $4 to $5 having already taken place. Missouri, Kansas, and Texas have also been taken up by a Syndicate, who are apparently anticipating an early payment of a Preference dividend. The Ontario, too, has been drawn into the Vanderbilt combination, Mr. Chauncey Depew having taken a seat on the board, while there is a talk of a small dividend being guaranteed by the Vanderbilt roads, but the rise which has taken place is justified by the Road's alliance with the Vanderbilt interests alone. Northern Pacific Prefs. have scored a further important improvement on dividend rumours, and in anticipation of large earnings from the Klondyke boom. Central Pacifics, too, are on the upgrade, but I cannot help thinking that Union Pacifics are the pick of the Pacific bunch. The new securities are about to be issued, and the Prefs. have now gone ahead to 61¼, the Four per Cent. Mortgage bonds to 97, while the Ordinary stock at 35½ is well on the road to 40 ex. the new Prefs., which is by insiders mentioned as the goal. It is also anticipated that the new Prefs. will rapidly rise to 70. Milwaukee have been comparatively neglected for some time, but the last traffic increase of $66,000 was by no means unsatisfactory. The Road is, moreover, stated to have earned at the rate of over 6 per cent. per annum during the last six months, and the continuance of a 5 per cent. dividend therefore seems to be pretty well assured. The rise in Denvers is partly due to a refunding scheme for the Seven per Cent. First Mortgage bonds, maturing in 1900. Many other "Bull" points are being cabled over from New York, such as the fact that the gold reserve in the United States Treasury is $164,000,000, the highest figure reached for the last seven years, while traffics continue satisfactory. The earnings of all the roads so far received show an average increase for the first week of January of 16 per cent., while for the third week of January the increase amounts to 13 per cent., and for the second week of January an increase of 15 per cent. is shown by sixty-seven roads. Canadian-Pacifics have, as I anticipated, suffered from realisations, and, after touching 92¾, are down again at 90¾; but the December statement shows a gross increase of $397,000, and a net gain of $129,000, which is satisfactory as far as it goes. The question now is, what dividend will be announced. Should 3½ per cent. be paid, this, with the previous distribution of 1½ per cent., would make 5 per cent. for the year, and we might have a further rise, but the market now inclines rather to a 2½ per cent. dividend, and the question of new capital, which will have to be raised for the extensions, must also be faced. Grand Trunks are still being strongly supported by the clique who are working the deal. But temporary reactions are becoming more frequent, and the top prices have not been maintained, the First Prefs. being quoted 67⅜, the Guaranteed 76¾. The Trunk market has now become very large, a number of jobbers having joined the half-a-dozen who stood there disconsolately twelve months ago. Prospects, moreover, are distinctly encouraging, but after the important advance a pause is due, as any unfavourable turn in the markets generally might bring about a heavy relapse in view of the unwieldy "Bull" account.

FOREIGNERS AND SOUTH AMERICANS.

The Chinese difficulty has entered a much more favourable phase, and even the Cretan question seems at last to look more favourable. Thus, it is probable that the foreign Bourses will become more optimistic again, especially as the relations between the United States and Spain as regards Cuba have become more amicable. Spanish have thereupon improved, and Turks have been fairly steady, as the report on the Greek finances has now been issued, and there is a fair prospect of the Greek indemnity loan being launched. The South American section has displayed a good deal of strength, and after a further reaction Argentine Government stocks have moved up again, the 1886 Loan to 92¾, the Funding Loan to 91¼, Buenos Ayres Water and Drainage bonds to 75½, and the Four per Cent. Railway Guarantee Rescission bonds to 63½. The gold premium in Buenos Ayres, moreover, continues on the down grade, having now fallen to as low as 155. The advance in Cedulas, especially in the National, is not surprising in view of the downward movement in the gold premium, which has a direct bearing upon their yield. It would not be at all unlikely if Argentines were to rise considerably, not only in view of the large quantity of wheat available for export, but also of the election of General Roca to the Presidency, which is considered a "Bull" point by the initiated. Argentine Railway stocks show a moderate recovery for the week, Buenos Ayres Great Southern Ordinary at 157, Buenos Ayres and Rosario at 77½, Central Argentine at 86, which latter quotation, by the way seems too high from the dividend point of view. Cordoba Central First Prefs. are unchanged at 91, the Second Prefs. at 50. Cordoba Central (Central Northern Section) Income Debenture stock is slightly firmer at 60. Cordoba and Rosario Prefs. at 50 deserve attention, as there is a considerable margin for an improvement in these, even after the recent advance. Mexican Sixes have been very firm, and Mexican railway stocks generally have been better, the First Prefs of the Vera Cruz Line having gone ahead to 83. The upward movement has, however, extended to other Mexican railway securities. Thus, Mexican Central Four per Cent. Gold bonds, which have always been a favourite investment with me, are up at 70, and the various Inter-Oceanic of Mexico stocks are much higher. This reminds me that in TRUTH of December 9, 1897, I strongly recommended the purchase of Inter-Oceanic of Mexico Prefs., then quoted $1\frac{1}{8}$-$\frac{3}{16}$, which now stand at 2, while the "A" and "B" Debenture stock, which I recommended at 45 and 22 respectively, have advanced to 64 and 32 respectively. Uruguay bonds have been well maintained, while Brazilians are neglected, and Chilians are lower. Peruvian Corporation stocks, after a setback, are apparently preparing for a fresh start, the Prefs. having hardened to $10\frac{1}{4}$, the Debentures to 43.

MORTLOCK'S (Oxford-st.), Estd. A.D. 1746.—The collection of China and Glass now on view in their Galleries fully maintains the high reputation and pre-eminence enjoyed by "MORTLOCK'S" for the last century and a half, and well repays a visit of inspection.

The Kaffir Circus—Small Fluctuations.

The settlement in South African shares passed off satisfactorily, and rates proved comparatively light. There is only a small "Bull" account, and it is quite certain that whenever a strong buying movement comes about stock will prove very scarce. For the present, however, the public keep out of the market, as they are awaiting the upshot of the Presidential election in the Transvaal. According to more recent news the contest between President Kruger and Mr. Schalk Burger will be closer than had been anticipated. The Standard and Diggers' News is responsible for the statement that the result will not be known until February 20, but I venture the opinion that it will be possible to see which way the wind blows much sooner. Personally, I am afraid that the anticipation entertained in some quarters, that President Kruger will be defeated, is too good to be true. Notwithstanding a renewed "Bear" attack, East Rands have been well supported on the result of the meeting which has been held in Johannesburg. The quotation of these shares is now $5\frac{3}{16}$. At the East Rand Proprietary meeting, held at Johannesburg last week, the Chairman, Mr. W. Dalrymple, who presided, explained that, owing to the opposition of a section of the shareholders and to Press criticism, the board had been forced to raise a loan of £300,000. The chief difficulties, however—that with regard to the lien of the H. F. Syndicate and that of the representation of the French shareholders on the board—had been overcome. An issue of £600,000 of debentures would now be made, which would enable the board to liquidate the loan and to provide ample funds with which to complete the development work. The Chairman stated that the prospects had greatly improved, and that three of the subsidiary companies would shortly be working with an aggregate of 320 stamps, while all the dividends derived from these subsidiary companies would be placed to a special account for dividends to the East Rand shareholders. The Chairmen then gave some brief particulars of the profits made by the Angelo, New Comet, and Driefontein Companies, the first-named of which has declared a dividend of 25 per cent. Consolidated Goldfields have been dull at $4\frac{7}{8}$; but Rand Mines have hardened to $33\frac{7}{16}$, and Deep Level shares generally, after a reaction, are firming up again, the following being the quotations:—Goldfields Deep $10\frac{1}{4}$, Crown Deep 14, Nourse Deep $6\frac{11}{16}$, Rose Deep $7\frac{1}{8}$, Durban-Roodepoort Deep $4\frac{3}{8}$, Jumpers Deep $5\frac{7}{8}$, Knight's Deep $2\frac{1}{8}$. As regards Rand Mines there cannot be the slightest doubt that whenever the firm chiefly interested gives the signal they can easily rise a few points. The stocks of the Barnato group have been very dull, but it may be expected that when Mr. Woolf Joel has been at work for some time in the Transvaal these stocks will feel the effect of his exertions. In the Robinson group Langlaagte Star continue to show a firm front at $1\frac{3}{4}$, but Randfontein are barely steady at 2, this being also one of the groups which is not being supported to any extent at present. My anticipation that the launching of a Transvaal loan is on the tapis is confirmed by a Reuter's cablegram from Pretoria, according to which "provision for the proposed railways and public works is to be made by a State loan, and the President will ask the Raad to place this loan where it is deemed advisable." It is evident that the Transvaal Government must have money, and it is equally certain that they will not be able to obtain a large loan on anything like reasonable terms, unless they make concessions to the mining industry. Not only would the English market be closed to such an issue, but the French and German Bourses would insist quite as strongly upon the Transvaal Government acting upon the recommendations of the Industrial Commission. At the meeting of the Waterfall Estate and Gold Mines, held on Friday, the Chairman confirmed the statement which has already appeared that the Homestead Block has been acquired, and that the action with reference to the Mynpacht has been terminated by the withdrawal of the defendants, ending thus in the victory of the Company. He stated that the Directors had been able, through the licences, to accumulate sufficient money to pay the shareholders annually about 5 per cent., and they hoped to be able to sell a portion of their property shortly, or to formulate a reconstruction scheme which would place them in a more advantageous position. He mentioned that on some of the claims on the northern portion of the property many very valuable discoveries of gold had been made which would help them when they came or to sell a portion of their present holding. Diamond shares have moved within narrow limits, and are somewhat firmer at $30\frac{3}{16}$ for De Beers, and at $8\frac{3}{8}$ for New Jagersfontein.

Golden West Australia.

With the South African Market the "Kangaroo" department has suffered from the exceptional activity which is shown by certain other sections of the Stock Markets, chiefly those of American, Canadian, and Mexican Rails, which appear to absorb the attention of operators. Thus public buying is stopped for the moment, and Adelaide is also resting on its oars. The strong groups, however, are supporting values to some extent, and there have been no important declines, while during the last day or two there has been a disposition to put up prices. The list of crushings is small this week, and is as follows:—

—	Tons of Ore Crushed.	Ounces of Gold.	Assay of Tailings per Ton.
Peak Hill Goldfields ..	432	1,863	—
North Burgess	120	694¼	23 dwt.
Burbank's Birthday Gift	344	550	—
Wealth of Nations ...	520	310	—
Londonderry	330	652	—
Belle Vue Prop.	129	185	—

The Burbank's Birthday Gift crushing is a satisfactory one, and it is somewhat surprising that these shares do not rise beyond $1\frac{3}{4}$. Lake View Consols, after receding to $10\frac{3}{8}$, have rallied to $10\frac{5}{8}$. Rumours were at one time current that Mr. Callahan, the very able manager of the Lake View Consols, was giving up his post. This was a false report, as it is now officially announced that he has entered into a contract with the Company to continue to act in his present capacity for a further period of three years. Ivanhoe still stand at $6\frac{1}{4}$, while London and Globe Finance shares are quoted $2\frac{3}{16}$ xd. No doubt the issue of the prospectus of the amalgamation scheme of the sub-Companies will again induce activity in London and Globes. By the way, the 10 per cent. dividend has been duly paid to the numerous shareholders. The London and West Australian Exploration group also suffered at one time from a "Bear" attack, from which it has, however, since recovered, Hannan's Brownhill being again very firm at $7\frac{7}{8}$ xd. The principal advance in these shares should come about in March, when all the machinery is at work, and an improvement of two or three points is quite on the cards. London and West Australian Exploration shares declined at one time to $1\frac{1}{16}$, from which there has been a rally to $1\frac{1}{8}$. East Murchison United at $1\frac{1}{8}$ xd. deserve attention, and so do Consolidated Murchison, one of the cheapest shares in the market, which have now hardened to 6s. 3d. By the way, in these and in a number of other shares, the recent weakness was caused by the failure of an old-established firm of brokers, R. B. Smith & Co. The firm used to be much more important than it has been lately, but it had large commitments in Westralian shares here and on the Continent, and the forced closing of these accounts was responsible for some of the weakness in the market. Sons of Gwalia shares have been firm at $2\frac{1}{8}$. According to a British Australasian cablegram the south drive is now in 259 ft., the ore assaying throughout over 2 oz. per ton. The winze has been sunk 17 ft. on the underlie of the lode formation, which assays 5 oz. per ton. The West Australian Goldfields, Limited, have issued a circular reporting latest developments and the present position of a number of their properties. Several of the mines are promising, and the Company has acquired some important interests in the Hannan's district, while it had a considerable share in the Sons of Gwalia deal. The Company does not, however, confine its attention to Western Australia, having also acquired an interest in a British Columbian property, the Whitewater Mines, and, as I have already stated, it has invested in the Victorian Deep Leads. The shares have not, however, moved to any extent, being quoted $2\frac{1}{4}$, while Hampton Plains stand at $1\frac{1}{8}$. The strongest share in the whole market has been Lady Shenton, which have advanced sharply to $2\frac{5}{16}$ ex the dividend of one shilling per share paid last week. This is only what I have been expecting all along, as the shares have all been absorbed by investors, with the exception of those in the possession of Colonial holders who are looking for much higher prices. A favourable cablegram has just been received, which is to the following effect:—"Rayfield (Manager) reports all machinery in good order and working well. Has been thoroughly overhauled. Battery was started January 21. North drive No. 4 level the width of reef is 6 ft., showing first-class stone. Full report sent by mail." Kalgurli have fluctuated, and after touching $5\frac{3}{4}$ have recovered to $6\frac{1}{4}$. Golden Horseshoes have not been in favour, and stand at $8\frac{3}{4}$. The Market Trust group has shown some irregularity. West Australian Market Trust shares are firm at $1\frac{1}{4}$, but Associated Gold Mines declined at one time to $3\frac{7}{8}$, rallying again to 4. West Australian Joint Stock Trusts are quoted $2\frac{7}{16}$. North Boulder have eased off to $\frac{7}{8}$, and Credo have not been helped much by the statements made at Tuesday's meeting of shareholders. Brownhill Central have, however, been firm at $1\frac{1}{2}$, on the very satisfactory advices from the mine. Belle Vue Proprietary, after receding to $\frac{7}{8}$, have hardened to 1. Peak Hill Goldfields have again fluctuated, and, after touching 3, are lower at $2\frac{7}{8}$. Efforts have been made to galvanise Golden Links, Hainaults, and Chaffers into life, but so far with little success. Mr. Prell, one of the Directors of the Champion Reef (Nannine) deserves some credit for not claiming against the Company, which is now being wound up for the purposes of reconstruction, his full fees, such as his other four colleagues are doing. The Directors had agreed to take half fees, and there is no reason why, on liquidation, they should rank for the full sum. Hannan's Proprietary have been quiet at 15s. 9d., but the news from the property is very satisfactory, especially as the flotation of the Ironsides North, a lease belonging to this Company, has been very successful in Adelaide. A cablegram, which has just come to hand, states that the lode on the Pheasant, one of the Company's leases, is 6 ft. 6 in. thick, averaging 1 oz. 10 dwt.

Indian, Australasian, and British Columbian Mines.

The Indian section has shown some irregularity, the chief set back to $3\frac{9}{16}$ taking place in Nundydroog, on an inrush of water—Ooregum Prefs. and Ordinary, Coromandel, Mysore Wynaad, Mysore Reefs, being also lower. Goldfields of Mysore have, however, improved. In Australian mines, other than West Australian, Aladdin's Lamp have been quiet at $1\frac{3}{4}$; but there has been a good deal of movement in the various Mount Lyell shares. Mount Lyell are quoted $14\frac{1}{2}$, while Mount Lyell North stand at $3\frac{13}{16}$, Mount Lyell South at $\frac{15}{16}$, Mount Lyell West at 11s. Mount Morgan have improved to $4\frac{1}{2}$; while Broken Hill Proprietary are easier. A remark which I recently made in "My Letter Box" as to the insufficiency of information concerning the Anglo-Australian Exploration, Limited, has brought me some documents from which I gather that this Company was started in November, 1894, with a capital of £50,000 in 44,000 Ordinary and 6,000 Deferred Shares. On January 4, 1896, the first dividend was paid of 7s. per ordinary share 10s. paid, while the deferred shares received 22s. each. Subsequently, on July 23, a balance dividend of 8s. 6d. per share was paid, and three fully-paid shares in the Gibraltar Gold Mines were distributed for every five shares in the Anglo-Australian Exploration, a considerable distribution being also made on the deferred shares. After reconstruction in July, 1897, the capital was increased to £125,000 in £1 shares, and the Company is now stated to have £44,000 in cash, 131,000 shares in subsidiary undertakings, and two valuable properties in New South Wales. This Company, by the way, was instrumental in issuing the Gallymont Gold Fields and the Gibraltar Consolidated Gold Mines, both of which were successfully floated, and Anglo-Australian Exploration shares are now quoted at $\frac{15}{16}$, with every prospect of an improvement. With reference to the Gallymont Gold Fields, recent advices have been very promising. In the southern mine the manager obtained one assay sample giving 1 oz. 7 dwt. 5 gr. of gold and 4 dwt. 2 gr. of silver to the ton. At the southern mine the middle line of lode continues to open up well, and the average size of the lode is reported as 3 ft., and the last four samples were exceptionally good, assaying from 6 oz. to 11 oz. per ton. These £1 shares fully-paid are now quoted $\frac{5}{8}$-$\frac{3}{4}$. In the New Zealand section declines have preponderated, Hauraki, Taitapu, Woodstock, and Waitekauri all being lower. In copper shares Rio Tinto are easier at $27\frac{1}{4}$, and Cape and Anaconda are also down, but Tharsis are firmer. In the general foreign section Alamillos, Fortuna, Fontino and Bolivia, and Linares are lower, while Montana have hardened. British Columbians have been steady, British Columbia Financial Trust and Klondike North-West Territories being nominally higher. I have already directed attention to the fact that amongst the various enterprises started in connection with the Klondike boom there are just a few good Companies, while the rest are bad and indifferent. On November 4, 1897, I commented upon the Klondike Gold Syndicate, capital £25,000, concerning which circulars were being issued by the secretary, Mr. Davenport, from 18A, London-street, E.C. This prospectus was sent out together with a circular of a bucket-shop, Davenport & Co., who at the same time urged participation in their "Double Operation Guaranteed System." I now gather from the Financial News that Mr. Davenport's activity is increasing. He is distributing prospectuses and handbills offering a commission of 10 per cent. to agents for placing shares in the Klondike Gold Syndicate, and making statements such as that "each Klondike Gold Syndicate £1 share may be worth £100 (or possibly a still larger sum) within the next twelve months," while also promising interest at the rate of 20 per cent. per annum to be paid monthly "until a division of profits next spring." This is altogether too good to be safe, and I strongly advise my readers to have absolutely nothing to do with Mr. Davenport and his Klondike Gold Syndicate. British America Corporation shares have been dealt in to some extent at from 2s. 9d. to 3s. premium. According to the Colonial Goldfields Gazette, the British America Corporation now own in Rossland the Number One, You Know, Josie, Nickel Plate, Oreornogo, Great Western, Golden Chariot, Surprise, Lucky Queen, and Columbia and Kootenay mines. The Legal Tender, Pack Train, and Derby mines are, it is said, under option to them, pending a settlement of difficulties between the owners, and when this is arranged, the British America will control, in connection with the Red Mountain Railway Company, one-half the surface rights of the entire northern zone of Rossland. They have also purchased 800 acres known as the Algonquin group, in the boundary country, as well as properties in a promising district known as White Horse Creek. Amongst British Columbian mines which are coming into notice is the Waverley, a silver lead mine which appears to be turning out exceptionally rich. At present they are shipping selected ore to Swansea at the rate of £500 per week, but when they get their concentrator to work the output will doubtless be largely increased. The Company was formed in May last, and the £1 shares are being dealt in at 1⅜ ½. The Klondike boom will doubtless commence very shortly, and I gather from American sources that the Northern Pacific alone expects to transport about 150,000 passengers to that region. Under these circumstances it may be useful to give the opinion of cool-headed men, even though their views may be somewhat pessimistic. A correspondent, who has resided for some twenty years on the Pacific Coast, has not conceived very sanguine opinions with regard to the prospect. This is what he has to say on the matter:—

Type-writers and Cycles, all makes, for Sale, Hire, or Exchange, at half makers' prices. MS. Type-written.—Taylor's 74, Chancery lane, London. Established 1854.

I beg to say I broached this North-West Yukon Klondike Alaska matter to parties in London in October, 1896, little dreaming there would be such an absurd "flare" respecting it a year after. The discovery of the Mother Lode, "$300,000 to the ton," is a delightful vision, beating "Africa and golden joys." It reminds me of an old mining friend of mine in California twenty years ago, informing me of a rich find, made by a chum of his in Amador County. He said: "We have struck it rich, very rich—$17,500 to the ton." After a while he added, "There is only one drawback in the proposition: The Hell of it is to find the ton." No. All my information respecting ledges in the Yukon Country points to very large veins of low grade, free milling ore, evenly distributed through the lode formation on somewhat the lines of the "Treadwell" of the Exploration Company. Needless to say, this feature is the most favourable to the first-class mining engineer. The $17,500 ore will do very well for "the Marines," and the general run of investors who want a really "good thing."

With all due respect to my correspondent, recent advices from the spot fully confirm the view that there are very rich properties in the Yukon goldfield. Mexican mines have been in good demand, Grand Central being quoted 1⅞, Consolidated Goldfields of Mexico 1⅜. Efforts are being made to create a market for Campana shares, but so far developments do not appear to have been very encouraging.

The South London Electric Supply Corporation, Limited.

A week ago I passed some comment upon the complaint of Mr. R. Wheelock, a shareholder in the South London Electric Supply Corporation, Limited, with regard to the manner in which the Directors had disposed of 21,659 unissued shares, at par, which now are worth a very considerable premium. The secretary of the Corporation, Mr. S. H. Webster, has since been instructed by the Board to issue a circular to the shareholders, in which the statement is made that "at the time no one came forward to take up the remainder of the issue, until in July last a gentleman took up 1,530 shares, paying £2 apiece for them, although the market price was then 30s. to 35s., this number being requisite for the obtaining of a Stock Exchange quotation. As a quid pro quo, this gentleman acquired an option to subscribe the balance of the issue, namely, 21,659 shares, at any time up to December 2 last. This offer was considered so advantageous in the interests of the Company that it was readily accepted by the Directors." They also make the point that there was only one issue of shares, so that the statement in the prospectus that a further issue should be offered to the shareholders would not apply. With this contention I do not agree, and in my opinion, moreover, the explanation given by the Board of the circumstances under which the option was arranged is an unsatisfactory one, and the shareholders will probably still harbour feelings of disappointment and regret at not having been able to participate in the profits made by the gentleman who obtained this very lucrative option. It is curious that the Directors should not mention what Mr. Wheelock had stated in his circular, that the gentleman in question was Mr. Atherton, of Hynton, near Liverpool, the promoter of the Company. In my opinion the option was indeed very cheaply acquired by taking over the small number of 1,530 shares at £2 each, and as the Board appears to have held a very high opinion of the prospects of the undertaking, it is certainly surprising that they should have parted with this valuable option merely against the placing of 1,530 shares. They ought most certainly to have taken their shareholders into their confidence. Mr. Wheelock puts the amount of the difference between the market value and par, at which the option was given, at £12,000, and I am not surprised that he has received a great many letters from shareholders endorsing his views.

New Enterprises and Issues.

The prospectuses of the following new enterprises and issues, have been placed before the public during the week:—

The Anglo-Mexican Colonization and Trading Company, Limited.—This Company is formed to acquire from the vendor, about 43,000 acres of freehold land, and also about 60,000 acres of freehold land from the Mexican Government for cultivation and colonisation; also to promote subsidiary companies for the further development of the property and to establish a trade with the various ports on the Pacific Coast. The capital is fixed at £150,000 in £1 shares, 70,000 shares being reserved for working capital.

Grosvenor Mansions Company, Limited.—Invite subscriptions for £50,000 Four and a Half per Cent. First Mortgage Debentures of £100 each at par. They will form the first and only mortgage on the property which is situated in Victoria-street, S.W., and are redeemable in 1960. The redemption is secured under a sinking fund policy with the Sun Life Assurance Society. The share capital of the Company is £120,000, divided into Preference and Ordinary shares, of which £22,500 in Preference and £40,000 in Ordinary shares remain unissued.

Kenilworth Sugar Estates, Limited.—With a capital of £160,000, divided into Six per Cent. Preference and Ordinary shares of £5 each, this Company has been formed for the purpose of purchasing about 10,000 acres of freehold land, situated in the delta of the Mississippi, and to erect thereon a sugar factory.

This is hardly the time to issue a sugar venture, considering the depressed state of the market. The capital appears excessive, and the probability of the Company being brought to a dividend paying stage is remote.

Henry Heath, Limited, is a company formed with a share capital of £50,000 in £1 shares, and 45,000 Four and a Half per Cent. First Mortgage Debenture stock at par, for the purpose of taking over as a going concern the business established by Henry Heath in 1822, and which is now one of the largest hat manufacturing establishments in London.

My Letter Box.

The following are replies to inquiries from various correspondents:—

Government, &c., Bonds.

H. S. B.—1. I really do not know whether you have the power to do this; at all events, you cannot obtain 4 per cent. in any gilt-edged investment security. 2. The Chinese Five per Cent. Gold Loan is a fair investment, which yields about £4 18s. 6d. per cent. at the present price of 101½; but it cannot be called safe. Bey.—You might as well sell these bonds and invest in a more progressive stock. At present the American Market is the most active, and you will perhaps elect to take a hand in this. C. R. P.—Yes, Uruguay bonds are a good investment, and if the election goes all right they will rise to a much higher level.

Banks, Trusts, and Financial.

Australia.—There is no further news with regard to this Australian Bank. Secretariat.—The Credit Assurance and Guarantee Corporation shares are promising. A Constant Reader, Aberdeen.—1. Doubtful. 2. Impossible to tell. 3. Probably. 4. Not as safe as some banks. A. E. W.—If you will forward a stamped and addressed envelope I will send you the address. Ubique.—A fair investment, but no catch.

Home Rails.

Polar Bear.—I see no reason for selling your Central London Railway shares. You receive 3 per cent. till the opening of the line, and there is every prospect of its proving a great success. F.P.—Yes; Dover "A" should be held for a rise.

Ristona Gold, Silver, and Lustre Metallic Paints are beautiful for decorative purposes. They are used on embossed materials, such as Linerusta, and furniture; also greatly increasing the artistic effect of stained linen, silk, or canvas fancy work, screens, book-covers, photo-frames, &c. Bottles, 6d. & 1s.—M'Caw, Stevenson, & Orr, Ltd., 29, Cannon-st., E.C., & Belfast

American and Foreign Rails.

Trunk.—I am glad to see that you bought Grand Trunk Four per Cent. Debenture stock at 83 on my advice. It is now quoted 106, and I see no reason for selling the same, as it is a gilt-edged stock. F. G. G.—No fresh news is available. A. W.—The lowest price of Grand Trunk Four per Cent. Debenture stock since September 18, 1897, was 99½. Cecil—You have done quite right in buying the various American Railroad bonds mentioned, and eventually you will see them much higher. Libretto.—All your American Railroad bonds, Nos. 1 to 6, are well selected, and should be held for a considerable advance. A. M. W.—I am glad to see that you have a profit of 20 per cent. on Grand Trunk Five per Cent. Debenture stock but there is no reason for selling at present. Do not sell Calgary and Edmonton now, as these are also improving. Belmont.—No reason to sell Midland of Canada (1), and the South Americans Nos. 2 to 4 should also be held for an improvement. There is no information to be had here regarding the local concern No. 5.

Mining Shares.

J. B. C.—London and West Australian Exploration shares should be held for an improvement, and as the Sons of Gwalia is apparently doing exceedingly well, the shares may rise further. I cannot reply by letter. Warrington.—1. No option but to hold for the present. 2. Ditto. 3. Sell North Mount Lyell on any further advance. Registrar.—I understand that the final circulars concerning this amalgamation will be issued this week, and I must refer you to these. Glynn.—I have not sufficient information on this property to recommend a purchase. G. C., Norwich.—I should think that it would be as well to leave this district alone until there is a decent output. Hampton.—From all reports from this extensive property, it is largely gold bearing, and the shares should be held. Bimbashi.—This Company is being amalgamated, and you will not be able to avoid the payment. 2. There is no market for the shares at present. S. W.—No, I do not agree with the view mentioned. Persevere.—In the case of such reconstructions it is generally best to join and sell after. Crimean.—There is no option but to join the amalgamation with Wealth of Nations. No reason to sell Langlaagte Estate, Cons. Goldfields Deferred, or any of the others at present price. Draper.—It will be preferable to defer a purchase of No. 2 until the reef has been struck again. I see nothing to tempt a purchase of the New Zealand mines Nos. 1, 3, and 4. Meath.—There seems no option but to hold the various shares, although they are badly selected. But this is not the time to sell. You should await a recovery in the mining market. W. H. M.—If you send postage stamps the copy can be supplied. The Institute in question has now been closed. If you have good profits to take in any of the shares Nos. 3-5 do so on the next advance. Hold Associated Gold Mines (1). Edgirdla.—1. A fair purchase. 2. This mine may come along after crushing has commenced. 3. Mismanaged. 4. The circular is returned. You have not apparently joined the reconstruction, and I cannot tell you if you have any rights left. Apply to the liquidator. D. W. M.—1. Yes, you should hold for a material recovery. II. No. X. Y. Z.—1. There may be some chance of recovery of Herbert Gold Mines, now ¼-⅜, but I never held a favourable view of this mine. 2. Yes, Consolidated Murchisons are a good purchase at present price, also Hannan's Proprietary (3). The South African shares, No. 4, are a fair mining risk. There is very little market for Robinson Randfontein (5). No reason for the reaction in No. 6. Leave Frank Smith Diamonds (7) alone. Burbank's Birthday Gift (8) are a fair purchase. No reason to sell No. 9 unless you have a large profit. Wednesbury.—This Corporation is a very doubtful concern, and there is no market for the shares. Croyland.—I. Not a bogus Company, but so far an unsuccessful one. II. There seems no possibility to evade payment of the call. III. They would give you notice of forfeiture. The Australian shares should be held. Horace.—There is nothing against the purchase of Nos. 2-4, which will probably improve in a general revival of the South African market. No. 1 (Music Halls) are, of course, speculative. Certainly hold Nos. 5-10 for an improvement. Julie.—No special reason to make the exchange from Randfontein, but the other shares may move up more quickly. F. M.—1. You should certainly hold British America Corporation shares for a substantial advance. 2. In Matabele Gold Reefs and Geelong a fresh rig is probable, and you had better await this before selling. 3. Hold the West Australian shares, especially the last mentioned. The Founders' shares will probably improve. Folio.—You had better hold Nos. 1-3 for a recovery now that you have joined the reconstruction. 4. Golden Crown will participate in the amalgamation scheme about to be carried out. Wanderer.—You have a very large holding in Indian mines (Nos. 1-7) which probably leave you a big profit. Why not reduce this? I do not advise holding No. 24. The West Australian and South African shares Nos. 8-23, should be held. D. D. D.—I quite agree with you that the directors of the Hannan's Napier have been greatly remiss in the matter of furnishing information to the shareholders. I notice, that an extraordinary general meeting was held yesterday (Saturday) for the confirmation of the voluntary winding up and reconstruction decided upon on December 29. The resolutions, creating 80,000 new £1 shares, 18s. paid, a call of 2s. per share to be made, were confirmed.

The luxury of a bath is incomplete without the addition of CRUBE'S CLOUDY FLUID AMMONIA, which refreshes and invigorates. Sold everywhere, but avoid injurious imitations.

Industrial Shares.

L. L. L.—1. It is quite impossible to tell what price these cycle shares will reach, but I do not advise you to be too sanguine in the matter. 2. These tyre shares are cheap enough, but there is not much inducement to buy them. Z. F. G.—If you wish to invest in Industrial securities, there is no objection to those mentioned by you. Medicus, Dublin.—Stretton's Derby Brewery Prefs. at 13, and Wolverhampton and Dudley Brewery Prefs., also at 13, should suit you. F. J.—1. No catch. 2. Somewhat speculative. 3. A local concern, about which no information is available here. 4. Ditto. Fame, South Shields.—I am not in favour of the cycle and tube shares Nos. 1 to 6, and am afraid that you will never see your prices again. It may be advisable to hold for the present, and sell on an improvement. W. M. S.—Eastman Prefs. are now quoted 10¼, and the last dividend was 12s. per share. As regards the future of the Company, everything depends upon conditions in the meat trade. Green.—I do not see how you can resist the payment of calls in the Kent Coal Finance and Development Company, unless you can prove misrepresentation, and this would involve legal steps and combination amongst the shareholders. Marathon.—A fair investment, but no catch. Carlo Blanco.—There is no information available here with regard to the Burton and Lincoln Breweries. This concern has evidently been very unsuccessful, and as it appears to have been leased to Messrs. Salt & Co., you had better obtain the terms on which it has so been transferred. W. P. L. L.—No war seems to be on the tapis at present, so it is useless to speculate on such an event. The iron trade generally has been depressed, but it appears to be reviving now. D. D. P.—You should write to the secretary, Mr. T. R. Wyles, at the office of the National Model Dwellings Company, Limited, Queen's Buildings, Southwark, S.E., for information, the undertaking being still in existence.

Mixed Investments.

H. H. A., Yorkshire.—1. Great Horseless Carriage shares have collapsed to 2s. 6d., so that I cannot give you any advice on the matter, but why did you not heed my warning? 2. Yes, London and Globes are a promising investment. 3. The tyre shares will hardly decline any further, so that it would be best to hold on the chance of a rise. 4. You might as well hold these also. Ouf.—1. A fair investment, but I cannot tell you whether they will improve. 2. Metropolitan Districts should be held for an important rise during the present year. 3. There may be a recovery, but I do not anticipate any important upward movement. 4. Very speculative. P. D. S.—The Colonial Mutual Insurance Company is a large and wealthy Australian office. I do not entertain a favourable view of the Hannan's Excelsior Mine. Roseland.—1. Having held so long I almost think you should keep these Brewery shares a little longer. 2. Yes. 3. Too speculative. 4. No catch. 5. Hold Glencairn for a substantial recovery. The mine is doing well. Frugal.—I do not recommend the two first-named stocks, but the electric shares are a good investment. Cricket.—1. A fair mining property, but not yet sufficiently proved. 2. London and Globe will no doubt recover eventually. 3. Of course they would be in favour of properties in which they are interested. E. M., Devon.—1. You can make a much better selection. Why do you not make your selection from the gilt-edged and good second-class American railroad bonds of which I published lists in TRUTH of December 9. The yield is from 3¾ to 5½ per cent. 2. Colonial Government Inscribed stocks are also a good investment, but the yield is smaller. 3. There is nothing against Guinness debentures. Fee.—1. The reason is that there is so much uncertainty about American Brewery Companies. 2. I should prefer holding, as the clique will no doubt attempt another rig. 3. It might be advisable to await a possible further recovery. 4. A fair investment, but no catch. Ixion.—Argentine Cedulas (1) are worth buying, also the Argentine Rails No. 5. There is also every prospect of the South African shares Nos. 7 and 8 improving, but the others had best be left alone. Music.—As regards the tyre shares No. 1 a recovery is not improbable, I do not think much of Nos. 2 and 3. The Hainault Mine (4) has possibilities in it. Anxious, Tulse Hill.—1. I do not see how you can resist payment of the call. 2. Yes, Knights are promising. 3. No. 4. Hold Woodstock Transvaal. 5. Great Central 1894 Ordinary and Uruguay Three and a Half per Cent. bonds. Tyro, Leicester.—No reason to sell Nos. 1-5. Sell No. 6 if you can. The Tea Companies Nos. 7-10 might be held for the present. Driefontein (11) and Financial Times (12) shares are promising.

Various Investments.

The Money Market is distinctly firmer at 2¼-½ per cent. for short money, and 2¾ per cent. for three months bills. This is exactly what I had anticipated, and with the growing activity of the Stock Markets, and the extension of business generally, I quite expect further hardening, especially as several big loans are looming large on the horizon, notably the Chinese and Greek loans. Consols are but slightly easier at 112 9/16 for the account, and the non-success of the issue of Indian Railway 2½ per Cent. Debentures at a minimum of 97 per cent. again goes to show that the demand for gilt-edged securities is falling off. Silver has been easier at 26 3/16d., and prospects of

